Publisher's Note

The following appendices not forming part of the original work have been included in this volume.

I. Seven Sleepers

II. Identification of Zul-Qarnain

III. Historicity of Hāmān

IV. Was Muhammad Literate?

This liberty has been taken by the publishers, first, as the late author had himself included a number of appendices, being the writings of other scholars, in order to elucidate his notes, and, secondly, since the subject matter dealt with in each of the above appendix is important enough to require more light to be shed on it for the benefit of the readers. It is, however, regretted that the last appendix could not find its proper place after the Sūrat-ul-'Ankabūt and has, therefore, been given at the end of this volume.

Publisher's Note

The footnotes in all the earlier volumes began and ended with a part (Pārā) of the Holy Qur'ān. As, however, the third volume was terminated with the Sūrah Fātir, a portion of Sūrah Yāsīn which is included in Part XXII, had to be brought into this volume. Consequently the footnotes begin with the Sūrah Yāsin and continue into Part XXIII. In subsequent parts the usual practice of giving the footnotes by Quranic Pārās has been followed. Care has been taken to correct the references to the footnotes of Part XXIII wherever they are cited subsequently.

PREFACE

Of all great works the Holy Qur'ān is perhaps the least translatable.

Arabic is not at all easy to translate into a language so widely and radically differing from it in structure and genius as English, unless it be with the aid of loose periphrasis and lax paraphrase. Even so the fire of the original is quenched, its vivacious perspicuity is lost, and the so-called literal translation looks rugged and dreary. That the language of the Arabs abounds in nuances and both the noun and the verb are extremely flexible, is a fact well known to every student of that tongue.

The difficulty is increased hundredfold when one has to render into English, with any degree of accuracy and precision, a work so rich in meaning, so pithy in expression, so vigorous in style and so subtle in implications as the Holy Qur'ān. To reproduce even partially its exotic beauty, wonderful grandeur and magical vivacity without sacrificing the requirements of the English idiom and usage, is the despair of the translator and an ideal impossible of attainment. The result is that every fresh attempt at translating the Holy Writ brings home, in varying degrees, the truth of the old saying that nothing is so unlike an original as its copy.

The impediments confronting an honest translator may be summed up under six main heads and various sub-headings :

1. In the first place comes the comparative poverty of the English language in several respects. For instance :

(a) There is a large number of Arabic verbs untranslatable into English as verbs, such as امات , طغى , من , ابطل , اسرف , استوى , صدق , بخل etc., and one has perforce to render each of these words not by a single word but by a combination of words. Thus يبخل has to be translated as 'is niggardly,' صدق as 'is truthful', يستوى as' 'is equal,' يسرف as 'is extravagant,' يبطل as 'maketh vain' or rendereth void,' من as 'conferred a benefit,' يطغى as 'is exorbitant,' and يميت as 'causes death.'

(b) There is no equivalent for the Arabic مضارع (aorist) in English, or, for that matter, in any other language known to the translator. The Arabic مضارع is both present and future tenses combined, whereas in other languages (including English) a tense is either present or future. Thus thousands of Arabic verbs are to be rendered in English only incompletely.

(c) In English grammar there are only two 'numbers,' singular and plural, and there is no single word to convey the sense of the Arahic dual (تثنية) in nouns as well as verbs, both in the second and the third persons.

(d) There is comparative dearth of اسماء الفاعل (nomina agentis) in English language, whereas they abound in Arabic. مستقدمون , قانتون , معجزون , مفلحون , آخرون , صادقون , شاكرون , متقون , مشركون , مستاخرون and many similar words have to be rendered as adjectives or participles, not as substantives.

(e) In Arabic, the feminine plural in the second and third person is always distinguishable from the masculine. In English both genders are covered by 'you' and 'they.'

2. Next, repetition of synonyms, chiefly for the sake of emphasis, is of frequent occurrence in Arabic; in fact, at times it is of considerahle literary merit and beauty. In the English language there is no sanction for it. Thus many such expressions as انا نحن نحي الموتى (literally, 'Verily, We! We! We! quicken the dead') or انا نحن نحي و نميت (literally, 'Verily, We! surely We! We quicken and cause death') or انا نحن نزلنا الذكر (literally, 'Verily, We! We! We have revealed the Admonition') have to remain only partly translated.

3. Another serious difficulty is caused by the case with which ellipses occur in the best and finest Arabic style and both words and phrases have to be supplied by the reader to make the sense complete. At one time, it is only the suhject that is mentioned and the predicate is entirely suppressed, and at another, the reverse is the case. The obvious duty of the translator on all such occasions is to supply the omission, although his attempts in many cases must be hazardous.

4. Yet another perplexity is caused to the translator by the abrupt grammatical transition, in one and the same sentence, frequent in Arabic:

(a) of person, as from the first and second person to the third, or vice versa;

(b) of number, from plural to singular, or vice versa.

5. A further complication is caused by what is known as انتشار ضمائر i. e., a personal or relative pronoun having different antecedents in one and the same sentence. The translator cannot afford to allow such ambiguities; he has to make his choice.

6. Finally, there is no real equivalence in the import of many of the Arabic and English words generally held to he synonyms. The Arabic word زنى for instance, has no equivalent in English, both 'adultery' and 'fornication' being of much narrower import. Similary English has few words to express such closely related (متقارب المعنى) Arabic terms as, خوف , خشيت , اشفاق , ترهيب and تقوى (as in the phrase تقى الله). Nor is English perhaps rich enough to indicate clearly the shades of meanings of such sets of words as قادر , قدير and مقتدر, or رحمن and رحيم , or ثعبان , حية and جان.

As to the genius of Arabic language it may not be amiss to recall a few observations made by a distinguished Arabist, Alfred Guillaume:—

'Arabic is fitted to express relations with more conciseness than the Aryan languages because of the extraordinary flexibility of the verb and noun. Thus the ideas in break, shatter, try to break, cause to break, allow to be broken, break one another, ask someone to break, pretend to break, are among many variations of the fundamental verbal theme which can, or could, be expressed by vowel changes and consonantal augments without the aid of the supplementary verbs and pronouns which we have to employ in English. The noun, too, has an appropriate form for many diverse things, such as the time and place of an action, bodily defects, diseases, instruments, colours, trades, and so on. One example must suffice. Let us take the root d-w-r, which, in its simplest form, means to turn or revolve (intransitive).

dawwara, to turn a thing round.
adāra, to make go round, and so to control.
dawr, turning (noun).
dawwār, pedlar or vagrant.
dawran, circulation.
madār, axis.
mudir, controller. dāwara, to walk about with someone.
tadawwara / istadāra } to be round in shape.
dawrah, one turning.
duwār, vertigo.
dawwarah, mariner's compass.
mudārah, round water-skin.

'None of these forms is fortuitous, but is predetermined by the structural genius of the Arabic language.' (Arnold and Guillaume, Legacy of Islam, Preface, pp. vi-vii).

To take another instance :—

'From the root KTB "write," we have KaTaBnā, "we wrote," naKTubu, "we will write," KaTiB, "writing, a writer," KiTāB, "a book," maKTaB, "a place of writing, a school," muKTiB, "a teacher of writing," taKaTaBa, "they two corresponded with one another," as-TaKTiB, "I will ask him to write," waKtaTaBa, "and he got his name written down in the register," KuTTaB, "scriber," maKaTaBat, "correspondence," etc. (EBr. II. p. 192.)

Add to these inherent handicaps my own excessive incompetence—meagre knowledge of English and only a passing acquaintance with Arabic—and the audacity of the enterprise becomes apparent. Further, it has been my lot to work almost unaided and single-handed. The outcome of my seven years of labour of love is before God and man, and certainly it is not for me to pass any judgment on my own work. Had I been able to foresee at the commencement of the task the amount of labour it would involve and the length of time it would necessitate, my courage would surely have failed me, and I would not have undertaken the work at all. If there is any merit discernible in the work it is absolutely due to the grace and mercy of the Almighty and if there are faults (and undoubtedly they are many and serious), they must be credited to my own incapacity. My constant endeavour has been to give as literal and as faithful a rendering of the Holy Qur'ān as is consistent with tolerable English. Accuracy, not literary embellishment, I have aimed throughout. I have also attempted, in my own humble way, to follow closely the style and phraseology of the Authorised Version of the English Bible, though it would be nothing short of temerity to expect that that standard has been even appreciably achieved.

In regard to the arrangement of commentary, a word or two would suffice:

(i) Comments of lexical, grammatical, historical, geographical, and general exegetical interest are given in the footnotes.

(ii) Where an elucidation seemed necessary in order to complete the sense, it has been placed in parentheses, again in the footnotes. The reader is requested kindly to treat such matter as if it formed an integral part of the text and to read it along with it.

(iii) Ellipses have been supplied in the text itself and are distinguished by italics.

A few characteristics of my translation and transliteration may here be briefly noted. The word الله in monotheistic context I always retain in translation as Allah, and only render it by 'God' when the context is distinctly pagan or polytheistic. The words نصرانی and نصاری I have invariably translated as 'Nazarene' and 'Nazarenes,' not as 'Christian' and 'Christians.' The Holy Qur'ān allows no status to Christianity as such. To the religion of the Qur'ān and the Prophet I always refer as Islam, not as Muhammadanism. Contrary to the general European practice I write Makka (not Mecca), Madīna (not Medina), Muḥammad (not Mohammed), Ismā'īl (not Ishmael) and Hājira (not Hagar); and in the Arabic context I retain the correct Arabic forms of proper names such as Jibrīl, Mīkāīl, Ā-dam, Nūḥ, Ibrāhīm, Isrā-īl, Lūt, Is-ḥāq, Yā'qūb, Yūsuf, Mūsā, Hārūn, Fir'awn, Qārūn, Ayyūb, Dā-ūd, Sulaimān, Tālūt, Jālūt, Yūnus, Ilyās, Zakarīyyā. Yaḥyā, 'Imrān, Maryam and 'Isā, reserving their Biblical and European variants for the English context.

Now remains the pleasant duty of acknowledging obligations and recording thanks. To several of my precursors I am more or less indebted, but in particular to Sale, Lane, Pickthall and Nawāb 'Imād-ul-Mulk Bilgrāmī (whose unfinished and unpublished translation, up to Part XVI, I had the good fortune to possess). To Dr. Bell, the latest of the English translators, my debt is specially great. In exegetical and explanatory notes I have found Maulānā As͟hraf 'Alī Thānavī's Urdu Bayān-ul-Qur'ān (12 Vols.) of invaluable help, and I have also largely drawn upon Wherry's Commentary and, in a lesser degree, upon 'Abdullah Yūsuf 'Alī's. Many other authors, both ancient and modern, besides those explicitly quoted in the following pages, must, I fear, remain unacknowledged by name. In many cases, they impressed themselves so indelibly on my memory that their very words became part and parcel of my phraseology, but I could not in every instance remember whence they came. This is a general acknowledgment of any unconscious plagiarisms that I may have committed. A list of the principal books cited and referred to by me, given at the end of this work, may, however, to some extent, extenuate my crime.

I have considerably profited by the suggestions of several of my esteemed friends and scholars to whom Part I was submitted for detailed criticism. To Dr. M. H. Syed and Dr. A. S. Siddīqi (both of Allahabad University) I owe not a few improvements in language and transliteration respectively.

INTRODUCTION

The Quranic i'jāz, variously interpreted as its inimitable ellipticism, miraculous elegance, grandiose cadence and emotive and evocative force, is so multilateral that Imām Suyūtī has in the M'otrak al-Aqr'ān fī I'jāz il-Qur'ān, enumerated 35 distinctive features of the Divine Scripture, all of which pertain to its literary excellence alone. These, by no means, exhaust the marvellous super-excellence of the Holy Qur'ān : some have been discussed by other writers while others are yet to be expounded, but these are so self-evident that not even the most inveterate enemy of Islam can deny them. One of these is that the writers like Noldake Theodor, Friedrick Schatty, Charles Francis Potter, Phillip K. Hitti and several other orientalists, none of whom is known for his sympathetic approach to Islam, had to acknowledge the fact that the Qur'ān was "the most widely read book in existence,"[1] and the Prophet to whom it was revealed was "the most successful of all the prophets."[2] They had willy-nilly to admit this undeniable fact for they had noticed that the Christian missionary societies, financed by affluent European and American countries, had succeeded in rendering the Christian Bible into about seven hundred languages[3] and making finely printed copies of it available to nearly all the urban centres or even in every room of a high class hotel all over the world, yet the numbers who go through them in ten years is just a fraction of those who recite the Qur'ān every day.[4]

Another notable aspect of the i'jāz of Qur'ān is that notwithstanding the persistent campaign launched since the beginning of the thirteenth century A. D. to present the Holy Qur'ān as a product of human mind drawing the material contained in it indiscriminately from the apocryphal books of Judaism and Christianity, hundreds of its translations, commentaries and glossaries have been brought out, even in Europe. Nor the political and industrial ascendancy of the West coupled with its intellectual and educational supremacy and control over the world-wide mass media has been able to shake the faith of the Muslims in the Holy Qur'ān as the Word of God. This conviction has rather increased with the passage of time than being eroded by these deliberate misrepresentations: the denigrators of the Qur'ān have, on the other hand, been forced to put themselves on their guard. Prof. R. B. Sergeant writes in his introduction to the Dictionary and Glossary of the Quran by John Price that the readers of the Qur'ān ought to understand the Book directly from it since the Arab and Muslim countries which are now forsaking conservatism in favour of modernism still take the Scripture as a divine revelation and the people are still accustomed to say, "God Exalted has said" before quoting any passage from it and end the citation with the words, "God Almighty has truly spoken".

European scholars of Islam, whether they be Prof Sergeant or George Sale or contributors to the Encyclopaedia Britannica, cannot be expected to express anything beyond their own impressions of the Holy Qur'ān. They, even if not inspired by a malicious prejudice, cannot shake off their mistaken notions about Islam that have become a part of their intangible heritage of thought and feeling. But, for us, Muslims, it is an apparent fact that God Almighty has Himself taken the responsibility of preserving the Holy Qur'ān in its absolute purity.

> "Verily We, it is We who have revealed the Admonition, and varily We are its Guardians ." [XV : 9]

This prophecy has been strikingly confirmed by the fact that the Qur'ān has remained free from all alterations, accretions and deletions ever since it was enunciated by the holy Prophet (peace be upon him). The purity of the Quranic text maintained through fourteen centuries has already been acknowledged by all, friends and foes alike. I would better cite here the commentary of the learned author of this exegesis on the above verse. He writes :

"Islam knows no such thing as 'redactions' of its Holy Text. Even those who have most stoutly denied its being the Word of God are unanimous in testifying to its being exactly the same 'work of Muhammed' as it was thirteen centuries ago. Let us have the testimony of a few such unwilling witnesses :—

(i) 'The text of the Quran is the purest of all works of a like antiquity.' (Wherry, Commentry on the Quran. I, p. 349).

(ii) 'Othman's recension has remained the authorised text . . . . . from the time it was made until the present day'. (Palmer, The Quran, Intro. p. liv).

(iii) 'The text of this recension substantially corresponds to the actual utterances of Muhammed himself.' (Arnold' Islamic faith, p. 9).

(iv) "All sects and parties have the same text of the Quran' (Hurgronje, Mohammadanism, p. 18).

(v) 'It is an immense merit in the Kuran that there is no doubt as to its genuineness . . . . . That very word we can now read with full confidence that it has remained unchanged through nearly thirteen hundred years'. (Lane and Lane-Poole. Selections from the Kuran, Trubner, London, Intro. p. c).

(vi) 'The recension of 'Othman has been handed down to us unaltered . . . . . There is probably in the world no other work which has remained twelve centuries with so pure a text' (Muir, Life of Mahomet, Intro. pp. xxii-xxiii).

(vii) 'In the Koran we have, beyond all reasonable doubt, the exact words of Mohammad without substraction and without addition.' (Bosworth Smith, Mohammad and Mohammedanism, London 1874, p. 22).

(viii) "The Koran was his own creation; and it lies before us practically unchanged from the form which he himself gave it', (Torrey, Jewish Foundation of Islam, p. 2)."

In addition to these testimonies of European orientalists about the purity of the text of the Holy Qur'ān, the author goes on to substantiate the claim of the Qur'ān to be a Divine revelation which is undisputed and unique among all the religious scriptures. He writes :

"Not only is the meaning of the Holy Book therefore inspired but every word, every letter—dictated through the angel Gabriel to the holy Prophet from an Archetype preserved in the heaven. That is the distinctive claim of the Holy Qur'ān shared by no other 'revealed Book' in the world. The Bible, in particular 'makes no such claim . . . . . The Bible is the work of a large number of poets, prophets, statesmen, and lawgivers, extending over a vast period of time, and incorporates with itself other and earlier, and often conflicting documents". (Boswarth Smith op. cit., p. 19).

The Divine care to preserve the purity of the Holy Qur'ān provided the impulse to put dots on alphabets of similar shape in order to distinguish between their pronunciations, to develop the twin sciences of philology and lexicography, and to lay down the rules of Arabic grammar and the criteria for rhetoric and style of prose writing. This literary activity has never ceased for a day since the second century of Islamic era. Also, the etymological structure of the Arabic language has saved its dialects, like a strong cementing force, from falling apart into distinct languages and thus the Divine revelation has remained intelligible to the succeeding generations. It is also noteworthy that the Providential arrangement of writing the commentaries of the Holy Qur'ān started as early as the third century A. H. In the beginning the exegesis of the Qur'ān formed a part of the science of the hadīth since it was generally thought that the divine revelation could be understood only in the light of holy Prophet's Traditions, specially those handed down by 'Abdullah bin 'Abbās. But the exegesis of the Qur'ān became an independent science with the Tafsīr Tabrī of Abū J'afar Muhammad b. Jarīr Tabrī (d. 310 A.H.) and it has ever since been vigorously cultivated by the Muslims scholars. The commentaries on the Holy Qur'ān written from time to time are in fact a mine of historical information shedding light on the way the Qur'ān was understood during different periods.

The Arabists and Orientalists, on the other hand, started translating the Holy Qur'ān from the thirteenth century A. D. and rendered it into almost all the European languages, of which the largest number of translations were brought out in French, German and English. A list of such translations was given by Prof. Hamīdullah in the introduction to his own French rendering of the Holy Qur'ān published in 1961. His another work entitled Al-Qur'ān fī-Kull-i-Lisān, now out of print, contained a complete list of all the translations of the Holy Qur'ān brought out up to 1341/1922. The list, I believe, would be two-fold in volume if Prof. Hamīdullah were now to bring it up-to-date.

Translations of the Holy Qur'ān in English can be divided into two categories. First, there are those penned either by non-Muslim Orientalists or by thosa Muslim apologists who were unduly impressed by the political ascendancy and industrial advancement of the West, such as, the Qādiānī exegetes, Shaikh Muhammad 'Abduh of Egypt, Sir Syed Ahmad Khān of India and Muhammad Asad of Austria, but their writings never met the approval of the Muslims. Secondly, there are Muslim translators and commentators who mostly belong, excepting Marmaduke Pickthal, to the Indo-Pak sub-continent. Pickthal was an English Muslim, a journalist and a literary man of standing but he, too, was commissioned by the then Nizām of Hyderābād to undertake an explanatory translation of the Holy Qur'ān and he also wrote that work in India.

Among the translators and exegetes of the second group the translation and commentary on the Holy Qur'ān by 'Abdullah Yūsuf 'Alī was received popularly. His rendering of the Quranic verses is in blank verse which, according to him, is more suited to convey something of the Qur'ān's inimitable symphony to the readers of the Qur'ān in English. But the requirement of prosody made it inevitable for him to alter the wording order of the sacred text. He had also occasionally to deviate from a literal rendering. Pickthal's explanatory translation, on the other hand, is most readable. Although it is also not free from mistakes, it has an edge over other translations because of its fluency and gracefulness of style.

There was, however, the need of another English translation of the Holy Qur'ān, complete with explanatory notes, which could be recommended with confidence to the Muslims and Non-Muslims whose mother tongue was English or who found it easy, owing to their cultural background or educational upbringing, to understand it better in English language. The author of such an exegesis had to expound the Quranic text in terms acceptable to the scholars of the Ahl-Sunnat wal-Jamā'at; to avoid putting forward his own views and ideas in the exegesis; to be fully conversant with the Arabic lexicon and rules of grammar; to avoid the apologetic approach in expounding the Quranic injunctions and institutions; to have an implicit faith in the life after death and the rewards and retributions promised in the Qur'ān as dīvine pronouncements instead of taking them merely as symbolical expressions; to have studied all the classical and modern commentaries in depth; to be able to expound the significance of Quranic injunctions in regard to polygamy, slavery, dowry, execution of the apostates, blood-wit etc.; to hold the same belief about the throne ('arsh and kursī), the preserved tablet (lauhu'l Mahfūz), jinnee, angels, prophethood (nabūwat), revelation (wahī), and the earlier and final divine scriptures as entertained by the earliest Muslims; and to have no qualms about the bodily lifting of Jesus Christ to the higher regions. Taking all these factors into account, the translation and commentary of 'Abdul Mājid Daryābādī is undoubtedly unique and most acceptable among all the exegetical renderings of the Holy Qur'ān attempted so far in the English language.

The exegesis by Daryābādī throws ample light on all those peoples who have been mentioned in the Holy Qur'ān alongwith their geographical locations and the eras in which they flourished. One can find all the necessary details about the earlier prophets who find a mention in the Holy Qur'ān, since it provides answers to such questions as what was the time of their advent, who were the peoples to whom they disseminated the message vouchsafed to them, who were the Adites and Thamudites and the people of Prophet Sālih, where those people lived, where were Bābil and Madyān located and similar other questions that arise in mind while reading the Holy Qur'ān.

The exegesis also demonstrates in the light of human experience and researches made in the field of anthropology and sociology the superiority of Islamic social order and its legislations pertaining to marriage, divorce, inheritance etc., over all other social laws and systems. It shows how the Islamic injunctions represent the most refined and elaborate system of social existence known to the civilized world.

In addition to these, a distinguishing feature of Daryābādī's exegesis is that it provides a conclusive answer to those Jewish and Christian critics of Islam who claim that the Holy Qur'ān draws its material from the scriptures and apocryphal writings of Judaism and Christianity. In fact these critics are unable to appreciate the fact that the Holy Qur'ān has been revealed to confirm the scriptures of old and to re-state and uphold the spirit of their true teachings, which, by itself, involves refutation of such accretions, alterations and additions as have found a place into the scriptures of Judaism and Christianity.

"And when there came unto them a Book from before Allah confirming that which was with them—and aforetime they were entreating God for victory over those who disbelieved—then when there came unto them that which they recognised, they disbelieved therein". (II : 89).

That the Qur'ān is a repository of divine message revealed in the earlier scriptures is an article of faith for the Muslims, but it was necessary to bring out those teachings of the Torah and the Gospels which were confirmed by the Holy Qur'ān in order to distinguish them from the spurious matter inserted into these scriptures by their scribes, translators and commentators For whatever in these Books finds a confirmation by the Holy Qur'ān is undoubtedly correct: everything else is a later addition mixed up with the divine revelation. The learned author has taken pains to make a most thorough study by making a comparative analysis of the Biblical and Quranic teachings and narratives of events common to both, in order to show how the Holy Qur'ān upholds only the correct and original teachings of the Old and New Testaments. He also provides food for thought to those Orientalists and students of comparative religions who prefer not to talk about the systematic refusal of the Holy Qur'ān to confirm numerous accretions to the existing Bible. The exegesis pin-points all such differences to show that the Biblical version of many an incident is nothing but a product of human imagination. His treatment of such matters makes it amply clear that if there had been any parallelism in the Bible and the Qur'ān, as asserted by almost all European scholars, there would not have been the differences indicated by him in the narration of the same event by these scriptures. To give an example we may refer to the following verse in the Holy Qur'ān :

"O people of the Book; do not exceed the bounds in your religion, and say not of Allah save what is the truth. The Messiah Isa, son of Maryam, is but a messenger of Allah and His Word—He cast it upon Maryam —and a spirit from Him. Believe therefore in Allah and His messengers, and do not say : three". (IV : 171).

Commenting on the Christian belief in Trinity, the learned author says :

"Trinity denotes the central doctrine of Christian religion. It means that God 'is three really distinctive Persons—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Each of these persons is truly the same God, and has all His infinite perfections, yet He is really distinct from each of the three Persons . . . . . These Persons are co-equal, co-eternal and consubstantial, and deserve co-equal glory and adoration, which the Church expresses in the oft-repeated prayer : "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost.' (Pollen and Wynne, New Catholic Dictionary, New York, p. 973). The book of Islam 'found in the dogma of Trinity what every emancipated thinker finds on impartial reflection—an absurd legend, which is neither reconcilable with first principles of reason, nor of any value whatever for our religions advancement. In the Brahmanic religion the Trimurti is also conceived as a "divine unity" made up of three persons—Brahma (the creator), Vishnu (the sustainer), and Shiva (the destroyer)'. (Haeckal, Riddle of the Universe, pp. 226, 233). 'The Divine trinity has been considered a tripersonal trinity, each person being God and Lord . . . . Men's minds have been brought by this into such a state of bewilderment that they do not know whether there is one God or whether there are three; one is on their lips, but three in their thoughts'. (Swedenborg, The True Christian Religion, p. 5). 'The Nicene Creed really 'teaches three Divine Persons and denies three Gods, and leaves us to guess what else is a Divine Person but a God or a God but a Divine Person'. (Newman, Phases of Faith, p. 23)".

The Jews and Christians normally charge Islam with preaching fanaticism and intolerance as, for example, its prohibition of marriage between a believing and disbelieving couple. The author has, in his commentary on the relevant verses, quoted the scriptures of their religions to show that the criticism actually applies to these religions rather than to Islam. In a like manner he has demonstrated the superiority of Islamic legislation in regard to divorce and marriage vis-a-vis the raptured family relationships in the Christian West.

The classical commentators of the Holy Qur'ān had occasionally to take the help of Israelite traditions, though cautiously, for elucidating a certain event of which only a particular aspect of the happening finds a mention in the Qur'ān in order to draw a moral from it. To cite an example here, the Qur'ān says about King Solomon in verse 102 of the Sūrat-ul-Baqrah :

"And Sulaimān blasphemed not, but the satans blasphemed: teaching the people magic. And they follow also what was sent unto the two angels in Bābil, Hārūt and Marūt."

In the absence of any more details about the incident, one may wonder how the charge of blasphemy came to be levelled against King Solomon, a Prophet of God, which has been refuted by the Qur'ān. Like the earlier exegetes Daryābādī has also referred to the accusation of idolatry made against King Solomon in 1 Ki. 11 : 4, 9, 10 He also mentions how the Jews 'unblushingly attributed to him the cult of crude occultism and witchcraft', and goes on to cite the findings of modern Biblical researches which support the Qur'ān in stoutly denying these charges. Similarly, he sets forth evidence to show that Babylonia was the strongest citadel of magic and witchcraft in all antiquity.

Another distinctive feature of Daryābādī's rendering of the Quranic text is that he has always kept in view the most appropriate expression in English or the one which is closely nearest to the interpretation of a word used in the Holy Qur'ān. To give an example here the words ظاهر (zāhir) and باطن (bātin) in the passage ذروا ظاهر الاثم و باطنه have been translated by him as 'outside' and 'inside' which convey the literal sense of these words. The derived meanings of these two words 'open' and 'secret', which have been normally adopted by other translators in rendering this passage into English, have been given by him in the footnotes. This approach of the author shows his painstaking diligence and reverential regard for the sacred text. Another example of a similar assiduous care taken by him in this regard is to be found in rendering the verse XVII : 29 which runs as follows :

و لا تجعل يدك مغلولة الى عنقك و لا تبسطها كل البسط فتقعد ملوما محسورا ۝

This verse has been translated to read as follows :

"Let not your hand be chained to your neck, nor stretch it forth to the utmost of its extremity, lest thou sit down reproached, impovrished."

The English rendering of the above verse is literal; an idiomatic translation would have better conveyed the sense but it would have also meant a deviation from the text of the sacred Scripture. Unlike other translators of the Holy Qur'ān who prefer to give the derived meanings of an Arabic word or phrase, Daryābādī has chosen te give an exact translation of the text and then explained in the footnote that "let not thine hand be chained to thy neck" means "do not be niggardly". This, however, does not sugggest that the renderings of other translators are incorrect, but it nevertheless evinces the regard and attachment of the author as well as his solicitude to maintain the original wordings of the divine revelation. He goes on to explain the correct significance of the words and phrases according to Arabic usage and also points out, at several places, the incorrect renderings by earlier translators, and thus acquaints the readers with the Arabic idiom.

Every student of the Holy Qur'ān knows that the Divine Scripture has its own distinctive vocabulary. As, for instance, the Qur'ān has not been referred to by its proper name at all the places ; often it is alluded to as الذكر (az-zikr), or الحكيم (al-hakīm), or الكتاب (al-kitāb), or فرقان (furqān). For the Doomsday, it uses the words يوم القيامة (yom al-qiyamah), يوم الحساب (yom al-hisāb), يوم التغابن (yom al-taghābun) and آلاخذة (al-ākhazah). In addition to الصلاة (as-salāt), the prayers are also referred to as الذكر (az-zikr) and قرآن الفجر (qur'ān al-fajr) and similar other epithets. The classical commentators of the Qur'ān have explained the correct purport of each word in the context of particular verses so as to make it clear where a certain word with more than one connotation as, for example, الذكر (az-zikr) denotes the Qur'ān and where it implies prayer. The legists of Islam have likewise indicated the significance of each word having more than one import in its particular context. In the verse اقيموا الصلاة و آتوا الزكاة واركعوا مع الراكعين, the phrase واركعوا مع الراكعين signifies offering congregational prayers as explained by Qartabī, Laghwī, Madrak-ul-Tanzīl, Baidāwī and Kashshāf. Instead of rendering this phrase as "bow down among those who bow", the author has interpreted it as "bow down with those who bow down", and further elucidated it in the notes with the words, "with the Muslims in the congregational prayer" so that the correct significance of the phrase given by classical exegetes may become clear to the readers.

The Holy Qur'ān is, after all, the Word of God, perfect and faultless, while no man can make a claim to finality or impeccability. Every product of human mind is likely to contain some deficiency, yet, for all that, 'Abdul Mājid Daryābādī has acquitted himself of this onerous task in a laudable manner. Throughout his life he preoccupied himself with the study of the Holy Qur'ān and wrote an exegesis in Urdu in addition to the English one. His translation and commentary is, to my mind, unique and most dependable among all the translations and commentaries of the Qur'ān so far attempted in English language.

May Allah accept his praiseworthy endeavour and shower His choicest blessings on him.

PART I[1]

Sūrat-ul[2] Fātiḥā[3]

The Opening. I

(Makkan[4] 7 Verses[5])

In[6] the name of Allah,[7] the Compassionate,[8] the Merciful.[9]

1. (الحمد . . . العلمين) All Praise[10] unto Allah,[11] Lord[12] of the worlds.[13]

2. (الر . . . رحيم) The Compassionate,[14] the Merciful.[15]

3. (مالک . . . الدين) Sovereign[16] of the Day of Reckoning.[17]

4. (اياک . . . نستعين) Thee alone we[18] worship;[19] and of Thee alone we seek help[20].

5. (اهدنا . . . المستقيم) Guide us in the straight[21] path,

6. (صراط . . . عليهم) the path of those whom Thou hast favoured.[22]

7. (غير . . . الضالين) On whom Thy indignation has not befallen,[23] and who have not gone astray.[24]

---

1. The Holy Qur'ān is divided, for convenience' sake, in thirty parts or Pārahs of almost equal length.

2. A Sūrah is a chapter. There are 114 chapters in the Book, each chapter having been named and assigned its proper place by the Holy Prophet himself.

3. A simple and pithy, yet wonderfully comprehensive prelude to the Holy Writ. Its beauty, grandeur and self-sufficiency simply defy comparison. 'A vigorous hymn of praise to God . . . The thoughts are so simple as to need no explanation, and yet the prayer is full of meaning.' [EBr. XV. p. 903 (11th Ed.)]

4. i. e., revealed at Makka.

5. A verse of the Qur'ān is, like a verse of the Bible, one of the short divisions of a chapter.

6. A more accurate, though perhaps a little less elegant, rendering would be 'by.' The particle ب in بسم الله is باء الاستعانة signifying 'by,' or 'through,' and is to be paraphrased as 'I seek the assistance of——.'

7. The word is incapable of translation. It is not a common noun meaning a 'god' or even 'God.' It is a proper noun par excellence. No plural can be formed from it, and it is, according to the best authorities, without derivation. The word connotes all the attributes of perfection and beauty in their infinitude, and denotes none but the One and Unique God, the Absolute, Supreme, Perfect, Tender, Mighty, Gracious, Benign and Compassionate. The English word 'God,' which is 'the common Teutonic word for a personal object of religious worship . . . . . . applied to all superhuman beings of heathen mythologies who exercise power over nature and man.' (EBr. X. p. 460) and which primarily meant only 'what is invoked' and 'what is worshipped by sacrifice.' (SOED. I. 808) can hardly be even an approximate substitute.

8. i. e., the possessor of the utmost degree of mercy or compassion. The word رحمن is only expressive of God's love to man, and not of man's love to man, or to Him. The term is too strong to be used of men. All the Sūrahs (with one solitary exception) begin with this headline, which sums up in two brief, fine words God's relation to man—the relation par excellence of love, sympathy, concern, solicitude, compassion and mercy. This in itself is sufficient to confound those detractors of the Qur'ān, who depict the God of Islām as a Deity cruel, wrathful, and relentless. The God the Muslims adore and worship, whatever else He may be, is above all, 'the Compassionate' and 'the Merciful.'

9. Contrast with this unreservedly monotheistic introductory formula of Islām the glaringly polytheistic introductory formula of Christianity:—'In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.'

10. حمد is not only praise but it 'also implies admiration; and it implies the magnifying or honouring of the object thereof; and lowliness, humility, or submissiveness, in the person who offers it.' (LL)

11. (and Him alone). Note the absolutely monotheistic note of the very first words of the Holy Qur'ān. It is He alone who is the recipient of all praise; the Praiseworthy; the Praised One. None of His favoured angels and prophets are to be associated with Him, even by implication.

12. 'Lord' is but a poor substitute for the Arabic رب which signifies not only the Sovereign but also the Sustainer, the Nourisher, the Regulator, and the Perfector. The relation in which the God of Islam stands to all His creation is that of a righteous, benign Ruler, and not that of a mere 'father.'

13. i. e., the Universal Patron, the All-in-all Guardian. Not a tribal deity, nor the national God of any specially favoured race or people, nor yet the narrow 'Lord of the Hosts' or the anthropomorphic 'our Father in heaven'. Unlike many a tribal or national 'god,' embodying the spirit of a particular nation, and perishing with its death, He is the ever-living moral Ruler of the world. العالمون signifies 'the several sorts of created beings or things, or all the sorts thereof; or the beings of the universe, or of the whole world,' (LL) Anyway, the all-embracing and all-comprehensive Godhead of رب العالمين is evident. And from the unity of the Creator naturally follows the essential unity of all creation.

14. الرحمن and الرحيم are names or epithets applied to God; the former . . . may be rendered, 'The Compassionate'; the latter, considered as expressive of a constant attribute with somewhat of intensiveness, agreeably with analogy, may be rendered 'The Merciful' . . . . . They are both names or epithets formed to denote intensiveness of signification, from رحم; like الغضبا from غضب and العليم from علم (LL).

15. Both words رحمن and رحيم are derived from رحمة which signifies tenderness, requiring the exercise of beneficence and thus comprising the idea of love and mercy. Both are intensive forms. The former denotes tenderness towards all His creatures in general, and the latter towards His worshippers in particular. The Divine attribute of Rahmat may on analysis be found to have the following as its components:—(1) His provision of everything beforehand that could be needed by man in the world; (2) His concern for the well-being of man, both in life and death; (3) His tenderness for man's helplessness, and (4) a disposition on His part to deal kindly and generously with man.

16. Or 'owner', i. e., Master with full powers to exercise forgiveness and clemency: not a mere judge bound to award punishment to the guilty.

17. (when His sovereignty shall be more evident than ever, and manifest even to the worst scoffers). The general Requital will follow the general Resurrection, wherein all men, good and bad will be judged according to their faith and works. The verse completely repudi tes the Christian doctrine that Christ, not God, would be the judge. Cf. the NT —'For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son.' Jn. 5 : 22)

18. i. e. Thy humble servants.

19. (and none do we associate w th Thee in worship.) Now begins the petition proper. The pronoun in اياك نعبد is placed before the verb for the sake of emphasis, and a very strong one is intended by prefixing the pronoun with ايا. Clearly there is no place in Islām for any Son-prophet or angel-worship. Contrast this with the open and avowed worship of Christ in the Christian Church. 'The Church . . . never ceased to offer prayer to Christ with the Father.' (ERE, I, p. 104). In the Catholic Church there are three distinct kinds of worship: (1) latria (due to God), (2) hypudulia (due to the Virgin Mary), and (3) dulia (due to the saints). Islām recognizes no such distinctions. In it there is only one class of worship, that due to God alone.

20. Note again the strictly monotheistic tone of the Islamic prayer. Not only is there to be no creature-worship but even the invoking for help of any saint, prophet, angel, 'Son,' 'Daughter,' or 'Mother' is absolutely forbidden. In Him alone Perfection dwells. He alone must be invoked. Contrast with this the doctrine of the Roman Church: 'That the saints who reign with Christ offer to God their prayers for man; that it is good and useful to invoke them by supplication and to have recourse to their aid and assistance in order to obtain from God His benefits through His Son.' (EBr. XIX, p. 820) In Hinduism the invocations to Indra, Agni, Soma and many others are too well known to need description.

21. (and right). اهدنا has much wider significance than 'showing us the way.' What the supplicant is asking for is not merely that the way be pointed out or verbally indicated to him, but that he may, by the Divine grace, be actually led on to his goal,—the Guide, as if, accompanying the guided and leading him on and on.

22. (in the matter of right guidance such as Thy prophets and saints).

23. (in consequence of their wilful and deliberate choice of the path of perdition). A strictly literal rendering would be, 'who are angered upon.' The anger of God 'is His disapproving of the conduct of him who disobeys Him, and whom He will therefore punish.' (LL) 'Righteous Indignation' has been defined in modern psychology as resentment come to the aid of the moral feelings,—retribution that must overtake wrongdoers and the tyrants and oppressors of mankind; and surely no indignation can be more righteous than the Divine one. It is a timid philosophy that hesitates to hate and condemn the evil and the evildoer in the strongest terms. For the 'wrath' of God compare the OT:—'Let me alone that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them.' (Ex. 32: 9-10) 'I was afraid of the anger and hot displeasure, wherewith the Lord was wroth against you.' (Dt. 9: 19) And the NT:—'O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?' (Mt. 3: 7) 'And he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.' (Re. 19: 15)

24. i. e., those who have deviated from the right course owing to their heedlessness and want of proper serious thinking.

Sūrat-ul-Baqarah

The Cow[25] II

Medinian[26]—40 Sections,[27] 286 Verses

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION 1

1. (الم) Alif-Lām-Mīm[28]

4. (والذين . . .يوقنون) and who believe in what has been sent down to thee,[38] and what has been sent down before thee,[39] and of the Hereafter[40] they are convinced.[41]

25. The title of this chapter was occasioned by the mention of yellow cow in verses 66-73.

26. i. e., revealed at Madīna.

27. Another structural division of every Sūrah is into 'sections' of various lengths.

28. Three letters of the Arabic alphabet generally held to be symbolic of some profound and sublime mystic verities. 'God knows best what He means by these letters.' (Th) Some, however, on the authority of IA. consider the letters to be an abbreviation of some such phrase as انا الله اعلم which means 'I am Allah, the best Knower.' The Arabic orators sometimes used to open their discourses with similar vocables. Also compare Ps. 119 in the OT, where the Psalmist has arranged his meditations in an elaborate alphabetical form. It has been called the alphabet of Divine Love.

29. The demonstrative pronoun ذالك usually indicates remoteness of distance, but sometimes, as here, has the force of suggesting esteem, honour, grandness, and high value.

30. كتاب is literally a writing, or a written revelation. The Qur'ān thus at its very beginning declares itself to be a written, not an oral, Revelation, passing only from mouth to mouth for generations. It is 'Book' essentially, and not by accident. Unlike the 'sacred literatures' of other religions, it is a single Book from the very start, and not a collection or a literature, grown and developed and composed at different periods by different hands reflecting the history of their times. It is even in this 20th century of the Christian era, The Book par excellence, 'the most widely-read book in existence.' (EBr. XV. p. 898, 11th Ed.) 'Though the youngest of the epoch-making books, the Koran is the most widely-read book ever written.' (Hitti, History of the Arabs, p. 126)

31. (that it is the immediate, infallible word of God.) The Qur'ān differs from all other 'sacred literatures' in claiming to be inspired in the strictest sense, each and every word of it being the word of God Himself and in its being preserved in its original purity. فيه may also mean 'wherein'. On this construction the purport would be: This is a Book in which nothing is doubtful but everything is absolutely true and strictly accurate; not changeable like human knowledge.

32. Not a text-book of chronology or of physical science, but a Guidance,—showing the right way to right beliefs and right conduct. 'Not a book meant to be read as most Europeans read it to-day sitting comfortably in an arm-chair with the critical faculties specially stimulated, ready to carp and cavil on the least provocation. It was not revealed for the Arabs as 'literature' designed only to please, though it was admitted by the most inveterate enemies of the Prophet to be superior to any existing 'literature' in the language of which they were proud . . . And yet it was not its literary excellence that had the chief significance for those for whom it was revealed in this fragmentary fashion. To them it was a Holy Writ, God's Commandment, the Law and the Ethics according to which they had to shape their lives.' (MA)

33. i. e., those who have an inner moral sense; are not devoid of a conscience ; are God-conscious.

34. Belief, as defined in modern psychology, is the mental state of assurance or conviction in which a mind accepts and endorses its experience as corresponding with reality,—the reality, assented to and endorsed in the case of religious belief, of course being of a far wider, far deeper, and far more comprehensive nature than reality elsewhere. With belief, in this sense, there invariably emerges a sense of security, a feeling of satisfaction that the road to salvation has been found—a subsuming of oneself in the all-comprising Reality.

35. i. e., what lies beyond this world of sense and is undiscernible by mere reason; such things as Resurrection, Paradise, Hell, etc. غيب is 'anything unperceivable: absent from the range, or beyond the reach of perception by sense, or of mental perception: or undiscoverable unless by means of Divine revelation.' (LL) Now this 'Unseen' or Great Beyond is the very breath of religion. Whoever disbelieves in it, disbelieves in religion altogether. 'Were one asked', says the eminent Harvard psychologist, William James, 'to characterise the life of religion in the broadest and most general terms possible, one might say that there is an unseen order, and that our supreme good lies in harmoniously adjusting ourselves thereto. This belief and this adjustment are the religious attitude in the soul.' (Varieties of Religious Experience, p. 53) The reality, the existence, of this Great Beyond, so long ignored or even denied and ridiculed by the materialistic West, is at long last being recognised by modern science. Says a leading British archæologist of the day :—"The unsound materialistic teaching of the past generation obscured this great fact of existence. Too much emphasis was placed on what was dubbed 'Reason,' and too little on Intuition." (Marston, The Bible is True, p. 214) 'The recognition by modern science of the reality of the Unseen has dealt a death-blow to materialism.' (Marston, The Bible Comes Alive, p. 252)

36. (at its proper time and with full observance of its rules and conditions). Prayer on our part is the truest recognition of God's supreme and infinite excellence and our total submission to it.

37. (in the cause of God and religion).

38. (O Prophet!).

39. (to other prophets of diverse nations and countries).

40. i. e., of the fact of the Judgment-Day.

41. Not a mere feeling, or suspicion, or opinion, but firm, unshakable adherence of mind to the truth of the Hereafter because revealed by God. Conviction, in its fulness, is not an exercise of the intellect, but the assent and consent of the entire human personality—the recognition of a truth with heart, mind and soul. The reaction set up by the belief in the Hereafter in the minds of humble believers is far stronger than that due to sensible perceptions.

5. (اولئک . . . مفلحون) These are on guidance from their Lord,[42] and these are the blissful ones.[43]

6. (ان الذین . . . یومنون) Surely those who have disbelieved,[44] it is alike to them whether thou hast warned them or hast not warned them;[45] they will not believe[46].

7. (ختم الله . . . عذاب عظیم) Allah has set a seal on their hearts[47] and on their hearing, and on their sight is a covering,[48] and for them shall be a torment mighty.[49]

SECTION 2

8. (ومن الناس . . . بمؤمنین) And of mankind are some who say: we believe in Allah and in the Last Day, yet they are not believers.[50]

9. (یخدعون . . . ما یشعرون) They would deceive Allah and those who believe,[51] whereas they deceive not save themselves,[52] and they perceive not.

10. (فی قلوبهم . . . یکذبون) In their hearts is a disease.[53] so Allah has increased unto them that disease,[54] and for them shall be a torment afflictive[55] for they have been lying.[56]

11. (واذا قیل . . . مصلحون) And when it is said to them:[57] make not mischief on the earth[58] they say: we are but reformists.[59]

12. (الا انهم . . . یشعرون) Surely it is they who are the mischief-makers and yet they realise not.

42. To sum up: the rightly-guided and the God-fearing are distinguished by (a) their belief in the unseen Beyond, (b) their intense devotion to their Creator (or their steadfastness in prayers), (c) their benevolence to their fellow-creatures (or the free spending of their possessions), (d) their belief in the Prophet's apostleship, (e) their belief in all previous Books, and (f) their firm belief in the Hereafter.

43. (in this world by receiving the true guidance, and in the Next, by getting the full reward thereof). There is no word in English to convey the full sense of فلاح and مفلحون . 'There is not in the language of the Arabs any word more comprehensive in its significations of what is good in the present life and in the final state than الفلاح.' (LL)

44. (and still choose to remain infidels).

45. (O Prophet!).

46. (because they have no will to believe).

47. (by their being inured to the acts of disobedience and infidelity). 'Heart,' in the Qur'ān as in the Bible, is the seat of all emotional, intellectual and volitional life, and the centre of all moral and spiritual functions. Note that the Divine sealing of the hearts follows the deliberate choice of disbelief, and not causes it.

48. All this is the natural and inevitable sequel to the rejectors' obstinate refusal to open their hearts to receive, their ears to hear, and their eyes to see the good and the true, and is only ascribable to God as all acts, as such, are ultimately bound to be ascribed to Him. It is those who will not believe that are condemned to judicial blindness which portends the more awful punishment of Hell, Cf. the NT:—'Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand: and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive: For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing and their eyes have they closed.' (Ac. 28: 25-27) 'And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie.' (2 Thes. 2: 11) And also the OT:—'They have not known nor understood: for he hath shut their eyes, that they cannot see; and their hearts, that they cannot understand.' (Is. 44: 18) 'The Lord hath forced out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes.' (29: 10)

49. (in the Hereafter). A just retribution, after, the last judgment, to the finally impenitent. عذاب 'generally signifies any corporal punishment; and, by an extension of the original signification, any implication of pain that disgraces or puts to shame; originally, beating; afterwards used to signify any painful punishment, torture, or torment.' (LL) Cf. its mention in the Bible. 'And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, . . . some to shame and everlasting contempt.' (Dn. 12: 2) 'And these shall go away into everlasting punishment.' (Mt. 25: 46)

50. (at heart, and in fact). The preceding section spoke of two classes of people, the believers and the unbelievers. The present section describes another class—really a sub-variety of the disbelieving class—the 'hypocrites' or the dissemblers who abounded in Madīna. This singular class of people professed Islam with their lips and pretended to be good and faithful Muslims, yet were not only infidels at heart but inveterate enemies of the Messenger and the Message he had brought.

51. (by concealing infidelity and pretending belief.)

52. i. e., their mendacity will recoil on themselves both in this world and the Hereafter.

53. (which they are developing and their principles of action are perverted).

54. Cf. the Bible :—'My people would not hearken to my voice . . . so I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust ; and they walked in their own counsels'. (Ps. 81 : 11-12)) 'Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven' (Ac. 7 : 42). 'Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness, through the lusts of their own hearts.' (Ro. 1 : 24)

55. This retribution for their habits of dissimulation and deceit, as apart from their sin of infidelity, is distinguished by its being specially afflictive.

56. Compare the lot of the hypocrites in the sacred literature of the Jews :— 'Let God destroy them that live in hypocrisy in the company of the saints . . . . Let the ravens peck out the eyes of the men that work hypocrisy.' (JE. VI. p. 514) 'Every person in whom is hypocrisy brings wrath upon the world, his prayer remains unheard, is cursed even by the embryos in their mothers' womb, and will fall into Gehinnom.' (ET. p. 107) In the Christian Scripture they are compared to 'whited sepulchres, outwardly beautiful but full of uncleanness' (Mt. 23 : 27) and to 'tombs which appear not' (Lk. 11 : 44) and which defile all who come in contact with them.

57. (by the holy Prophet and the Muslims).

58. (by propagating irreligion and impiety).

59. So utterly wanting were they either in understanding or piety or both that they reversed the true order of things, mistaking their vice for virtue, and calling corruption by the name of righteousness.

13. (و اذا قيل . . . يعلمون) And when it is said to them: believe[60] as people have believed, they say : shall we believe as the fools have believed ?[61] Surely it is they who are the fools, and yet they know not.

14. (و اذا لقوا الذين . . . مستهزؤن) And when they meet those who have believed they say :[62] we believe. And when they are alone with their devils[63] they say : surely we are with you ; we were but mocking.[64]

15. (الله . . . يعمهون) Allah mocks back at them,[65] and lets them wander bewildered[66] in their insolence.

16. (اولئك . . . مهتدين) These are they who have purchased error for guidance[67] but their commerce profited them not, nor have they ever become guided.

17. (مثلهم . . . لا يبصرون) Their likeness[68] is as the likeness of him who kindled a fire,[69] then when it lit up what was around him,[70] Allah took away their light[71] and left them in darkness where they see not[72]——

18. (صم . . . يرجعون) Deaf,[73] dumb[74], blind,[75] wherefore they will not return to light.[76]

19. (اوكصيب . . . بالكافرين) Or,[77] like a rain-laden cloud from heaven,[78] wherein are darkness, thunder and lightning.[79] They[80] put their fingers in their ears because of the thunder-claps, fearful of death,[81] while Allah has encompassed the disbelievers.[82]

60. i. e., come to believe in the truth of the true religion.

61. Another instance of the hypocrites' muddled thinking and queer morals. First they mistook vice for virtue (vide verse 11) and now they are mistaking virtue for vice. (Th)

62. (in order to win the goodwill of the influential and the well-to-do among the believers).

63. i. e., their chiefs and leaders and their fellow-dissemblers. شيطان if not preceded by the definite article ال signifies, 'Any that is excessively, or inordinately, proud or corrupt or unbelieving or rebellious, or that is insolent and audacious in pride and in acts of rebellion.' (LL) الى is here used in the sense of مع.

64. (at the Muslims; making a jest of them).

65. Or, 'shall requite them with punishment for mockery' (IQ) For the Biblical use of mockery and laughter in reference to God, compare the following:—'Ye have set at naught all my counsel, and would none of my reproof. I also will laugh at your calamity: I will mock when your fear cometh.' (Pr. 1:25-26) 'But thou, O Lord, shalt laugh at them; thou shalt have all the heathen in derision.' (Ps. 59:8)

66. That is what the Divine mockery comes to. عمه is to go repeatedly to and fro, in confusion and perplexity, unable to see the right course. (LL) Cf. the Bible:—'They that plow iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same. By the blast of God they perish, and by the breath of his nostrils are they consumed.' (Job. 4:8, 9)

67. (by their deliberate choice of the path of error, guilt and impiety).

68. i. e., the predicament in which the hypocrites really are.

69. i. e., who lights the torch of truth and guidance. The allusion is to the holy Prophet.

70. i. e., when it had made every truth bright and clear.

71. (in consequence of their habitual dissimulation).

72. The simile is a mixed one. It was the holy Prophet who lighted the torch of truth and guidance; and it illuminated everything around. Then the habitual offenders, the 'hypocrites.' in sheer perfidy, deprived themselves of their sense of seeing, and therefore remained in darkness. (AQ)

73. (to the call of religion).

74. i. e., incapable of uttering truth.

75. i. e., incapable of seeing the true and the good.

76. (to the Path).

77. The Madīna hypocrites were of two varieties. One class of them were rejecters of faith outright and only managed to disguise their views and beliefs. The parable in the vv. 17-18 refers to this class of dissemblers. The other group were not so definite and positive in their rejection of the faith. They wavered, swinging to and fro, like some of the modern 'sceptics'. They are the subject of the parable in the vv. 19-20.

78. This alludes in the parable to the advent of Islām.

79. This alludes to the vicissitudes of early Islām, inevitable at the time.

80. i. e., the waverers.

81. This refers to the weakness of their heart, and to their 'safety first' mentality.

82. (so that none are able to escape Him).

20. (يكاد. . .قدير) The lightning well-nigh snatches away their sight; whensoever it flashes on them, they walk therein,[83] and when it becomes dark they stand still.[84] And had Allah willed He would assuredly have taken away their hearing and their sights.[85] Surely Allah is Potent[86] over everything.

SECTION 3

21. (يا ايها الناس. . .تتقون) O mankind ![87] worship your Lord who has created you[88] and those before you,[89] haply you may become God-fearing.

22. (الذى. . .تعلمون) Who has made the earth for you[90] a carpet[91] and the heaven[92] a canopy and sent down from heaven water[93] and brought forth therewith fruits as a provision for you,[94] set not up compeers to Allah, while you know.[95]

23. (و ان. . .صدقين) And if you are in doubt[96] concerning what We have sent down[97] upon Our bondman[98] then bring a chapter like it[99], and call upon your witnesses,[100] besides Allah, if you are truthful.

24. (فان. . .للكفرين) But if you do not, and you cannot[101] then dread the Fire[102] whose fuel is men and stones,[103] prepared for the disbelievers.[104]

83. i. e., attracted momentarily by the glory and lightning success of Islām, the waverers advance a few steps towards it.

84. (in their place). So the trials and tribulations of the early days of Islām scared them away.

85. (as He did in times of old). 'And when they came down to him: Elisha prayed unto the Lord, and said, Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindness. And he smote them with blindness according to the word of Elisha.' (2 Ki. 6 : 18)

86. قادر . . . and قدير may signify the same Possessing power, or ability . . . قدير has an intensive signification.' and 'signifies he who does what he will, according to what wisdom requires, not more nor less; and therefore this epithet is applied to none but God.' (LL)

87. The message of the Qur'ān is addressed to the whole of mankind, not to any section of it, conditioned by race, colour or country. The components of this Message are a belief in the unity of God, and a belief in the messengership of Muhammad (on him be peace!). And these two grand and central truths are now formally presented in this verse and the three succeeding verses. To believe in Him and His unity the Holy Qur'ān commands us as well as persuades us. In this verse are elements both of command and persuasion happily blended.

88. (out of nothing, and not simply evolved you out of something pre-existing). Nor has man, as claimed by pantheists, emanated from God. 'Creation' negatives all other forms of production.

89. i. e., your remote ancestors; or other beings created before man. The purport is: look at the history of the past. On reflection you will see for yourself that He alone, your Sustainer and Creator, the Mighty, the Supreme, is worthy of your worship; and there is no chain of inferior gods or demi-gods, beside Him.

90. So it is man for whose benefit the earth is created and not vice versa. The very idea of man bowing before an 'earth-god' is monstrous.

91. فراش is, literally, a thing that is spread upon the ground, 'a thing that is spread for one to sit or lie upon.' (LL) Whatever its exact form and figure, this description of the earth, that it is for all living creatures a huge something to walk upon, to stand upon, to sit upon, or to lie upon, is an ideal one, which we all can admire, but none can improve upon.

92. سماء is, literally, 'the higher, or highest, or upper, or uppermost, part of anything.' (LL) Essentially it is the upper part of the universe in contradiction to the earth. The main idea underlying the word is that it is a thing above us, a thing so immeasurably high above us that in the space in-between we can raise our highest buildings, and raise our loftiest edifices: just as the main idea underlying the word ارض is that it is a thing beneath us—under our feet. The Bible makes 'heaven' the dwelling-place of God. 'The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in heaven.' (Ps. 11:4) 'The Lord looketh from heaven.. From the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth.' (33:13, 14). It is hardly necessary to add that Islām looks upon the idea of God occupying a certain space as preposterous.

93. This does away with all conceptions of a 'sky-god' and a 'rain-god.'

94. The Qur'ān, as already noted, is in no sense a text-book of the ever-changing physical sciences, and even incidentally makes no mention of astronomical and geographical facts as such. Various phenomena of nature, as they appear to an average layman, clear of scientific bias one way or the other, it only brings in to establish, strengthen and illustrate its central theme—the undivided and indivisible Sovereignty of the Lord-God—and to uproot the divinity of all minor 'gods,' such as corn-god, fruit-god, etc.

95. (intuitively, that He alone is capable of creating these objects and effecting these changes). Everyone is endowed with this intuitive consciousness.

96. (as to its being from God and suppose it to be a human production). Now begins the enunciation of the second part of the Islāmic creed—the messengership of the holy Prophet.

97. i. e., the holy Qur'ān انزال is to send down but تنزيل is much stronger, and نزل must be translated as 'revealed.'

98. i. e., the holy Prophet Muhammad (on him be peace!). Mark that the greatest of messengers and apostles and the recipient of the highest honour possible is but a servant, a slave, a 'bondsman of God,' having not the remotest community of nature with Him. Not an Avatar, nor an Incarnation, nor a Son, nor yet an actual embodiment of Godhead; but a mere mortal, who would only convey to his brother men a fuller knowledge of the Divine mind and will. In the Bible also, the phrase 'servants of Yahwa, is honorific and not disparaging.' (EBi. c. 4398) Bondage to God really implies emancipation from all other servitudes.

99. (in the surpassing excellence of its contents, in the grandeur of its language and style, and most of all in the completeness and all-sufficiency of its teachings). 'This book, a strong living voice, is meant for oral recitation and should be heard in the original to be appreciated. No small measure of its force lies in its rhyme and rhetoric and in the cadence and sweep, which cannot be reproduced in translation without loss.' (Hitti, op. cit., p. 127)

100. (who will testify as to your having successfully met the challenge).

101. Here is a most provoking challenge to the enemies of Islām, both ancient and modern, that has remained unanswered all these fourteen centuries, and is a unique standing miracle.

102. Cf. the Bible:—'Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?' (Is. 33: 14) 'Their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched.' (Is. 66: 24) 'It is better for them to enter into life, halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire . . It is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into Hell-fire.' (Mt. 18: 8-9) 'It is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched.' (Mk. 9: 43-44)

103. These stones, which the polytheists worshipped and of which they carved idols and images, would be placed in the Hell alongside their worshippers to increase their mental agony and torture. Polytheism has almost invariably manifested itself in stone-worshipping, and 'sacred stones' are perhaps the commonest type of idols. 'All the world over and at all periods of history, we find among the most common objects of human worship certain blocks of stone.' (Allen, Evolution of the Idea of God, p. 40) 'The worship of holy stones is one of the oldest forms of religion of which evidence has been preserved to us, and one of the most universal.' (EBi. c. 2979)

104. The Hell-fire is thus intended, primarily and mainly, for the infidels, the outright rejectors of faith, and not for mere sinners.

25. (و بشر. . .خلدون) And give thou[105] the glad tidings to those who believe and do righteous work that surely for them shall be Gardens beneath which rivers flow. Whenever they will be provided with fruit therefrom,[106] they shall say: this is that with which we were provided before; and they shall be given things consimilar,[107] and for them shall be therein spouses purified,[108] and therein they shall be abiders.

26. (ان. . .الفسقين) Surely Allah is not ashamed to use a similitude,[109] be it of a gnat[110] or of aught above it.[111] Then as to those who believe, they know that it is the truth from their Lord.[112] And as to those who disbelieve, they say: what did Allah[113] intend by this similitude? Many He sends astray thereby[114] and many He guides thereby, and He sends not astray thereby any except the transgressors[115]——

27. (الذين. . .خسرون) who break the covenant of Allah[116] after its ratification[117], and cut asunder what Allah has commanded to be joined[118] and make mischief in the land.[119] It is they who are the losers.[120]

---

105. (O Prophet!).

106. i. e., from the Gardens of Paradise.

107. i. e., fruits similar either to each other, or those of the earth. To add to their enjoyment and entertainment, the blessed in the Paradise will be supplied with fruits closely resembling in colour and appearance of each other or those of the earth, though of course infinitely superior. The passage may also well hint at the close resemblance between the good works performed in this world and their spiritual fruits or counterparts in the Hereafter.

108. ازواج مطهرة are 'wives purified from the pollution of the menstrual discharge and the other natural evacuations.' (LL) Human personality, once its survival is admitted, survives in its totality, and not in part only. And if there is a blessed, eternal life in the Paradise, it must be in its complete fulness. Without loss or diminution of any of the intellectual, emotional, and volitional, even sensual factors that enrich the earthly life,—excluding, of course, all taint of vice. Lack of conjugal love and happiness would surely be an impoverishment, not an enhancement, of the life to come. Survival of human personality, if at all, must be in its entirety, and not only in its abstract, intellectual parts.

109. A مثل in the Qurānic sense is not an allegory, but a similitude, with some moral or religious application.

110. This is said in answer to the objection of the pagans that the Qur'ān condescends to speak of such humble objects as the spider, the bee, and the fly. The Qur'ān answers, in effect, that there is nothing undignified in the mention of these creatures of God, or of any creature still lower.

111. (in smallness, provided it serves the purpose of illustration well).

112. (and also very much to the point). 'Fly' and 'spider' have been used in the Qur'ān to illustrate the utter incompetency and helplessness of idols and 'gods:' and they serve their purpose of illustration exceedingly well.

113. الله is here uttered by pagans, hence its translation can also be 'God.'

114. i. e., by parables like these.

115. i. e., those who wish to go astray themselves. Disobedience and transgression, when formed as habits, preclude the desire for knowledge, the search after truth. فاسق is one who habitually goes forth, or departs, from the bounds of obedience, or is a confirmed sinner or transgressor.

116. (to obey Him and His messengers implicity). عهد is an injunction as well as a compact.

117. (by themselves). This refers to the instinct of religion innate in every human being.

118. By this are meant the duties and obligations imposed by God towards Himself and towards one's parents, family, neighbours, community, country and fellow-creatures in general.

119. This has reference both to moral corruption and material disorder; the first, because they rejected the true faith and propagated their false principles of irreligion and immorality; and the second, because they created disturbances and feuds and caused wanton bloodshed.

120. (both immediately, by being bereft of peace of mind, and in the long run, by being deprived of eternal bliss).

يحييكم ثم اليه ترجعون ﴿٢٨﴾ هو الذي خلق لكم ما في الارض جميعا ثم استوى الى السماء فسوىهن سبع سموت

28. (كيف . . ترجعون) How will you disbelieve in Allah whereas you were lifeless[121] and He gave you life ;[122] thereafter He will cause you to die[123] then He will give you life,[124] and then unto Him you shall be returned.[125]

29. (هوالذى . . عليم) He it is Who created for you[126] all that is on the earth,[127] then He turned to the heaven,[128] and formed them seven heavens.[129] And He is of everything the Knower.[130]

30. (و اذ . . تعلمون) And recall when[131] thy Lord said to the angels :[132] surely I am going to place a vicegerent[133] on the earth[134]. They said :[135] wilt Thou place therein one who will act corruptly therein and shed blood,[136] while we hallow Thy praise and glorify Thee ?[137] Allah said : verily I Know what you do not know.[138]

31. (و علم . . صدقين) And He taught Adam[139] the names,[140] all of them ;[141] then He set them before the angels,[142] and said : declare to me the names of those, if you are truthful.[143]

32. (قالوا . . الحكيم) They said: hallowed be Thou ! no knowledge have we save what Thou hast taught us[144], surely Thou alone art the Knower,[145] the Wise.[146]

33. (قال . . تكتمون) Allah said : O Adam ! declare thou to them the names[147] of those objects. Then when he had declared to them the names of those objects, He said : did I not tell you, surely I know the hidden in the heavens and the earth and know that which you disclose and what you have been concealing ?[148]

121. (in the loins of your fathers).
122. (in the wombs of your mothers).
123. (at the appointed time of your death).
124. (on the Day of Resurrection).
125. (for final retribution).

126. i. e., for your use, for your benefit, O mankind!

127. However immense in size and huge in strength those objects may be, man is the master of all. He is not to bow down before any of them. The very idea of creature-worship is repellent.

128. Or, 'He directed Himself to the heaven.' ثم استوى الى السماء is metaphorically said of God, meaning, 'Then He directed Himself by His will to the heaven, or elevated regions, or upwards, or to the heavenly bodies.' (LL)

129. The Qur'ān agrees in this respect with the Bible. 'The conception of the heavens which pervades the OT and the NT . . . is that of a series of seven heavens.' (DB. II, p. 322)

130. (so He is fully cognisant of all human needs and requirements).

131. (before the creation of man).

132. (to give them an opportunity to express themselves). Angels are super-terrestrial, incorporeal, real and objective beings, not personified qualities and abstractions. They are faithful servants of God and His trusted messengers, and as pure spirits absolutely sinless and incorruptible. They are, in Islām, as unmistakably distinct from 'gods' as from men; and Islām knows no such things as 'fallen angels' or 'degraded gods'.

133. Mark that this vicegerent is a created being, and, as such entirely and sharply marked off from God, the Creator. Mark again that the primary purpose of man in this world is to act as the vicegerent of God, and to establish in His name a complete and perfect theocracy.

134. (to execute, enforce and administer My laws therein). And it is for this purpose of Divine vicegerency that man is endowed with a full-developed will, as distinct from instinct of his own.

135. Not by way of protest or complaint but out of excess of loyalty and devotion, 'as the most devoted bondsmen who could hardly bear their Beloved Master employ a new servant besides them, for any of His services.' (Th)

136. This the angels surmised from man's constitution. And this is endorsed by the teaching of modern Psychology that man's primary instincts are predatory and individualistic rather than social.

137. i. e., We extol the Holiness both of Thee and Thy Attributes, and we are, by Thy grace, incapable of going wrong, while this new being, called man may be presumed to go wrong sometimes, and the disobedient among his kind may offend Thee, our Lord!

138. (of man's nature, and his capacities, and of his special aptitude for Divine vicegerency). A corrective angelolatry. Angels are not co-equal with God in respect of knowledge even.

139. The first progenitor of the human race. He was a prophet.

140. (of all things, and infused into his heart the knowledge of their properties).

141. i. e., the objects of which they were the names.

142. (in order to demonstrate man's supreme competency, in preference to angels, for Divine vicegerency on the earth.

143. (and are right in supposing that you were equally competent to serve as God's vicegerent on the earth).

144. Another death-blow to the doctrine of angelolatry. Angels far from being omnipotent have only a very limited knowledge.

145. i. e., the Possessor of infinite knowledge, and knowing the capacity of every one of Thy creatures.

146. i. e., the Possessor of infinite wisdom, and endowing every one of Thy creatures, man or angel, with as much of knowledge as fitted him and accorded with his capacity.

147. (and properties).

148. This is an amplified restatement of v. 30: "Verily I know that which ye know not;" and the address here is to all sentient creatures.

البقرة الم

قُلْنَا لِلْمَلٰٓئِكَةِ اسْجُدُوْا لِاٰدَمَ فَسَجَدُوْٓا اِلَّآ اِبْلِيْسَ ؕ اَبٰى وَاسْتَكْبَرَ ۫ وَكَانَ مِنَ الْكٰفِرِيْنَ ﴿٣٤﴾ وَقُلْنَا يٰٓاٰدَمُ اسْكُنْ

34. (و اذ . . الكفرين) And recall when We said to the angels :[149] prostrate yourselves before Adam,[150] they prostrated themselves, but not Iblīs ;[151] he refused[152] and was stiff-necked, and became one of the disbelievers.[153]

35. (و قلنا . . الظلمين) And We said : O Adam ! dwell thou and thy spouse[154] in the Garden, and eat both of you plentifully thereof as you desire, but do not approach, both of you, younder tree,[155] lest you become of the transgressors.

36. (فازلهما . . حين) Then the Satan[156] caused the twain to slip[157] therefrom[158] and drove forth the twain from what they were in.[159] And We said : get you[160] all down, each of you as enemy of each,[161] and on the earth will be an abode for you and enjoyment[162] for a time.[163]

37. (فتلقى . . الرحيم) Then Adam learnt certain words[164] from his Lord, and He relented towards Him[165]. Surely it is He Who is Relenting,[166] Merciful.[167]

38. (قلنا . . يحزنون) We said : get down all of you from here,[168] and if there comes to you guidance from Me,[169] then whoso follows My guidance, no fear[170] shall come on them, nor shall they grieve.[171]

39. (و الذين . . خلدون) And those who disbelieve and belie Our signs, they shall be inmates of the Fire ; therein they shall abide.[172]

149. (as also to all other creatures lower than the angels).

150. (by way of acknowledging him as God's vicegerent on the earth and paying homage to him as such).

151. ابليس literally, is 'the disappointed one'. He was not an angel but a jinn, as expressly mentioned in the Qur'ān (S. Kahf, verse 50) الا is not always synonymous with 'except' or 'save,' but it also denotes, as here, 'but not.'

152. (to bow down through conceit).

153. (for disobeying a clear Divine command !).

154. (who also had been created by this time).

155. Note that the tree remains nameless and unspecified in the Qur'ān.

156. (who on his banishment from the Paradise-Garden had by now become a sworn enemy of Adam and his descendants). The root verb شطن means, 'He was, or became, remote or far, from the truth, and from the mercy of God'. (LL)

157. (by his cunning and by some clever stratagem, the nature of which could not be perceived by Adam and his consort). Iblīs, it is related in the traditions of the Prophet, went up to Adam and his consort in disguise and affecting his true friendship and fidelity to them, offered to show them the way to the tree of eternity, the fruit of which shall cause them never to separate from Allah's presence,—the very thing that they longed most—and swore to them by Allah that he was their most faithful adviser. It was thus that they partook of the forbidden fruit. There was none of wilful and deliberate disobedience on the part of Adam. He was simply 'taken in.'

158. i. e., on account of the tree. The pronoun ها in عنها refers to the tree and the preposition عن is denotative of cause, signifying 'because of' or 'on account of.' An alternative rendering could be 'to slip therefrom.'

159. This may mean either the happy state they were in, or the happy place they were in—the Paradise.

160. (all). The number is plural, not dual : and the address is to the entire progeny of Adam yet unborn.

161. This refers to the mutual enmity in which mankind live.

162. (of life). The words متاع and مستقر both imply the ephemeral nature of the earthy existence.

163. i. e., till the expiration of your terms of life; life on earth shall not be eternal, but only for a short duration.

164. (of penitence). To inspire the guilty with words and expressions of remorse and contrition is only a manifestation of Divine grace and mercy.

165. (and accepted his repentance).

166. The Prophet 'was never tired of telling the people how God was Very-Forgiving, that His love for men was more tender than of the mother-bird for her young.' (LSK. Intro. p. LXXX).

167. i. e., the possessor of much mercy, and exercising it very frequently.

168. (O mankind!) This is not by way of penalty, as the sin has been by now forgiven. Incapacity to enjoy the blissfulness of Paradise was perhaps the natural and inevitable result of eating the fruit of a particular tree; and physical consequences are indelible even when all moral taint has been swept away. A would-be suicide, for instance, if, after taking poison, sincerely regrets his act and repents, his sin might well be fully condoned, yet no amount of contrition may undo the deadly physical action of the poison.

169. (through prophets and Divine messengers). The change from the plural 'We' and 'Our' expressive of Might and Majesty to the singular 'Me' and 'My' is noticeable. It is to signify the deep and intimate personal relationship of Divine Grace, Mercy and Tenderness with the believers.

170. i. e., fearful event. Consciousness of an Infinite Power and of infinite goodness behind the finite individual is in itself sufficient to instil in man a sense of fearlessness and security.

171. (on the Day of Judgment)

172. (for ever). Cf. the OT: 'A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about.' (Ps. 97 : 3). And the NT: 'Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels . . . And these shall go away into everlasting punishment.' (Mt. 25 : 41, 46) 'So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.'—(13 : 49-50) ' . . . hell-fire, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.' (Mk. 9 : 48)

173. 'Children of Israel' is the national designation of the Jews. Israel was the name borne by their ancestor, Jacob, the father of 'the twelve tribes,' a son of Isaac, and a grandson of Abraham (on all of whom be peace !). This nation of priests, patriarchs and prophets, perhaps the most remarkable people in ancient history, blessed of their Lord, always great in the realm of religion and faith, and mighty and glorious for long periods in the affairs of the world, had migrated in their thousands, after the capture of Jerusalem by the Romans under Titus, into Arabia, and had settled in and around Madīna long before the advent of the holy Prophet. The whole of the north-eastern Arabia was dotted over by their colonies, and many of the Arab pagans, in the course of time, had come to adopt their ways and their faith. In the third century of the Christian era an Arabian tribe, even so remote as in the south of the Peninsula, was led to adopt the Jewish faith. As proud possessors of the book and the Divine Law, and even more as adepts in crude occult sciences and magical crafts, these Arab Jews were in early days of Islām, in effect intellectually the dominating masters of the country. In matters religious and divine they were the trusted advisers of the unlettered pagans and their acknowledged superiors. Jewish legends, Jewish tenets and Jewish feats of exorcism were by now popular knowledge throughout Arabia. The 'idolatry of Arabia,' to use the words of Muir, had formed a compromise with Judaism, and had imbibed many of its legends and perhaps many of its tenets. It was the Jews, again, who had been long predicting a new redeemer, and had been keenly looking for him. This helps to explain the extent of attention they receive in the Qur'ān, and the long series of admonitions, warnings and exhortations addressed to them. In the domain of religion they were always the foremost; in Arabia, contemporaneous with Islām, their importance stood specially high.

174. 'And Jacob said unto Joseph: God Almighty appeared unto me at Luz in the land of Canaan, and blessed me, and said unto me, Behold, I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a multitude of people; and will give this land to thy seed after thee for an everlasting possession.' (Ge. 48: 3-4)

175. i. e., your covenant, with Me; the promise of obedience that ye made to Me. 'If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine. And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation.' (Ex. 19: 5-6) 'Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways, and to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and judgments, and to hearken unto his voice'. (Dt. 26: 17)

176. i. e., My covenant with you; the undertaking that I gave you. 'And the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as he hath promised thee, and that thou shouldst keep all his commandments; and to make thee high above all nations which He hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honour: and that thou mayst be a holy people unto the Lord thy God, as he hath spoken.' (Dt. 26: 18, 19) So the covenant was a bilateral one—with reciprocal obligations and undertakings,—the essential thing in the people's undertaking being that they would always worship the one and only God, and the essential part of His undertaking being that they would be His peculiar people. 'That Israel's character as the chosen people is conditioned by obedience to God's commandments is stated in the very words of the Sinai covenant.' (JE. IV, p. 45)

177. (regardless of frown or favour from fellow-creatures). Cf. the OT:—

'I will make them hear my words that they may learn to fear me all the days that they shall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children.' (Dt. 4: 10) 'Neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid. Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread.' (Is. 8: 12-13)

178. (now), i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

179. (already), i. e., the Torah.

180. (as the Arab idolaters would be only too prone to follow suit).

181. To reject truth for monetary considerations for the inducements of this transitory, ephemeral world, is to barter eternal happiness and bliss at 'a small price.' That the Jews had even in ancient times evinced a special weakness for the allurements of the lucre, is borne out by the OT itself:—'He is a merchant, the balances of deceit are in his hand: he loveth to oppress.' (Ho. 12: 7) Also Am. 8: 4-5. Again, in the NT times, Paul and Peter both bring the same charge against the Jews. 'There are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of circumcision: whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake.' (Ti. 1: 10-11) 'And many follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you.' (2 Pe. 2: 2-3)

182. Cf. the OT: 'Oh that there were such a heart in them, that they would fear me.' (Dt. 5: 29) 'And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God.' (Dt. 10: 12) 'Serve the Lord with fear.' (Ps. 2: 11) 'Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself, and let him be your fear and let him be your dread.' (Is. 8: 13)

183. (by perversing the text or by handling it deceitfully). Cf. 2 Co. 4: 2. One such method common with Jews (as well as the Christians) was the method of allegory. 'The Palestinian Jews allegorised the OT . . . in order to satisfy their conscience for the non-observance of laws that had become impracticable, or to justify traditional and often trivial increment . . . or, generally for homiletical purposes . . . the Hellenistic Jews . . . allegorised the OT to prove . . . that their religion had the same rationale as Greek philosophy, and that Moses had been the teacher, or, at all events, the anticipator, of Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, and the Stoics.' (DB. I, p. 65) Compare JE. I, pp. 403-404.

184. (by suppressing it altogether).

185. All this manipulation of their Divine Texts by the Jews has been deliberate and with a set purpose, not as a matter of accident.

186. 'This would cure the mind of pride and conceit.' (Th) 'I will call upon God, and the Lord shall save me. Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice.' (Ps. 55: 16-17)

187. 'This would cure the mind of avarice and greed.' (Th) زكوة literally, purity and purification, in the language of the Islāmic law means: the poor-rate;

the portion, or amount, of property that is given therefrom as the due of God, by its possessor to the poor in order that he may purify it thereby.' (LL) The payment of this religious tax is obligatory, provided that the property is of a certain amount and has been in possession for one lunar year. The tax varies according to the nature and amount of the property; but generally it is one-fortieth thereof, or of its value; i. e., 2½ per cent.

188. 'This would infuse and increase meekness of spirit.' (Th) 'O come, let us worship and bow down: Let us kneel before the Lord our Maker.' (Ps. 95 : 6) 'The forms of divine worship in the Biblical epoch were prostration or falling on one's face to the ground, placing one's head between one's knees, standing during prayer or during a solemn proclamation . . . ' (VJE. p. 14)

189. i. e., with the Muslims in the congregational prayers. 'This ordered service of divine worship is one of the most characteristic features of the religious life of Muslim society and its impressive character has frequently been noted by travellers and others in the East.' The late Bishop Lefroy thus commented upon it: 'No one who comes in contact for the first time with the Mohammadans can fail to be struck with this aspect of their faith . . . Wherever one may be, in open street, in railway station, in the field, it is the most ordinary thing to see a man, without the slightest touch of pharisaism or parade, quietly and humbly leave whatever pursuit he may be at the moment engaged in, in order to say his prayer at the appointed hour . . . The very regularity of the daily call to prayer as it rings out at earliest dawn before light commences or amid all the noises and bustle of business hours or again as evening closes in, is fraught with the same majesty.' (Arnold, Islamic Faith, p. 29) 'As a disciplinary measure this congregational prayer must have had great value for the proud, individualistic sons of the desert. It developed in them the sense of social equality and the consciousness of solidarity. It promoted that brotherhood of community of believers which the religion of Muhammad had theoretically substituted for blood relationship The prayer ground thus became "the first drill ground of Islām."' (Hitti, op cit., p. 132)

190. (and true religion). The Jews had borne testimony to the advent of the holy Prophet before some of the Arab pagans.

191. (to practise that counsel, and to embrace Islām). This may also allude to the actual life of impiety led by the Jews, with all their theoretical knowledge of the Divine commandments. Their rabbis had gone so far as to teach, where merit was concerned, that a counsellor of good deed was better than its doer. 'He who induces others to do a good deed, stands in the sight of heaven higher than the one that does the deed.' (JE. I, p. 55)

192. (of Moses, wherein you find a clear reference to the advent of the holy Prophet).

193. (to cure you of your greed for power and greed for wealth—the two besetting springs of your conduct).

194. i. e., prayer as it is ordained in Islām.

195. (and meditate on the fact), ظن is not only 'he thought, opined, or conjectured' but also he knew, by considering with endeavour to understand.' (LL)

196. It is this living belief in a future life which makes the greatest hardship and sacrifice easy to the believers.

197. Cf. the OT: 'Thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth.' (Dt. 7 : 6) 'Only the Lord had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and he chose their seed after them, even you above all people as it is this day.' (Dt. 10 : 15) 'ye are my witnesses, my servants whom I have chosen; that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he.' (Is. 43 : 10)

198. (as a people, as a race). Now what did this 'preference' of the Israelites consist in? Was it their commerce, their adventures, their martial glory, their achievements in art, or their eminence in science? Nothing of the sort. Their singular glory and peculiar excellence, as a race, lay in their special mission—their tenacious, pure and absolute MONOTHEISM—in fact the only living monotheism that the world knew before the advent of Islām. 'The Hebrews alone of all semitic people reached the stage of pure monotheism, through the teachings of their prophets . . . As long as a man refused allegiance to other gods, he was looked upon as a Jew: whoever denies the existence of other gods is called a Jew. The unity of God was a revealed truth for the Jew, there was no need of proofs to establish it; it was the leading tenet of the faith.' (JE. VIII. pp. 659, 661)

199. (that you may deliver God's message, and proclaim His unity). 'Upon Israel specially devolved the duty of proclaiming God's unity . . . "The eternal is Israel's portion" demonstrates Israel's duty in the share to proclaim God's unity and imperishability over against the sun-, moon-, and star-worship of the heathen.' (JE. VI. p. 5) 'Judaism is above all the religion of pure monotheism, the proclamation, propagation, and preservation of which have been the life-purpose and task of the Jewish people.' (VII, p. 359).

200. (whether of an ancestor or of a descendant).

201. This is to repudiate the Rabbinical doctrine that 'grace is to be given to some because of the merits of their ancestors, to others because of the merits of their descendants.' (JE. VI. p. 61)

202. (by any angel or prophet). 'The patriarchs in heaven were believed to be intercessors for the living . . . Angels were often invoked by certain (Gnostic ?) classes of Jews. Especially was Michael invoked as intercessor for the Jewish people.' (JE. VIII. p. 408)

203. (In any way on the Judgment-Day). The reminder was all the more needed as the Jews had grown completely indifferent to the Hereafter and heedless of their personal responsibility.

204. The deliverance might not have come all at once, but possibly in slow stages as the form of verb نجينا suggests, the final stage being the drowning of the Pharaoh's army. Detachments from the main body might have left Egypt from time to time, and settled and multiplied at Hebron, round the tombs of the patriarches.' (DB. III. p. 820)

205. Fir'awn, or its Biblical equivalent, Pharaoh, is the Hebraised title of the ancient kings of Egypt, like the 'Tsar' of Russia, the 'Sultan' of Turkey, or the 'Khedive' of modern Egypt. The Pharaoh spoken of here, the one contemporaneous with Moses (peace be on him!) was, till recently, believed to be Rameses II, in the 13th century B. C., or Merenptah, or both. 'Rameses II of the 19th dynasty is generally accounted as the Pharaoh of the Oppression, and his son and successor, Merenptah is considered to be the Pharaoh of the Exodus . . . The Oppression evidently lasted many years. Rameses II reigned 67 years, and thus the Exodus may have taken place in the short reign of Merenptah, the son and successor of that aged king.' (DB. III. p. 820) Also JE. IX. p. 660. Fresh archæological evidence, however, identifies the Pharaoh of Oppression with Thotmas III and the Pharaoh of the Exodus with Amenhatap II, and postulates the date of the Exodus as falling between 1447 B. C. and 1417 B. C. ... The Exodus must, therefore, have taken place after Thotmas III's death in 1447 B. C., and during the reign of Amenhatap II.' (Marston, The Bible is True, p. 171)

206. Cf. the OT: 'Now there arose up a new king over Egypt . . . And he said unto his people: Behold, the people of the Children of Israel are more and mightier than we: Come on, let us deal wisely with them, lest they multiply . . . Therefore they did set over them taskmasters to afflict them with their burdens . . . And the Egyptians made the Children of Israel to serve with rigour; and they made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field; all their service, wherein they made them serve, was with rigour.' (Ex. 1: 8-14)

207. 'And the king of Egypt spake to the Hebrew midwives . . . And he said: When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools, if it be a son, then you shall kill him, but if it be a daughter, then she shall live . . . And Pharaoh charged all his people, saying: Every son that is born ye shall cast into river, and every daughter ye shall save alive.' (Ex. I. 15: 22)

208. 'Probably to fill in time the harems of their oppressors.' (Milman, History of the Jews, I. p. 77)

209. (for you). 'This was a severe affliction indeed.' (Ant. II. 9: 2).

210. Or on account of you. 'Whatever may have been the exact cause of this event . . . its historical certainty its well established.' (Ewald, History of Israel, p. 498) 'There are . . . the strongest grounds for regarding the narrative as historical in outline, though details cannot always be trusted.' (EBr. VIII. p. 972)

211. Cleavage of water, though in this instance an act of direct Divine intervention, is not after all so singular a breach of 'the laws of nature' as it may at first sight appear. Action of earthquake on the sea can be easily productive of a like result. A similar phenomenon, though of course on a much smaller scale, was observed in India as recently as on the 15th January, 1934 when in the city of Patna, in broad daylight, at a few minutes past 2 p. m., the sudden disappearance and equally sudden re-emergence of the great river Ganges was witnessed by many, and the occurrence was well reported in the daily press of India. A respectable eye-witness's account is here reproduced:—' . . . Suddenly, the sound changed from a dull roar and became more shrill; from the river there came a hissing noise and the waters of the Ganges subsided as if by magic into the sand. This happened in a few seconds, and the bed of the river was left dry where a minute before the stream had been swiftly flowing. The effect of this was most terrifying. It seemed to one that the end of the world had come and many people attempted to get up from where they lay, only to be thrown down again . . . The scene on the river was frightful. Opposite where I stood, there had been an island of sand in the middle of the stream, with a narrow passage of water on the near side and a broader stream, on which steamers and boats plied, on the far side. The island had become joined to the mainland. On what had been the broad passage, several boats and river steamers were stranded. The occupants rocked to and fro as the sand beneath them vibrated. On what had been the narrow passage a number of bathers were left half-sucked into the sand by the force of the receding water. They struggled to get free and escape. For the space of several minutes (I estimate that the shock lasted for five minutes), the river-bed remained dry. Then as suddenly as it had vanished, before my eyes the Ganges appeared again, but this time it spouted up from the sand with considerable force. Great cracks and fissures, some as long as fifty feet and several feet wide, appeared at irregular distances and from them columns of water shot up to the height of a man with loud bursting noise . . . In a few seconds, the level of the river had risen again and it spread from bank to bank. The Ganges had resumed its interrupted flow and its waters swept on as if nothing had ever happened. Every boat was capsized and it was only by a miracle that no lives were lost in my presence.' (The Pioneer, Lucknow, 20th January, 1934)

212. This refers to the final act of deliverance which was by now complete. 'And Moses stretched out his hand over the sea; and the Lord caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night and made the sea dry land, and the waters were divided. And the children of Israel went into the midst of the sea upon a dry ground....The Children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea . . . Thus the Lord saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians.' (Ex.14 : 21-30)

213. 'And the Egyptians pursued, and went in after them to the midst of the sea, even all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots, and his horsemen . . . And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the sea returned to its strength when the morning appeared, and the Egyptians fled against it; and the Lord overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea. And the waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into sea after them; there remained not so much as one of them.' (Ex. 14 : 23-28) The following 'rationalistic' account of the whole episode by a Christian authority is interesting: 'Both the routes which lead across the narrow isthmus between the marshes of the eastern branch of the Nile and the northern extremity of the Red Sea into the wilderness were blocked by walls and defensive works. Accordingly, when the Israelites had reached the vicinity of Pithon—at that time the present gulf of Suez stretched so far inland—an Egyptian army suddenly presented itself in their rear. Escape seemed impossible: the wall and the water cut them off. The men despaired of deliverance. Mosses alone did not flinch. He led Israel right up to the shore of the Gulf, the waters of which were being driven back by a strong east wind. Taking this natural phenomenon, perhaps already familiar to him, as a favourable token from Yahwa, he caused the forward march to be continued during the night over the sea-bed that had been left dry, and the eastern shore was safely reached. The pursuing Egyptians were embarrassed by their war chariots, and in the morning the waters began to return to their natural state and cut the enemy off.' (EBi. c. 2220)

214. 'And Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the seashore.' (Ex. 14:30)

215. Moses of the Bible, one of the greatest prophets recognised by Islam. According to Sir Charles Marston's calculations, born in or about 1520 B. C. and died in or about 1400 B. C. Age, according to the Bible, 120 years. (Dt. 34:7)

216. 'And Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights.' (Ex. 24:18). 'And he was then with the Lord forty days and forty nights.' (34:28)

217. (for worship). The Israelites in their impatience during the temporary absence of Moses (peace be on him!) had taken to the image-worship of a golden calf. The Bible narrates the story of calf-worship by the Israelites in great detail (Ex. 32:1-8) The Qur'an is in substantial agreement with it, except in one very important particular, where the Bible makes the prophet Aaron—him of all the people!—responsible for this act of outrageous impiety.

218. i. e., after he had departed to the mount to receive the Torah.

219. 'We may conjecture that the bull-cult itself was a native Canaanite form of Baal religion, adopted by Israel with the change of the name of the deity revered.' (E. Br. IV. p. 503). Or the calf may have been an emblem of the moon-good, which, in the Assyrian inscription, is styled "the youthful and mighty bull" and the Lord of the heavenly hosts . . . The ancient Hebrews, being nomads, like the Arabs, favoured the moon.' (JE. XI. p. 528).

220. (on your showing contrition for this act of gross idolatry, remitted the punishment you merited).

221. (and become obedient).

222. Or, 'the criterion.' فرقان is originally 'anything that makes a separation, or distinction, between truth and falsity.' It also means 'proof, evidence, or demonstration.' (LL) So here it may refer either to the oral teaching of the prophet Moses, which separated the right from the wrong, or to the 'signs' and 'wonders' vouchsafed to him.

54. (و اذ. . .الرحيم) And recall when Musa said to his people: O my people! surely you have wronged yourselves by your taking the calf for worship; so now turn to your Maker[223] and slay one another.[224] That will be right for you with your Maker.[225] Then He relented towards you. Surely it is He who is Relenting, Merciful.

55. (و اذ. . .تنظرون) And recall when you[226] said: O Musa! we will not believe in you[227] till we see God openly. Thereupon a thunderbolt took hold of you,[228] while you looked on.

56. (ثم. . .تشكرون) Then We raised you after your death,[229] that haply you[230] may return thanks.

57. (و ظللنا. . .يظلمون) And We overshadowed you with cloud,[231] and We sent down upon you manna[232] and quails:[233] eat of the good things wherewith We have provided you.[234] And they wronged not Us, but themselves they were wont to wrong.[235]

58. (واذ. . .المحسنين) And recall when We said[236] enter this township[237] and eat plentifully of it as you will,[238] and enter the gate[239] prostrating,[240] and say: forgiveness;[241] We shall forgive you your transgressions, and We shall give increase to the well-doers.[242]

59. (فبدل. . .يفسقون) Then the evil-doers changed the word[243] that had been told them for another;[244] so We sent down upon the evil-doers a scourge from heaven,[245] for they were wont to transgress.[246]

223. (Whom you have so wantonly offended by your act of gross idolatry). بارى applied to God, means 'The Creator; He who hath created the things that are created, not after any similitude or model . . . or the Framer, or Fashioner. (LL)

224. i. e., let the innocent slay the guilty among you. 'And slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour. And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses; and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men.' (Ex. 32:27-28). This is recorded as a fact of history. There is no question here of 'mortification of souls.' or of 'a metaphorical use of the verb قتل. There are certain crimes like murder, rape, etc., in every code of law known to the world, which cannot go unpunished, howsoever deep and genuine the penitence of the guilty. Image worship in the Mosaic law must have been classed among such grievous sins. In fact we read: 'If there be found among you . . . man or woman . . . that hath gone and served other gods, and worshipped them, . . . then shalt thou bring forth that man or that woman, ... and shalt stone them with stones till they die.' (Dt. 17: 2-5).

225. i. e., in the sight of your Lord.

226. i. e., seventy of your elders, whom Moses had taken with him to the Mt. Sinai.

227. i. e., in thy assertion that the voice calling on thee is really God's.

228. (for this impertinent demand).

229. The seventy persons spoken of above were struck dead by lightning, and on Moses's intercession restored to life.

230. (as a community).

231. (when you were wandering in the wilderness). 'And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud, to lead them the way: and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light: to go by day and night' (Ex. 13: 22) 'The Israelites were surrounded with clouds for protection.' And "the Haggadah . . . mentions not one, but seven 'clouds of glory' as having accompanied Israel on its march through the desert . . . Those 'clouds of glory' prevented the garments of the Israelites from becoming soiled or worn during the forty years in the wilderness . . . Those clouds receded from the Israelites when they had committed sins . . . and thus failed to protect them." (JE. IV. p. 123)

232. A kind of dew; a sweetish liquid. 'It is a desperate rebellion against evidence to try to identify the miraculous Manna of the Exodus with the natural exudates. The daily consumption of Manna as computed by Macalister, was more than 300 tons; as he rightly declares, "All the Tmarisks in the desert could not have yielded this daily provision." This natural exudate is only found during two months of autumn.' (CD. p. 590)

233. 'And it came to pass, that at even quails came up, and covered the camp; and in the morning the dew lay round about the host.' (Ex. 16; 13) The quail is 'well known in the Sinaitic Peninsula, where it passes, migrating northward in spring, in immense flights . . . Even these flocks are said to be surpassed in numbers by the autumn flight when they return south to their winter quarters. The quail flies very low . . . ; it is soon fatigued, and hence falls an easy prey to man. 160,000 have been captured in a season at Capai.' (EBi. c. 3989) 'Quails pass over the Sinaitic Peninsula in vast numbers migrating northward in spring and returning southward in the autumn.' (JE. X. p. 285) 'A sea-wind would bring them in immense numbers into the camp which the Israelites occupied at that time. The miracle consisted in their being directed to the right time and place.' (DB. IV. p. 179)

234. (for food in the desert, but do not store them up). 'And Moses said, let no man leave of it till the morning.' (Ex. 16 : 19)

235. (by storing up their daily supply of food against the express command of God). 'Notwithstanding they hearkened not unto Moses; but some of them left of it until the morning, and it bred worms, and stank; and Moses was wroth with them.' (Ex. 16 : 20)

236. The reference now is to the Hebrew history of a later period.

237. This may refer either to the town of Jericho (Eriha) in Palestine, which the Hebrews captured and occupied many years later under the command of Joshua; or to the town of Shittim,—one of the limits of the camping ground of Israel in the plains of Moab.

238. This suggests that it must have been a city of plenty.

239. i. e., the outer gate of the city.

240. Or, 'doing obeisance.' Anyway, the command was to maintain meekness and humility in the hour of triumph.

241. —to suit you words to your posture. حطة literally means 'A petition for the putting down of a heavy burden from one; or of the heavy burden of sin . . . They were told to say حطة for the purpose of asking thereby for the putting down of their heavy burdens from them, that they should be put down from them.' (LL)

242. (favours and rewards). The Bible omits to mention all these significant and important moral aspects of the narrative.

243. (of humility and devotion).

244. (of ridicule and insolence).

245. i. e., a plague, if the reference is to the town of Shittim. 'And those that died in the plague were twenty and four thousands.' (Nu. 25 : 9)

246. (and continued to be ungodly and defiant). The Divine punishment visits only the confirmed criminals and persistent law-breakers.

SECTION 7

60. (و اذ . . . مفسدين) And recall when Mūsā prayed for drink for his people.[247]. So We said : smite[248] with thy staff the rock.[249] Then there gushed forth out of it[250] twelve springs ;[251] every people [2] already knew their drinking-place ; eat and drink of the provision of Allah, ? make not mischief on the earth as corrupters.

61. (و اذ قلتم . . . يعتدون) And rec..l when you said : O Mūsā, we will not bear patiently with one sort of food,[253] so supplicate your Lord for us that He bring forth for us of what the earth grows[254]——of its vegetables, and its cucumbers, its wheat,[255] its lentils and its onions.[256] Mūsā[257] said : would you take in exchange what is meaner for what is better ? Get ye down into a city,[258] as there is surely in it what you ask for.[259] And stuck upon them[260] were abasement[261] and poverty.[262] And they drew on themselves[263] wrath from Allah.[264] This,[265] because they were ever disbelieving[266] in the signs of Allah[267] and slaying[268] the prophets[269] unjustly.[270] This, because they disobeyed[271] and were ever transgressing.[272]

247. (who had become impatient with thirst in the desert). At Rephidim, 'And there was no water for the people to drink. Wherefore the people did chide with Moses, and said : Give us water that we may drink . . . And Moses cried unto the Lord.' (Ex. 17 : 1-4) According to another account, also Biblical, the place where this occurred was not Rephidim but Kadesh. 'And the people abode in Kadesh . . . And there was no water for the congregation . . . And the people chode with Moses, and spake.' (Nu. 20 : 1-3)

248. The only correct rendering of ضرب is 'smite' or 'strike.' The root verb ضرب never signifies 'to seek a way' or 'to go forth,' unless followed by a very distinct preposition فی as misinterpreted by an English translator of the holy Qur'ān.

249. عصا is always a 'staff' or a 'rod,' and not a 'community' unless used metaphorically, as misinterpreted by the translator referred to in the last note. Cf.

the Bible: 'Behold: I will stand before thee there on the rock, in Horeb, and thou shalt smite the rock, and then shall come water out of it, that the people may drink. And Moses did so in the sight of the elders of Israel.' (Ex. 17:6) 'And Moses lifted up his hand, and with his rod, he smote the rock twice: and the water came out abundantly, and the congregation drank.' (Nu. 20:11) This wonderful rock, real, not 'fictitious,' exists even to this day. It stands 'from 10 to 15 ft. high, in the wide valley of the Leja, under the Ras of Sufsafeh, slightly leaning forwards... intersected by wide slits or cracks, which might, by omitting or including those of less distinctness, be enlarged or diminished to any number between ten and twenty... Its first unquestionable appearance is in the reference made more than once in the Koran to the rock with the twelve mouths for the twelve tribes of Israel, evidently alluding to the various cracks in the stone, as now seen.' (Stanley, Sinai and Palestine, pp. 36-37)

250. The gushing forth of a stream or a rivulet from a rock, though in this instance an act of direct Divine intervention, is not a phenomenon very much removed from everyday experience.

251. (according to the number of the tribes of Israel). 'One who went into those parts in the end of the fifteenth century tells us expressly that the water issued from twelve places of the rock. (Sale) And 'a later curious traveller observes that there are twenty-four holes in the stone, which may be easily counted, that is to say, twelve on the flat side, and as many on the opposite round side.' (Sale)

252. i. e., each of the twelve tribes.

253. i. e., the Manna and the quails, which they used to get daily without any great exertion on their part.

254. 'Vegetable food, and chiefly grain, occupied the first place in the diet of the Israelites.' (JE. V. p. 430) 'The ancient Israelites lived on vegetable food and fruit.' (p. 596)

255. Or, 'garlic,' the word فوم meaning both.

256. 'And the Children of Israel also wept again, and said: Who shall give us flesh to eat? We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely, and the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic. But now our soul is dried away: there is nothing at all, beside this Manna, before our eyes.' (Nu. 11:4-6)

257. The pronoun may refer either to Moses or to God; preferably it refers to the former.

258. This was said when the Israelites refused to recede from their demand. The use of the word اهبطوا 'get down' or 'descend' in connection with entry into a city may hint at the small esteem in which the artificial 'civilised' city-life is held in Islām. مصرا with تنوين is unquestionably a common noun and means 'a city.' And it is amazing to find Sale, Rodwell, Palmer and even Bell, all treating it as a proper noun and translating it by 'Egypt' or 'the country of Egypt.'

259. It is in cities alone—the usual centres of luxury and opulence—that fresh fruits and green vegetables can be had at any time of the year. The desert of Sinai was not at all synonymous with a sandy waste absolutely without population and pasturage. 'In certain districts there might be towns and cities occupied by nomads.' (DB. IV. p. 917) It is quite a mistake to picture to oneself the Sinaitic peninsula as having then been under the same conditions as prevail to-day. We already know enough to justify us in affirming that these parts in ancient times were not wholly given up to nomads, and that the country possessed ordered institutions and seats of advanced civilisation.' (EBi. c. 4633)

260. (like marks or dies, as their permanent national characteristics). ضرب الطين على الجدار is 'he stuck or applied the mud upon the wall as a plaster.' (LL) Note that the pronoun 'them' refers to the race of Israel rather than to the Jews as a religious body. Even in the present-day anti-Semitic agitation, 'the Jews are not opposed on account of their religion, but on account of their racial characteristics. As such are mentioned: greed, a special aptitude for money-making, aversion to hard work, clannishness and obstrusiveness, lack of social tact, and especially of patriotism. Finally, the term is used to justify resentment for every crime or objectionable act committed by any individual Jew.' (J. E. I. p. 641)

261. Which feature has clung to Israel to this very day. Horrors of Jewish history, whether of remote past or of recent present, are well known, lamented by friends and gloated over by foes, but recognised and admitted by all. In the words of a Christian historian, 'for ages the Hebrew history has been the same everywhere substantially—a constant moan, as it were, with variations indeed, but seldom a note in which we miss the quality of agony.' And a leading Jew of to-day is said to have exclaimed :—'if there are gradations in suffering, Israel has reached its highest acme.' Certainly, there is no history so full of mournful pathos as theirs. And it is instructive, if also pathetic, to note that in the years 1938-39 with all the wealth and commerce and 'influence' at their command, there are incessant references in their press to their 'frightful persecution' and 'the beatings, the murders, the torture, the robbing, the blackmailing, the arrests and imprisonments' and 'humiliations, both public and private' that are being perpetrated on them in several parts of 'civilized' Europe. Nor is this persecution religious; it is pre-eminently racial and no escape is possible even after the change of faith. For we are distinctly told :—"Neither baptised Jews nor even Christian children or grand-children of baptised Jews are immune from the raging scourge." (Cohen, Jews in Germany, p. 2) And in another pamphlet of the same name, but by a different author, reprinted from the Manchester Guardian, dated January 23, 1934, we read: 'Many Jews in Germany abandoned their Jewish traditions, faith and usages, and became entirely "German," but as the official test of Judaism now is not religious but racial, and as even those who have a Jewish grand-parent are considered Jews, they do not escape persecution by having been baptised or having become "German" in outlook. Those Jews who tried to "Germanise" themselves (some even demonstratively repudiating their Judaism) are hit terribly hard, and many have committed suicide.'

262. Witness their modern condition: 'Jews in the general mass are poorer than their fellow citizens, though a few exceptional persons have acquired great wealth. Taken as a whole, Jews are poorer than any European people.' (JE. I. p. 621) 'Although the riches of the Jew have passed into a proverb, all social observers are agreed that the Jews have a larger proportion of poor than any of the European nations among whom they dwell.' (X. p. 151)

263. 'The primary significance of بوأ is said to be لزوم or adhesion; and in this sense باء به is synonymous with التزمه.' (LL)

264. In the words of a modern writer sympathetic to the Jews: 'The history of Jewry is the history of human struggles. For more than two thousand years the Jewish people have incessantly struggled for social justice and self-preservation'.

265. i. e., all this untold misery and incalculable suffering. 'Statistics, wherever obtainable, show that the proportion of blindness is greater among modern Jews than among their non-Jewish neighbours . . . Trachoma, glaucoma, and various diseases of the cornea, and of the uveal tract are found among the Jews in a greater proportion than among non-Jews.' (JE. III. pp. 249, 250) 'As with blindness, Jews . . . have shown a marked tendency toward deaf-mutism—in the general proportion, as compared with non-Jews, of two to one.' (IV. p. 480) 'Among the Jews the proportion of insane has been observed to be very large. From statistics collected by Kushan, he concludes that they are four to six times more liable to mental disease than are non-Jews.' (VI. p. 603) 'The Jews are more subject to diseases of the nervous system than the other races and peoples among which they dwell. Hysteria and neurasthenia appear to be most frequent. Some physicians of large experience among Jews have even gone so far as to state that most of them are neurasthenic and hysterical. Tobler claims that all the Jewish women in Palestine are hysterical; and Raymond says that in Warsaw (Poland) hysteria is very frequently met with among both Jewish men and Jewish women. The Jewish population of that city alone is almost exclusively inexhaustible source for the supply of hysterical males for the clinics of the whole continent.' (IX. p. 225)

266. The words in the Qur'ān كانوا يكفرون can only be rendered 'were ever disbelieving' or 'were wont to disbelieve,' and not mere 'disbelieved' or 'disobeyed' which suggests a single act of disobedience or sin. The Qur'ān emphasises the point that the Israelites were visited by these penalties after they had become confirmed law-breakers, and had been unrepentant in their attitude of denial and defiance. They were a consecrated race undoubtedly, but then their 'election' rested on something more substantial and stable than mere high lineage,—it rested on their faithful observance of Divine Law.

267. The Bible abounds in doleful narratives of their rebellion and revolt.

To give only a few such extracts out of many:—

'Remember and forget not, how thou provokedst the Lord thy God to wrath in the wilderness; from the day thou didst depart out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the Lord. Also in Horeb ye provoked the Lord to wrath, so that the Lord was angry with you to have destroyed you. When I was gone up in the Mount to receive the tablets of stone . . . the Lord said unto me: . . . thy people which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt have corrupted themselves; they are quickly turned aside out of the way which I commanded them; they have made them a molten image. Furthermore the Lord spake unto me, saying, I have seen this people, and behold, it is a stiff-necked people. Let me alone, that I may destroy them and blot out their name from under heaven.' (Dt. 9 : 7-13) 'Ye rebelled against the commandment of the Lord, your God, and ye believed him not, nor hearkened to his voice. Ye have been rebellious against the Lord from the day that I knew you.' (23-24) 'I know thy rebellion, and thy stiff-neck; behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, ye have been rebellious against the Lord; and how much more after my death? . . . I know that after my death ye will utterly corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you; and evil will befall you in the latter days; because ye will do evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger through the work of your hands.' (31 : 27-29)

268. (as also attempting to slay).

269. (of their own race such as Isaiah, Zachariah and John the Baptist). 'They mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy.' (2 Ch. 36 : 16) 'Wherefore, will ye plead with me? Ye have all transgressed against me, saith the Lord . . . Your own sword hath devoured your prophets, like a destroying lion.' (Je. 2 : 29-30) 'They were disobedient and rebelled against thee, and cast thy law behind their backs, and slew thy prophets.' (Ne. 9 : 26). '. . . Ye are the children of them which killed the prophets. Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers. Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell? Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes; and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues and persecute them from city to city: that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zachariah, son of Barechiah, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar. (Mt. 23 : 31-36) 'O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee.' (Mt. 23 : 37; Lk. 13 : 34)

270. i. e., wrongful and unjust not only in the sight of God, as the murder of a prophet in any instance is bound to be, but wrongful, unjust and illegal, even according to Israel's own code of law and justice. To take the instance of Jesus: He 'was not condemned, but he was slain. His martyrdom was no miscarriage of justice, it was a murder.' (Rosadi, Trial of Jesus, p. 301) 'In this trial was a violence done to the forms and rules of Hebrew as well as to the principles of justice.' (Innes, Trial of Jesus Christ, p. 35) 'Such a process had neither the form nor the fairness of a judicial trial.' (p. 59)

271. For the uniformly rebellious attitude of Israel towards their greatest leader and benefactor, Prophet Moses, compare and consult their national historian Josephus: 'They were very angry at their conductor Moses and were zealous in their attempt to stone him as the direct occasion of their present miseries.' ("Ant." III. 1 : 3) '. . . the multitude were irritated and bitterly set against him.' (1 : 4) 'They again turned their anger against Moses, but he at first avoided the fury of the multitude . . . .' (1 : 7) 'The multitude began again to be mutinous and to blame Moses for the misfortunes they had suffered in their travels.' (13 : 1) 'The multitude therefore became still more unruly and more mutinous against Moses than before.' And Moses 'was basely abused by them.' (13 : 1) 'They again blamed Moses and made a clamour against him and his brother Aaron . . . They passed that night very ill and with contumacious language against them: but in the morning they ran to a congregation intending to stone Moses and Aaron, and so to return to Egypt.' (14 : 3) '... notwithstanding the indignities they had offered to their legislator and his laws and their disobedience to the commandments which He had sent them by Moses.' (IV. 2 : 1) 'When forty years were completed, Moses gathered the congregation together near Jordan . . . and all the people being come together, he spoke thus to them; . . . "you know that I have been oftener in danger of death from you than from our enemies." (8 : 1-2)

272. (the bounds of the law). The habitual corruption, crookedness and insolence of Israel is again emphasised by the form of the word كانوا يعتدون. Witness their own admissions. 'Frequently, too, the Israelites confounded the worship of YHWH with the worship of Baal.' (JE. VIII. p. 659) 'The cults of other deities were deeply rooted in the heart of Israelitish people and they do not appear to have been thoroughly suppressed until after the return from the Babylonian exile.' (XII. p. 568) 'Through mysticism and magic many polytheistic ideas and customs again found their way among the people.' (p. 569)

62. (ان الذين . . يحزنون) Surely those who believe[273] and those who are Judaised[274] and Christians[275] and the Sabaeans,[276] whoso believes[277] in Allah and the Last Day and works righteously[278]——their[279] wage is with their Lord;[280] end no fear[281] shall come on them nor shall they grieve.[282]

63. (و اذ . . تتقون) And recall when We took your bond[283] and raised over you the Tur[284] saying: hold fast to what We have given you,[285] and remember what is therein, haply[286] you may become God-fearing.

64. (ثم . . الخسرين) Then you turned away thereafter,[287] so had not the grace of Allah and His mercy[288] been upon you, you had been of the losers.

65. (ولقد . . خاسئين) And assuredly you know of those of you[289] who trespassed[290] in the matter of the Sabbath,[291] and We said to them: be you apes despised.[292]

66. (فجعلنها . . . للمتقين) And We made it a deterrent to those of their day and those efter them[293] and an admonition to the God-fearing.

67. (و اذ . . الجهلين) And recall when Mūsā said to his people.[294] Allah commands you that you slaughter a cow.[295] They said:[296] make you jest of us? Mūsā said: I take refuge with Allah that I should be of the pagans.[297]

273. (in thee, O Mohammad!). i. e., the Muslims.

274. The correct rendering of الذين هادوا can only be 'those who are Judaised or those who have become Jews.' 'It is for the first time that the Qur'ān speaks of the 'Jews' as distinct from the 'children of Israel.' The two terms, though frequently used as synonymous, are not exactly coextensive or interchangeable. Israelites are a race, a nation, a people, a huge family, the sons of a particular progenitor, conscious and proud of their high lineage. Jews are also a religious community, a church believers in particular tenets, members of a certain faith. The Holy Qur'ān, regardful of the niceties of expression, has always observed this distinction. When speaking of the religious beliefs and practices of the Hebrews and those who had adopted their faith, it uses the term 'Jews;' when alluding to their history and their national traits it keeps mentioning 'the children of Israel.' The Israelites ceased to exist as a nation with destruction of the temple in A. D. 70 and thenceforth they became a purely religious community. Many of the Arabs had, by the advent of Islām, adopted the Jewish faith and usages. Hence the significance of the Qurānic expression 'those who are Judaised.' 'The children of Israel,' so frequently addressed in the Qur'ān, says D. S. Margoliouth, 'were merely Arab tribes made Israelite by conversion.' (Torrey, Jewish Foundation of Islam, p. 23) Most of the Arab Jews, like the Jews of Abyssinia, seem not to have been genuine children of Israel, but native converts to Judaism.' (HHW. VIII. p. 10) 'Judging by their proper nouns and the Aramæan vocabulary used in their agricultural life, these Jews must have been mostly Judaised clans of Arabian and Aramæan stock though the nucleus may have been Israelites who fled from Palestine at the time of its conquest by the Romans, in the first century after Christ.' (Hitti, op. cit., p. 104)

275. نصارى is, in its proper sense, 'Nazarenes,' not Christians. A نصراني is 'a Nazarene' in its original meaning and a Christian only 'in its secondary applicat[illegible].' (LL) 'Nazarene,' is derived from 'Nazareth,' the place where Jesus passed his youth. The Nazarenes or the primitive Christians were the followers of the original pre-Pauline church, not quite like the present-day Christian of the Pauline variety. Nor is the title 'in itself disparaging.' (EBi. c. 3356) Rather, 'it was a primitive designation for Christians.' (ERE. III. p. 374)

276. Sābī is literally 'one who goes forth from one religion to another.' (LL) "The Sabians who are first mentioned in the Koran were a semi-Christian sect of Babylonia, the Elkasaites, closely resembling the Mandæans or so-called 'Christians of St. John the Baptist,' but not identical with them.'' (EBr. XIX. p. 790) According to another definition, they were a sect in ancient Persia and Chaldea, who believed in the unity of God but also worshipped intelligences supposed to reside in the heavenly bodies. 'The genuine Sabians of Arabic writers were a Judæo-Christian sect who also called themselves Nasoraie d'Yahya, the Nasoreans (i. e., the observants of St. John), and therefore became erroneously known to the modern world as the Christians of St. John (the Baptist). (Hitti, op. cit., p. 357). They 'practised the rite of baptism after birth, before marriage and on various other occasions. They inhabited the lower plains of Babylonia, and as sect they go back to the first century after Christ... Mentioned thrice in the Koran, these Babylonian Sabians acquired a dhimma status and were classified by Moslems as a 'protected' sect... The community still survives to the number of five thousand in the swampy lands near al-Basrah. Living in the neighbourhood of rivers is necessitated by the fact that immersion in flowing water is an essential, and certainly the most characteristic feature of their religious practice.' (ib)

277. i. e., comes to believe, irrespective of his past.

278. i. e., in a way sanctioned by the code of Islām.

279. Ahrupt transition from singular number to plural is frequent in Arabic.

280. Right belief and right conduct are the only sine qua non of salvation which every individual has thus in his own hands. Howsoever grave his misbelief or mis onduct in the past, he is not past redemption. If he only accepts God's truth, and obeys His laws, however late in life, blessings both of this world and the Next are his. Not even the Jews with their centuries-old record of crime and corruption, depravity and rebellion, are debarred from Allah's All-embracing grace and mercy: provided they mend their ways. (Th) Salvation is not confined to any particular race or nationality.

281. i. e., no fearful event.

282. (on the Judgment-Day).

283. (that you would live by the Law, O Children of Israel!). 'The conception of religion as a covenant concluded by God with man is peculiarly Jewish.' (JE. IV. p. 319)

284. 'And it came to pass—that there were thunders and lightning, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp trembled . . . and they stood at the nether part of the mount. And mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke . . . and the whole mount quaked greatly.' (Ex. 19: 16-18) That the mount was actually inverted over the Israelites is what is expressly narrated in the Talmud. 'The holy One, blessed be He, inverted mount Sinai over them like a huge vessel and declared, 'If you accept the Torah, well and good; if not, here shall be your sepulchre.' (ET. p. 66) 'God suspended the mount over them as a bat, and said to them, "if you accept the Torah, it is all right; if not, you will find here your tomb." (JE. IV. 321) طور is applied to 'mount Sinai and to the mount of Olives, and to several other mountains.' (LL) Here it denotes mount Sinai. There are several summits at present in the group of mountains known as Sinai.

285. i. e., the Torah.

286. لعل 'in its original and general application, expresses hope; but in the word of God it often expresses certainty.' (LL)

287. (from Our law and commands). 'How oft did they provoke him in the wilderness, and grieve him in the desert! Yea! they turned back and tempted God, and tempted the Holy One of Israel.' (Ps. 78: 40-41)

288. All such verses of the Qur'ān are indicative of God's extreme solicitude for mankind in general and for the children of Israel in particular.

289. i e., of their fate. The address is to the Jews of the holy Prophet's time.

290. (the bounds of the Law).

291. The Sabbath is the seventh day of the week (Saturday), which in the Jewish law was to be devoted exclusively to religious observances, and a cessation of almost all the principal activities of life, such as field-labour, business, cooking, hunting, was imperative ; and the penalty of profaning the sacred day was death. 'Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore ; for it is holy unto you. Everyone that defileth it shall surely be put to death : for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people . . . Whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, shall surely be put to death.' (Ex. 31 : 14-15) 'The Sabbath is a sign between YHWH and Israel, an everlasting covenant. Death or excision was the penalty of its profanation by work.' (JE. X. p. 587)

292. (and driven away). There are several points to note. In the first place, the Qur'ān does not say whether the sentence was actually carried out, or ultimately rescinded on the transgressors' repentance, some commentators adopting the latter suggestion. Secondly, the transformation may have taken place only in manners and morals as held by some early commentators, and not physically. Thirdly, the Qur'ān only argues from the Jews' knowledge of, and their credence in, such an event, لقد علمتم ('Ye know it perfectly well') and itself says nothing about its occurrence or otherwise. The usual Qurānic way of rehearsing the facts of Jewish history is different ; it begins with اذ ('and recall when—'). The commonly accepted view of the commentators is that the transformation took place at Eylah or Ailah, in the time of David (on him be peace !) and owing to his curse on the persistent Sabbath-breakers, and that the offenders were changed into apes, who died, all of them, after three days. Eylah, or Elath, of the Bible, was a flourishing harbour on the north-east arm of the Red Sea and is the modern town of 'Aqabah. There is a similar tradition of a tribe becoming baboon in certain primitive communities like the Zulus. (PG. I. p. 376) The scornful epithet خاسئين strikes at the root of monkey-adoration and Hanuman-worship of several polytheistic peoples. خاسئ is usually applied to 'a dog, and to a swine, and to a devil,' and means 'driven away, repelled, and not supposed to come near to men. And hence, contemptible, despicable, vile, or abject.' (LL)

293. i. e., to their contemporaries and their posterity. نكال is 'punishment serving to give warning to others than the sufferer ; or that restrains the offender from repeating the offence.' (LL) Cf. the OT : 'Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, what evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath day ? Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city ? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the Sabbath.' (Ne. 13 : 17-18)

294. (who were by now deeply tainted with the Canaanite superstition of bull-adoration).

295. Or, a bull.' The word بقرة is a generic name denoting any kind of bovine cattle. Commonly used for the cow, it may also denote a bull or an ox.

296. (in utter incredulity).

297. (by profaning the solemn office of God's apostleship by making jests).

69. (قالوا. . .الناظرين) They said : supplicate your Lord for us that He make clear to us what her colour may be. Mūsā said : He says : she should be a yellow cow whose colour is bright[299] delighting the beholders.

70. (قالوا. . .لمهتدون) They said : supplicate your Lord for us that He make clear to us what she may be ;[300] the cow has become dubious to us,[301] and surely, if God[302] will, we shall now be guided.

71. (قال. . .يفعلون) Mūsā said : He says, surely she should be a cow unyoked not broken to till the ground or to water the field, sound, and without blemish in her.[303] They said : you have now brought the truth.[304] Then they slaughtered her, and they were well-nigh not doing it.[305]

298. (as to her age).

299. 'Or rather fawn-coloured as are most of the cows of Arabia.' (Lsk) فاقع signifies both intensely yellow and intensely red. It is also applied to signify any colour free from admixture.

300. (in her other particulars).

301. (as there are so many cows answering to this description).

302. 'God', not 'Allah,' because the speakers here are Jews.

303. The Hebrew term for "blemish" seems to have originally meant a "black spot." It denotes anything abnormal or deviating from a given standard whether physical, moral or ritualistic. "Biblical legislation makes certain kinds of blemishes a ground for disqualification of animals for sacrifice." (JE. III. p. 240)

74. (ثم . . تعملون) Then your hearts hardened thereafter,[316] so they were as stones,[317] or even harder ; and surely of stones there are some from which rivers gush forth, and surely there are of them some that split and water issues therefrom, and surely there are of them some that fall down in awe of Allah,[318] and Allah is not unmindful of what you do.[319]

75. (افتطمعون . . يعلمون) Do you[320] covet then that they[321] would believe for you[322] whereas surely a section of them has been hearing the word of Allah, and then perverting it[323] after they have understood it,[324] while they know.[325]

76. (و اذا . . تعقلون) And when they[326] meet those who believe they say: we believe, and when some of them[327] are alone with some others[328] they[329] say:[330] do you[331] tell them[332] of what God has opened to you ; so that they may dispute with you therewith before your Lord ? Understand then you not ?[333]

77. (اولا . . يعلنون) Do they not know that Allah knows what they hide and what they make known ?[334]

316. (instead of being chastened).

317. 'O Lord ! . . . thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved ; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction ; they have made their faces harder than a rock ; they have refused to return.' (Je. 5 : 3) 'This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the Lord their God, nor receiveth correction.' (7 : 28) 'Why should ye be stricken any more ? Ye will revolt more and more.' (Is. 1 : 5). 'All the house of Israel are impudent and hard-hearted.' (Ez. 3 : 7)

318. A beautiful description, in parable, of three grades of a righteous people :—

(a) those who do universal good, such as the prophets (like big rivers in their beneficence).

(b) those whose outlook is not so broad, yet who do immense service within their limited sphere, such as the saints and martyrs (like smaller streams and rivulets) ; and

(c) those who are true and faithful at least to their own selves;—the general community of the faithful (like stones which are impressionable).

319. (and He shall call you to account at the proper time)

320. (O Muslims!).

321. i. e., the Jews,—a people so hard-hearted.

322. i. e., for your sake.

323. Islām was not the first to accuse the Jews of deliberate perversion of their sacred texts. The charge dates back to Jeremiah, one of their own prophets. 'Ye have perverted the words of the living God, of the Lord of hosts, our God.' (Je. 23 : 36) In the N. T. also there are several allusions to the Jews corrupting and perverting the word of God, as in 2 Co. 2 : 17; Ti. 1 : 10. That the books of the OT exist now in their original purity is not the position of anybody to-day—not even of the most conservative Jew.

324. i. e., their act of perverting their sacred text is deliberate and with a set purpose, so that far from being ashamed of it they are proud of their performance.

325. Very interesting and very illuminating are the Jews' own description of the 'Books' of the Bible and their ascription of the authorship to 'ancient sages' and to 'great teachers' and never to the Divine Author Himself. 'That the real authority of the Bible is intrinsic rather than prescriptive becomes clear as soon as we think of the circumstances in which the Scriptural canon was formed. The decision by which certain books were included in the Bible and others excluded, was a purely human decision. The great teachers sat in judgment upon the claims of the various works, and decided upon those claims by the light of reason—in other words, by the internal merits of the works themselves. Nor was the decision always easy. The fate of some books, like Ecclesiastes, and Canticles, and Esther, was, we learn, trembling in the balance even as late as the third century of the present era. The touchstone applied to the various Books was intrinsic worth, and nothing else.' (Joseph, Judaism as Creed and Life, p. 18) 'The Bible, being the work of godly men, necessarily contains both a Divine and a human element. But, since everything human is imperfect, we must not expect to find an absolutely perfect representation of Divine truth even in God's Book. Rays of light, penetrating through a stained-glass window not only part with some of their brilliance but borrow the various colours of the panes. It is so with the Bible . . . To think otherwise is to imagine that the authors of the Bible were not human beings but Divine.' (p. 20) 'Some of the Biblical stories are clearly legends though highly beautiful and instructive . . . In regard to scientific matters it reflects only the knowledge of the age in which each writer lived.' (pp. 22-23) 'The Pentateuch is the work not of one hand but of many hands . . . Similar views prevail among scholars with regard to other books of the Bible.' (p. 24) 'Jewish tradition, while insisting that some Biblical books were composed by the chief actors therein, which is not at all unreasonable, does not hesitate to admit later elaboration and revision of certain books in the Bible.' (VJE. p. 93) 'As an unimpeachable source of history and chronology the Bible is often disappointing, exhibiting statements and data which seem either vague or contradictory or else fail to agree, with what is known of contemporary oriental history and chronology.' (p. 95) 'Ancient Jewish traditions attributed the authorship of the Pentateuch (with the exception of the last eight verses describing Moses' death) to Moses himself. But the many inconsistencies and seeming contradictions contained in it attracted the attention of the Rabbis, who exercised their ingenuity in reconciling them.' (JE. IX. p. 589) 'Spinoza goes so far as to attribute the composition of the Pentateuch not to Moses, but to Ezra, which view appears to have existed even in the time of the Apocrypha.' (p. 590) The latest analysis, however, has led finally to the definitive attribution of the Pentateuch contents to no less than twenty-eight different sources. (ib)

326. i. e., the hypocrites among the Jews, posing as Muslims but infidels at heart.

327. i. e., the dissemblers among them.

328. i. e., the open rejectors of Islām among them.

329. (of the latter variety), i. e., the avowed enemies of Islām.

330. (to those who have been indiscreet in their speech).

331. (O our foolish brethren!)

332. i. e., the Muslims.

333. This is how the more obdurate among the Jews remonstrated with their co-religionists for opening their hearts to the Muslims. The allusion is to such matters as prophecies about the Prophet of Islām and any other information that the Muslims might have made use of and that might have proved damaging to the cause of Jewish religion.

334. How foolish, then, was their attempt to conceal their Scripture's knowledge from the Muslims!

82. (والذين . . . خلدون) And they who believe and do righteous works—these shall be the inmates of the Garden as abiders therein.

335. i. e., the Jews.

336. i. e., the products of imagination and fancy. Cf. the NT :—'The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine ; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears ; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.' (2 Ti. 4 : 3-4)

337. It is perhaps to these fancies and conjectures that Paul refers as 'foolish questions and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law.' (Tt. 3 : 9)

338. i. e., the learned among the Jews.

339. i. e., any part thereof.

340. Pseudepigraphy or 'the habit of adopting literary disguises' is a very old one in Hebrew literature. According to the views of higher criticism, there are a large number of books of the Old Testament which might be included under the foregoing heading.' (JE. X. p. 256) 'The ancients regarded the whole mass of the national religious writings as equally holy . . . The canonical books, therefore, needed no special designation, since all were originally holy. A new term had to be coined for the new idea of non-holy Books.' (III. pp. 140-141) The habit of literary forgeries had grown so strong with the Jews that in the first and second centuries of the Christian era they felt no scruple in composing works depicting 'the grandeur and moral elevation of Judaism, and ascribing their own writings to heathen poets and celebrities.' (II. p. 9) 'Pseudepigraphy—ascribing the authorship of a book, falsely, to some person of note in order to make it more popular—has frequently been practised in Jewish literary history. Possibly there are examples of it in the Bible (e. g., the latter part of the book of David), and the best known example is probably the Zohar.' (VJE. p. 542)

341. 'Some of the modern Biblical scholars have not been content only with explaining and justifying the practice but have gone the entire length of extolling it, and that too with an artistry that makes the fabrication a most touching form of self-effacement. For instance, Mr. J. W. Chadwick, in his Bible of To-day, writes :—"There is this at least to be said for those who put forth their own writings for those of illustrious men who had lived long before. It was not for themselves they desired the honour which would accrue from such a course: no, but only for the word they had to speak, the cause they wished to serve. If only this might prosper they were willing to remain for ever in obscurity. And there they have remained until this day." One wonders whether it has ever occurred to such apologists that the same justification, or rather glorification, of the fabricator of the Holy Writ, may well be applied to the case of those clever rogues "behind the scenes" at Delphi who were equally "willing to remain for ever in obscurity" if only the cause of their oracle might prosper and who have equally "remained there until this day." Nay, what is there to prevent this plea being pushed to its logical conclusion in order to extol the cleverness of every forger of a cheque, every manufacturer of currency notes and every counterfeiter of coins provided only that the motive of such self-effacement and impersonation was presumed to benefit other people as well." (MA)

342. Thus the Qur'ān condemns both the ends and the means equally emphatically. Contrast with this the doctrine of Paul: 'If the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto His glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner ?' (Ro. 3:7) An interesting illustration of 'the end justifying the means!' 'Such fraud upon human conscience is indeed woeful and no less woeful is the petty purpose that the perpetrators of such frauds have in view compared with the divine purpose of transcendent importance running through God's revelations.' (MA)

343. "Us" means the Israelites as a race, as a people. They considered themselves as such immune from the punishment of the Hereafter. 'In the Hereafter Abraham will sit at the entrance of Gehinnom and will not allow any circumcised Israelite to descend into it. As for those who sinned unduly, what does he do then ? He removes the foreskin from children who had died before circumcision, places it upon them and sends them down to Gehinnom.' (ET. p. 404) 'Israelites who are circumcised will not descend to Gehinnom.' (ib) 'The Fire of Gehinnom has no power over the disciples of the Sages . . . The Fire of Gehinnom has no power over the sinners in Israel.' (p. 405) 'The Fire of Gehinnom does not touch the Jewish sinners because they confess their sins before the gates of Hell and return to God.' (JE. V. p. 583)

344. 'Forty days: the period during which they worshipped the calf.' (Rodwell)

345. (O Prophet!).

346. (to that effect)

347. قال عليه is equivalent افترى عليه 'He lied, or said, what was false against him.' (LL)

348. i. e., to whatsoever race or nation he may belong.

349. The implication of كسب is that misdeeds are intentional, not accidental.

350. The implication of the word احاطت is that not a trace is left of virtue, which is possible only in the case of those who are totally devoid of faith.

351. (and this will be in utter disregard of their ancestry).

SECTION 10

83. (و اذ . . . معرضون) And recall when We took a bond with the children of Israil *saying : '*you shall not worship any god save Allah,[352] and show kindness to parents[353] and also to the kindred and the orphans[354] and the needy,[355] and speak kindly to mankind[356] and establish prayer and give the poor-rate. Then you turned away[357], save a few of you, and you are backsliders.[358]

84. (و اذ . . تشهدون) And recall when We took a bond with you, saying : you shall not shed your blood,[359] nor drive one another from your homes, then you ratified it,[360] and you were witnesses.[361]

85. (ثم . . تعملون) Thereafter it is you the very ones who slay one another and drive a section of you from their homes; and conspire[362] against them[363] with guilt and iniquity,[364] and if they come to you as captives you ransom them ; yet forbidden to you was their driving away.[365] Do you believe then in part of the Book and disbelieve in part ? What, then, is to be the recompense of those of you who do that, save humiliation in the life of the world.[366] And on the Day of Judgment they shall be brought back to the severest torment ;[367] and Allah is nor unmindful of what they do.

352. Literally 'ye shall not worship any one save Allah' احبار فی معنی النبی. Indicative mood in the sense of imperative. Cf. the OT :—'And God spake all these words saying, I am the Lord thy God . . . Thou shalt have no other gods before me.' (Ex. 20 : 1-3) 'The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb . . . I am the Lord thy God . . . Thou shalt have none other gods before me.' (Dt. 5 : 2, 6 : 7) 'Hear O Israel : the Lord our God is our Lord . . . Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him . . . ye shall not go after other gods.' (6 : 4, 13, 14)

353. 'Honour thy father and thy mother.' (Ex. 20 : 12 ; Dt. 5 : 16)

354. 'Orphans are represented throughout the Bible as helpless beings and therefore the Pentateuch reiterates continually the command to render justice to orphans.' (JE. IX. p. 438)

355. 'Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land.' (Dt. 15 : 11)

356. Notice that the Muslims are enjoined to behave with courtesy and politeness towards one and all.

357. 'They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them.' (Ex. 32 : 8)

358. 'I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiffnecked people.' (Ex. 32 : 9) 'Thou art a stiffnecked people.' (33 : 3) 'Ye are a stiffnecked people.' (33 : 15) 'It is a stiffnecked people.' (34 : 9) 'Thou art a stiffnecked people ... From the day that thou didst depart out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the Lord. Also in Horeb ye provoked the Lord to wrath, so that the Lord was angry with you to have destroyed you.' (Dt. 9 : 6, 7, 8) 'Ye rebelled against the commandment of the Lord your God, and ye believed him not, nor hearkened to his voice. Ye have been rebellious against the Lord from the day that I knew you.' (9 : 23-24)

359. 'Thou shalt not kill' (Ex. 20 : 13) 'Wherefore I command thee ... That innocent blood be not shed in thy land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.' (Dt. 19 : 7, 10)

360. i. e., affirming it willingly and expressly. 'And they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient.' (Ex. 24 : 7)

361. (thereto). 'Abrahamitic covenant ... was renewed on Mount Sinai when, before the giving of the Law, Israel as a people pledged itself to keep his covenant.' (JE. IV. p. 319) 'They were convinced that Moses repeated God's words to them faithfully, and they declared themselves willing to hear all that he spoke in God's name, and to act accordingly. God thereupon revealed to Moses all the commandments and all the statutes and judgments, which Moses communicated to the people.' (XII. p. 133)

362. (with their foes). The allusion is to the Jews of Madīna.

363. 'The Jews took an active part in the battle of Buāth between the Banū Aus and the Banū Khazraj. The Banū Nadīr and the Banū Kuraiza fought with the Banū Aus, while the Banū Kainukā were allied with the Banū Khazraj. The latter were defeated after a long and desperate battle.' (JE. VIII. p. 423) The Jewish tribes 'took part in the quarrels of the two Arab clans with whom they intermarried' and 'they fought occasionally on both sides,' (II. p. 42)

364. All this refers to the Arab Jews of the Prophet's time, a section of whom always sided with the pagans in the latter's war upon another section of the Jews, and thus out of petty animosities they were led to the destruction of their community.

365. 'Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house'. (Ex. 20 : 17)

366. A prophecy that proved true to the letter, in a few years' time, by the utter extermination of the Jewish tribes in Arabia, great and mighty as they were.

367. Compare denunciation of the Jews in the NT :—'Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of Hell ?' (Mt. 23 : 33)

86. (اولئك . . . ينصرون) These are they who have purchased the life of the world for[368] the Hereafter ; so the torment shall not be lightened for them, nor shall they be helped.[369]

SECTION 11

87. (ولقد . . . تقتلون) And assuredly We gave to Mūsā the Book,[370] and We followed him up by mesengers[371] after him ; and to 'I-sā,[372] son of Maryam,[373] We gave the evidences[374] and aided him with the holy Spirit.[375] Then whenever there came to you a messenger with what your hearts desired not,[376] you waxed stiffnecked,[377] and some you denied[378] and others you slew.[379]

88. (وقالوا . . . يؤمنون) And they say :[380] our hearts are in a covering.[381] Nay ! Allah has cursed them because of their infidelity :[382] little therefore is that which they believe.[383]

89. (ولما . . . الكفرين) And when there came to them a Book[384] from Allah confirming what was with them,[385]——and aforetime they were entreating God for victory[386] over those who disbelieved,[387]——then when there came to them what they recognized,[388] they disbelieved therein ; so Allah's curse[389] be on the infidels !

368. i. e., at the price of : in exchange for.

369. (by the intercession of prophets and angels).

370. i. e., the Torah.

371. (from amongst the Children of Israel).

372. i. e., Jusus, the last prophet of the house of Israel, who, according to his apostles at Jerusalem, 'was the Christ as the anointed man, not as the incarnate Angel, Messiah born by a virgin, nor as the man united with the celestial Christ by the Holy Spirit.' (Bunsen, Islam or True Christianity, p. 141) The latter-day conceptions of the so-called 'Christianity' were recognised neither by Jesus himself nor his twelve apostles. (ib)

373. i. e., Mary; 'Son of Mary,' that is, son of a woman, and therefore a mortal like other human beings; and not 'Son of God' or co-equal with Him in any respect or in any sense of the word.

374. (of his prophethood) i. e., miracles and the Scriptures. He was a true and honoured prophet of God!

375. i. e., the angel Gabriel who attended on Jesus (peace be on him!) constantly and succoured him in a special way. This 'holy spirit' of Islām has nothing, save name, in common with the 'Holy Ghost' of Christianity, who is 'the Third Person of the Blessed Trinity . . . . . the Spirit of the Father and of the Son' proceeding 'alike from both as from one common principle.' (CD. p. 451) Islām has no such preposterous proposition to support as that 'the Holy Spirit is rightly included in the Godhead, and to be worshipped and glorified with the Father and the Son as divine.' (ERE. XI. p. 798) Nor has it any such polytheistic doctrine to promulgate as that the Holy Spirit is 'Sovereign and Life-giving Who proceedeth from the Father. Who with the Father and the Son is together worshipped and glorified.' (EBr. XI. p. 635)

376. i. e. with such commandments and laws as were not to your taste.

377. (scornfully rejecting the apostles).

378. (and harassed and persecuted them).

379. See nn. 269, 270 above. The tense of the verb تقتلون implies that the Jews were making attempts on the life of the holy Prophet at the moment these words were being revealed.

380. (in pride and conceit).

381. i. e., secure against that to which thou invitest us, and impervious to any new influence. The Jews in their aggressive self-conceit thought that they were above the advances of Islām and unsusceptible to them. غلف plural of أغلف literally means 'uncircumcised:' when applied to a heart, it means 'as though it were covered with a غلاف so that it does not learn, or covered from hearing and accepting the truth.' (LL) For the Biblical use of the word 'uncircumcised' in various connections see Ex. 6: 12, Ezek. 44: 7, and Ac. 7: 51.

382. i. e., because of their persistent opposition to God's Messenger and their wilful blindness to see the truth.

383. (and that 'little' belief shall not avail them).

384. i. e., the Qur'ān.

385. (already), i. e., the Torah.

386. (by the advent of a new Messenger or Messiah). استفتح signifies 'He sought, desired, demanded, or asked, aid against an enemy, or victory.' (LL)

387. i. e., the Arab idolaters. This refers to the Jews' anticipation of a Messiah under whom they hoped to fight and vanquish the Arab pagans. 'Now the Jews oft-times suffered violence at their hands, and when strife was between them they had ever said to them, "Soon will a Prophet arise and his time is at hand; him will we follow, and with him slay you with the slaughter of 'Ad and Iram" (Ibn Ishāq quoted in Arnold's Preaching of Islam, p. 20).

388. (as the true Message and the true Messenger).

389. For 'curses' compare the OT:—'A curse, if ye will not obey the commandments of the Lord your God.' (Dt. 11 : 27) 'If thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God...... all these curses shall come upon thee and overtake thee; cursed shalt thou be in the city, and cursed shalt thou be in the field. Cursed shalt be thy basket and thy store. Cursed shalt be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep. Cursed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and cursed shalt thou be when thou goest out. The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thy hand unto for to do, until thou be destroyed, and until thou perish quickly; because of the wickedness of thy doings, whereby thou hast forsaken me.' (28 : 15-20) In the NT there are curses against the barren fig-tree, the scribes and Pharisees.

90. (بئسما . . . مهين) Vile is that for which they have sold themselves, disbelieving in what Allah has sent down,[390] out of envy,[391] that Allah shall reveal, out of His grace, to whomsoever of His bondmen He will.[392] Therefore they have drawn upon themselves wrath upon wrath,[393] and to the infidels shall be a torment ignominious.[394]

91. (و اذا . . . مؤمنين) And when it is said to them : believe in what Allah has sent down now, they say : we believe in what has been sent down to us.[395] And they disbelieve in what is besides that, while it is the truth, confirming what is with them.[396] Say thou :[397] why then did you kill Allah's prophet's aforetime[398] if you have been believers ?[399]

92. (و لقد . . . ظلمون) And assuredly Mūsā came to you with evidences, then you took to yourselves the calf[400] after him,[401] and you were transgressors.

93. (و اذ . . . مؤمنين) And recall when We took your bond and raised over you the Tūr,[402] saying : hold fast to what We gave you and listen. They said : we hear and we deny.[403] And into their hearts the calf[404] was made to sink because of their infidelity.[405] Say thou[406] : vile is what your belief commands you, if you are believers at all.[407]

94. (قل . . . صدقين) Say thou :[408] if for you alone is the abode of the Hereafter with Allah to the exclusion of mankind,[409] then long for death, if you are truthful.[410]

390. (as His Message).

391. This emphasises the fact that Jewish opposition was not based upon any intellectual misapprehension, but was solely due to chagrin and malice at finding a non-Israelite endowed with the high gift of prophethood.

392. The Jews, with the superiority complex of their race and their 'election' were smarting under the fact, too real and too patent to be ignored, that the new Messenger had risen not among themselves but among their cousins, the children of Ismā'īl, whom they had so long held in contempt and derision.

393. First, for denying God's truth: next, for the malice that prompted them to denial and defiance.

394. (in addition to its being painful).

395. i. e. to our people. The Jews held that believers they already were like any good Muslims, since they fully believed in the prophets of their own race. Why should they, they argued, be asked now to declare their belief in an Ishmaelite ?

396. The answer to the Jewish argument is twofold. They ought to believe in the Qur'ān, first, because it is True in itself, supported by independent evidence; and secondly, because it confirms and corroborates and supplements their own Scripture, and does not detract from it.

397. (O Prophet!).

398. 'They were disobedient, and rebelled against thee and cast thy law behind their backs, and slew thy prophets.' (Ne. 9: 26) See nn. 269, 270 above.

399. (as you profess). This is the third answer to the Jews. Why did they deny and slay prophets and apostles of their own race, if they had been believers all along ? Why, should have their history been red with the blood of their own prophets, if they were believers at all ?

400. (for worship). See nn. 217, 219 above.

401. i. e., while he was away even for the short space of a few weeks.

402. See n. 284 above.

403. Compare the OT for a similar, though not the same, occasion:— 'Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways . . . . and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls . . . . . But they said: We will not walk therein. Also I sent watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said: We will not hearken." (Je. 6: 16-17)

404. i. e., the love of it, العجل being equivalent to حب العجل (IQ).

405. (as one vice necessarily leads to another). 'And they were made to imbibe into their hearts the love of the calf.' (LL)

406. (O Prophet!).

407. The Jews professed to be men of faith and belief. The Qur'ānic answer is: Look at your deep-rooted calf-worship. Is that to what your faith leads up ? Then that faith must be very vile indeed.

408. (O Prophet !).

409. (as you imagine in the height of your presumption). 'Ye are the children of the Lord your God . . . . thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God, and the Lord hath chosen thee to be peculiar people unto himself.' (Dt. 14: 1-2) Easily were these 'chosen of their Lord and the favourites of Jehovah' led to believe that none, save the descendants of Israel, would be recipient of His grace and blessing in the Hereafter. 'Salvation is of the Jews!' (Jn. 4: 22).

410. i. e., if you are sincere in your profession.

وَلَنْ يَّتَمَنَّوْهُ اَبَدًا بِمَا قَدَّمَتْ اَيْدِيْهِمْ ۭ وَاللّٰهُ عَلِيْمٌۢ بِالظّٰلِمِيْنَ ۝ وَلَتَجِدَنَّهُمْ اَحْرَصَ النَّاسِ عَلٰى حَيٰوةٍ ۚ

95. (و لن . . .الظلمين) And they will never long for it,[411] because of what their hands have sent on before,[412] and Allah is Knower of transgressors.

96. (ولتجدنهم . . .يعملون) And surely thou[413] wilt find them[414] the greediest of all the people for life,[415] even greedier than those who associate.[416] Every one of them desires life for a thousand years,[417] and yet this will not save him from the torment,[418] even if he has lived so long.[419] And Allah is Beholder of what they do.

97. (قل . . .المؤمنين) Say thou :[420] whoso is an enemy to Jibrīl[421]—— then surely it is he who[422] has brought down this Revelation, by Allah's command,[423] to thy heart[424] confirming what went before,[425] and a guidance and glad tidings to the believers.[426]

98. (من . . .الكفرين) Whoso is an enemy to Allah and His angels and His messengers and Jibrīl and Mīkā'īl,[427] then surely Allah is an enemy to the infidels.[428]

99. (ولقد . . .الفسقون) And assuredly We have sent down upon thee[429] evident signs[430] and none disbelieves in them except the wicked.[431]

100. (اوكلما . . .يؤمنون) Is it that whenever they[432] enter into a covenant[433] some party among them casts it aside ? Aye ! most of them do not believe.[434]

411. ——conscious as their hearts are of their guilt.
412. (of sins and misdeeds).
413. (O reader !).
414. (far from wishing death).
415. 'Physical life is valued by the Hebrew as a precious gift, given that he may walk before God in the land of the living.' (JE. VIII. p. 82). 'The same appreciative view of physical or earthly life prevails also among the Rabbis......; hence, ordinarily, one should rather transgress a commandment than incur death.' (ib.) 'The prevalent custom among us,' says Judah Halevi, a prominent Jewish philosopher, 'is not to...... despise life...... but to love the world and length of life'. (ERE. II. p. 99).

416. (others with God), i. e., the idolaters who had no belief in a life after death and hence their natural greediness of this world.

417. So it is not without significance that the American Jews of the twentieth century record, with pride and pleasure, that 'the Jews in the country, as well as abroad, enjoy a longevity superior to that of Christian population!' (JE. V. p. 308).

418. (which is consequent on the nature of the life led in this world, and not on the number of the years lived).

419. And so the care of a wise man should be to see how he lives rather than how long.

420. (O Prophet!)

421. i. e., Gabriel, an arch-angel, whose function is to bring the divine message to the phenomenal world. Through him usually God sends down His revelation to the prophets. The Jewish conception is that Gabriel stands nearest to Michael but does not equal him in rank. (JE. V. p. 541), and is the 'angel of heavenly vengeance and of fire.' (I. p. 593). The Jews considered Michael to be their national guardian, and made a grievance of the agency of Gabriel who according to them was the messenger of wrath and punishment. It was Michael, they said, who was the messenger of peace and plenty. Hence, they proceeded, they must treat as spurious the revelation ascribed to the instrumentality of Gabriel.

422. (as a trusted messenger-intermediary).

423. ——and not of his own accord.

424. (O Prophet!).

425. (of the Divine Scriptures).

426. This sums up the main characteristics of the Qur'ān:—

(a) It confirms and corroborates the revelations that have preceded it.
(b) It is a guidance in itself.
(c) It is a joyful annunciation to the faithful.

427. i. e., the angel Michael.

428. For all such hostilities amount to the rejection of, and disbelief in, the true faith. Cf. the Bible: 'I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way... Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not!' (Ex. 23:20-21):... 'but they rebelled and vexed his holy Spirit: therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them.' (Is. 63: 10).

429. (O Prophet!).

430. (of messengership). The Jews had demanded some 'sign.' The reply is in effect: We have endowed the Prophet with not one but manifold signs, clear even to you.

431. i. e., none save habitual criminals and confirmed offenders dare ignore or deny signs so clear. Cf. the NT:—'Though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not in him.' (Jn. 12: 37) 'An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign.' (Mt. 12: 39).

432. i. e., the Jews.

433. (of obedience).

434. (in the very existence of such a bond or covenant).

101. (ولما . . يعلمون) And whenever there came to them a messenger from Allah confirming what was with them,[435] a party among those who were given the Book, cast Allah's Book[436] behind their backs as though they did not know.[437]

102. (واتبعوا . . يعلمون) And they[438] follow[439] what the satans[440] recited in the reign of Sulaimān.[441] And Sulaimān[442] blasphemed not,[443] but the satans blasphemed,[444] teaching the people magic. And they[445] follow also what[446] was sent down[447] unto the two angels[448] in Bābil,[449] Hārūt and Mārūt. To none did the twain teach[450] it[451] until they had said ;[452] 'we are but a temptation,[453] so blaspheme not'.[454] But they[455] did learn[456] from the twain that with which they might separate man from his wife,[457] though they could harm none thereby[458] save by Allah's will.[459] And they[460] have learnt what harms them[461] and does not profit them.

And assuredly they knew[462] that whoso trafficks therein, his is no portion in the Hereafter.[463] And surely vile is the price for which they have bartered themselves ; would that they knew !

435. (of the earlier Scriptures).

436. (containing clear prophecies regarding the next Prophet).

437. (that it contained any such prophecy).

438. i. e., the Jews of Arabia, who were noted for their feats of exorcism and magic. 'The practice of magic was common throughout ancient Israel . . . . . ' A knowledge of magic was indispensable to a member of the chief council or of the judiciary, and might be acquired even from the heathen. The most profound scholars were adepts in the black art, and the law did not deny its power. The people who cared little for the views of the learned, were devoted to witchcraft. "Adultery and sorcery have destroyed everything; the Majesty of God departed from Israel . . . . . . Exorcism also flourished . . . . . . The Greco-Roman world regarded the Jews as a race of magicians." (JE. VIII p. 255). This reputation of the Jews as skilled magicians and expert exorcists continued right up to the time of the holy Prophet. 'They were,' in Arabia at the advent of Islam, 'adepts in magic, and preferred the weapons of the black art to those of open warfare.' (Margoliouth, Mohammad, p. 189) The Arab Jews were adepts in the black magic both of Palestine and and Chaldia (Babylonia). They inherited the one and acquired the other. The Chaldeans after they had ceased to be a nation, 'dispersed all over the world, carrying their delusive science with them practising and teaching it, welcomed everywhere by the credulous and superstitious.' (Ragozin, Chaldea, p. 255) And no better pupil could they have found than the Jews. 'Babylonia . . . . . . continued to be regarded with reverence by the Jews in all parts.' (JE. II. pp. 413-414) 'Contact with Babylonia tended to stimulate the angelology and demonology of Israel.' (EBr. XIII. p. 187, 11th Ed.).

439. (instead of following the precepts of the Qur'ān).

440. i. e., malevolent genii or jinns. There also may be a tacit reference to the malcontent historical personalities of Prophet Solomon's time—the renegade Jeroboam and the apostate Ahijah, for example, and their band of rebellious conspirators and unbelieving soothsayers.

441. i. e., the arts of black magic, sorcery and witchcraft. The Jews of the holy Propht's time are charged with following the old devilish craft, and for taking those practices of crude occultism as a fair substitute for spiritual truths and religious learning and piety. علی is also used in the sense of فی as in the saying . . . . و اتبعوا ما تتلوا الشيطين علی ملک سليمان, i. e., فی زمن ملک سليمان meaning: And they followed what the devils related, or recited, in the time of, or during the reign of Suleyman.' (LL)

442. i. e., King Solomon (973–933 B. C.) of the Bible, who, according to the teachings of Islam, was not an idolatrous king, but a true prophet of God and a benevolent and wise ruler. He was, as his name implies, essentially a man of peace. The Jews, true to their traditions of ingratitude and malevolence, have not hesitated to malign their own hero and national benefactor, Prophet Solomon (on him be peace !), and to accuse him of the most heinous of all offences—idolatry ! (See I Ki. 11 : 4, 9, 10). They have also unblushingly attributed to him the cult of crude occultism and witchraft. The Qur'ān upholds the honour of all prophets of God, to whatever race or age they may belong, and believes in the saintliness and sinlessness of every one of them. It takes this opportunity to sweep aside all the ugly tales and outrageous imputations about Solomon, and says in effect that far from being an unbeliever or a blasphemer, he never practised any such black art as the pagans did.

443. (as supposed by the Jews and Christians). Observe the result of modern research by Biblical scholars themselves into the 'polytheism' of Solomon maintained by the Bible and stoutly denied by the Holy Qur'ān. 'That Solomon had a number of wives both Israelite and non-Israelite, is probable enough, but he did not make altars for all of them, nor did he himself combine the worship of his wives' gods with that of Yahwe. He can have had no thought of denying the sole divinity of Yahwe in the land which was Yahwe's "inheritance" . . . . . We have no reason to doubt that according to his lights he was a faithful worshipper of Yahwe, so far as this was consistent with his despotic inclinations.' (EBi. c. 4689). 'That the king abandoned his faith in J and became an idolater is difficult to believe, while it is easy to conceive how the fame to that effect may have arisen . . . That he should have been guilty of the apostasy and sin alleged seems incredible and inexplicable on any supposition except one, viz., that his mode of life had left him prematurely worn out both in body and mind, so as to be, even in the fifth decade of his age, in a senile condition and hardly responsible for his actions. That is little if anything more than a supposition.' (DB. IV. pp. 567, 568) 'Solomon was a sincere worshipper of Yahwe, more cultured but less passionate in his devotion than David.' (EBr. XX. p. 952).

444. (and took shelter behind the name of that great monotheist).

445. i. e., the Jews.

446. (variety of magic and witchcraft).

447. 'Which was sent down' means 'of which a special and intimate knowledge was given', in order that its nature be explained and its mischief be demonstrated in full, and people may be weaned from the engulfing superstition, just as a physician acquires an intimate knowledge of diseases not of course to propagate but to combat them and just again as a police officer familiarizes himself with the ways of criminals and law-breakers with the sole object of checkmating them.

448. (in human form).

449. i. e., Babylonia, the strongest citadel of magic and witchcraft in all antiquity. 'It was to the exorcising of demons that so large, so disproportionate, a part of the religions of Babylonia and Nineveh was devoted.' (Rogers, Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, p. 145) 'Soothsaying and exorcism are so exceedingly numerous as to form the chief component of the whole Babylonian religious literature.' (ERE. II. p. 116). 'As Chaldean meant Babylonian . . . so after the Persian conquest it seems to have connoted the Babylonian literati and become a synonym of soothsayer or astrologer. In this sense it passed into classical writers.' (EBi. c. 721). It was among a people so deeply immersed in the arts of black magic, and at a time when prophets and saints, and men of God in general, had become mixed up, in the popular mind, with sorcerers, enchanters, soothsayers and magicians, that two special angels, in human form, were deputed to correct the prevalent misconceptions, to contradistinguish the genuine men of God from the 'spiritists' and exorcists, and to inculcate in the people respect and reverence for prophethood.

450. i. e., made known by way of illustrating or explaining its nature. Persons of morbid curiosity and roguish propensity gathered round the twain, and under pretext of knowing from them in detail what constituted magic and what did not, sought to learn those very practices and devices which it was the mission of the angels to condemn and to eradicate.

451. i. e., the magic formula.

452. (as a measure of further precaution). To no one did the angels reproduce the enchantments unless they had taken this further precaution.

453. (whereby the condition of a man is evinced in respect of good and evil). فتنة 'signifies a trial, or probation, and affliction . . . and particularly an affliction whereby one is tried, proved, or tested . . . . Or a means whereby the condition of a man is evinced, in respect of good and of evil; hence it often means a temptation.' (LL). . فتنة ای اختبار وابتلاء (IQ).

454. (the name of God by adopting and practising these devilish crafts). The twain, even when pressed by the logic of the situation to repeat, in spite of themselves, the nefarious formula invariably prefaced it with this warning.

455. i. e., the wicked ones, as the majority of the Babylonians were.

456. i. e., managed to learn ; snatched the knowledge of——

457. 'The commonest form of magic was the love-charm, specially the love-charm required for an illicit amour. Such magic was practised specially by women so that magic and adultery frequently are mentioned together . . . . The context of the passages in Exodus which mention sorcery clearly shows that it was associated with sexual license and unnatural vices.' (JE. VIII. p. 255)

458. i. e., with those charms and enchantments. So no superstitious fear of the potency and efficacy of sorcery should arise in any mind.

459. i. e., except in accordance with His physical laws subject to which poisons operate and disasters, diseases, and all events undesirable from the individual's point of view, occur every day. اذن is not only 'permission or leave' but also 'will.'

460. i. e., the Jews.

461. (Morally and spiritually like every other sin), i. e., it recoils upon themselves.

462. (from their own Scriptures and sacred lore).

463. 'Neither shall ye use enchantment.' (Le. 19 : 26) 'There shall not be found among you anyone that maketh his son or daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord : and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee.' (Dt. 18 ; 10-12)

103. (ولو انهم . . يعلمون) And had they believed and feared,[464] surely better had been the reward from Allah ; would that they knew !

104. (يا يها الذين . . اليم) O you who believed ! do not say[465]: Rā'inā,[466] but say: Unzurnā,[467] and listen; and to the infidels[468] (shall be) a torment afflictive.[469]

105. (ما يود الذين . . العظيم) Those who disbelieve, be they of the people of the Book[470] or of the associators,[471] do not like that aught of good[472] should be sent down upon you[473] from your Lord whereas Allah singles out for His mercy whom He will,[474] and Allah is Possessor of mighty grace.[475]

106. (ما ننسخ . . قدير) Whatsoever verse[476] We abrogate[477] or cause to be forgotten[478] We bring a better one[479] or the like of it ; dost thou[480] not know that Allah is over everything Potent ?[481]

107. (الم . . نصير) Dost thou not know[482] that surely Allah ! His is the dominion of the heavens and the earth ?[483] And for you[484] there is, beside Allah, no guardian or helper.

464. (God, like the Muslims).

465. (unto the Prophet, when addressing him or drawing his attention).

466. i. e., 'listen to us.' The term, innocent in itself, was turned hy a little twist in pronunciation into a word of reproach and insult by the Jews when addressing the holy Prophet—to such depths of pettiness had they descended! The Muslims are forbidden to use this ambiguous expression to call the holy Prophet's attention.

467. i. e., 'look upon us'; as this term was free from undesirable suggestions.

468. i. e., such of them as in their intense hatred of the Prophet have even done away with the common decency of speech.

469. (for the meanness of their demeanour and their hatred of the Messenger of Truth). How on earth could a people so filled with venom of hate and malice derive any benefit from the teaching of the Final Teacher?

470. In contradistinction to the idolaters, Islām gives this name, 'the people of the Book' to the Jews and Christians on account of their possessing, in a falsified form though, divine books of revelation, and grants them a privileged position. Here the Jews are meant in particular.

471. المشركين is grammatically coupled with اهل الكتاب and is, in the objective case, governed by the preposition من not in the nominative and coupled with الذين كفروا as rendered by most of the English translators.

472. —much less the highest good, the gift of prophethood.

473. (O Muslims!)

474. (irrespective of race, age, colour and country).

475. So He can be as Gracious to the descendants of Ismā'īl as He has been to the race of Israel.

476. (whether of the Qur'ān or of the earlier Scriptures). The word آية has several distinct meanings, the principal ones, according to LL. are:—

(a) a sign, token, or mark, by which a person or thing is known. (b) a miracle, a wonder of God. (c) an example, a warning. (d) a verse of the Qur'ān, or of the former Scriptures.

477. There is nothing to be ashamed of in the doctrine of certain laws, temporary or local, being superseded or abrogated by certain other laws, permanent and universal, and enacted by the same law-giver, specially during the course of the promulgation of that law. The course of Qurānic Revelation has been avowedly gradual. It took about 23 years to finish and complete the Legislation. Small wonder, then, that certain minor laws, admittedly transitory, were replaced by certain others, lasting and eternal. Even Divine laws may be subject to Divine improvement, just as is every object and phenomenon in the physical universe of His creation. It must be, however, clearly understood that the doctrine of abrogation applies to 'law' only, and even there to those of minor or secondary importance. Beliefs, articles of faith, principles of law, narratives, exhortations, moral precepts, and spiritual verities,—none of these is at all subject to abrogation or repeal.

478. (from men's minds and memories).

479. i. e., better suited to the exigencies of time and place.

480. (O captious objector!).

481. (so it is easy for Him to provide laws for every possible contingency).

482. (O captious objector!).

483. So He alone is the Arbiter and Law-giver. He can enact or revoke whatever He will. None there is to hamper or obstruct His prerogative.

484. (O mankind!).

108. (ام تريدون . . . السبيل) Do you seek[485] to question[486] your messenge[487] as Mūsa was questioned[488] before? And whoso exchanges infidelity for belief, he has assuredly strayed from the even way.

109. (ود . . . قدير) Many of the people of the Book desire that they could turn you away[489] as infidels after you have believed, out of envy from their souls,[490] after the truth has dawned upon them;[491] so pardon them[492] and pass over, until Allah sends the command.[493] Surely Allah is over everything Potent.[494]

110. (و اقيموا . . . بصير) And establish prayer and give the poor-rate,[495] and whatever of good[496] you send forth for your souls you shall find with Allah; surely Allah is Beholder of what you do.

111. (و قالوا . . . صدقين) And they[497] say: none shall enter the Garden except he be a Jew[498] or a Christian.[499] Such are their vain desires. Say thou:[500] forth with your proof if you are truthful.

112. (بلى . . . يحزنون) Aye! whoso submits himself[501] to Allah and he is a good-doer, his wage is with his Lord. No fear shall come on them nor shall they grieve.[502]

485. (O Jews!).

486. (with opposition and obstruction as your objective).

487. i. e., 'Messenger who is in your time.' (Th) 'The Jews would have nothing to say to Islām: they set themselves instead to oppose it, to ridicule it, and vex its Preacher in every way that their notorious ingenuity could device.' (LSK. Intro. p. LXI)

488. i. e., harassed with frivolous questions, contentious quibbles, and impertinent demands.

489. (O Muslims!).

490. i. e., the envy raging in their hearts. Cf. the OT and the NT:— 'They envied Moses also in the camp, and Aaron the saint of the Lord.' (Ps. 106: 16); 'The Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of baser sort.' (Ac. 17 : 5) 'When the Jews saw the multitudes they were filled with envy.' (13 : 35)

491. This is to emphasize that it was nothing but sheer preversity and malice that prompted and moved the Jews to disobedience and rebellion.

492. (O Muslims! and do not think of reprisals). To be roused to righteous indignation and retaliation was, on such an occasion, only too natural. But the Muslims are asked, for the time being, to forbear and not to take immediate action.

493. (to fight and retaliate). This foreshadowed that reprisals were about to be commenced.

494. (so He can soon put the harassed and oppressed Muslims in a position of power and command).

495. The word may perhaps be better rendered as 'alms-tax' since it is essentially a State-tax to be paid by every well-to-do Muslim on his monetary capital, livestock and garden or orchard produce. 'This annual payment also impresses upon the believers a sense of corporate unity and the duty of sharing in the common burdens.' (Arnold, Islamic Faith, p. 39).

496. (whether it be prayer, or almsgiving, or Jihād or any other act of merit).

497. i. e., the people of the Book : the Jews and the Christians.

498. This, according to the Jews. 'Salvation is of the Jews.' (Jn. 4 : 22) 'Mankind might all enjoy the divine favour, and yet this favour might still be strictly limited to Jews by the simple condition that mankind must become Jew, must receive circumcision, the physical token of Judaism, and adopt its social and religious customs.' (EBI. c. 1685)

499. This, according to the Christians. 'Unless a man be born again of water and the Holy Ghost, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.' (Jn. 3 : 5. DV.) 'I am the door : by me if any man enters in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and go out, and find pasture. (Jn. 10 : 9) 'Neither is there salvation in any other : for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.' (Ac. 4 : 12 DV.)

500. (O Prophet!).

501. (heart and soul). Literally وجه is 'his face' or 'his countenance.'

502. (in the Hereafter).

SECTION 14

113. (وقالت . . . يختلفون) And the Jews say: the Christians are not grounded on aught;[503] and the Christians say: the Jews are not grounded on aught;[504] while they[505] recite the same Book.[506] Even so they who do not know[507] say the like of their saying. Allah will judge[508] between them[509] on the Day of Judgment regarding what they have been differing in.

114. (ومن . . . عظيم) And who is more ungodly than he who prevents[510] the mosques of Allah[511] from His name being mentioned[512] in them and strives after their ruin? Those! it is not for them[513] to enter them except in fear.[514] To them shall come humiliation in (this) world,[515] and to them in the Hereafter shall come a torment mighty.

115. (ولله . . . عليم) And Allah's is the east[516] and the west;[517] so wither you turn[518] there is the Face of Allah;[519] surely Allah is Pervading,[520] Knowing.[521]

116. (وقالوا . . . قنتون) And they[522] say: God has betaken unto Him a son.[523] Hallowed be He![524] Aye! His is whatever is in the heavens and in the earth;[525] all are unto Him subservient[526]—

503. i. e., have nothing to stand upon. The Jews 'had no reason to love the Christians, or to say any good of them. The coming of Christ into the world had perhaps brought blessing to the Gentiles; but to Israel it was the herald of suffering . . . He was remembered, so far as He was remembered at all, as the man who had chiefly brought dissension to Israel and the nearest approach to a defined opinion about Him in the Talmud is the statement that "he practised magic and deceived and led astray Israel." Round that statement there gradually gathered stray bits of gossip about Him, coarse allusions to His birth, reminiscences of His trial, and the like.' (ERE. VII. p. 551)

504. i. e., have no foundation for their belief. 'The relations between Judaism and Christianity have seldom been friendly. The early Church soon discarded its Jewish element; and, in the centuries during which Christianity had the power to persecute, the Jewish people were thought of not as the natural kindred of Jesus but as those who had rejected and killed Him. There was seldom a good word for the Jews.' (ERE. VII. p. 551), 'The Jewish apostates, from Saul who became Paul, have been a source of profound trouble of Jewry. Many became informers, blackmailers, defamers of Jews and Judaism, relentless enemies, who by their machinations and falsifications caused countless massacres, burning of Jews and of Jewish books, exile and other misfortunes.' (VJE, p. 45)

505. i. e., both the Jews and Christians.

506. (equally acknowledged by both to be divine). 'The fact that both sides appealed to the same source of authority—served also to narrow and intensify the struggle.' (JE. II. 9) 'The new religion . . . asserted that it had been founded to fulfil the mission of Judaism, and endeavoured to prove the correctness of this allegation, from the Bible, the very book upon which Judaism is founded.' (X. p. 103)

507. i. e., to the pagan Arabs who have no knowledge of revealed religion.

508. (in a practical and demonstrable way). So far as arguments are concerned, He has already delivered His judgment in this world.

509. i. e., all the contending parties.

510. (like the idolaters of Makka).

511. Mosques, to quote a Christian observer, are 'houses of prayer, of extreme outer dignity and of puritanic austerity within, dedicated to the worship of the One God, who was acclaimed alike by Moses, by Christ, and by Muhammad. His prophets, all.' (Katherine Mayo, Face of Mother India, p. 43) Literally, a mosque is 'a place where one prostrates oneself.'

512. (and his worship being offered).

513. i. e., such ungodly persons.

514. (and awe of the Muslims).

515. A prophecy that found its literal fulfilment in the utter rout of the powerful pagans and complete annihilation of the deep-rooted paganism in Arabia within a few brief years.

516. To which direction the Christians, in common with the sun-worshippers and many other polytheists, attach special sanctity. 'From very early times and in more than one ethnic religion, the direction toward which the worshipper made his prayer was considered of great importance . . . . The Essenes prayed in the direction of the rising sun and the Syrian Christians also turned eastward at prayer. The Zoroastrians attached great importance to the points of the compass in their ritual of purification or prayer and in the building of the fire-temples, the Bareshnum, and the towers of silence . . . . In the Anglican Church the import and importance of the eastward position is still a matter of grave discussion.' The Moslem World, New York, January, 1937, p. 13)

517. Which on the analogy of sunset, signifies to many superstitious nations, the region of death. (PC. II. p. 422) To the Christians again the west is full of meaning. 'In the rite of baptism . . . . the catechumen was placed with face toward the west and then commanded to announce with gestures of abhorrence, stretching out his hands against him thrice.' (p. 428) Says a renowned and ancient Christian Father:—'And why did ye stand toward the west? It was needful for sunset is the type of darkness and he is darkness and has his strength in darkness; therefore symbolically looking toward the west ye renounce that dark and gloomy ruler.' (ib)

518. (irrespective of the points of the compass, O Muslims!).

519. وجه الله literally 'face or countenance' of Allah, signifies His presence. He is not located in any particular direction. He is everywhere and on every side, equally. This completely repudiates the pagan and the Christian practice of "orientation." 'Many Greek temples were also designed to face the rising sun. In the earliest Christian basilicas at Rome the apse was placed at the west end, so that the priest who served the altar from behind, facing the congregation, himself faced the east and the rising sun . . . . It is more probable that his orientation was due to an underlying tradition whose roots go far back beyond the origin of Christianity.' (EBr. XVI, p. 899) 'Orientation in ritual observance is perhaps most pronounced in Asia, which may be more or less indirectly the source from which the European observance is derived. (ERE. X. p. 85)

520. i. e., He pervades and encompasses all directions, and is not conditioned or encompassed by them. The epithet emphasizes God's all-pervading presence as well as intimate relation to His creatures.

521. (so that He knows best which direction or place to appoint for Qibla).

522. i. e., misguided people such as the Christians.

523. (and who is himself a God). According to the Christians, God 'the Son is the second Person of the Blessed Trinity. He is the only begotten and eternal Son of the Father. He is consubstantial with the Father.' (CD. p. 912) The first two articles of the Apostle's creed run:—'I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Creator of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, His only Son, our Lord.' The form of the words اتخذ ولد 'hath taken unto him' suggests that the reference is, in particular, to the 'Adoptionist' Christianity which held that Christ as Man was only the adoptive Son of God.' (CD. p. 13) The Adoptionists hold 'that Christ was a mere man, miraculously conceived indeed, but adopted as the Son of God only by the supreme degree in which he had been filled with the divine wisdom and power.' (UHW. IV. p. 2331) They asserted that 'Jesus was a man imbued with the Holy Spirit's inspiration from his baptism and so attaining such a perfection of holiness that he was adopted by God and exalted to Divine dignity.' (EBr. I. p. 177)

524. (from all these derogatory limitations!). An exclamation of protest against the degarding implications of the doctrine of 'Sonship.'

525. i. e., all His creatures, high and low. He is the Creator of all that exists; its sole Maker and Master. That alone describes the correct relationship between Him and the world. To ascribe to Him the grossly materialistic relationship of fatherhood and sonship, in however etherealised a form, is the height of absurdity.

526. (by their very make, whether they will or not).

119. (انا. . .الجحيم) Surely We have sent thee[540] with the truth[541] as a bearer of glad tidings[542] and a warner,[543] and thou shalt not be questioned about inmates of the Flame.[544]

And wast thou to follow their desires after what has come to thee of the knowledge,[549] there will be for thee neither a protector nor a helper[550] against Allah.

121. (الذين. . .الخسرون) Those to whom We have given the Book and who recite it as it ought to be recited,[551] they shall believe in it :[552] and those who disbelieve in it, those alone shall be the losers.

527. بديع 'is the Originator of the creation, according to His own will, not after the similitude of anything pre-existing.' (LL) He is thus the absolute Author,—not a mere manufacturer or designer as conceived by several pagan peoples—Independent of any and every material or pattern. Even the Jews, under the influence of Alexandrian philosophy and swayed by Platonic and Neoplatonic ideas, had come to regard the act of creation as carried into effect through intermediate agencies, 'sub-deities, as it were, with independent existence and a will of their own.' (JE. IV. p. 338)

528. (and all else). This implies the idea of Priority. If He is the Originator of all, He must also be prior to all. He must be thought of as before every thing.

529. i. e., the thing proposed, and as yet non-existent except in His knowledge.

530. i. e., come into being. There is nothing either of matter or of soul co-eternal with Him or having any independent self-existence. Everything comes into being only when He wills.

531. (by a single act of His all-powerful will without needing any material or helper).

532. i. e., the pagans of Arabia who had no revealed religion.

533. i. e., why are we not the recipients of His revelations ?

534. (of our choice; such as we desire and demand). آية is here a wonder, an event striking and unusual, evincing direct Divine intervention on behalf of the Prophet, who of course ranked the purity of his life and the excellence of his message far above those 'wonders' which can have at times only a thaumaturgic value.

535. (to the prophets of their times).

536. Cf. NT:—'Philip saith unto him, Lord! show us the Father, and it sufficeth us.' (Jn. 14:8) 'The Pharisees also with the Sadducees came, and tempting desired him that he would show them a sign from heaven.' (Mt. 16:1)

537. (in moral blindness). Cf. the NT:—A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the Prophet Jonah. And he left them, and departed.' (Mt. 16:4) 'Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye.' (Ac. 7:51)

538. Not a solitary sign (in the singular), but many and varied signs (in the plural). A 'sign' is anything that goes to confirm and substantiate the claims of the prophet. Thus 'signs' include facts, arguments, miracles, verification of previous prophecies and the excellence of teachings.

539. i. e., only they can benefit by the manifest signs who are earnest in their search after truth, and not they who are blinded by malice or spite. To those addicted to doubt and scepticism all signs and 'wonders' are useless.

540. (O Prophet!).

541. (to be preached to mankind).

542. (to the believers).

543. (to the rejecters).

544. (so do not grieve over their fate or their doings). The holy Prophet in the tenderness of his heart was exceedingly solicitous for the unbelievers. He is told now that his responsibility as a Prophet ended with his preaching the true doctrines and expounding the Message. Everyone was accountable for his own actions. Why should the Prophet burden his heart with anxiety on their account ?

545. (however great may be thy concessions to them).

546. (however tender thou mayest be to them).

547. (and renounce thy own faith, true and divine).

548. (and not your own concoctions).

549. 'The knowledge' here signifies Divine Revelation, which is the highest and surest of knowledge above all doubt.

550. The argument addressed to the Prophet in effect is this:—You cannot by any means win the support and goodwill of the Christians and the Jews, since it is dependent on your accepting and adopting their religions which, as they exist, are untrue and unsubstantial to the core. But your acceptance of such untruths is impossible, since it involves your being accursed of God, which you most emphatically are not. Your enjoyment of the highest Divine blessings and favours is self-evident; hence your deviation from the right course is an absurdity.

551. i. e., with the reverent spirit and with open and unbiased mind.

552. i. e., in the Qur'ān, or the true religion, in due course of time. The pronoun in بِهٖ has for its antecedent بالحق in verse 119, and thus refers to the Qur'ān (Th)

الَّتِىٓ اَنْعَمْتُ عَلَيْكُمْ وَاَنِّىْ فَضَّلْتُكُمْ عَلَى الْعٰلَمِيْنَ ۝ وَاتَّقُوْا يَوْمًا لَّا تَجْزِىْ نَفْسٌ عَنْ نَّفْسٍ شَيْئًا وَّلَا

SECTION 15

122. (يبنى . . . العلمين) O Children of Israīl ! remember My favour with which I favoured you,[553] and that I preferred you above the worlds.[554]

123. (واتقوا . . . ينصرون) And fear a Day when not in aught will a soul satisfy for another soul,[555] nor will compensation be accepted for it, nor will intercession profit it, nor will they be helped.

124. (و اذ . . . الظلمين) And re-call when his Lord tried Ibrāhīm[556] with commands;[557] then he fulfilled them.[558] Allah said: 'surely I am going to make thee a leader of mankind',[559] Ibrāhīm[560] said, and from my progeny too'. Allah said : 'My promise[561] shall not reach the ungodly'.[562]

125. (و اذ . . . السجود) And re-call when We appointed the House[563] a resort[564] to mankind[565] and a place of security,[566] and said :[567] 'take the station of Ibrāhīm[568] for a place of prayer.[569] And We covenanted with Ibrāhīm and Ismā'īl[570] saying : 'purify you twain My House[571] for those who will circumambulate it and those who will stay[572] and those who will bow down and prostrate thumselves'.

553. See nn. 174, 197 above.

554. See n. 198 ff. above. The preference, the 'election,' the chief glory of Israel, lay in their being the standard-bearers, in all antiquity, of pure monotheism. At the close of the recapitulation of their history, they are fittingly once more reminded of the secret of their past glory and eminence.

555. See n. 201 ff. above.

556. (to demonstrate to the world his absolute devotion to Him). Abraham of the Bible, the great prophet and patriarch, first of Chaldea and latterly of Syria, Palestine and Arabia, was the common progenitor of the Arabs and the Israelites. The name is personal, not tribal, and the personality is real and historical—a character singularly majestic and attractive,—not an ethnological myth. Referring to the patriarchs, Abraham and other founders of the Hebrew race and nation, says a modern authority :—'The modern critical theory that these fathers of the Hebrews are mythical, representing either personified tribes or Canaanite deities has been disproved by recent archæological discoveries.' (VJE. p. 505) His dates of birth and death are, according to the latest computation by Sir Charles Marston, 2160 B. C., and 1985 B. C. respectively. Age, according to the Bible, was 175 years. (Ge. 25 : 7)

557. (of mandate and prohibition).

558. (demonstrating his devotion of God).

559. (in faith; and a model, a pattern, in true religion and piety). And a leader of mankind in this sense he continues to be till this very day, being the accepted head of the three great peoples of the world—the Muslims, the Christians and the Jews. 'He is not, in the first instance, the progenitor of the people but the founder and leader of a religious movement. Like Mohammad, some 2,000 years later, he stood at the head of a great movement among the Semitic peoples and tribes.' (EBr. I p. 60) Cf. the OT:—

'Now the Lord had said unto Abram . . . . . . I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curseth thee : and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.' (Ge. 12 :1-3) 'Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him.' (18 : 18).

560. i. e., begged; asked prayerfully.

561. (to bless thee and thy progeny).

562. i. e., My promise extends to only such of your offspring as shall be believers; it does not comprehend the unbelievers. The heirs of the promise must earn it. 'In the history of his descendants there were many backslidings into idol-worship . . . . yet there was always a remnant that kept to the straight path.' (Woolley, Abraham, p. 290).

563. (at Makka), i. e., the Ka'ba. 'A shrine of immemorial antiquity, one which Diodorous Siculus, a hundred years before the Christian era, tells us, was even then "most ancient, and most exceedingly revered by the whole Arab race." (Bosworth Smith, Mohammed and Mohammedanism, p. 166).

564. (and a sanctuary).

565. Imagine the number of the pilgrims that have been visiting the House in a reverential spirit, for all these hundreds and thousands of years since the time of Abraham!

566. 'At all events, long before Mohammed we find Mecca established in the twofold quality of a commercial centre and a privileged holy place, surrounded by an inviolable territory.' (EBr. XV. p. 150)

567. (to the Muslim commuuity). This refers to a much later period of history. The Holy Qur'ān, as already noted, is not an essay in chronology. At times it relates in a single sentence, for some special purpose in view, incidents separated from each other by centuries.

568. i. e., the spot where he stood to pray. A small cupola supported on iron pillars opposite the silver door of the Ka'ba still marks the spot.

569. (O Muslims!). A short prayer of two Rak'ats is still performed at the spot after the ceremony of circumambulating the House is over.

570. The first-born of Abraham and the progenitor of the Arab race. (Probable date 2074—1937 B. C.) Note that the Divine promise is given not to Abraham alone, but to Ismā'īl as well; and this finds full confirmation in the OT:— 'And Abraham said unto God: O that Ishmael might live before thee! And God said:. . . . . . . As for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold! I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful . . . . . twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation.' (Ge. 17: 18-20) 'And God heard the voice of the lad; and the angel of God called to Hagar out of Heaven, and said unto her, What aileth thee, Hagar? fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is. Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand; for I will make him a great nation . . . . . And God was with the lad; and he grew, and dwelt in the wilderness.' (21: 17-21)

571. (of idols and impurities and what does not become it). 'Ishmael was looked upon as rejected and the covenant made with the children of his half-brother, Isaac (the 'Israelites). Yet it was that rejected stone, the black stone that became the bedstone of the Ka'ba, the place where Hagar and Ishmael were cast out.' (Lady Gobbold, Pilgrimage to Mecca, pp. 133-134).

572. (in that Holy Gity or in that Holy Mosque for devotional purposes).

127. (و اذ . . العليم) And recall when Ibrāhīm was raising[577] the foundations of the House,[578] and Ismā'īl also [579] praying: 'Our Lord! accept from us,[580] surely Thou alone art the Hearer,[581] the Knower![582]

128. (ربنا . . الرحيم) Our Lord! make us twain submissive[583] to Thee, and of our progeny[584] a community submissive[585] to Thee,[586] and show us our rites,[587] and relent toward us.[588] Surely Thou alone art Relenting, Merciful.

131. (اذ . . العلمين) Recall when his Lord said unto him: 'submit', he said: 'I submit to the Lord of the worlds'.[599]

573. The prayer was granted in full. Hence in the law of Islām it is forbidden, within the sacred precincts, to shed any human blood and to hunt or shoot any game, as also to cut or pull out plants. See nn. 563, 566 above.

574. To realize in full the significance of this part of the prayer it is necessary to remember that the territory of Makka was, and is largely even now, almost a desert uncultivated and incapable of bearing fruits or vegetation. The barren and unpromising land is thus described by Muir:—'The general features or rugged rocks without a trace of foliage, and sandy, stormy glens from which the peasant looks in vain for the grateful returns of tillage. Even at the present day . . . . Mecca can hardly boast a garden or cultivated field, and only here and there a tree.' (Life of Mohammad, p. 2)

575. Abraham (peace be on him !) thus qualified his prayer this time in view of verse 124, which affirmed that the Divine covenant did not extend to the evildoers.

576. i. e., while he is yet alive. Such is the grace of the Lord on this Holy City and its inhabitants. Even the rebels among them are dealt with most mercifully while yet in this world.

577. Note that Abraham was 'raising,' not 'laying,' the foundation. The House existed long long before—since the time of Adam, according to traditions—Abraham and Ismā'īl only rebuilt it on the old foundations. "The traditions of the Ka'ba ran back to Ishmael and Abraham, nay, even to Seth and Adam; and as its very name, "Beit Allah" shows, it might in its first rude shape have been erected by some such ancient patriarch as he who raised a pillar of rough stone where in his sleep he had seen the angels ascending, and descending, and called it "Bethel" or "Beit Allah," (Bosworth Smith, Mohammed and Mohammedanism, p. 166).

578. i. e., the Ka'ba in the city of Makka. 'A very high antiquity must be assigned to the main features of the religion of Mecca . . . . . . Tradition represents the Ka'ba as from time immemorial the scene of pilgrimage from all quarters of Arabia . . . . . . So extensive a homage must have had its beginnings in an extremely remote age.' (Muir, Life of Mohammad, Intro. pp. cii-ciii). 'The temple of Mecca was a place of worship and in singular veneration with the Arabs from great antiquity and many centuries before Mohammad.' (SPD. p. 182).

579. In Islām of course a true and honoured prophet of God like his father Abraham (peace be on both !) But even according to the Jews, his worst slanderers, 'He who sees Ishmael in a dream will have his prayer answered by God.' (JE. VI. p. 468). His mother Hājira (Hagar), a princess of royal blood, a daughter of the reigning Pharaoh of Egypt, was an embodiment of piety and virtue. Observe the unwilling admissions of the Jews :—'Hagar is held up as an example of the high degree of godliness prevalent in Abraham's time, for . . . . . . Hagar was not frightened by the sight of the Divine messenger. Her fidelity is praised for even after Abraham sent her away she kept the marriage vow . . . . . . Another explanation of the same name is 'to adorn' because she was adorned with piety and good deeds. It was Isaac who, after the death of Sarah, went to bring back Hagar to the house of his father.' (p. 138) 'As a token of his love for Sarah the King deeded his entire property to her, and gave her the land of Goshen as her hereditary possession . . . . . . He gave her also his own daughter as slave'. (XI. p. 55).

580. (this building as a humble token of submission on our part). Remarkable is the note of true humility ringing in the prayer of the two great prophets throughout.

581. (of our words and utterances).

582. (of our inmost feelings, and of the purity of our motives).

583. (yet more). 'Submissive,' for 'Muslims' they already were, hence the necessity of rendering مسلمين by 'yet more submissive.' 'Islām' is absolute surrender to the Divine Will.

584. Note the word 'our'. 'Our progeny' is obviously the progeny of Abraham through Ismā'īl. Compare the saying of Jesus (on whom be peace !) as recorded in the 'Gospel of Barnabas' :—'Believe me, for verily I say to you, that the promise was made in Ishmael, not in Isaac.' (GB. p. 103). 'The promise was made in Ishmael and not in Isaac.' (p. 331).

585. امة مسلمة is literally 'Muslim community.' 'Islām', says one of its worst modern detractors and a Jew 'began with Ishmael, the father of the Arabs.' (Torry, Jewish Foundation of Islam, p. vi).

586. A Muslim and submissive nation, thus, was to be raised from the Ismailites, i. e., the Arabs, and not from their cousins, the Israelites. Compare, again, the words of Jesus (on whom be peace !) :—'Verily, I say the son of Abraham was Ishmael, from whom must be descended the Messiah promised to Abraham, that in him should all the tribes of the earth be blessed.' (GB. p. 459).

587. i. e., our ways of devotion, and ordinances of pilgrimage and worship. مناسك الحج 'are the religious rites and ceremonies of the pilgrimage.' (LL)

588. (in forgiveness, grace and mercy).

589. Significant is the singular number of رسولا i. e., 'a' messenger. The blessed prophets are praying for the advent of 'a' messenger and not for messengers (in the plural) from among their descendants. Hence the historical fact of there appearing only one prophet among the Ismailites.

590. Mark the very clear reference in the OT reiterated in the NT. to the advent of a prophet from among their brethren of Israel, i. e., the Ismaelites. 'I will raise up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee.' (Dt. 18 : 18) Moses truly said unto the fathers : A prophet shall the Lord, your God, raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me.' (Ac. 3 : 22).

591. (exactly as he receives them).

592. (by his own precepts and example). حكمة primarily is what prevents, or restrains, from 'ignorant behaviour,' but is usually used in the sense of 'wisdom.' It also means 'knowledge in matters of religion, and the acting agreeably therewith ; and understanding !' (LL).

593. (of sin and unbelief). The mission of this Ismailite prophet of God was thus to be fourfold :—

(a) He will recite and deliver to his people the revelation exactly as he receives them, and will, in this sense, be a trusted Divine Messenger.

(b) He will not only transmit the Message but will also expound, interpret and illustrate the Teaching he is commanded to impart, and would, in this phase of his life, be a Divine Teacher.

(c) Besides explaining to the many the injunctions of the Divine law, he will also unravel to the elect of his people the deeper significance of the Divine wisdom, and will initiate them in the profundities of spirit and the subtleties of soul. He will, on this account, be known as an exponent of Divine Wisdom.

(d) He will, by his words and deeds, precept and practice, raise and uplift the moral tone of his people, will purge them of vice and immorality, and will make them pious and godly. He will in this capacity be called a Divine Reformer and Law-giver.

He will thus be a representative of God with men, and will be endowed with a personality of his own—a personality so full of wonderful achievements in this respect, as to wrest even from unfriendly observers, the appellation of 'that most successful of all prophets and religious personalities.' (EBr. XV. 11th Ed. p. 898).

594. i. e., Able to grant every prayer.

595. i. e., Granting only such prayers as are, in His infinite Wisdom, proper.

596. (on that very score; as the reward for his true monotheism). 'Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward.' (Ge. 15 : 1). 'And he believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness.' (15 : 6); Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness.' (Ro. 4 : 3): 'Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness.' (Ga. 3 : 6)

597. (as our apostle and the leader of religion).

598. (for whom are the highest of ranks and the biggest of rewards).

599. (with my heart and soul).

133. (ام كنتم . . . مسلمون) Were you[604] witnesses when death presented itself to Ya'qūb, and when he said to his sons : what will you worship after me?'[605] They said : 'we shall worship thy God,[606] the God of thy fathers, Ibrāhīm and Ismā'īl and Is'hāq[607] the one and only God, and to Him we are submissive.[608]

134. (تلك . . . يعملون) They are a community who have passed away ;[609] to them shall be what they earned,[610] and to you what you earn[611] ; and you[612] shall not be questioned as to what they were wont to work.[613]

135. (و قالوا . . . المشركين) And they[614] say : become Jews or Christians, and you shall be guided.[615] Say thou[616] : 'Aye ! we follow the faith of Ibrāhīm,[617] the upright,[618] and he was not of the polytheists'.[619]

600. (faith and religion). 'He ordered all his children and grandchildren to avoid magic, idolatry, and all kinds of impurity, and to walk in the path of righteousness.' (JE. I. 87)

601. Jacob of the Bible; of Israel (on him be peace!) a Prophet of God and a grandson of Abraham.

602. (of monotheism). 'So far as the Hebrews are concerned, or rather their forbears, the Semites, it is not necessary to "assume" anything since the evidence of the ancient cuneiform writing . . . testifies to the fact that Monotheism was also their original religion.' (Marston, The Bible is True, p. 25)

603. Or, 'those who submit.' Islām, in its essence, is thus not a new religion at all but a continuation and restoration of the old religion of Abraham, Jacob, and other prophets of old.

604. (O Jews and Christians! who wrangle with the Muslims concerning their faith).

605. 'Jacob gave three commandments to his children before his death: (1) that they should not worship idols; (2) that they should not blaspheme the name of God; and (3) that they should not let a pagan touch his hearse.' (JE. VII. p. 24)

606. 'He said to them, ... I fear now that among you, too, there is one that harbours the intention to serve idols. 'The twelve men spake and said: Hear, O Israel our Father, the Eternal, our God is the One Only God. As thy heart is one and united in avouching the Holy One, blessed be He, to be thy God, as also are our hearts one and united in avouching Him.' (Ginzberg, Legends of the Jews II. p. 141)

607. Isaac of the Bible. The second son of Abraham. Born in 2060 B.C. Died in 1880 B.C. 'At the beginning he is simply 'the God of Abraham,' and as the generations pass, he becomes known "the God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob," (Woolley, Abraham, p. 235)

608. (In the faith of Islām). The basic, cardinal doctrine of Islām is none other than the unity of God, proclaimed and preached by all the prophets of old, only restated, reinstated, and restored, not originated by the holy Prophet of Islām (peace be on him!) Cf. the OT:—'And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am the Lord: and I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty.' (Ex. 6:2-3).

609. (and they can be of no help to their living descendants in the way of either rewarding virtue or punishing vice)

610. (by their righteousness and virtue).

611. (by your misdeeds). The Jews presumed too much on their ancestral merit, and stood badly in need of a powerful reminder. Their most striking tendency was "to fall back upon national privilege as a substitute for real reformation of life. We can see alike from the Gospels and from St. Paul how constantly the Jews had upon their lips, 'We have Abraham as our father.'" (DB. II. p. 606)

612. (O Jews!). The Jews in contrast to the Christian concept of 'original sin' had coined a new term 'original virtue.' 'The doctrine asserts that God visits the virtues of the father upon the children for His Name's sake and as a mark of grace.' (JE. XII. p. 441)

613. Compare and contrast the Jewish doctrine:—'Grace is given to some because of the merits of their ancestors, to others because of the merits of their descendants.' (JE. VI. p. 60). 'The hopes of the individual Jew were based on the piety of holy ancestors: "We have Abraham as our father." (EBr. XIII. 11th Ed., p. 184) 'In the Jewish scheme of salvation, the excellences of the three patriarchs (those of the matriarchs also, though this idea is far less emphasised), and indeed of all the righteous Israelites of the past are supposed to be thrown into a common stock for the benefit of their people, collectively and individually, in every age. The salvation which the Jew might possibly not attain in virtue of his own life may be assured to him by the merit of the righteous dead. Even as a living wine is supported by a lifeless prop, and is thereby kept verdant and flourishing, so the living Israel is upheld by the virtues of the fathers who sleep in the the dust.' (ERE. XI. p. 144) See also Barton, The Religion of Israel, p. 124, where it is distinctly stated that among the Hebrews, it was the family or clan, and not the individual, that came to be regarded as the moral unit.

614. i. e., the Jews and the Christians.

615. (and thus saved). See n. 547 ff. above.

616. (to them, on behalf of the Muslims, O Prophet!).

617. The Muslims alone are the faithful followers of Abraham, and Islām is, in its essential aspects, but a revival of the ancient faith of Abraham.

618. 'He was a man of incomparable virtue, and honoured by God in a manner agreeable to his piety towards Him.' ("Ant." I. 17 : 1) 'The distinctive features of his religious life . . . were the devotion to One God, the abandonment of the polytheism of his ancestors, and the adoption of circumcision as the symbol of a pure cult.' (DB. I. p. 16) 'Abraham's religion was characterised by abstraction, and was yet personal. The One Great God, throned in Heaven, honoured without priests and temple, the Almighty and all-comprehending One, to whom the faithful have personal access—this is Abraham's "God." (EBr. I. p. 60) حنيف literally is 'Inclining to a right state of tendency. . . . and particularly inclining from any false religion, to the true religion.' (LL)

619. 'He was the first that ventured to publish this notion, that there was but one God, the Creator of the universe.' ("Ant." I. 7 : 1)

137. (فان. . .العليم) So if they[627] believe in the like of what you believe in, surely they are guided ; but if they turn away, then they are but in schism.[628] So Allah will suffice thee[629] against them[630] ; and He is Hearer,[631] Knower.[632]

141. (تلك. . .يعملون) They are a community who have passed away : to them shall be what they earned, and to you what you earn and you will not be questioned as to what they were wont to work.[647]

620. (O Muslims !)

621. i. e., the twelve tribes of Israel who had their own prophets and apostles.

622. The founder of Judaism as a creed.

623. The founder of true Christianity.

624. (in general). Observe once again that Islām is, in no sense, an innovation but a mere continuity of the faith of Abraham, Ismā'īl, Isaac, Jacob, Moses,

Jesus and all other true prophets and apostles.

625. (by believing in some and disbelieving in others). In this way is the fundamental unity of all the revealed religions emphasised, and reverence for their human founders inculcated.

626. (as Muslims). 'The unity of God . . . and the unity of the religious, civil, judicial, and military administration, in one organ on earth, entitled the Mohammedans to assume, with justice, the name of Unitarians, a title in which they particularly glorified.' (Finlay, Greece under the Romans, p. 354)

627. i. e., the unbelievers in general and the Jews and the Christians in particular.

628. i. e., at great variance with, and far removed from truth.

629. (O Prophet!)

630. i. e., against their mischief and violence. By 'them' are meant the enemies of Islām and the Prophet.

631. (of their open avowal of hostility).

632. (of their secret machinations).

633. i. e., the Muslims.'

634. i. e., the religion of Islām; surrender to the Divine will. That is the true 'baptism of water.' 'The dye of Allah' is grace on His part and absolute surrender on ours. صبغة is also 'Religion' and صبغة الله means the religion of God, . : . because its effect appears in him who has it like the dye in the garment; or because it intermingles in the heart like the dye in the garment.' (LL)

635. (so without true faith in Him and His apostles, the sacrament of baptism, of paramount importance both in Judaism and Christianity, is meaningless).

636. (to the exclusion of all false deities, false doctrines, and false rites).

637. (on behalf of the Muslims, O Prophet!)

638. (O unbelieving Jews and Christians! fondly imagining that He cannot have chosen a non-Jew and a non-Christian as His messenger).

639. (so that He may choose as His messenger whomever He will).

640. (O unbelieving Jews and Christians!)

641. i. e., the prophets among Jewish tribes. See n. 621, above.

642. (and not strict monotheists) i. e., is it your position, O Jews and Christians! that the prophets of old and the patriarchs belonged to the Jewish or Christian cults in contradistinction to the true monotheism of Islām?

643. (whose testimony is that they were monotheists, pure and simple, that is to say, true Muslims). 'The patriarchs acknowledged but one God, and to Him as invisible and supernal they offered sacrifices upon altars without image and without temples under the open sky.' (Ewald, History of Israel, p. 460).

644. (of the true Islām of Abraham and all the prophets of Israel).

645. (as given in His Scriptures).

646. (O Jews and Christians!). So that a parrot-like repetition of the names of the patriarchs and other illustrious ancestors, without adopting the faith they had and without following their ways, would do no good. Not ancestral but individual merit to be counted upon.

647. See n. 609 ff. above.

PART II

SECTION 17

142. (سيقول . . . مستقيم) Presently will the fools among the people[1] say[2] : what has turned them[3] away from this Qiblah[4] on which they had been[5]? Say thou[6] : Allah's[7] is the east[8] and the west[9] ; He guides whom He will[10] to the straight path.[11]

143. (وكذالك . . . رحيم) And thus[12] We have made you[13] a community justly—balanced,[14] that you might be witnesses[15] to mankind,[16] and that the messenger might be a witness[17] to you. And We did not appoint the Qiblah[18] thou hast had[19] save in order that We might know demonstrably him[20] who follows the messenger from him who turns back upon his heels.[21] And assuredly the change is grievous save to them whom Allah has guided.[22] And Allah is not to let your faith go wasted[23] ; surely Allah is to mankind Tender, Merciful.[24]

1. i. e., those without a proper understanding of the religious truths. Special reference here is to the Jews and the Christians who took great offence at the Muslims' change of the direction of prayer from the Temple at Jerusalem to the Ka'ba in Makka.

2. (in their great chagrin)

3. i. e., the Muslims.

4. قبلة from the root قبل 'to be before' is the point in the direction of which acts of worship ought to be performed. Cf. Ps. 5 : 7, 1 Ki. 8 : 29, Dn. 12 :11, Jon. 2 : 4, where the Bible speaks of the Temple at Jerusalem as the place towards which worship is to be rendered.

5. (So far), i. e., the Temple of Solomon at Jerusalem which was the first qiblah of Islām. Sixteen months after his arrival in Madīna, the Prophet received the Divine command, as contained in the verse 144, to abandon Jerusalem for Ka'ba in Makka. This intensely mortified the Jews who had hoped that the Prophet would continue praying towards their qiblah and now took it that the last link that bound Islām to Judaism was broken.

6. (O Prophet! to the objectors).

7. (the absolute Master of all directions and their sole Author who has made no direction or point of the compass particularly sacrosanct).

8. See P. I. nn. 516, 519.

9. See P. I. n. 517.

10. (in His infinite wisdom and in accordance with His universal Plan).

11. (by disposing his mind, as in this particular instance, to obey implicitly the Divine command).

12. i. e., in a similar manner: not only in this particular respect, but in every other respect.

13. (O Muslim Community!) جعل also means, 'He exalted or ennobled.' So that phrase may also be rendered: 'We have exalted you, or ennobled you, as a nation conforming to the just mean; or, just or equitable, or good.' (LL).

14. امة وسطا are a people who have hit the golden mean; not inclined to either extreme; well-poised in every virtue. 'A nation conforming, or conformable, to the just mean; just; equitable'. (LL).

15. (as testifiers, promulgators and carriers of the Divine truths).

16. i. e., the rest of mankind. The Muslims are the standard, the norm, by which all people are to be judged on the Day of Judgment.

17. The Prophet's absolutely pure and perfect life will serve as the norm, the standard, by which the Muslims will be judged.

18. Note that for the Muslims what the doctrine of qiblah means is not a turning to a point of the compass, but to a definite place.

19. (hitherto). Ka'ba as the permanent qiblah of Islām always formed a part of the Divine decree, Jerusalem being only a temporary qiblah.

20. i. e., bring him to light.

21. This temporary appointment of Jerusalem as qiblah and then its abandonment served as a crucial test. The true Muslims of course remained firm; the waverers and vacillators retraced their steps to unbelief. The phrase ولى على عقبيه signifies, 'He turned back, or receded from a thing to which he had betaken himself.' (LL).

22. i. e., those who are endowed with good sense and are not blinded by passion or prejudice.

23. i. e., He will not suffer it to go without its reward while you prayed towards Jerusalem. There was an apprehension among the Muslims that the devotions hitherto performed with faces towards Jerusalem might be wasted. Their doubts are set at rest and they are reassured.

24. (So how can such a One allow the devotions of His devotees to go unrewarded?).

وَحَيْثُ مَا كُنتُمْ فَوَلُّوا وُجُوهَكُمْ شَطْرَهُ ۗ وَإِنَّ الَّذِينَ أُوتُوا الْكِتَابَ لَيَعْلَمُونَ أَنَّهُ الْحَقُّ مِن رَّبِّهِمْ ۗ وَمَا اللَّهُ بِغَافِلٍ
عَمَّا يَعْمَلُونَ ﴿١٤٤﴾ وَلَئِنْ أَتَيْتَ الَّذِينَ أُوتُوا الْكِتَابَ بِكُلِّ آيَةٍ مَّا تَبِعُوا قِبْلَتَكَ ۚ وَمَا أَنتَ بِتَابِعٍ قِبْلَتَهُمْ ۚ وَمَا بَعْضُهُم
بِتَابِعٍ قِبْلَةَ بَعْضٍ ۚ وَلَئِنِ اتَّبَعْتَ أَهْوَاءَهُم مِّن بَعْدِ مَا جَاءَكَ مِنَ الْعِلْمِ ۙ إِنَّكَ إِذًا لَّمِنَ الظَّالِمِينَ ﴿١٤٥﴾ الَّذِينَ آتَيْنَاهُمُ
الْكِتَابَ يَعْرِفُونَهُ كَمَا يَعْرِفُونَ أَبْنَاءَهُمْ ۖ وَإِنَّ فَرِيقًا مِّنْهُمْ لَيَكْتُمُونَ الْحَقَّ وَهُمْ يَعْلَمُونَ ﴿١٤٦﴾ الْحَقُّ مِن رَّبِّكَ ۖ فَلَا
تَكُونَنَّ مِنَ الْمُمْتَرِينَ ﴿١٤٧﴾ وَلِكُلٍّ وِجْهَةٌ هُوَ مُوَلِّيهَا ۖ فَاسْتَبِقُوا الْخَيْرَاتِ ۚ أَيْنَ مَا تَكُونُوا يَأْتِ بِكُمُ اللَّهُ جَمِيعًا ۚ إِنَّ اللَّهَ
عَلَىٰ كُلِّ

144 (قد. . .يعملون) Assuredly We have seen thee turning thy face[25] to the heaven;[26] so We shall surely cause thee to turn towards the Qiblah which will please thee.[27] Turn then thy face[28] towards the sacred Mosque;[29] and turn,[30] wherever you be, your faces towards it.[31] And surely those who are given the Book know this to be the truth and from their Lord.[32] Allah is not unmindful of what they work.[33]

145. (ولئن. . .الظلمين) And shouldst thou[34] bring to them who are given the Book every sign, they would not follow thy Qiblah[35]: neither art thou to be a follower of their Qiblah,[36] nor does one section of them follow the Qiblah of the other.[37] And shouldst thou[38] yield to their desires,[39] after what has come to thee of the true knowledge,[40] then surely thou wilt become onc of the transgressors.

146. (الذين. . .يعلمرن) Those to whom We have given the Book[41] recognize him[42] even as they recognize their own children,[43] and surely a party of them hide the truth[44] while they know.[45]

147. (الحق. . .الممترين) The truth is from thy Lord; do not be thou then of the doubters.[46]

---

25. (O Prophet!)

26. (looking up for a revelation). The Prophet intensely longed to have Ka'ba, the Sanctuary of Abraham, as the qiblah of his people, but of course was helpless in the absence of a clear Divine command to that effect.

27. i. e., Ka'ba. Here is the promise to appoint Ka'ba the qiblah of Islām.

28. Here is the immediate fulfilment of the promise.

29. (at Makka), i. e., Ka'ba.

30. (O Muslims!).

31. (While praying, in whatsoever direction it might happen to be). 'A bird's-eye view of the Moslem world at the hour of prayer would present the spectacle of a series of concentric circles of worshippers radiating from the Ka'ba at Makka and covering an ever-widening area from Sierra Leone to Canton and from Tobolsk to Cape Town.' (Hitti. op. cit. pp. 130-131).

32. The Jews had traditions, handed down from their fathers, purporting that the Final Prophet would have Ka'ba, the House consecrated by Abraham, as his qiblah.

33. (by way of their wilful suppression of truth).

34. (O Prophet!)

35. i. e., no amount of signs, wonders and arguments would induce the Jews and the Christians to follow the qiblah of the Muslims.

36. i. e., thou hast a distinctive qiblah for thy own community. The Prophet 'desired that the Muslims should have a qiblah of their own, which would symbolise their unity and their spiritual independence, from the ritual of non-Muslims. In fact, the subsequent command to Muslims to face in their prayers a central point common to them alone, has powerfully contributed to that distinctive feeling of unity which to this day, in spite of so many differences and sectarian dissensions, binds the Muslims together into one single ummah and makes them realise that they are a group of their own, different from the rest of the world. It is impossible to over-estimate this feeling of unity.' (ASB. I. p. 60).

37. The people of the Book are themselves divided in this respect. The Jews turn towards Jerusalem, and the Christians towards the east.

38. (O Prophet!)

39. The very assumption involves a moral impossibility, and is contrary to the prophetic nature, and is therefore to be ruled out on the face of it.

40. i. e., of Divine knowledge; of Revelation and Prophecy.

41. i. e., the Jews.

42. (as the true Prophet of God, by the description of him given in their Books).

43. i. e., the prophets of their own race. The Jews are here charged with denying the Prophet after their recognizing him, on the strength of clear prophecies in their Books, as clearly as they recognized the prophets of Israel. The plural pronoun هم in أبناءهم is used in the collective sense, meaning their race, not individuals. 'There is no room to doubt', says a Christian biographer of the Prophet, 'that a section of the Jews not only hinted, before the Prophet, but even affirmed that he was that Prophet whom the Lord their God should raise up unto them of their brethren.' (Muir, op. cit. p. 98).

44. i. e., the description of him in their books.

45. i. e., their suppression of the truth is deliberate and intentional.

46. (O reader!)

SECTION 18

148. (وكل . . . قدير) For every one is a goal whitherward he turns[47]; so strive to be foremost in virtues.[48] Wherever you may be, Allah shall bring you all together;[49] surely Allah is over everything Potent.

149. (ومن . . . تعملون) And from whencesoever thou[50] goest forth, turn thy face towards the Sacred Mosque; and it[51] is surely the very truth from thy Lord; and Allah is not unmindful of what you work.

150. (ومن . . . تهتدون) And from whencesoever thou goest forth turn thy face towards the sacred mosque[52]; and wherever you may be,[53] turn your face towards it, lest there should be with people[54] an argument against you[55] except those of them who transgress[56]; so do not fear them,[57] but fear Me,[58] so that I may perfect My favour upon you[59] and that you may remain truly guided.[60]

151. (كما . . . تعلمون) Thus[61] We have sent forth to you a messenger from amongst you, who recites to you Our revelations and purifies you[62] and teaches you the Book[63] and wisdom,[64] and teaches you what you were not wont to know.[65]

152. (فاذكروني . . . تكفرون) Remember Me therefore,[66] and I shall remember you,[67] and to Me pay thanks[68] and do not deny Me.[69]

47. (in prayer). That is the chief reason for appointing a distinctive qiblah for the believers,—a symbol of their religious solidarity and communal unity.

48. (O Muslims! and leave alone this wrangling about qiblah).

49. (in His presence, to judge of your actions, O Mankind!). Hence the greater need for hastening towards a life of virtue. (Th).

50. (O Prophet!).

51. i. e., this command to turn towards qiblah.

52. The command is repeated for the sake of emphasis. The value of having one particular qiblah for the entire community of the faithful, scattered throughout the world, and composed of men of every race and country cannot be too highly emphasized.

53. (O Muslims!)

54. (hostile to you).

55. (that the Final Prophet was to have Ka'ba as his permanent qiblah).

56. (and are bent on evil; and their vexatious squabbles would be of no harm to Islām).

57. (and do not pay any great attention to their puerilities).

58. (as it is disobedience to My command that can lead you to perdition and misery).

59. (in the Hereafter, by making you enter the Paradise).

60. (in this world). A condition precedent to the consummation of Divine grace in the Hereafter.

61. The meaning is: this appointment of Abraham's Sanctuary as the qiblah for all true believers is in fulfilment of his prayer, as, when raising the foundations of the House along with Ismā'īl, he had prayed, 'Our Lord! accept Thou this from us!' See verse 127 above.

62. (of sin and spiritual defilement).

63. The holy Prophet was not a mere faithful transmitter. He was also a teacher, and an interpreter. See P. I. n. 593.

64. The Prophet, in addition to the Revealed words he transmits, is also endowed with Divine wisdom which he imparts to his followers by his words and deeds. See also P. I. n. 593.

65. Human reason cannot go beyond a certain limit. Revelation must come to its rescue for the solution of ultimate problems. The purport of the passage is: The appointment of Ka'ba as qiblah was as much of a certainty as the fulfilment of another prayer of Abraham for raising among his and Ismā'īl's progeny a Prophet. The advent of the Prophet of Islām and the raising of the House to the status of the qiblah were really the two parts of Abraham's prayer and were bound to come together.

66. (O mankind! with prayer and worship) i. e., be mindful of My favours.

67. (with favours and blessings).

68. (by your faith and acts of obedience).

69. (by your acts of rebellion and disobedience).

SECTION 19

153. (یایها . . الصبرین) O you who believe ; seek help in patience[70] and prayer[71] ; surely Allah is with the patient.[72]

154. (و لا . . تشعرون) And do not speak of those slain in the way of Allah as dead[73]. Nay, they are alive,[74] but you do not perceive.

155. (و لنبلونكم .... الصبرين) And We shall surely test you with aught of fear and hunger and loss in riches and lives and fruits[75] ; and bear thou[76] glad tidings to the patient.[77]

156. (الذين . . . راجعون) Who, when an affliction afflicts them[78], say[79] : 'surely we[80] are Allah's[81] and surely to Him we shall return'.[82]

157. (اولئك . . . المهتدون) They are the ones on whom shall be benedictions from their Lord and mercy,[83] and they are the ones who are guided.[84]

158. (ان . . عليم) Surely Safā[85] and Marwā[86] are of the landmarks of Allah[87]; so whoso makes a pilgrimage to the House[88], or performs the 'Umrā[89] in him is to be no fault[90] if he walks in-between the twain.[91] And whoso does good voluntarily[92], then surely Allah is Appreciative,[93] Knowing[94].

70. (to relieve yourselves of the depression, naturally great and deep, caused by the manifest perversity of the disbelievers).

71. Which is an act of still greater merit than mere endurance of trials. Even according to non-Muslim observers, the holy Prophet 'was the first one to see the tremendous power of public prayer as a unification culture, and there can be little doubt that the power of Islām is due in large measure to the obedience of the faithful to this inviolable rule of the five prayers.' (Denison, Emotion as the basis of Civilisation, p. 275).

72. This consciousness of the accompaniment of God, this awareness that He is with us, is the greatest comfort that the human mind can have in this world, and the greatest antidote to our sense of loneliness.

73. i. e., that they are dead, in the ordinary sense of the word. This truth has been recognized by the Jews also. According to them 'the souls of the righteous live like birds in cages guarded by angels . . . The souls of martyrs also have a special place in heaven.' (JE. VI. p. 566).

74. (a Barzakhish life, purer, fuller, and higher than that granted to mankind in general).

75. The passage, though of general import, was primarily intended to comfort those who had lost friends and relatives at the battle of Badr, and the 'companions' who had suffered in health and prosperity by their emigration from Makka.

76. (O Prophet!)

77. i. e., those who have borne these trials and afflictions with good cheer.

78. (such as disease or bereavement).

79. (habitually, and with full understanding of the meaning of what they say).

80. (and all that we can call our own—home, family, property, and the like).

81. i. e., we belong to Him as His property and His bondmen, so that He may do with us whatever He likes.

82. (when and where we shall surely be more than repaid for any amount of loss incurred here and now). Every affliction that befalls a Muslim is cheerfully borne by him in the perfect assurance that either it is to wash him of his sins or to bless him in the Hereafter.

83. صلوات is here synonymous with بركات This sure decending of the benediction and mercy of the Lord is the 'glad tidings' promised in verse 155 above.

84. i. e., they have realised the eternal and central truth that not they but their Lord is the Master, the Owner, of themselves; and they are comforted in the belief that He is sure to more than recompensate them for their afflictions in this world.

85. Safā and Marwa are two eminences (not mountains, as supposed by Palmer) surmounted by arches, in the heart of Makka (not 'near Mecca' as imagined again by Palmer) in the vicinity of the Sacred Mosque, on either side. The distance, 493 paces long has to be traversed seven times, partly with hasty steps, in memory of Hagar or Hājira (of blessed memory) who ran to and fro in search of water when left alone with baby Ismā'īl in the waterless desert of Makka.

86. 'In religious importance these two points or "hills," connected by Masa, stand second only to the Ka'ba. Safā is an elevated platform surmounted by a triple arch, and approached by a flight of steps. It lies south-east of the Ka'ba, facing the black corner, and 76 paces from the "Gate of Safā," which is architecturally the chief gate of the mosque. Marwa is a similar platform, formerly covered with a single arch, on the opposite side of the valley. It stands on a spur of Red mountain called Jebal Knaykian.' (EBr. XV. p. 152).

87. i. e., marks and signs of His religion. شعائر الله means 'all those religious services which God has appointed to us as signs . . . . . or the rites and ceremonies of the pilgrimage, and the places where these rites and ceremonies are performed.' (LL).

88. حج literally synonymous with قصد by restriction of its usage in the law, now means, 'He repaired to Makkah, or to the Kaabeh, to perform the religious rites and ceremonies of the pilgrimage.' (LL).

89. عمرة is the minor pilgrimage, with fewer rites. Literally 'a visit, or a visiting,' it is technically 'a religious visit to the sacred places at Makkah with the performance of the ceremony of الاحرام—the circuiting round the Kaabeh, and the going to and fro between Es-Safa and El-Merwata; الحج differs from it inasmuch as it is at a particular time of the year and is not complete without the halting at 'Arafat on the day of 'Arafat' (LL).

90. (as some Muslims were apt to think, taking it to be a relic of the pagan ritual).

91. (in the way prescribed). This marching to and fro, between the two, far from being sinful, is one of the rites of pilgrimage. The passage was revealed to remove the scruples of the early Muslims who hesitated to perform the rite as the two ceremonies were venerated by the pagans and formerly there were seated on them two idols. طواف is here used in its primary sense signifying, not compassing or circumambulating, but 'the act of going or walking, in an absolute sense.' (LL).

92. (such as this tripping between Safā and Marwa in cases where it is not obligatory).

93. شاكر like شكور when applied to God, means, 'He who approves, or rewards, or forgives, much or largely: He who gives large reward for small, or few, works'. (LL). Or, One who highly appreciates good and is Bountiful in rewarding it.

94. i. e., Knower of the purity of motives.

159. (ان . . . اللعنون) Surely those who conceal what We have sent down of evidences[95] and the guidance[96] after We have expounded it[97] to mankind in the Book,[98] they are the very ones cursed by Allah[99] and cursed by the cursers;[100]

160. (الا . . . الرحيم) Save those who repent[101] and make amends[102] and make known the truth.[103] Those are the very ones towards whom I relent ; and I am Relenting, Merciful.[104]

161. (ان . . . اجمعين) Surely those who disbelieve and die while they are disbelievers, then it is they on whom shall be the curse of Allah and angels and mankind all[105] !

162. (خلدين . . . ينظرون) They shall be abiders therein[106]; lightened shall be not torment on them, nor shall they be respited.

163. (والهكم . . . الرحيم) And your God is the One God[107]; there is no God but He,[108] Compassionate[109], Merciful[110].

SECTION 20

164. (ان . . . يعقلون) Surely in the creation of the heavens and the earth and the alternation of night and day,[111] and the ships that sail upon the ocean laden with what profits mankind ; and in what Allah sends down of water from the heavens and revives the earth thereby after its death, and scatters in it of all sorts of moving creatures,[112] and in the veering of winds and clouds subjected for service between heavens and earth ; in these are signs[113] to a people who understand.

---

95. i. e., signs that are manifest in themselves.

96. i. e., what is a source of guidance to others. The reference is to the Jews.

97. 'It' refers to 'that which', i. e., the matter Revealed.

98. i. e., Taurāt and Injīl. The word الكتاب is used here in its generic sense.

99. To be accursed of Allah, in the phraseology of the Qur'ān, is to be driven away and estranged from God and to be deprived of His mercy and grace.

100. (from among angels, men and genii), i. e., all such as abhor and detest evil. The Christian conception of 'curse' is singularly amusing, if not actually blasphemous:—'The non-observance of the law, St. Paul teaches, puts men under a curse; from this curse Ghrist redeems them by becoming Himself a curse on their behalf.' The proof that Ghrist did become a curse is given in the form of a reference to the Grucifixion: it is written, "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree". . . . . In His death on the cross He was identified under God's dispensation with the doom of sin: He became curse for us; and it is on this our redemption depends." (DB. I. p. 535). For the use of curses in the OT and the NT see P. I. n. 389.

101. (their past).

102. (their future).

103. (which they had been so far hiding, and now publicly avow Islām). See verse 159 above.

104. The God of Islām, unlike the God of so many religions, is neither jealous nor vindictive. This requires frequent reiteration not only in view of the doctrines of the pagans but also of the teachings of the Bible. 'Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions.' (Ex. 23: 21). 'He is a holy God; he is a jeolous God; he will not forgive your transgressions nor your sins,' (Jo. 24: 19).

105. Moses 'delivered blessings to them, and curses upon those that should not live according to the laws. . . . . . After this curses were denounced upon those that should transgress those laws'. ("Ant" IV. 8: 44). See n. 100 above.

106. i. e., under that curse.

107. (O mankind! and not many or several). This unequivocally repudiates and condemns the trinity of Christian god-head, the dualism of the Zoroastrian Divinity, and the Multiplicity of the gods of polytheistic peoples.

108. This is monotheism par excellence, and not mere monolatry. Verses like the above are meant to emphasize the fact that only One God exists, not that one God is to be worshipped to the exclusion of other gods.

109. He alone, and none other, is Perfect in the attribute of compassion.

110. He alone, and none other, is Perfect in the attribute of mercy.

111. The sky and the earth, night and day are all created beings, but very frequently have been personified and worshipped, as deities.

112. Or 'animals.' دابّة literally is 'anything that walks or creeps or crawls upon the earth.'

113. (of His Unity, Might and Wisdom). It is precisely such phenomena of nature from which have emerged a major part of the gods of polytheism. These grand and beautiful objects of nature striking awe and wonder and exciting admiration in the human mind are in fact but so many evidences of the unique handiwork of their Creator; and it is absolutely foolish to adore and worship 'a heaven-god,' an 'earth-god,' a 'sun-god,' a 'moon-god,'; a 'rain-god,' a 'wind-god,' and the like. All such various deities of the polytheistic nations are described at length by the writers on Sociology and Anthropology. See for example, PC, II, pp. 247-304; FWN, I & II. The Holy Qur'ān leads from the study of nature to the contemplation of the Author of nature.

البقرة ٢ سيقول ٢

لقوم يعقلون ۝ ومن الناس من يتخذ من دون الله اندادا يحبونهم كحب الله ۖ والذين امنوا اشد
حبا لله ۗ ولو يرى الذين ظلموا اذ يرون العذاب ان القوة لله جميعا وان الله شديد العذاب ۝
اذ تبرا الذين اتبعوا من الذين اتبعوا وراوا العذاب وتقطعت بهم الاسباب ۝ وقال الذين اتبعوا
لو ان لنا كرة فنتبرا منهم كما تبرءوا منا ۗ كذلك يريهم الله اعمالهم حسرات عليهم ۖ وما هم
بخرجين من النار ۝ يايها الناس كلوا مما في الارض حللا طيبا ۖ ولا تتبعوا خطوت الشيطن ۚ انه ع
لكم عدو مبين ۝ انما يامركم بالسوء والفحشاء وان تقولوا على

165. (ومن . . . العذاب) And of mankind are some who set up compeers[114] to Allah; they love them as with the love due to Allah.[115] And those who believe are strongest in love of Allah.[116] Would that those who are ungodly[117] saw[118] now what they shall see when they see the torment,[119] that surely power belonged wholly to Allah, and that Allah was Severe in Requital.[120]

166. (اذ . . . الاسباب) Remember when those who were followed[121] shall disown those who followed them,[122] and they all shall behold the torment and cut asunder shall be their cords.[123]

167. (وقال . . . النار) And those who had followed shall say :[124] 'could that for us were a return,[125] then we would disown them as they have disowned us.' Thus will Allah show them their works as anguish ; and they shall not be coming forth from the Fire.

SECTION 21

168. (يايها . . . مبين) O mankind ! eat of whatever is on the earth[126] lawful and good,[127] and do not walk in the footsteps of Satan ;[128] surely he is to you an enemy manifest—[129]

169. (انما . . . تعلمون) He only commands you to evil and indecency and that you should say against Allah what you do not know.[130]

114. See P. I. n. 95.

115. The Arab polytheists looked upon their god as the head of their clan and behaved towards him as if he was their kinsman. The love of the Christians for Christ in preference to God is an equally apt illustration.

116. Love of God, then, and not His fear alone, as generally misrepresented by the Christian 'missionaries,' is the spur of Islām. In the ideology of Islām, love of God forms, equally with His fear the incentive to good. And a devout Muslim is one whose love for Allah is supreme—unsurpassed by his love for anything else. It is his love for God that gives a definite and permanent direction to His will and forms the standing motive of his moral and religious life.

117. (to themselves), i. e., the infidels.

118. i. e., perceived by reflecting on it.

119. (in this very world and found that nobody is able to remove it).

120. (in the Hereafter).

121. (in this world by the masses), i. e., the chiefs and leaders of the infidels.

122. On the Judgment Day the leaders of irreligion will forsake and wash their hands off their disciples, as if they were not accomplices in the latter's careers of sin and disobedience.

123. (Of mutual relationship) . e., when face to face with requital and justice, the co-accused will desert and renounce each other.

124. (in bitter anguish).

125. (to the world).

126. i. e., lawfully acquired.

127. i. e., lawful in itself.

128. (by taking unclean foods, which are unwholesome physically, morally and spiritually, or by making even clean foods unlawful by invoking over them any other name than that of God).

129. (and as such the instigator to sin and blasphemy).

130. i. e., that of which you have no warranty: attribute to Him blasphemous doctrines.

الله ما لا تعلمون ۝ وإذا قيل لهم اتبعوا ما أنزل الله قالوا بل نتبع ما ألفينا عليه آباءنا أولو كان آباؤهم

الكتاب ويشترون به

170. (و اذا . . . يهتدون) And when it is said to them[131] : 'follow what Allah has sent down', they say : 'nay, we shall follow that way whereon we found our fathers'[132]—even though their fathers did not understand aught nor were they guided.[133]

171. (و مثل . . . يعقلون) And the likeness[134] of those who disbelieve[135] is as the likeness of him who shouts to that which hears naught, except the sound of a call and a cry ;[136] dead,[137] dumb,[138] blind ;[139] so they do not understand.[140]

172. (يا يها . . . تعبدون) O you who believe ! eat[141] of the good things with which We have provided you and return thanks to Allah,[142] if Him indeed you are wont to worship.

173. (انما . . . رحيم) He has only forbidden to you[143] the dead animals,[144] and blood, and flesh of swine,[145] and that over which is invoked the name of any other than Allah.[146] But whoso is driven to necessity,[147] neither desiring[148] nor transgressing,[149] on him is no sin ;[150] surely Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.[151]

131. i. e., the infidels.

132. Pagan religions have no reasons or reasoned beliefs to set by. Their stock-in-trade is 'ancestral wisdom'—old and antiquated traditions and customs transmitted from one generation to another.

133. i. e., are one's ancestors infallible guides to be followed unquestioningly and blindly at all events, even when they have no authority of reason or Revelation to support them ?

134. (in point of insensibility and want of understanding).

135. (and of him who invites them to the true religion).

136. (without comprehending any meaning).

137. (to the call of reason and religion).

138. (in acknowledging truth).

139. (to their own real interests).

140. Preaching to the wilful rejecters of faith is like calling to the dumb, driven cattle who hear sounds but understand nothing.

141. (whatever you may desire).

142. (both in word and deed).

143. (not what you may forbid unto yourself, but such things as the following).

144. مَيْتَة signifies 'that which has not been slaughtered in the manner prescribed by the law.'

145. The foul habit and coarse feeding of swine—let alone its liability to leprosy and glandular disease—are sufficient to make its flesh repulsive. Whatever the practice of the modern 'Christian' nations in regard to 'pork,' and 'bacon' and 'ham,' the Bible's abhorrence of swine is clear. 'And the swine . . . . he is unclean to you': (Le. 11 : 7). 'And the swine . . . . it is unclean to you; ye shall not eat of their flesh, nor touch their dead carcase.' (Dt. 14 : 8). Cf. also Is. 65 ; 4 ; Mt. 7 : 6 ; and 2 Pe. 2 : 22. 'The eating of swine's flesh is forbidden in Israel . . . . . The flesh and blood of swine are described as characteristically heathen and repulsive offerings . . . The ancient Egyptians and Phœnicians as well as Jews regarded swine as unclean.' (DB. IV. p. 633). In Arabic, the very word suggests a feeling of revulsion. خنزير, says a writer on 'Primary Arabic Roots,' 'seems to be structural derivative form of قذرالشيئ "the thing become filthy," and a hog is called خنزير because of its dirty habits. What is more striking is that even in the English language, 'hog' and its synonyms always imply something that is mean, loathsome or contemptible. 'Swine,' in English, is 'a low, greedy or vicious person.' (NSD). 'Applied opprobriously to a sexual, degraded, or coarse person; also (in modern use) as a mere term of contempt or abuse' (SOED). And 'swinish,' is 'gross specially, in eating or drinking; beastly.' (NSD); Sensual, gluttonous; coarse, beastly; (SOED). 'Pig,' again, is 'a person who is like a pig; especially one who is filthy, gluttonous, or grasping' (NSD); 'applied opprobriously to a person.' (SOED). And 'piggish' is 'greedy; uncleanly' (NSD); 'Selfish, mean; unclean, vile' (SOED). 'Hog,' once again, is 'a filthy, gluttonous; or grasping person; also, one selfishly indifferent to the rights of others;' and 'hoggish' means 'like a hog; gluttonous; selfish; filthy; mean' (NSD). Is all this mere coincidence ?

146. (by way of adoration). The pagans used to slaughter animals in the name of their various deities.

147. (to eat an unlawful food).

148. i. e., seeking it for the pleasure of the palate.

149. (the bare limits of necessity).

150. (in eating one of the forbidden foods).

151. Forgiveness is that attribute of Divine nature by virtue of which guilt is overlooked and a being who deserves punishment is treated with grace and kindness. See also n. 104 above.

174. (ان . . . اليم) Surely those who conceal what Allah has sent down in the Book, and purchase therewith a small gain,[152] these are they who swallow in their bellies naught but Fire.[153] Allah shall not speak to them[154] on the Day of Resurrection, nor purify them,[155] and to them shall be a torment afflictive.

175. (اولئک . . . النار) Those are they who have purchased error for guidance[156] and torment for forgiveness.[157] How daring must they be in facing the Fire.[158]

176. (ذالک . . . بعيد) This[159] shall be because Allah has surely sent down the Book[160] with truth ; and surely those who differ[161] respecting the Book[162] are in schism[163] wide.

152. i. e., worldly consideration, which is always but a 'small gain.' The reference is to the Jews.

153. Great as is the sin of taking unclean and unlawful foods, far greater is the sin of wilful concealment of the teaching of the Book, so habitual with the Jews.

154. (a kind word).

155. (by forgiving their sins).

156. (in this world).

157. (in the Hereafter).

158. ما here is expressive of surprise or wonder.

159. i. e., the chastisement they shall have to endure.

160. الكتاب as a generic name, here signifies the Revealed Books in general ; or, it may refer specifically to the Qur'ān.

161. (among themselves).

162. which is so transparently true.

163. i. e., at great variance with truth, and constantly disputing among themselves. The divisions and subdivisions of the Christians are only too well known. Draper, while speaking of the interminable wranglings and bickerings of the Christian sects, refers to 'the incomprehensible jargon of Arians, Nestorians, Entychians, Monothelites, Monophysites, Mariolatrists, and an anarchy of countless disputants.' (History of the Intellectual Development of Europe, I, p. 333).

SECTION 22

177. (ليس . . . المتقون) Virtue is not in this[164] that you turn your faces[165] to the east and the west,[166] but virtue is of him who believes in Allah and the Last Day and the angels and the Book[167] and the prophets,[168] and gives of his substance, for love of Him,[169] to kindered and orphans and the needy and the wayfarer and the beggars[170] and for redeeming necks ;[171] and establishes prayer and gives poor-rate[172] and is of the performers of their promises when they have promised ; and is of the patient in adversity and affliction[173] and in time of violence ;[174]—these are they who have proved true,[175] and these are they who are God-fearing.[176]

178. (يا يها . . اليم) O you who believe! ordained for you is retaliation[177] in the matter of the slain ;[178] the free for the free, and a slave for a slave[179] and a woman for a women[180] ; yet whoso[181] is pardoned aught[182] by his brother,[183] let the service[184] be honourable[185] and payment[186] with kindness.[187] This[188] is an alleviation from your Lord and a mercy ;[189] so whoso will transgress hereafter,[190] for him shall be a torment afflictive.[191]

179. (ولكم . . . تتقون) And for you is life in retaliation,[192] O men of insight ! that haply you will be God-fearing.

180. (كتب . . . المتقين) Ordained for you, when death is nigh unto one of you, if he leaves behind any property, is the making of a bequest for his parents and kindered equitably—a duty on the God-fearing.[193]

164. (as misguided and superstitious nations are apt to think.

165. (in prayer).

166. Which directions have been held sacred by many pagan nations. In Greek religion, deities were classified as Olympian and Chthonian. The East was the abode of the Olympian gods and the direction to which their temples looked and their worshippers turned when sacrificing to them, 'while the west was the direction which the worshippers of the Chthonian gods faced.' (DB. V. p. 143). According to Hindus, the direction of south-east was sacred to the Manu and the performances of shuddha faced it during the ceremony. (ERE. XII, p. 618). It was the belief of the early Church that evil entered from the north. In most of the early Saxon churches, and in many of the churches of the Norman period, all over the country, there was a north door. There are few early churches in Shropshire and the border countries that are without their north door; which, in most instances, has been built up. The north door is believed to have been used as the entrance to the church on the occasion of baptisms, when the child was supposed to have passed from the evil influence of the world and the devil into the care of the Church. The verse strikes at the root of the 'direction-worship', and says in effect that there is no merit at all in turning towards any particular direction. For Christian orientation and allied topics see P. I, nn. 516, 517, 519. Islamic worship, it must be manifest to the reader, is not directed towards any direction as such – east, west, north, or south, but towards a particular House, on whatever side of the worshipper it may happen to be. See P. I, nn. 518, 520. The particle و may here also be translated as or.

167. الكتاب is here again a generic name standing for all the Revealed Books and not for any particular Scripture.

168. This sums up Islamic belief: belief in God, in His Prophets, in His Books, in the Day of Judgment, and in the Angels.

169. Note the principal motive-force, in the Islamic code, to all acts of merit. Not to win the applause of human beings, nor to achieve good name, but impelled by the love of his Creator, Master and Sustainer, and moved to win His good-will, a Muslim is truly religious in all his acts of charity and benevolence.

170. Not those who make begging a profession, but those driven to beg by sheer need.

171. (of slaves and captives). 'Redeeming necks' is freeing them, and is in Islām a primary social duty.

172. (at regular intervals). A simple and natural, and yet perfectly effective, way of solving many an economic problem. This sums up the main heads of Islamic devotions.

173. ضراء is 'that evil which relates to the person; as disease: whereas بأساء is that which relates to property; as poverty.' (LL).

174. i. e., in war against the infidels.

175. (in their faith: in righteousness). Here is a beautiful resume of the main requirements of the faith, with the threefold division of:

1. Islamic beliefs,
2. Islamic devotions, and
3. Islamic code of social and moral duties.

176. 'This is one of the noblest verses in the Qur'ān . . . Faith in God and benevolence towards man is clearly set forth as the essence of religion. It contains a compendium of doctrine to be believed as well as of precept to be practised in life.'

It is something after all to have these words of commendation by so irreverent a critic of Islām as 'reverend' E. M. Wherry.

177. Which is not quite the same thing as mere revenge. 'Islām while recognizing retaliation as the basic principle of remedial right, favours compensation as being a principle which is most consistent with the peace and progress of society, and lays down rules for the purpose of confining retaliation within the narrowest possible limits.' 'Abdur Rahīm, Muhammadan Jurisprudence (op. cit., p. 359).

178. Cf. the law of Moses: 'And he that killeth any man shall surely be put to death.' (Le. 24: 17). 'And he that killeth a man, he shall be put to death.' (21).

179. 'According to Hanafīs the life of a slave stands on an equal footing with that of a free-man, of a woman with that of a man, of a non-Muslim subject with that of a Muslim,' ('Abdur Rahīm, op. cit., p. 359).

180. The essence of the verse, as is evident, is insistence on justice, impartial and unalloyed, and a negation of all iniquities. No favour or partiality is to be shown to the murderer if he happens to be a person of wealth and influence, as was customary both with the Jews and the pagan Arabs.

181. (of the murderers).

182. (of the penalty) i. e., a portion but not the whole.

183. i. e., the other party. The law of Islām, unlike the modern law of Europe based on the legal statutes of the pagan Romans, takes into view civil liability of the murderer even more than his criminal responsibility, and treats murder as an act of injury to the family of the slain rather than an offence against the state. Hence the recognition, in Islamic law, of the rights of relations, and the legality of blood-wit or fine paid to the heirs and kindred of the slain.

184. (of the blood-money on the part of the complainant).

185. i. e., without causing undue harassment to the culprit.

186. (of the blood-money on the part of the offender).

187. i. e., without causing undue harassment to the complainant. The purport is that both the demand and the payment should be made with full human considerations.

188. i. e., the provision to remit. 'Retaliation being the right of the person injured or of his heirs, they can compound with the offender for money, or, if they choose, pardon him. Wherever retaliation for murder or hurt is compounded, the money payable as consideration can be realized only from the offender himself. So also when compensation is ordered in cases where there is a doubt as to the wilful nature of the homicide. Similarly, when the hurt caused has not resulted in death, the wrong-doer alone can be called upon to pay compensation. But when death has been caused by negligence or mistake, the offender's Akilas, that is, his tribe or relations, or the inhabitants of the town to which he belongs, are to pay the blood-money to the heirs of the deceased. The reason is that it is the duty of a person's Akilas to watch over his conduct and the law presumes that the wrong-doer would not have acted in the way he did unless they neglected their duty.' ('Abdur Rahīm, op. cit. p. 359).

189. i. e., God has thereby allowed His stern justice to be mingled with mercy. 'The law, though it recognizes retaliation in theory, discourages this form of remedy in every possible way. For example, if there be the least doubt as to the wilful character of the offence or the proof, retaliation will not be ordered.' ('Abdur Rahīm, op. cit. p. 359).

190. (by accusing or implicating someone falsely, or by insisting on full vengeance after remitting). بعد is here used, according to some, in the sense of مع The rendering in that case would be 'notwithstanding that.'

191. (in the Hereafter).

192. i. e., the saving thereof. The knowledge of the law of retaliation restrains from intentional slaughter or culpable homicide and so is a source of life to two persons. Islām, the ideal-practical religion of humanity, does fully recognise the need of a law of retaliation, in sharp distinction from an unqualified justalionis which makes endless every affair when once it has been started, and which is at best suited only to the savage stages of society.

193. This was ordained long before the law of inheritance was revealed, which alone is the governing law now in all such cases.

182. (فمن . . . رحيم) But whoso apprehends[198] from the testator a mistake[199] or a sin[200] and thereupon[201] he makes up the matter between them,[202] on him there shall be no sin;[203] surely Allah is Forgiver, Merciful.[204]

183. (يا يها . . . تتقون) O you who believe! ordained for you is fasting,[205] even as it was ordained for those before you,[206] that haply you will be God-fearing—[207]

184. (ايا ما . . . تعلمون) Days numbered.[208] Then whoso among you is ill or journeying, for him is the like number of other days.[209] And those who can keep it with hardship[210] the redemption is the feeding of a poor person;[211] and whoso does good voluntarily[212] it will be better for him,[213] and that your fast[214] will be better for you if you but know.[215]

194. i. e., the will or bequest.

195. (and not upon the presiding officers of the court who may unwarily be led into errors).

196. So He hears the perjured statements of the forger.

197. So He knows the innocence of the presiding officer of the court.

198. خاف is also used in the sense of ظن he thought, or opined.' Hence the phrase in the text may mean; 'And he who knoweth that there is, on the part of the testator, an inclining to a wrong course, or a declining from the right course.' (LL).

199. (committed inadvertently in regard to the bequest). جنف literally is a declining or deviating from the right course; acting wrongfully.

200. i. e., intentional infringement of the law of inheritance.

201. (fearing a litigation between the heirs of the deceased).

202. i. e., heirs; the parties concerned.

203. (for making an alteration in the will).

204. (even to the sinners; and much more so to such a person who has committed no sin at all).

205. 'One of the fruits of Islām,' says an European observer, William Paton, 'has been that stubborn, durable patience which comes of the submission to the absolute will of Allah.' Now it is the institution of fasting, more than anything else, that is responsible for the generation of this 'stubborn, durable patience' in the Muslim character.

206. 'By the greater number of religions, in the lower, middle, and higher cultures alike, fasting is largely prescribed.' (EBr. IX. p. 106). 'It would be difficult to name any religious system of any description in which it is wholly unrecognized,' (EBr. X. p. 193. 11th Ed.). 'We have no evidence of any practice of fasting in pre-Islamic pagan Arabia, but the institution was, of course, well established among both Christians and Jews.' (Hitti, op. cit. p. 133).

207. (and attain piety by this regular exercise of self-discipline). It is here that the distinctive characteristic of the Islamic fast comes out in pre-eminence. Both the Jews and the Christians took to fasting as a mere mode of expiation or penitence, or for purposes even narrower and strictly formal. 'In olden times fasting was instituted as a sign of mourning, or when danger threatened, or when the seer was preparing himself for a divine revelation.' (JE. V. p. 347). It is Islām that immensely broadened the outlook, and raised the motive and the purpose of fasting. In Islām it is a voluntary and cheerful renunciation, for a definite period, of all the appetites of flesh lawful in themselves (the unlawful ones being ruled out of course)—a salutary exercise of both the body and the spirit. 'Disciplinary fasting,' such as the Islamic fasting may be termed, 'is regarded as a reasonable and useful practice, even by those who consider all other forms of fasting to be misconceived and vain . . . Normally, it is a reasonable part of the soul's preparation for the maintenance of self-control in times of strong temptation' (EBr IX, p. 108)

208. (Shall ye fast), i. e., only for thirty or twenty-nine days. The month supplies the greatest continued test of self-discipline known to the world. So meritorious is this fast in the eyes of the Lord that, according to the sayings of the Prophet, 'the very smell of the mouth of the keeper of a fast is more agreeable to Allah than the smell of musk.' And so sacred is the month that 'with its coming the gates of Paradise are opened and the gates of Hell are closed and devils are enchained.'

209. The law is only permissive, not imperative. Those who are ill or on journey may, and not must, postpone their fasts till after Ramadhān, or may go on fasting regularly within the month. It is optional with them.

210. i. e., such men and women as are exceedingly weak or are of advanced old age. طاقة signifies what can be done or borne with the u difficulty, 'the utmost that one can do, with difficulty, trouble or inconvenience.' (LL). Another reading for يطيقونه is يطوقونه and it means يكلفونه that is, 'shall have imposed upon them as a thing that is difficult, troublesome, and inconvenient.' (LL).

211. (according to the average quantity and quality of what a man eats in a day).

212. i. e., shall spend on the poor over and above the prescribed redemption.

213. To be munificent and generous is always commendable ; it is immeasurably more to be so in this month of purification, piety and self-denial. Hence it is that the Holy Prophet—the most bountiful of men—was more bountiful than ever in the month of Ramadhān. The duty to give alms present throughout the year becomes paramount during Ramadhān ; and the holy Prophet has declared that until a man has distributed the legal and customary gifts, at the end of the month, before celebrating the festival of 'Id, his fasts will be kept suspended between heaven and earth.

214. (if you still choose to keep fasts).

215. (the incomparable merit of fasting the whole month of Ramadhān)

185. (شهر . . . تشكرون) The month[216] of Ramadhan :[217] in it was sent down the Qur'an,[218] a guidance to mankind[219] and with evidences;[220] one of the Books of guidance and distinction.[221] So whoso of you witnesses the month,[222] he shall fast it;[223] and whoso is ill or journeying for him is the like number of other days. Allah desires for you ease[224] and does not desire for you hardship;[225] so you shall complete the number[226] and shall magnify Allah for His having guided you,[227] and haply you may give thanks.[228]

216. Month, in the Qur'ān, means lunar month—the period of a lunar revolution, the period from the first appearance of one new moon to that of the next.

217. The root رمض means 'to bake sheep in its skin'. The noun Ramadhān is thus reminiscent of the excessiveness of heat. It is the ninth month of the Arabian year, said to be so named because it originally fell in the height of summer. Once at the beginning of the holy month the Prophet made a great oration in the course of which he said :— O ye men ! an exceedingly great moon has now overshadowed you……The Most High has appointed the fast during its nights as a custom. Whoever does a supererogatory work in the month, will be rewarded as much as if he does a legally enjoined work in another month : and whoever performs a legally enjoined work in this month, will be rewarded the same as if he had performed seventy such works is any other month. This is the month of patience, and the reward of the patience of the month is Paradise.'

218. The first verses of the Qur'ān were revealed in the month of Ramadhān. So by 'sent down', here, is meant 'commenced to be sent down.' Or it may mean, according to the orthodox opinion, that in the month of Ramadhān, the Qur'ān was sent down from the seventh heaven to Gabriel in the first heaven, and then it came to the holy Prophet, by and by, as the occasion required.

219. This, the fact of its being a universal guide, is the first characteristic of the Holy Qur'ān.

220. (found in its every page), i. e., the Book is full of evidences. This is its second characteristic.

221. (between truth and falsehood). الهدى and الفرقان both with the definite article ال are used, in a generic sense, of all Divine Scriptures.

222. The length of the lunar month varies from twenty-nine to thirty days, and the beginning of the month depends on the visibility of the moon. The provision laid down in the verse exempts from obligation the people of those 'outlandish' countries where there is no periodic appearance of the moon at the beginning of every lunar month.

223. i. e., the whole of it. The entire month is to be spent in fasting for the whole day, and yet this religion has been accused of attracting men by only pondering to their self-indulgence! Truly has Arnold observed, quoting Carlyle, that the Prophet's 'religion is not an easy one: with rigorous fasts, lavatious, strict, complex formulas, prayers five times a day, and abstinence from wine, it did not succeed by being an easy religion.' (Preaching of Islam, p. 418).

224. (and so He has allowed these concessions). Yet very few of the good and devout Muslims ever avail themselves of these concessions, to the marvel of non-Muslim observers. 'The strictness of the fast . . . . has maintained unrelaxed at whatever season it may fall, and to this day, in the parched plains of the East, for the whole month, however burning the sun and scorching the wind, the follower of Mohammad may not suffer a drop of water during the long summer day, to pass his lips . . . The trial, though thus unequally severe in different climes and at different terms of the cycle, is no doubt a wholesome exercise of faith and self-denial.' (Muir op. cit. p. 193).

225. (in His laws and commandments: so that this institution of fasting is a blessing rather than a burden). Compare a saying of the Prophet: 'Verily the Religion is easy (to practise).'

226. (of days, at some later period; and shall thereby obtain the same merit as by fasting the month of Ramadhān).

227. (to this way of making up for the blessing of Ramadhān).

228. (to God for making your path so smooth and so easy, both physically and spiritually).

229. (O Prophet!)

230. i. e., whether I am near-by or remote.

231. (always, nighest when My servants starve themselves for the whole day in obedience to My commands and out of love for Me). The God of Islām, never distant or remote, is the constant companion of His servants, their unfailing support, and an infallible prop to those in need and distress—unlike so many gods of polytheism elevated far above men living in Olympian heights and having little or no vital connection with them.

232. (except in prayer whether that acceptance be immediate or deferred, direct or indirect) Prayer is the strongest and most visible acknowledgment of God's sovereignty and man's uttar dependence on Him. Islām, it has been well said, 'ritually viewed, is in its inmost essence a service of prayer.'

233. i. e., My call by faith and obedience, when I call them to belief.

سيقول ٢ البقرة ٢

187. (احل . . . يتقون) Allowed to you, on the night of fasts, is consorting with your women[234] ; they are a garment for you[235] and you are a garment for them.[236] Allah knows that you have been defrauding yourselves,[237] so He has relented towards you[238] and pardoned you.[239] So now[240] copulate with them[241], and seek what Allah has ordained for you,[242] and eat and drink,[243] until the white thread becomes manifest to you from the black thread of the dawn[244] ; so complete the fast till nightfall.[245] And do not copulate with them[246] while you are retreating in the mosques.[247] These are the bounds of Allah,[248] so do not approach them.[249] Thus[250] Allah expounds His signs[251] to mankind[252] that haply they may fear[253] Him.

188. (ولا تاكلوا . . . تعلمون) And do not devour your riches[254] among yourselves in vanity,[255] nor convey them[256] to the judges that you may thereby devour portion of other people's riches sinfully while you know.[257]

189. (يسئلونك . . . تفلحون) They ask thee[258] of new moons.[259] Say thou : 'they are time-marks for mankind[260] and for the season of Hajj'.[261] And it is no virtue that you enter your houses by their backs,[262] but the virtue is his who fears God;[263] so enter the houses by their doors,[264] and fear Allah, in order that you may thrive.[265]

190. (وقاتلوا . . . المعتدين) And fight[266] in the way of Allah[267] those who fight you[268] and do not trespass[269] ; surely Allah does not love the trespassers.[270]

234. رفث means sexuality and lewd conduct in general 'comprehending everything that a man desires of his wife.' (LL) This permissive commandment is of a later date. Sexual passion, in Islām, is not, as it is in Christianity, the most dreadfull of all sins, in fact the original sin which caused the Fall of Man. And normal sexuality can very well co-exist with the sanctity of the Ramadhān.

235. So close and intimate, in Islām, are the mutual relations of man and wife. لباس literally is the covering of anything. Husband and wife are called لباس "because each embraces the other, or because each goes to the other for rest, and consorts with (يلابس) the other, (LL). The phrase may be paraphrased as saying that men and women use each other as constant and inseparable companion. It emphasizes the fact of their interdependence in life, the one being incomplete without the other. Compare the dictum of a distinguished lady biologist, Dr. Elisabeth Chesser of London :—'A vast amount of energy is wasted in futile argument as to the relative superiority of man and woman ... Each sex contains undeveloped organs and functions which are more fully developed in the other ... The lesson of biology is that, where sex exists, the two sexes are mutually dependent.' (Forbath in Love, Marriage and Jealousy, p. 180). Compare with this the attitude of Christianity which holds the woman as a creature impure, perhaps the dirtiest, and regards her as a synonym for the temptress. 'The fathers of Church and the preachers did not cease to utter their thunders against woman, disparaging her, and abusing her as the impure creature, almost devilish." (Letourneau, Evolution of Marriage, p. 205). 'In the first few centuries of the Christian era the Western world was inundated with some very remarkable notions about women which came to them from the hills of Tibet ... Women were told, with all the weight of a sacred authority, that they should be ashamed of the thought that they were women, and should live in continual penance on account of the curses their sex had brought into the world. The very phrases of Manu used against women were the door of hell, the personification of sin. Some even went so far as to maintain that their bodies were of diabolic origin, but this was decided to be a heresy!' (UHWI, p. 379).

236. The metaphor is of exquisite beauty, expressive of close intimacy, identity of interests, mutual comfort and confidence, mutual upholding of each other's reputation and credit, mutual respect of one another's secrets, mutual affection, and mutual consolation in misfortune. The whole character of the one becomes an open book to the other. The wedded pair cease to belong to themselves; they now belong to each other, sharing each other's joys, sorrows, glories and shames. And yet Islām has, in the eyes of 'honest' Christian critics, 'degraded the position of woman!'

237. (in this respect) i. e., concerning the restriction imposed so far. Earlier, the Muslims were not allowed to lie with their wives even during the night in the month of Ramadhān. This was relaxed later on. Islām fully recognizes the fact that the sexual instinct is one of the most powerful organic needs.

238. (in regard to the future, and has withdrawn the restriction).

239. (in regard to the past).

240. (that the restriction has been withdrawn).

241. (in the night during the month). The pronoun refers to 'your women.' In Islām, unlike what is in Christianity, sex is not taboo, and sexual intercourse is not an impure act and a disagreeable task imposed on humanity as a punishment for the Fall, and 'to be undertaken in the spirit in which one submits to a surgical operation.' The act of copulation unless coupled with sin, is in itself a perfectly innocent act and, in proper circumstances, it is bodily healthful and mentally pleasure-giving. 'Failure to enjoy sex,' as observed by a modern British social philosopher, 'so far from being virtuous, is a mere physiological or psychological deficiency, like a failure to enjoy food.' (Russell, Marriage and Morals, p. 111).

242. (of offspring). One of the main objects of the union of man and wife is thus seen to be procreation. All forms of contraception are, by implication, interdicted. 'Birth control,' as defeating the primary purpose of the martial act, can find no place in Islām. In individual cases of ill-health or extreme poverty, the remedy lies in merital abstinence, not in the use of artificial contraceptives which, even from a purely materialistic point of view, are still far from perfect. 'Contraceptive methods . . . for the most part, are untrustworthy and frequently even injurious.' (Nemilov, Biological Tragedy of Woman, p. 193). 'Nor is the use of some contraceptives free from physical risk. They produce a certain amount of septic absorption and may even cause death' (Scharlieb, Straight Talks to Women, p. 140). 'The entirely successful contraceptive, one that would be sure, harmless and simple, has not yet been discovered.' (EBr. III. p. 650) And fortunately so. 'That there should be no known contraceptive which does not in some way make the complete happiness of merital intercourse, will perhaps be regarded by some as a very wise dispensation of Providence' (Ludovici, The Woman, p. 203). One may of course live in continence, if he so likes, but there is no sense and no meaning in exercising the act of generation and yet frustrating its natural outcome. The modern medical expert while recognizing that 'there are women whose health, happiness and efficiency, are being impaired by too frequent pregnancies,' is forced to admit that the havoc these artificial practices, so much in vogue, cause is palpable. Dr. Mary Scharlieb, the eminent lady doctor, after long and elaborate investigations has arrived at the following conclusions: 'From every point of view, the welfare of individual, the safety of the empire and the purity of our homes, it is evidently most desirable that the use of artificial contraceptives should cease. There is something peculiarly unnatural and nauseous in their use——something essentially destructive of the joy and spontaneity characteristic of wedded love. Great risks to health and happiness are involved in their use.' (Straight Talks to Women, pp. 167-168)

243. (amidst reflective vigil and standing up in the night).

244. i. e., until the true dawn is distinguished from the false one. الخيط الابيض and الخيط الاسود in the context mean 'the true dawn, and the false dawn; or the whiteness of the dawn, and the blackness of night.' (LL)

245. (which coincides with the setting of the sun). The days should be passed, so far as possible, in acts of service to God and mankind.

246. i. e., with your wives.

247. (as a matter of special devotion, nor have anything to do with them lustfully). It is an act of great merit, though not obligatory, following the practice of the Prophet himself, to cut oneself off from all mundane affairs, during the last ten days of Ramadhān, regarded as specially sacred, while staying day and night in a mosque and occupied with pious exercises. This is technically known as 'I'tikāf, or retreat, meaning withholding oneself from the customary exercise of freedom of action in the disposal or management of affairs' (LL).

248. i. e., restrictions set by Allah.

249. (with a view to transgressing them), i. e., do not go beyond these Divine limits even so slightly.

250. i. e., as in this instance.

251. (and commandments).

252. (i. e., for the good of mankind).

253. (and learn to beware of infringing His ordinances).

254. i. e., each other's property.

255. Or 'inquiry'. This puts a stop to all kinds of fraudulent and dishonest dealings in the community.

256. i. e., false and concocted cases; perjured suits. (Th.) The pronoun ها may as well refer to 'substance'. The rendering in that case would be: 'nor convey it unto the judges'.

257. (that you are acting against your conscience). 'In these words we have another example of the way in which Muhammad urged upon his followers the duty of dealing justly with each other'. (Roberts, Social laws of the Qoran, p. 108). اولى بها له الى الحاكم means, 'He gave, or presented, or offered, his property to the judge'. And the phrase in the next means, 'And do not give it, or offer it, as a bribe to the judges: or, and do not endeavour to conciliate with it the judges in order that they cut off for you what is the right of others' (LL).

258. (O Prophet!)

259. i. e., concerning the use of their waxing and waning, the meaning of their phases.

260. i. e., for their general benefit and in the exercise of their voluntary legal acts, such as ascertaining and determining the waiting period of divorce. The moon has always been recognized as a 'measure of time,' and in English the very word is derived from the root me-, 'to measure.' At the dawn of history it was the only time-measure, perhaps owing to its rapid motion and the ease with which its position could be located in the sky. 'The period of the moon's monthly changes provides an obvious means of dividing up time into months of thirty days or so. In Babylonia, the year . . . began when the crescent moon was first seen in the spring. The Egyptian year also contained twelve months of thirty days derived from the length of a lunation. The ancient Jewish calendar was of the usual lunar type with twelve months, each of which began with the first visibility of the crescent moon.' (Gregory, Religion in Science and Civilization, p. 101)

261. i. e., to show its season, and for other similar fixed and obligatory acts of devotion reckoned by lunar months. That is all. This strikes at the root of festal rejoicings and sacrifices attending the appearance of the new moon in ancient lunar cults.

262. 'The Arabs had a superstitious custom after they had been at Mecca (in pilgrimage, as it seems), on their return home, not to enter their house by the old door, but to make a hole through the back part for a passage, which practice is here reprehended.' (Sale)

263. (and entering the houses by their doors is not forbidden by Him, so abstaining from it cannot be a form of piety).

264. (in utter disregard of all superstition).

265. (both in this world and the Next). Two entirely distinct, rather mutually destructive, emotions are covered by the same word 'fear.' One is baser, selfish and servile, always arising out of thoughts of danger to self. Fear, in this sense, is negatived in the Qur'ān of all righteous and godly persons, in verses like the following, reiterated again and again :—

'No fear shall come upon them, nor will they grieve.'

But there exists also a noble, higher and disinterested variety of fear, which has its roots not in cowardice or timidity at all but in man's feeling of awe at what his Lord is, and in his contemplating his own utter insignificance and unworthiness. Fear in this sense, attracts; it does not repel. It has the effect of drawing the man closer and closer to his Lord; and he entirely surrenders himself to His will. It is this 'fear of Allah' that is inculcated in a thousand and one ways in the Qur'ān, and is described as the master-key to all success: "Fear Allah that ye may thrive."

266. (O Muslims!)

267. i. e., in the cause of His true Religion; in the cause of truth, justice, equity and humanity. To combat the dark forces of polytheism, superstition, perfidy, irreligion, and religious persecution; and not for the greed of booty or for self-aggrandisement, nor yet to extend the 'sphere of influence' of this country or that. Is the extermination of moral evil, in any sense, an unworthy object of war?

268. (violating the truce they had signed themselves). The Muslims, after having borne with almost superhuman fortitude for years and years untold persecution at the hands of the pagan republic of Makka, are now for the first time enjoined to take to reprisals. 'For full thirteen years the Muslims were subjected to relentless persecutions in Mecca. The Prophet and his followers fled for life to Medina, which is over 150 miles from Mecca, but the enemy would not leave them alone in their refuge. They came to attack them within a year, and the first three great battles were fought in the very locality which will show whether the Prophet was an assailant or defendant.' (Headley, The Original Church of Jesus Christ and Islam, p. 155). The Makkans had signed a truce and were the first to break it. The words 'fight with those who fight against you' clearly show, first, that the Muslims were not the aggressors, and secondly, that those of the enemy who were not actual combatants—children, women, monks, hermits, the aged and the infirm, the maimed, and the like, had nothing at all to fear from the Muslim soldiery.

It was in the light of this express divine injunction that the great Abu Bakr (of blessed memory), the first Caliph (successor of the Prophet), charged his troops in Syria, 'not to mutilate the dead, nor to slay old men, women, and children, nor to cut down fruit-trees, nor to kill cattle unless they were needed for food; and these humane precepts served like a code of laws of war during the career of Mohammadan conquest.' (Bosworth Smith, op. cit., p. 185). Has not Islām thus, in prescribing war against those who break God's laws, challenge His righteous authority, and fill the world with violence and injustice, made every concession short of the impossible? Has any code of military ethics been so chivalrous, so humane, and so tender towards the enemy? 'The moral tone adopted by the Caliph Abu Bakr, in his instructions to the Syrian army, was,' says a modern Christian historian, 'so unlike the principles of the Roman government, that it must have commanded profound attention from a subject people . . . Such a proclamation announced to Jews and Christians' sentiments of justice and principles of toleration which neither Roman emperors nor orthodox bishops had ever adopted as the rule of their conduct.' (Finlay, Greece Under the Romans, pp. 367-368)

269. i. e., do not violate the truce yourselves; honour your word (Th.); do not step beyond the limits of the law. Compare and contrast the war laws of the Bible:—'And they stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees.' (2 Ki. 3; 25) 'For six months did Joab remain there with all Israel, until he had cut off every male in Edom.' (1. Ki. 11 : 16): 'Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass.' (1. Sa. 15 : 3)

270. (of the Divine command by stepping beyond its limits).

وَالْفِتْنَةُ اَشَدُّ مِنَ الْقَتْلِ وَلَا تُقٰتِلُوْهُمْ عِنْدَ الْمَسْجِدِ الْحَرَامِ حَتّٰى يُقٰتِلُوْكُمْ فِيْهِ فَاِنْ قٰتَلُوْكُمْ فَاقْتُلُوْهُمْ كَذٰلِكَ

191. (و اقتلوهم . . . الكفرين) And kill them[271] wherever you come upon them,[272] and drive them out whence they drove you out; and mischief[273] is more grievous[274] than bloodshed. And do not fight them near the Sacred Mosque unless they fight you therein, but if they do fight you there,[275] then kill them. That is the recompense of the infidels.[276]

192. (فان . . . رحيم) Then if they desist,[277] then[278] surely Allah is Forgiver,[279] Merciful.[280]

193. (و قتلوهم . . . الظلمين) And fight them until there is no more mischief,[281] and the obedience[282] is to Allah.[283] So if they desist[284] then there is to be no violence save against the ungodly[285].

194. (الشهر الحرام . . . مع المتقين) A sacred[286] month is in exchange for a sacred month[287]: these sacredness are in return.[288] Whoso therefore offers violence to you,[289] offer violence to him the like of his violence to you[290] and fear Allah,[291] and know that Allah is with the God-fearing.[292]

195. (و انفقوا . . . والمحسنين) And spend in the way of Allah,[293] and do not cast yourselves with your hands in perdition,[294] and do well,[295] surely Allah loves the well-doers.[296]

---

271. i. e., those who violated the truce and took up arms to extirpate both the Muslims and Islām.

272. (during the period of belligerency).

273. (of irreligion and impiety). The word covers, on the part of the Makkans, a number of other such crimes over and above the grossest forms of idolatry, as treachery, perfidy, wanton persecution of the Muslims, and aggression in fighting.

274. i. e., causing greater harm; leading to graver consequences. There are evils far worse than war; and it is to combat manfully these greater evils that war is allowed, and sometimes enjoined in Islām. Even the Jains, the religious pacifists of India, to whom all forms of violence are repugnant, hold that 'wars are designed by the Mysterious Unseen for bringing the recalcitrant peoples to book.'

275. (then and there). The inviolability of the Ka'ba and its precincts is to be kept intact, except under the pressure of sheer self-defence.

276. (who have no scruple even in violating the sanctity of the Ka'ba).

277. (from infidelity even now, and repent). Once the aggressive infidels have started war it is not their mere laying down of arms that can terminate it, but the giving up of infidelity which alone can ensure salvation implied in the words, 'Forgiving' and 'Merciful.'

278. (their Islām is not to be held as of no account).

279. So He will forgive their infidelity in the past.

280. So he will bestow on them further favours.

281. (of idolatry), i. e., until the pagans' power for mischief is entirely crushed, and the suzerainty of Islām is established.

282. دين is primarily 'Obedience,' not 'religion.' And الدين لله means Obedience to, and service of God.' (LL)

283. Islām is the religion wholly Allah's. So the injunction in effect is this: fight these groups of infidels until they surrender to the authority of Islām. Idolatry in Arabia must be extirpated and the religion of God be established. 'Muslims have certainly no more reason to be ashamed of the use of force during their past history than the nations of the West who forcibly suppress immoral traffic in women, drug traffic, exploitation of labour or the cremation of widows on the funeral pyres of their husbands . . . The fact remains that the sword of Islam has very considerably contributed to the moral and material progress of mankind; and it is not for Muslims to apologise for their ancestors who took it up in the service of humanity.' (ASB. I, p. 79)

284. (from infidelity).

285. i. e., those who still persist in their wrong-doing.

286. (wherein it is unlawful to make war). The ancient Arabs held four months in the year, Muharram, Rajab, Zul-Qa'da and Zul-Hijja, as sacred, during which they held it unlawful to wage war.

287. i. e., is so held only in reprisal. The Muslims were in danger of being attacked by the Makkans in the sacred month of Zul-Qa'da. Here they are bidden to make reprisals, if needful, in that very season, as the sacredness of months is only reciprocal.

288. i. e., governed by the law of returning like for like.

289. (in this season, impoverishing its sanctity).

290. i. e., pay him in the same coin; requite him.

291. (lest you may exceed the proper limits of the law).

292. i. e., those who are strictly regardful of their duties towards man and God; men of true piety.

293. i. e., in the wars of religion; in ways that lead to God.

294. (by withholding your contributions to the national funds at the time you are attacked by the enemy). The address is to the Muslim community collectively. To create in mind a disinclination to Jihad or the obligatory religious war, and to fail to contribute to its funds, is to court national disaster, and to prepare the way for national suicide. According to some ب is here redundant, and ايديكم means انفسكم. So the rendering would be 'And cast ye not yourselves to predition.' According to others انفسكم is understood, and the rendering would be as adopted in the text.

295. i. e., whatever good you do, do it with perfectly pure motives, whatever of your substance, for instance, you wish to contribute, do it cheerfully and not half-heartedly.

296. The conception of God in Islām is not that of an inert, passive, First Cause, doing nothing and liking and disliking nothing. The God of Islām actively likes, loves and rewards.

196. (و اتموا . . . العقاب) And fulfil the Hajj[297] and 'Umra[298] for Allah.[299] And if you be besieged,[300] send whatever offering[301] you can afford,[302] and shave not your heads[303] until the offering reaches its destination.[304] Then whoso of you is ill or has hurt in his head[305] for him is an expiation by fasting[306] or alms[307] or a rite [308] Then when you are secure,[309] whoso combines 'Umra with Hajj for him[310] is whatever offering is easy. And whoso[311] cannot afford[312] then the expiation is a fast of three days during the Hajj[313] and of seven when you return;[314] these are ten days[315] complete. This[316] is for him whose family does not dwell near the Sacred Mosque [317] And fear Allah, and know that surely Allah is Stern in chastising.[318]

297. 'This great international gathering, attended by thousands of pilgrims every year, not only from adjacent countries but from such distant places as China, Senegal, or Cape Town, is an impressive manifestation of the unity of the Muslim world, and serves to keep alive the feeling of brotherhood in Islām. The same thought is impressed upon those Muslims who have been unable themselves to make the pilgrimage, in that on the very same day in which the sacrifices are being performed outside the city of Mecca, the faithful in every other part of the world celebrate the Feast of Sacrifice in a similar fashion, and are thus linked by bonds of sympathy with their more fortunate brethren in the sacred city." (Arnold, The Islamic Faith, p. 37). 'The pilgrimage proved in the end a great aid in unification, for the men of every tribe and race met at Mecca with a common purpose, and in a common worship, and a feeling of brotherhood could not but be engendered in the process.' (Denison, op. cit., p. 275) 'Down through the ages this institution has continued to serve as the major unifying influence in Islam and the most effective common bond among the diverse believers. It rendered almost every capable Moslem perforce a traveller for once in his life-time. The socializing influence of such a gathering of the brotherhood of believers from the four quarters of the earth is hard to over-estimate. It afforded opportunity for Negroes, Berbers, Chinese, Persians, Syrians, Turks, Arabs—rich and poor, high and low—to fraternize and meet together on the common ground of faith.' (Hitti, op. cit., p. 136).

298. 'Umra is a respectful visit to Ka'ba that may be performed, unlike Hajj, at any time of the year, with fewer rites and ceremonies than Hajj proper. While the Hajj is obligatory on every Muslim who possesses the means necessary for the journey, 'Umra is only an act of additional merit. See n. 89 above.

299. i. e., to win His approval, with pure motives, and with due observance of all conditions, إتمام الحج according to some means that the money, or the like that one expends in performing the pilgrimage, should be lawfully obtained, and that one should refrain from doing what God has forbidden.' (LL)

300. (either by disease or enemy) إحصار signifies 'being prevented from attending the religious rites and ceremonies of pilgrimage, by disease, or the like.' (LL)

301. (to be slaughtered in the sacred precincts of Makka). This animal sacrifice (usually a goat or a sheep) is an important rite in the performance of pilgrimage.

302. (to obtain).

303. (which marks the completion of the Hajj rites and ceremonies). Shaving of the head is, in Islām, an act of rejoicing rather than a mourning rite as among the Hindus and other polytheistic nations.

304. i. e., within the sacred precincts known as Haram.

305. (and is therefore obliged to shave his head before the prescribed time).

306. (for three days).

307. i. e., the feeding of six paupers.

308. i. e., the offering of one goat at least.

309. (either after the removal of danger, or without encountering it at all).

310. i. e., for such persons alone as combine 'Umra (the lesser pilgrimage) with Hajj (the greater pilgrimage) and not for those who perform either of them singly.

311. (of them; of those who combine the two devotions).

312. (any offering at all).

313. The last date of which period is the 9th of Zul-Hijja.

314. i. e., when all the rites of Hajj are terminated, and is usually the time for return, whether one actually returns or stays on).

315. (of fasting).

316. i. e., this combination of the two devotions.

317. i. e., this combination of the two devotions is allowable only to those who are foreigners, and not residents within the sacred area or Haram.

318. (those who wantonly violate the Divine law).

SECTION 25

197. (الحج . . . الا لباب) The season of Hajj is the months known;[319] so whoever enjoins upon himself the Hajj therein[320] there is[321] to be no lewdness[322] nor wickedness nor disputing during the Hajj;[323] and whatever good you do Allah shall know it.[324] And take provision for the journey;[325] surely the best provision is piety,[326] and fear Me, O men of understanding:

198. (ليس . . . ا لظالين) No fault it is in you if you seek grace from your Lord[327] by trading. Then when you press on from 'Arafat[328] remember Allah near the sacred monument.[329] Remember Him as He has guided you,[330] and you were before of those astray.

199. (ثم . . . رحيم) Then press[331] on from where the other people press on, and ask forgiveness of Allah;[332] surely Allah is Forgiving,[333] Merciful.[334]

200. (فاذا . . . خلاق) And when you have completed your rites,[335] remember Allah as you remember your fathers[336] or with a stronger remembrance.[337] And of mankind there are some who say: 'our Lord: give us[338] our portion in the world';[339] and for such there shall be no portion in the Hereafter.

201. (و منهم . . . النار) And of them there are some who say: 'our Lord! give us good[340] in the world and good in the Hereafter,[341] and save us from torment of the Fire'.[342]

---

319. i. e., Shawwāl, Zul-Qa'da, and the first ten days of Zul-Hijja.

320. (and wears accordingly the Ihrām, or the seamless, unsewn robe of the pilgrims).

321. (to be for him).

322. (even in language; much less in deed). The injunction is in striking contrast with the absolutely lewd and obscene rites and practices in the pre-Islamic hajj, and also with the conditions prevailing in the modern festivals and large religious gatherings of the polytheistic peoples.

323. (the pilgrim, on the other hand, should constantly occupy himself with good deeds).

324. (and shall reward you accordingly).

325. (when proceeding to Makka, on pilgrimage). The pagans thought it an act of great merit and piety to go to Makka, unprovided for, in a state of penury.

326. 'from begging' (Th.) or 'piety.'

327. (and an increase in your prosperity by trading during the pilgrimage). The economic benefits, accruing from an injunction like this, both to the individual and to the community, are too obvious to need any comment.

328. (in the return journey, after making the prescribed stay there). 'Arafāt is a plain, miles wide, round a small 'Hill of Mercy' rising only about 200 feet above the adjoining plain, about 12 miles from Makka on the road to Tāif. It is here that the essential ceremony of the Hajj, called وقوف or 'standing' has to be performed on the 9th of Zul-Hijja, any time from mid-day till evening. 'The plain of 'Arafāt spreads southwards from the hill of 'Arafāt and is bounded on the east by the lofty mountain chain of Tāif. It is covered by a low growth of mimosa plants, and is filled with life only on one day of the year (9 Dhu'l-Hidjdja) when the pilgrims pitch their camps for the celebration of the prescribed wukūf.' (EI. I. p. 418)

329. 'Near the sacred monument' means the ground bordering on it in Muzdalfa, where, immediately after the return from 'Arafāt in the evening of the 9th Zul-Hijja night prayer is said, and night is spent.

330. (and not as suits your fancy). Note the insistence which the injunction to 'remember God' receives in connection with the Hajj ceremonies.

331. (all of you, not excluding the Quraish). The conceited clan of the Quraish in the pre-Islamic days considered it beneath their dignity to proceed to 'Arafāt, and used to stay on in Muzdalfa.

332. In addition to the repeated commands to remember God, here is a command to ask His forgiveness. Can any pilgrimage be more purificatory ?

333. (so He will forgive sins when one asks His forgiveness).

334. (so He will show mercy to the sinner when he is penitent).

335. 'The foremost goal of this pilgrimage is the assembling of Muslims from different parts of the world. They shall learn to understand one another and know the needs of Muslim countries other than their own. And this is the practical method of promoting the great Commonwealth of Islam, the brotherhood of men bound together by the same ideal of devotion to God, whose Oneness, as also the unity of all Muslims, are symbolised in the qiblah of Mecca.' (ASB. I. p. 40)

336. i. e., glorify God as you used to glorify the deeds of your forefathers in the pagan days. This is for the third time that the injunction to 'remember God' is reiterated.

337. This is how Islām succeeded in effecting far-reaching reforms, and metamorphosed morally and spiritually the entire Arab nation. There is a clear hint in the verse that our association with our God should be at least as lively and as realistic as with our parents.

338. (i. e. our gifts).

339. Some of the pagan Arabs did not believe in the Resurrection and the Hereafter; so their prayers while performing the pilgrimage were confined to the gifts of this world.

340. i. e., whatever is approved of by Thee; whatever is good in Thy sight; whatever is pleasing to Thee. (Th.)

341. Note the object desired and sought in prayer is not 'the world' at all, but 'good', and 'good' only in whatsoever it may be found—whether in this world or in the Next. (Th.) Contrast with this the Christian concept embodied in the reported saying of the Christ:—'My kingdom is not of this world.' (Jn. 18: 36)

342. An ideal prayer, favourite of the holy Prophet, combining in two brief sentences all the blessings of this world and the Next. And this has led to the perplexed remark of a Christian writer:—'This is one of the most puzzling paradoxes in Islam. As to recognizing, using and enjoying this world, Islam is a most practical religion, but on its doctrine of salvation, it is absolutely and entirely other-worldly.' (Macdonald, Religious Life and Attitude in Islam, p. 43.)

202. (أولئك . . . الحساب) These are the ones for whom there will be a share[343] for what they have earned,[344] and Allah is Swift at reckoning.

203. (و اذكروا . . . تحشرون) And remember Allah on the days numbered.[345] Then whoso hastens[346] away even in two days,[347] on him is no sin, and whoso stays on,[348] on him is no sin,[349] —this for him who fears God[350] And fear Allah,[351] and know that to Him you will be gathered

204 (و من . . . الخصام) And of mankind is he[352] whose discourse for the purpose of this world[353] thou admirest[354] and he takes Allah to witness[355] as to what is in his heart, while he is the most contentious of opponents.[356]

205. (و اذا . . . الفساد) And when he turns away he speeds through the land so that he may make mischief therein and destroy the tillage and the stock.[357] And Allah approves not mischief.

206. (و اذا . . . المهاد) And when he is told : 'fear Allah', arrogance[358] prompts him to sin Enough for him is Hell : surely an ill resort !

207. (و من . . . بالعباد) And of mankind is he[359] who sells his life seeking the pleasure of Allah, and Allah is Tender to His servants.[360]

343. (in both the worlds).

344. (and for which they have longed).

345. i e., on the 10th, 11th and 12th of Zul-Hijja, in Minā, a suburb of Makka about 3 miles, due north. Note that the injunction to remember God is reiterated once more.

346. (to Makka).

347. i. e., after only two days' stay in Minā.

348. i. e., stays on for the third day in Minā.

349. (as both procedures are equally allowable).

350. i. e., all these injunctions are for those who are regardful of their duties to God ; only the God-fearing will profit by them.

351. i. e., rest assured.

352. i. e., the hypocrite.

353. i. e., with a view to dissembling his unbelief.
354. (O Prophet ! for its fair words).
355. (falsely all the while).
356. (of God).
357. (by setting fire to somebody's corn, or by killing his neighbour's asses). So great is his love of mischief and wickedness, and so anti-social are his proclivities !
358. i. e., false sense of self-respect or prestige.
359. i. e., the true believer.
360. (having solicitude, senstive regard and compassionate care for them).

208. (يا يها . . . مبين) O you who believe! enter into Islam[361] wholly,[362] and do not follow the foot-steps of Satan;[363] surely he is to you an enemy manifest.[364]

209. (فان . . . حكيم) Then if you slip[365] after what has come to you of the evidences, know that Allah is Mighty,[366] Wise.[367]

210. (هل . . . الامور) Do they[368] await only that Allah shall come to them in the shadows of the clouds[369] and also the angels,[370] and the affair is already decreed?[371] And to Allah are all affairs returned.[372]

SECTION 26

211. (سل . . . العقاب) Ask thou[373] the Children of Isra'il, how many a manifest sign[374] We brought to them.[375] And whoso alters the favour of Allah[376] after it has come to him,[377] then surely Allah is Stern in chastising.[378]

212. (زين . . . حساب) Fair-seeming is made the life of this world[379] to those who disbelieve, and they scoff at those who believe, whereas those who fear God shall be above them[380] on the Day of Judgment. And Allah provides[381] whom[382] He will without measure.[383]

361. سلم literally is 'peace, reconciliation, self-resignation or submission.' And السلم with the definite article, is synonymous with الاسلام as meaning the religion of the Muslims; because it is a religion of self-resignation, or submission.' (LL)

362. i. e. accept, and act on, the law of Islām in its every little detail. 'Islām embraces life in its totality. It takes World and Hereafter, soul and body, individual and society, equally into consideration.' (Muhammad Asad, Islam on the Crossroads, pp. 119-120). It is, to use a word of recent origin, totalitarian. 'By a million roots,' says a Christian observer, 'penetrating every phase of life, all of them with religious significance, it is able to maintain its hold upon the life of the Moslem peoples.' The secular and the religious, the material and the spiritual are not separated in the all-inclusive system of Islām. Whatever may be true of other faiths and creeds, in Islām religion is the very breath of life; it matters above everything; it is the mainspring of a Muslim's conduct. The address is to the new converts from Judaism in particular.

363. (by accepting the code of Islām only in part). Islām calls for the complete transformation of personality; and a convert to Islām must be renewed in every corner of his being.

364. (suggesting innovations and modification in God's perfect scheme of laws and ordinances). The exhortation is primarily addressed to such Jewish and Arab converts as had not adopted all the rites and customs of the new religion and had still scruples about some of them.

365. (from the true path).

366. i. e., Able to inflict any punishment any moment.

367. (Who punishes only at the right moment).

368. i. e., the infidels.

369. The reference is to the anthropomorphic conception of the Jews who held the clouds as the chariot of God. Cf. the Bible:—'Bless the Lord, O my soul . . . . . Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters: who maketh the clouds his chariot: who walketh upon the wings of the wind.' (Ps. 104; 1, 3). 'Behold, the Lord rideth upon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt.' (Is. 19: 1).

370. (as the ministers of His judgment).

371. The meaning is: Do they await the hour when repentance will not avail and declaration of belief will not benefit ?

372. (for requital and judgment).

373. (O Prophet!)

374. (of Our special favour).

375. (as also how uniformly they have maintained their attitude of rebellion).

376. To alter the favours of Allah is to misuse His gifts, and instead of profiting by His clear signs and obtaining guidance from them, to pervert and misinterpret them deliberately.

377. (and they are, in many instances, endowed with the cherished possessions of this world).

378. (both in this world and the Next). 'The fear of incurring this punishment is one of the reasons why Muslims have been so scrupulously careful to preserve the text of the Qurān.' (Rev. E. M. Wherry).

379. (with abundance).

380. (in rank and station).

381. (with sustenance, and in abundance) in accordance with His universal plan.

382. (of His creatures).

383. (so mere material prosperity is no criterion of happiness, and an exuberance of wealth is by no means a measure of moral worth, whether of individuals or of communities and nations).

مبشرين ومنذرين وأنزل معهم الكتب بالحق ليحكم بين الناس فيما اختلفوا فيه وما اختلف
فيه إلا الذين أوتوه من بعد ما جاءتهم البينت بغيا بينهم فهدى الله الذين آمنوا لما اختلفوا فيه
من الحق بإذنه والله يهدي من يشاء إلى صراط مستقيم ۝ أم حسبتم أن تدخلوا الجنة ولما
يأتكم مثل الذين خلوا من قبلكم مستهم البأساء والضراء وزلزلوا حتى يقول الرسول والذين
آمنوا معه متى نصر الله ألا إن نصر الله قريب ۝ يسئلونك ماذا ينفقون قل ما أنفقتم من خير
فللوالدين والأقربين واليتمى والمسكين

213. (كان . . . مستقيم) Mankind was one community[384] thereafter[385] Allah raised prophets[386] as bearers of glad tidings[387] and warners,[388] and He sent down with them the Book[389] with truth so that He may judge[390] between mankind respecting what they disputed. And none disputed thereof[391] save those to whom it[392] was given[393] after the evidences had come to them,[394] out of spite among themselves.[395] Then Allah guided those who believed in the truth of that respecting which they[396] disputed, by His leave.[397] Allah guides whom He will to a path straight.

214. (ام . . . قريب) Do you[398] imagine that you will enter the Garden[399] while yet there has not come upon you the like of what came upon those who have passed away before you?[400] There touched them adversity and distress, and so shaken were they,[401] that even their Messenger[402] and those who believed with him said:[403] 'when comes the help of Allah?'[404] Lo! surely Allah's help is nigh.[405]

384. (originally, following the one true religion). This implies that originally there was but one religion in the world—the religion of Monotheism. Contrary to the conclusions arrived at by an older generation of scientists and pseudo-scientists, recent discoveries both in Archæology and Anthropology have proved that monotheism, not polytheism, was the religion of the oldest races of mankind. 'The evidence of Anthropology,' says a leading archæologist of the day, Sir Charles Marston, 'will be cited in these columns to prove that the original religion of the early races was actually Monotheism or something very like it.' (The Bible is True, p. 25) 'The theory of the evolution of Religion is contradicted by the evidence of both Archæology and Anthropology.' (p. 29) 'This is the very careful and deliberate conclusion of Dr. Langdon, Professor of Assyriology at Oxford, probably the greatest living authority on cuneiform literature . . . . . As a result of his excavations at Kish, Dr. Langdon writes: "In my opinion, the history of the oldest religion of man is a rapid decline from monotheism to extreme polytheism and wide-spread belief in evil spirits. It is in a very true sense the history of the fall of man." (pp. 58, 61) 'Thus is the evidence, from those most ancient libraries of cuneiform tablets, that Monotheism was the original religion. And there is confirmation of this great fact from other sources, especially from the Science of Anthropology. Along with this is the evidence of a universal belief in a Future Life.' (p. 265) 'I may fail to carry conviction in concluding that, both in Sumerian and Semitic religions, monotheism preceded polytheism and belief in good and evil spirits. The evidence and reasons for this conclusion, so contrary to accepted and current views have been set down with care and with the perception of adverse criticism. It is, I trust, the conclusion of knowledge and not of audacious preconception.' (Langdon, Semitic Mythology, Introduction, p. xviii). See also p. ix. n. 280 : xxv. n. 45.

385. i. e., when self-interest and iniquity had created schisms and divisions and the Divine truth had been obscured. 'Monotheism in the Old Testament, and Islamic Monotheism, were not the results of direct evolution from polytheism. It was a false conception of the history of religions to suppose that polytheism was necessarily connected with low types of culture. In fact polytheism was characteristic of the greatest cultures of antiquity, but it grew out of monotheism, and was only a theological interpretation of primitive monotheism.' (Dr. Langdon, quoted in Marston's Bible Comes Alive, p. 26). See also Schmidt's Origin and Growth of Religion.

386. (to unite the people on the path of truth).

387. (to the believers).

388. (to the rejecters).

389. 'Book,' singular in form, is here plural in meaning, denoting as a generic noun, all Divine Books.

390. (thereby : with the Divine Book as the criterion).

391. i. e., concerning the very Scriptures themselves.

392. i. e., the Book.

393. i. e., religious leaders and men of the priestly class who are the first and foremost custodians of all Scriptures.

394. (and they had fully understood them. This makes their offence all the more serious.

395. (and not out of any honest intellectual difference of opinion). This mutual spite and strife is always caused by scramble for wealth and power, which in its turn is the direct outcome of materialism or love for this world. (Th.).

396. i. e., the rejecters of faith.

397. (and the believers are thus spared the distraction caused by doubts and disputations).

398. (O Muslims!) The words are primarily addressed to the Makkan emigrants suffering grievously from poverty and hunger.

399. (without any toil or trial).

400. Entry into Heaven presupposes some measure of suffering—maybe in certain cases, exceedingly slight—either mental or physical in this world. The higher one's spiritual ambitions, the greater the trials and tribulations one is expected to undergo. And none could be greedier of spiritual advancement than the Muslims of the Prophet's time, his 'companions.' Hence their readiness to undergo the hardest afflictions in the service of God's religion.

401. Cf. the Bible:—'The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold; but the Lord trieth the hearts.' (Pr. 17-3) 'Many are the afflictions of the righteous' (Ps. 34: 19). 'We must through much tribulation enter the kingdom of God.' (Ac. 14: 22)

402. (of his time).

403. (overwhelmed with sorrow and gloom).

404. (which is promised to us). This is how they prayed. Not that they were at all sceptical of the arrival of Divine assistance but its precise time being not revealed to them, they naturally began to pray for it with extreme fervour. (Th.).

405. This is how their prayer was answered. The Muslims of the holy Prophet's time are heartened thereby with the approaching triumph of their cause.

215. (يسئلو نك . . . عليم) They[406] ask thee[407] as to how[408] they will spend. Say thou : 'whatever you spend of wealth,[409] let it be for parents and kindred and orphans and the needy and the wayfarer,[410] and whatever good you do, surely Allah is Knower thereof.[411]

216. (كتب . . . تعلمون) Ordained for you is fighting,[412] abhorrent as it may be to you.[413] Haply you abhor a thing while it is good for you,[414] and haply you desire a thing, while it is bad for you. Allah knows[415] and you do not know.[416]

---

406. i. e., some of the Muslims.

407. (O Prophet !)

408. i. e., as to the amount what, and the occasion when. ماذا is sometimes, as here, synonymous with الذى

409. (according to your means). خير is here 'wealth' or 'substance,' and not 'good' as misinterpreted by several translators of the Qur'ān.

410. A perfectly natural and rational order to beneficence, descending from the parents and near relatives to strangers, and taking in its fold every conceivable case of need.

411. (and shall reward accordingly).

412. War, it has been truly said, is sanctioned by the law of nature—the constitution of man and the constitution of society—and is at times a biological and sociological necessity. Islām, the ideal practical religion, has allowed it, but only in cases of sheer necessity. In Christianity, 'the coming Day of the Lord is associated with terrible wars . . . In the Epistles, St. Paul shows in a dozen references to a soldier's career that he looked at it with interest and even with sympathy.' (DB. IV p. 895) And speaking historically, the contrast, says a Christian writer, between the Christian and the Muslim warriors 'has not been so sharp as is often supposed. The Saxon wars of Charles the Great were avowedly religious wars, and differed chiefly from the Syrian wars of Omar and of Ali . . . in that they were much more protracted and vastly less successful.' (Bosworth Smith, op. cit, pp. 184-85) See n. 267 ff. above.

413. Persecuted, harassed, afflicted, poverty-ridden, exiled, and small in numbers as the Muslims were at the time of the enactment of warfare, it was but natural that they were none too fond of crossing swords with the mighty forces that had conspired for their extirpation. Nothing short of express and emphatic Divine command could urge them on to the field of battle. And yet the Islamic Jihāds are declared to be "designed" by the Prophet "to satisfy his discontented adherents by an accession of plunder!" (Margoliouth). Such is this European scholar's love of veracity! Such is his wonderful reading of history!

414. The reluctance on the part of Muslims, in some instances, may be due to the fact that the infidels they were asked to fight against, were their own relatives and fellow-townsmen.

415. (the true inwardness of everything and its full effects).

416. (so the safest and wisest course for you is to follow implicity the statutes of God).

وَأُولٰٓئِكَ أَصْحٰبُ النَّارِ ۖ هُمْ فِيهَا خٰلِدُونَ ۝ إِنَّ الَّذِينَ اٰمَنُوا وَالَّذِينَ هَاجَرُوا وَجٰهَدُوا فِى سَبِيلِ

SECTION 27

217. (يسئلونك . . . خلدون) They ask thee[417] of the sacred month,[418] of fighting therein. Say thou : 'fighting therein[419] is grievous ;[420] but hindering people[421] from the way of Allah and disbelief in Him and in the sanctity of the Sacred Mosque[422] and driving out its dwellers therefrom[423] are more grievous[424] with Allah,[425] and mischief[426] is far more grievous[427] than blood-shed.[428] And they will not cease fighting you with a view to making you apostatize from your religion, if they could.[429] And he who among you apostatizes[430] from his faith and dies while he is an infidel,—then these are the very ones whose works shall be of no effect[431] in this world and the Hereafter,[432] and they shall be the inmates of the Fire. Therein they shall be abiders.

218. (ان . . . رحيم) Surely those who have believed and those who have emigrated[433] and have striven hard in the way of Allah[434] all these hope for the mercy of Allah. And Allah is Forgiving,[435] Merciful.[436]

219. (يسئلونك . . . تتفكرون) They ask thee[437] of wine[438] and gambling.[439] say thou : 'in both is a great sin[440] and some benefit for men,[441] but the sin of them is greater than their benefit'.[442] And they ask thee as to what they shall spend.[443] Say thou : 'redundant portion'.[444] Thus does Allah expound to you His commandments so that you may ponder—[445]

220. (فى . . . حكيم) On this world[446] and the Hereafter. And they[447] ask thee[448] of orphans.[449] Say thou : 'to set right affair for them[450] is best.[451] If you mix with them,[452] then they are your brethren ;[453] Allah knows the foul-dealer[454] from the fair-dealer.[455] And had Allah so willed, He could have afflicted you;[456] surely Allah is Mighty,[457] Wise.[458]

---

417. (O Prophet !)
418. i. e., Rajab, one of the four months held sacred by the Arabs.
419. (knowingly), i. e. knowing it to be the month of Rajab.

420. (which sin no Muslim has been guilty of). The pagans had charged a certain Muslim with killing a pagan on the 1st of Rajab. The Muslim's defence, perfectly sound, was that he took the day to be the last date of the preceding month, and did not know that the month of Rajab had commenced.

421. (by subjecting them to the bitterest persecution).

422. (by planting images and idols in the sacred Ka'ba) The words المسجد الحرام are grammatically coupled with the pronoun ه in به and not with سبيل الله

423. (in a most cruel and heartless way). The pronoun in اهله refers to المسجد and not to الله The Prophet and the believers alone were competent to dwell within the sacred precincts.

424. (than the accidental slaying of a pagan).

425. (did it lie, then, in the mouth of pagans, who cared neither for the sanctity of the sacred months nor for that of the sacred territory, and respected neither human life nor property, wherever the terrible persecution and unspeakable oppression of the converts to Islām was concerned, to seek refuge in the sanctity of the 'sacred month ?').

426. (in its effects).

427. (particular and accidental).

428. See nn. 273 and 274 above. So the slaughter that Islām enjoins is to end all slaughter, terrorism, and moral disruption. And there is all the difference in the world between the force that is used to stop war and the force that is used to make war. But in the words of a present-day Christian writer: 'We might as well say that the bludgeon of the policeman and the gun of the gangster are equally criminal.' (A. G. Gardiner)

429. This pictures the furious zeal of anti-Islamic forces of the time. 'The general war of extermination' was certainly organised and started, but not against the infidels, as Palmer imagines in ostensible innocence. It was organised and started by them against Islām.

430. In the law of Moses, apostasy was punishable with death. 'If thy brother . . . . entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, ... thou shalt surely kill him; . . . . . And thou shalt stone him with stones, that he die.' (Dt. 13 : 6-10)

And in Christianity, 'Wilful apostasy was, of course, an inexpiable offence, and ranked with murder and adultery.' (ERE, I, p. 623)

431. (as rebellion in the end naturally annuls all previous deeds of loyalty and virtue).

432. (in obvious consequence of their desertion of the true faith). In Islām, the penalty of apostasy as an offence both against the religion and the Islamic State is death, as ordained in the traditions of the Prophet.

433. (from the territory of the infidels to a place of refuge on account of religious persecution, and in pursuance of their duty to God).

434. جہاد as a term of Islamic law, is readiness to secrifice life and possessions for the cause of Islām. Literally, it is 'the using, or exerting one's utmost power, efforts, endeavours, or ability, in contending with an object of disapprobation!' (LL).

435. (so He shall forgive accidental mistakes).

436. (so He shall reward them for their true faith and forced exile).

437. (O Prophet!)

438. خمر is 'any intoxicating thing, that clouds or obscures (lit. covers) the intellect,' and 'has a common application to intoxicating compressed of juice of anything.' (LL) So the term 'wine' here is a synonym for all intoxicating drinks. The Jews of the Prophet's time were hard hit by the Qur'anic 'Prohibition' since the liquor trade was largely in their hands. And it is amusing to find a modern representative of that worthy race with pretension to Islamic learning and scholarship, narrate the incident with bewailing and sneering ill-concealed:—'When the revelation came, zealous followers went round the houses of the Moslems and emptied their vessels of all liquor which was supposed to be intoxicating, in many cases breaking the vessels themselves; and trading Moslems who brought wine home from Syria after this event were compelled to pour their earnings away; nor was milder treatment meted out to those orphans whose property had been invested by their guardians in wine. The prohibition was extended to vinegar made of wine and a categorical denial was given to the suggestion that wine had medicinal value.' (Margoliouth, Mohammad, p. 283) See also P. VII. nn. 31, 38.

439. میسر originally 'the game, or play, with unfeathered and headless arrows' is, in its wider acceptance, as here, any game of hazard; or play of stakes, or wagers, so that even the game of children with walnuts is included under this name by Mujāhid.' (LL) It may shortly be defined as wagering money or other valuable things upon the outcome of an event, or making money on some chance. The diffusion, both in the past and present, of the practice of gambling may be gauged from a persual of the following:—'Games of chance are as old and as widespread as humanity . . . The Greeks already in Homer had their knuckle-bones . . . marked with numbers on four sides to serve as dice . . . . Among the Romans, children played at "heads or tails" with coins . . . . The Israelites used the drawing of lots to ascertain the Divine will in regard to such matters as assignation of lands, choice of an officer, determining the rotation of office or to identify an offender . . . . The gambling habit infected the purity of the early Christians. Instruments of gambling are found in their tombs . . . . On the Aryan races gambling has had a special hold." (ERE. VI. pp. 163-164). 'The extent to which gambling prevails at the present time is difficult to assess . . . . Most of it is centred in the horse-racing . . . . On the whole, it may safely be asserted that little short of £100,000,000 changes hands every year in England in connection with gambling transactions.' (ib.) 'Despite laws against gambling in most states and territories, it continued openly in various sections until New York, in 1881-1884, launched an anti-gambling drive which was copied by many other cities. However, gambling is still prevalent under cover.' (CE. III. p. 826) And what shall one say of the Derby horse-race in England and of the Preakness and the Kentucky Derby races in America? See also P. VII, nn. 32, 39.

440. 'Side by side with the betting odds and betting tips, the newspapers record the tragic results on those who yield to the temptation. In 13 years (1895-6 to 1906-7) there were 156 suicides or attempted suicides in England assigned to this case, as well as 719 cases of theft or embezzlement, and 442 bankruptcies.' (ERE. VI. p. 168)

441. 'Alcohol's most useful sphere of action is as a solvent in industrial concerns. It has also some uses as an external application' (Dastur, Alcohol : Its Use and Misuse, p. 109).

442. (and so both of them are to be interdicted). And Islām in fact has indicted both practices as injurious and as conducive only to individual and national demoralisation. The injuction of prohibition has had a lasting influence on the character of the Muslim society, and making allowance for occasional breaches, it has given to the Muslim community a general stamp of sobriety unknown elsewhere. The fact has been acknowledged even by unfriendly observers. 'Mohammadanism may boast of a degree of temperance unknown to any other creed.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 521) And at one of the Church Congresses held in England in recent years, Rev. Canon Issac Taylor has said: 'Islām, above all, is the most powerful total abstinence association in the world, whereas the extension of European trade means the extension of drunkenness and vice, and the degradation of the people.' And as regards gambling, even that inveterate enemy of Islām, D. S. Margoliouth of Oxford, is constrained to admit that the total abolition of this practice in Arabia was the 'most celebrated' of reforms effected by the Prophet (EBr. XVII. p. 407, 11th Ed.).

443. (in voluntary charity). In verse 214 the question related to beneficiaries; here it relates to the amount to be spent.

444. i. e., whatever can be spread without detriment to the necessities of one's own self or of those whose maintenance is obligatory on him.

445. (in the execution of these commands).

446. Note the Qur'anic injunction to reflect on "this world" as well on the "Next." The point is that the more would one ponder on this world, the more would one be able to realise how ephemeral and how unreal it is in character, if pursued as a goal, yet how real and how precious, if viewed as a step towards the Eternal Life !

447. i. e., the guardians. They, as true Muslims, hesitated to have anything to do with the property of their wards on receiving strict orders regarding its inviolability.

448. (O Prophet!)

449. The orphan was not less than the slave the object of the Prophet's peculiar care, for he had been an orphan himself, and what God had done for him, he was anxious, so far as might be, to do for others.' (Bosworth Smith, op cit, p. 251)

450. (and looking after their interests).

451. i. e., the main object to be kept in view in every dealing you may have with them.

452. (in their financial affairs as co-partners).

453. (and so entitled to every love and affection). With equal fairness and considerateness are non-Muslim orphans also to be treated, if they happen to be a Muslim's wards. (Th.)

454. Literally, the corrupter, i. e. he who wrongs the orphans.

455. (so be always fair and considerate in your dealings with them, and beware of your duties towards them). المصلح literally is the 'rectifier.'

456. (by constraining you to do what would be difficult for you to perform, by issuing commandments involving hardship, such as prohibiting co-partnership with your wards altogether).

457. (so He could have issued any injunctions, however burdensome).

458. (so He in His wisdom chose not to issue such commandments as were hard to perform).

خير من مشركة ولو اعجبتكم ولا تنكحوا المشركين حتى يؤمنوا ولعبد مؤمن خير من

221. (ولا . . . يتذكرون) And wed not idolatresses[459] untill they believe ;[460] and assuredly a believing slave-girl is better[461] than an idolatress,[462] although she pleases you.[463] And wed not your women to idolaters untill they believe ; and assuredly a believing slave is better[464] than an idolater,[465] although he pleases you.[466] These[467] call you to the Fire, while Allah calls you to the Garden and to forgiveness, by His leave. And He expounds His commandments to mankind that perhaps they may be admonished.[468]

SECTION 28

222. (و يسئلونك . . . متطهرين) And they ask thee[469] of menstruation.[470] Say thou : 'it is a pollution,[471] so keep away from women during menstruation,[472] and go not in unto them till they have cleansed themselves.[473] Then when they have thoroughly cleansed themselves[474] go in unto them[475] as Allah has directed you.[476] Surely Allah loves the repentants,[477] and He loves the cleansers of themselves.[478]

223. (نساؤكم . . . مومنين) Your women are a tillage[479] for you, then go in unto your tillage[480] as[481] you will, and provide beforehand for your souls.[482] And fear Allah,[483] and know that you are going to meet Him, and give thou glad tidings[484] to the believers.[485]

459. المشركة is literally a woman who gives God an equal, or an 'idolatress,' but here it is used in a wider sense, meaning any woman who is an infidel. (Th.).

460. Cf. the OT:—'Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son. For they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods.' (Dt. 7: 3-4) 'And separate yourselves from the people of the land, and from the strange wives.' (Ez. 10: 11). 'And in the spirit of 'Ezra's ordinance, late religious authorities . . . . interdicted matrimonial connections between Israelites and all Gentiles. This prohibition is the established law of the Talmud and the Rabbinical code.' (Westermarck, Short History of Marriage, pp. 56-57) And the NT : 'Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers ; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness ?' (2 Co. 6 : 14).

461. (a thousand times).

462. (free though she may be).

463. (on account of her wealth or beauty).

464. (a thousand times).

465. (free though he may be).

466. (on account of his rank or substance). These restrictions do not apply to the Muslim marriage with Jew and Christian women. They form a separate class—the people of the Book—and laws concerning them are dealt with in the Surah 'Mā'ida'.

467. (infidel men and women).

468. The danger that a believer, after the intimate relationship of marriage, may be led into the path of infidelity and impiety is ever-present and ever-pressing.

469. (O Prophet !)

470. (and of cohabitation in that period). The phenomenon of menstruation, 'though clearly a normal physiological process . . . yet evidently lies on the borders of pathological change.' (Geddes and Thomson, Evolution of Sex, p. 259).

471. That the mental energy, as well as the muscular strength and dexterity even in the strongest, healthiest, and most determined women are usually somewhat impaired during the menstrual period itself is a fact that is familiar to most women. (Havelock Ellis, Man and Woman, p. 288) 'Even in perfectly healthy woman this affects the whole organism to a more or less marked degree . . . . There is increased nervous tension and greater muscular excitability ; reflex action is more marked and there may be slight twitchings of the legs ; also yawning and stiffness in the neck, and sleep is heavier than usual. There is loss of appetite and a certain amount of digestive and intestinal disturbance with a tendency to flatulence.' (pp. 289-290). 'On the psychic side, even in good health there is another series of phenomena. There is greater impressionability, greater suggestibility, and more or less diminished self-control. Burdach stated that at this time women are more under the influence of mesmerism . . . . It is at this time, in those women who are at all predisposed, that sudden caprices, fits of ill-temper, moods of depression, impulses of jealousy, outbursts of self-confession, are chiefly liable to occur.' (p. 291). 'During menstruation, a woman is exceptionally sensitive and irritable, so that she may be greatly excited by trifling matters which at other times would arouse no obvious response . . . The statistics of criminality in women show that a very large majority of crimes committed by women are committed during menstruation.' (Bauer, Woman and Love, I. pp. 283-284).

472. i. e., do not cohabit with them during this period. 'During menstruation, a woman should refrain from intercourse. By the Mosaic law the death punishment was allotted both to the man and to the woman who indulged in coition while the latter was menstruating. As a matter of fact, considerations alike of hygienic cleanliness and of sanitary precaution prohibit the performances of coitus during this period. Severe menorrhagia, perimetritic irritation, and parametritic inflammations, have been observed to follow such indiscretion.' (Kisch, Sexual Life of Women, p. 173). And according to another authority, 'Incontinence during menstruation leads to serious circulating disturbances and to the consequences of these disturbances.' (p. 185).

473. Far more rigid are the Biblical regulations concerning the menstruating women. 'She shall be put apart seven days : and whosoever toucheth her shall be unclean until the even. And every thing that she lieth upon in her separation shall be unclean : every thing also that she sitteth upon shall be unclean. And whosoever toucheth her bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.' (Le 15 : 19-21). More onerous still are the laws prescribed by the Jewish doctors. According to them 'the woman must reckon seven days after the termination of the period. If, then, this lasts seven days, she cannot become pure until the fifteenth day. Purification, furthermore, can be gained only by a ritual bath ; and until the woman has taken this, she remains unclean . . . . In addition to all this, a woman who does not menstruate regularly is unclean for a certain time before she becomes aware that the period has begun, and objects which she touches are defiled.' (JE. IX, p. 301) Many communities, peopling different parts of the globe, have to this day very similar laws. A woman under their code, must refrain, during the continuance of the flow, from all household duties, specially from the preparation of food, and to approach her is often an offence. She must, like the leper of the medieval times, wear a special garment, or call aloud to warn all who approach her that she is unclean. (vide Havelock Ellis, Man and Woman, p. 15).

474. (of menstrual pollution, and have washed themselves).

475. According to the best medical opinion, both ancient and modern, the period that immediately succeeds the cessation of the menstrual flow is one most favourable to conception. (See Kisch. Sexual Life of Woman, p. 199).

476. i. e., in a way that is natural, lawful and clean.

477. i. e., those who turn to him in repentance after they happen to have infringed any of His laws. تواب literally is one who repents much or often.

478. i. e., those who seek to be clean in body as well as in mind and spirit. Compare and contrast the Christian aversion to bathing and personal ablutions. 'Certainly the maxim which places cleanliness next to godliness, has no place in the biographies of the saints and heroes of monasticism, even in climates where bathing would seem almost one of the necessities of life. Jerome warns ascetics against warm baths as morally enervating, and in a letter to one of his female disciples denounces every sort of bathing for women. Augustine allows a bath once a month only.' (DCA. II, p. 939)—See P. VI. n. 200; XI n. 67.

479. i. e., like the soil which receives the seeds and grows the plant, 'Your wives or women, are unto you things wherein ye sow offspring; they are thus likened to places that are ploughed for sowing.' (LL)

480. (and not anywhere else). The object of repeating the simile seems to be to emphasize the fact that the begetting of children rather than carnal indulgence is the primary goal of conjugal act.

481. Or, "when". The word أنّى signifies 'whence' as well as 'when,' and 'how' and has been used in all these senses in the Holy Qur'ān. In this place, it can be interpreted by either 'as' or 'when,' as has in fact been done by some of the best authorities. Even if understood in the sense of 'whence,' it only amounts to saying, whatever posture you may adopt in entering your tilth' (and not entering anything else), and cannot be construed by any stretch of imagination to allow any filthy, unnatural practice.

482. i. e., perform acts of devotion and charity all along. A powerful reminder that moral and spiritual ends are not to be lost sight of even in the height of carnal plasures.

483. (at all times and on all occasions). Fear of God and full realisation of one's responsibility are to be the keynote of a Muslim's life and his every action, big or small.

484. (of full and copious rewards in Paradise, O Prophet!)

485. (who fear their Lord constantly and have a keen sense of their responsibility).

لِّأَيْمَانِكُمْ أَن تَبَرُّوا وَتَتَّقُوا وَتُصْلِحُوا بَيْنَ النَّاسِ ۗ وَاللَّهُ سَمِيعٌ عَلِيمٌ ﴿٢٢٤﴾ لَّا يُؤَاخِذُكُمُ اللَّهُ بِاللَّغْوِ فِي أَيْمَانِكُمْ

وَالْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ ۚ وَبُعُولَتُهُنَّ أَحَقُّ بِرَدِّهِنَّ فِي ذَٰلِكَ إِنْ أَرَادُوا إِصْلَاحًا ۚ وَلَهُنَّ مِثْلُ الَّذِي عَلَيْهِنَّ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ
وَلِلرِّجَالِ عَلَيْهِنَّ

224. (ولا . . . عليم) And make not Allah[486] a butt of your oaths so that you shall not act piously nor fear Allah nor set things right between men ;[487] and Allah is Hearer,[488] Knower.[489]

225. (لايؤ . . . حليم) Allah shall not take you to task for the vain in your oaths,[490] but He shall take you to task for what your hearts have earned,[491] and He is Forgiving,[492] Forbearing.[493]

226. (للذين . . . رحيم) For those who swear off from their wives[494] is an awaiting of four months;[495] then if they go back,[496] surely Allah is Forgiving,[497] Merciful.[498]

227. (وان . . . عليم) And if they resolve a divorcement,[499] then surely Allah is Hearer,[500] Knower.[501]

486. i. e., the name of Allah.

487. The meaning is: do not swear by Allah that you would refrain from such and such righteous and kindly acts. To refrain from them is in itself bad enough: to bring in the name of God for that purpose—a general practice in pagan Arabia—is awful.

488. (so beware of what you utter with your lips).

489. (so beware of what you think in your minds).

490. i. e., inadvertent or mistaken false oaths. The reference is obviously to the oaths of an assertory kind, which call God to testify to the truth of an assertion of fact, past or present, and not to the promissory oaths which are a sort of pledge to be fulfilled in the future.

491. (by uttering a false oath deliberately).

492. (so He overlooks rash and inadvertent oaths in this world altogether).

493. (so He does not inflict punishment for even sinful oaths immediately, but defers it till the Day of Judgment).

494. (for an indefinite period of abstinence or for a definite period exceeding four months.) ايلاء is 'an oath that one shall not go in to one's wife,' or a 'vow of abstinence from one's wife.' It was a recognised pre-Islamic form of repudiating one's wife and a denial of her rights for a period, definite or indefinite. In Islām the legal effect of such conduct amounts to a single revocable divorce.

495. This is to prevent so important a step being taken hastily or in the heat of passion, and for cool consideration and deliberation, during which either the husband may re-establish the marital relations, or at the end of which the wife may be automatically released. A wise check on the impulsiveness of the husband.

496. (on their vow within the prescribed period, and are reconciled to their wives, then they may retain them without incurring any sin) فاء الى الامر signifies, 'He reconsidered the affair, or case.' And means, 'The man who had sworn to abstain from conjugal intercourse with his wife, expiated his oath and returned to her.' (LL)

497. (so He will forgive them their sin by dispensing with their oaths after requiring them to pay a small sum by way of expiation).

498. (so He will show mercy to the husband who has now reverted to rendering his duties by his wife).

499. i. e., if even after careful consideration and full deliberation, the husband has resolved on divorce, and accordingly has not reasserted his marital relations within the period, final separation at the end of it is effected thereby automatically. The dissolution of marriage by the husband's own act, that is, by his making a declaration to that effect in appropriate words is called طلاق.

500. (so He hears their oaths).

501. (so He knows their resolve).

228. (و المطلقت . . . حكيم) And the divorced[502] women[503] shall keep themselves in waiting for three courses;[504] nor is it allowed to them that they should conceal what Allah has created in their wombs,[505] if they believe in Allah and the Last Day.[506] And their husbands are more entitled to their restoration[507] during the same,[508] if they[509] desire rectification.[510] And to women is due[511] like[512] what is due from women[513] honourably.[514] And for men there is a degree[515] above them.[516] And Allah is Mighty,[517] Wise.[518]

SECTION 29

229. (الطلاق . . . الظلمون) Divorce[519] is twice;[520] thereafter either retaining her honourably or releasing her kindly.[521] And it is not allowed to you to take away aught of what you have given them,[522] except when the twain fear that they may not observe the bounds of Allah.[523] Then, if you fear[524] that the twain may not observe the bounds of Allah, there is no blame on the twain for that with which she redeems herself.[525] These are the bounds of Allah, therefore do not trespass them.[526] And whoso trespasses the bounds of Allah, then it is those who are the ungodly.

230. (فان . . . يعلمون) If he divorces her finally,[527] she is not lawful for him thereafter unless she weds[528] a husband other than he;[529] then if he[530] also divorces her, there is no blame on the twain[531] if they return to each other,[532] provided they think[533] that they will now observe the bounds of Allah.[534] And these are the bounds of Allah,[535] He expounds them to a people who know.[536]

502. The course of divorce, or the dissolution of the marriage tie, among ancient nations has been erratic, some making it too loose, others making it too tight. Speaking sociologically, every religion has to meet two ends in the sphere of marriage and family—to raise the standard of morality and to sanctify the marriage contract. But in practice some religions have become too lenient, others too rigid. The Jewish law allows it as a matter of no great concern. If husband finds 'some uncleanness in her; then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house. And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife.' (Dt. 24 : 1, 2). Christianity, on the other hand, taking its stand on the reported saying of Jesus : 'What therefore God hath joined together, let not man part asunder . . . Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her. (Mk. 10 : 9, 11), and also upon the dictum of Paul : 'Let not the wife depart from her husband.' (1, Co. 7 : 10), has interdicted divorce altogether. The Catholics hold : 'When the sacrament of matrimony has been received by a man and a woman and ratified by their cohabitation as husband and wife, their union cannot be dissolved except by death.' (CD. p. 477). The climax was reached in the rules of the Roman Catholic Church . . . (It) 'treats marriage as a sacrament and demands indissolubility and unchanging fidelity. This in itself is unreasonable. Judaism takes account of the mutability of human feelings, and free people when the chains of matrimony become fetters ; but the Catholic Church refuses to recognise any such change of feeling. The bonds of matrimony become a chain as heavy and galling as iron in which two people must languish for the term of their natural lives.' (Bauer, Women and Love, II, p. 291). The Protestants allow it no doubt, but only on such grounds as are of comparatively rare occurrence—fornication, for instance. Islām has steered its course midway between the two, avoiding the extremes of either making divorce too rigid or banning it altogether, or of making it too loose and frivolous. Islām has adopted the only wise course open—that of imposing certain conditions and limitations upon the right of the husband to dissolve the matrimonial bond, the object of which is 'to ensure that the husband was not acting in haste or anger and that separation becomes inevitable in the interests of the husband and the wife and the children.' ('Abdur Rahīm, op. cit., p. 336).

503. (whose marriage has consumated, and who are of menstruating age and are free, not bondwomen). For other classes of wives the regulations are different.

504. (during which period they shall not remarry). 'Iddat' literally means counting and in law it means the time during which the wife must wait after the cessation of marriage before she can marry again. When dissolution of the marriage has been brought about by talāq, 'iddat will be imposed only if there has been consummation or valid retirement. The period of probation for a woman, who has been divorced, is, according to the Hanafī law, the period covered by three menstrual courses and according to the Shāfi'īs and Mālikīs the period covered by three intervals, and in the case of an old woman or of a girl of immature age it is three months.' ('Abdur Rahīm, op. cit., p. 341). The imposition of 'iddat is a distinctive feature of the Islmic law of divorce. قرء is 'A menstruation ; and a state of purity from the menstrual discharge : thus having two contrary meanings.' (LL).

505. (either of conception or menstruation).

506. (as this concealment would interfere with the reckoning of the legal 'iddat and that would in its turn lead to the infringement of the Law in various other ways).

507. (than that the divorce be made absolute and irrevocable). Divorce, though perfectly legitimate in itself, is not to be had recourse to light-heartedly or on flimsy grounds. Verses like the above tend to discourage the practice, unless, of course, there be strong reasons for taking the step, or the incompatibility of temperaments be well-established. The Prophet is also reported to have observed :—'Of all the permissible acts, divorce is the most disapproved of by Allah.'

508. i. e., within the period prescribed.

509. i. e., the husbands.

510. The proviso is significant. Husbands are to take back their wives if they are really keen on reconciliation, and not with a view to harassing them.

511. (from men).

512. (in kind) : i. e., in being obligatory.

513. (to men). In plainer language: women have rights quite similar to those of men. This bold and explicit declaration of the rights of women centuries and centuries before a Mill dreamt of writing on the 'Subjection of Women,' has no parallel in the pages of other Divine Scriptures. Contrast with this the attitude of the Bible which as a punishment of the sin of Eve makes wife a subject to her husband who is to rule over her. 'According to the Old Testament, woman is responsible for the fall of man, and this became the cornerstone of Christian teaching . . . It is a remarkable fact that the gospel (barring divorce, Mt. 19: 9) contain not a word in favour of woman . . . The epistles of St. Paul definitely insist that no change can be permitted in the position of woman . . . St. Jerome has aught but good to say of woman. "Woman is the gate of the devil, the road of evil, the sting of the scorpion." Canon law declares: "Man only is created to the image of God, not woman : therefore woman shall serve him and be his handmaid." The Provincial Council of Macon (sixth century) seriously discussed the question 'whether woman had a soul at all.' (Krafft-Ebing, Psychopathia Sexualis, p. 4. n. 12th Ed.) The effect of the teachings of the Jewish rabbis and Christian fathers was that in the course of history 'woman was represented as the door of hell, as the mother of all human ills. She should be ashamed at the very thought that she is a woman.' (Lecky, History of European Morals, II, p. 357-58). See also P. V. n. 73.

Islām grants full dignity to woman as a human being. Each sex is meant to complement the other. Woman is not sub-human. The true relation between the sexes is of interdependence.

514. This implies, by the way, the principle of modern 'Veracism' which demands on behalf of the maiden entering upon marriage that her husband be as chaste and sexually as unspotted as herself and denies the largely prevailing bisexual ethical standard in the West allowing one set of sexual honour for the male, another for the female.

515. (of superiority).

516. 'The zest of power and knowledge, the search for artistic perfection,' observes an English sociologist with palpable feminist bias 'are usually masculine characters.' (Havelock Ellis, Man and Woman, p. 454). 'It is generally true,' remark two distinguished European biologists, 'that the males are more active, energetic, eager, passionate, and variable; the females more passive, conservative, sluggish, and stable.' (Thompson and Geddes, Evolution of Sex, p. 289). 'Man, perhaps even down to the protein molecules of his tissue cells, is biologically different from woman . . . The revolutionary principles collide with the very important circumstance, namely, the biological inequality of the sexes. We must recognize the unquestionable existence of the biological inequality of the sexes. It goes deeper and is of far greater import than it would appear to those not familiar with natural sciences.' (Nemilov, Biological Tragedy of Woman, pp. 75-78). The Holy Book of God concedes the rights of woman in full—under it she can rise to equal heights with man, consistent with her sex—yet it lends no support whatever to the modern craze of the absolute equality of the sexes. Equality of rights and opportunities is of course not quite the same thing as 'uniformity' or identity. See P. III. n. 369; P. V. nn. 58, 73, also n. 513 above.

517. (so He could have enjoined anything He willed).

518. (so He enjoins only what is perfectly meet and proper).

519. (which is revocable). Talāq is of two kinds, raja'ī or that which permits of the husband resuming conjugal relations, and bā'in or that which separates. The former is generally translated as revocable and the latter as irrevocable or absolute. A divorce which is revocable in the inception, becomes absolute or irrevocable if the 'iddat, or period of probation, is allowed to elapse without the husband having revoked either by express words or conduct.' ('Abdur Rahīm, op. cit. p. 336).

520. i. e., can be pronounced only twice after which it shall be final and irrevocable, unlike the divorce of the pagan days which could be revoked after being pronounced any number of times.

521. i. e., after the two periods of temporary separation, make your final choice—either take her back in love and amity, or let her go finally but in any case, be honourable and kind. The goal of matrimony in Islām is to unite two lives, to bring happiness to the couple, and to instil mutual amity, harmony, responsible co-partnership and good fellowship in the pair. Now human nature being what it is, it sometimes happens that even with the best of motives and after repeated trials, the union remains unhappy. The only remedy then is to unfasten the wedding-tie. Even then, the husband is enjoined by the Qur'ān not to dismiss the wife in disgrace, or with a view to humiliating her but to let her off kindly, with due regard to his chivalry and her tenderness, and with a view to securing peace of mind both for her and himself.

522. (even though it be what you have yourself given her in dowry). The husband has to pay dower in full if he takes the initiative in the divorce.

523. (by continuing to live as husband and wife, i. e., the duties and obligations as husband and wife required by the law of Islām.

524. The address is to the Muslims in authority or the guardians of the pair.

525. (and obtains her relief). If the wife claims the dissolution of marriage she must be prepared to sacrifice the dower that was otherwise hers to free herself thereby.

526. i. e., these are the commandments of God meant to be obeyed and are not trivialities to be trifled with.

527. i. e., if he pronounces the third, the irrevocable divorce, after the two revocable ones. 'The most approved form of repudiation is that the husband should pronounce the sentence once during a tuhr or period of purity of the wife and then let the divorce become absolute by expiry of the period of probation. The next best form is to pronounce one sentence of repudiation during a period of purity for three such periods so that on the third pronouncement the repudiation would become irrevocable. In the first form there is a greater guarantee than in the second against hasty and ill-advised action. But if divorce be pronounced while the wife is not in a state of purity or if divorce is at once expressed to be irrevocable such as the husband saying, "I have divorced thee irrevocably," . . . the result will be irrevocable divorce though the law regards a repudiation in this form with disapproval as being an innovation.' ('Abdur Rahīm, op. cit. pp. 336-337).

528. (after the expiry of her 'iddat of three months).

529. (and this second marriage has been consummated).

530. i. e., this second husband.

531. i. e., the wife and the former husband.

532. (in wedlock, after the expiry of the second term of 'iddat).

533. i. e., consider it probable.

534. i. e., will behave properly and shall not commit excesses against each other. 'Even after an irrevocable divorce the law permits the parties to remarry, but in case the divorce was by pronouncement of three sentences or a triple divorce, the law adds as a condition precedent to reunion that the woman should be married to another man and such second marriage should have been lawfully terminated after consummation and the period of probation on account of the second marriage should have expired. The professed object of the law in adding this condition is to discourage such divorces.' ('Abdur Rahīm, op. cit. p. 337).

535. (so, far from infringing them, beware of treating them lightly).

536. (as it is people with knowledge who alone can profit by these Divine ordinances).

اَوْ سَرِّحُوْهُنَّ بِمَعْرُوْفٍ وَلَا تُمْسِكُوْهُنَّ ضِرَارًا لِتَعْتَدُوْا ۚ وَمَنْ يَفْعَلْ ذٰلِكَ فَقَدْ ظَلَمَ نَفْسَهٗ ۚ

231. (و اذا . . . عليم) And when you have divorced your women[537] and they have attained their period,[538] then either retain them honourably or release them kindly:[539] and do not retain them to their hurt so that you may trespass;[540] and whoso does this assuredly wrongs his soul. And do not hold Allah's commandments in mockery,[541] and remember Allah's favour upon you,[542] and that He has sent down upon you the Book and wisdom with which He admonishes you. And fear Allah,[543] and know that surely Allah is the Knower of everything.[544]

SECTION 30

232. (و اذا . . . تعلمون) And when you have divorced[545] women and they have attained their period,[546] do not straiten them so that they will not rewed their husbands,[547] after they have agreed between themselves honourably.[548] Hereby is admonished he among you who believes in Allah and the Last Day: this is cleaner for you and purer.[549] Allah knows[550] and you do not know.[551]

---

537. (a divorce which is yet revocable).

538. (of waiting), i. e., the term of 'iddat has been reached, but has not yet expired.

539. This is for a second time that husbands are enjoined to behave towards their wives honourably and generously whether they retain them or divorce them. The duty to be kind, fair, and chivalrous towards the wives is not contingent on something else; it is unconditional. See nn. 521 and 522 above.

540. (the bounds of law). Observe the emphasis with which the Qur'ān, as the spokesman of the helpless and the weak, defends and safeguards the rights of the divorced women. It is certainly not the Holy Qur'ān, but the Bible, which treats of the man as the owner, and the woman as his chattel, his possession. (Cf. EBi. c. 1498). See also n. 522 above.

541. i. e., do not treat these ordinances lightly. To disregard God's commandments is a grievous sin: to hold them up to mockery is positive blasphemy. (Th). The words are suggestive of the seriousness of the step involved in the divorce. Such solemn affairs of life are surely no matters of jest. There is also a precept of the Prophet to the effect that no jesting is allowed in three things, namely, marriage, divorce, and manumission. آيات الله in this context are clearly God's commandments, not His 'signs,' as generally mistranslated.

542. (O Muslims!)

543. i. e., fear of God must be the spring of your action in all your dealings.

544. The greater the fear of the Lord and the belief in His Omniscience, the easier the obedience of His commands.

545. Notice the features of the English law of divorce as adumbrated by a thoughtful Englishman:—'The fundamental defect in the law, as it stands at present, is that it makes a particular kind of matrimonial misconduct the sine qua non of divorce. However irksome and intolerable the yoke, the law does not permit release except through wrong-doing. In a sense it thus puts a premium on misconduct.' Here is another testimony still more eloquent:—'The steady increase in cases of divorce in the United Kingdom is giving many people furiously to think . . . It is alleged by reformers, and surely with justice, that the present state of the law overstresses the sexual aspect of marital incompatibility. Who can doubt it? The only effective plea for a divorce is one on the ground of the adultery of one party or the other. The shifts to which this leads parties desirous of divorce are almost incredible in a modern civilised community . . . . The fact is that, where divorces are obtainable on grounds other than those of sexual immorality, that unpleasant subject arises comparatively rarely. The slights to which this heavy stress on sexual misdemeanour puts people have already been mentioned. Evidence of cohabitation with a third party is often sufficient to obtain a divorce . . . . . What can be said for a system which exists upon a basis of collusion—collusion in which lawyers play their part? Of a system which is productive of endless lying and deceit! The law as it stands serves no good purpose but provides a happy hunting ground for crooks and adventurers.'

546. (of waiting), i. e., when 'iddat has been completed.

547. (either new or old ones whom they choose to remarry).

548. (to live as husband and wife).

549. i. e., more conducive to your spiritual health and moral welfare. High principles and lofty moral ideals are thus to be always the end in view.

550. (and is Cognisant of all possible contingencies).

551. (so obey the Divine law implicity, and do not intrude your own opinions and fancies).

وَعَلَى الْمَوْلُودِ لَهُ رِزْقُهُنَّ وَكِسْوَتُهُنَّ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ ۚ لَا تُكَلَّفُ نَفْسٌ إِلَّا وُسْعَهَا ۚ لَا تُضَارَّ وَالِدَةٌ بِوَلَدِهَا وَ

233. And if you desire to give your children for suckling,[567] there is no blame on you when you handover whatever you have agreed to give her honourably.[568] And fear Allah, and know that Allah is the Beholder of what you do.

234. (والذين . . . خبير) And as for those of you who die and leave wives behind, they[569] shall keep themselves in waiting[570] for four months and ten days.[571] Then when they have attained their period,[572] there is no blame on you[573] for what they do with themselves[574] honourably.[575] Allah is Aware of whatever you do.

552. (whether divorced or still in wedlock).

553. 'The one and only suitable food for an infant is his own mother's milk. No other food is adapted to his constitution.' (Scharlieb, op. cit. p. 4) 'The first duty of the mother is to suckle her child, to this duty all others should be subordinated.' (p. 104.) 'It is sufficient to point out how important it is alike for mother and child, alike for family and society, that the ever more and more widely and generally diffused practice of the artificial feeding of infants should be abandoned, and that there should be a return to the natural method according to which each mother nurses her own infant. The prevailing custom costs every year thousands of mothers their health, and thousands of children their lives.' (Kisch, Sexual Life of Woman, p. 195.)

554. Earlier weaning, by implication, is lawful for those who do not desire the completion.

555. i. e., the father of the child.

556. i. e., the suckling mothers whether they are in wedlock or in the period of 'iddat.

557. i. e., according to what is just, reasonable and equitable.

558. (whether of man or woman).

559. (by God with duties and obligations).

560. (and it is in accordance with this general law that women are charged with suckling and men with bearing their expenses).

561. i. e., charged with what is unreasonable or unjust.

562. Every suckling mother is to receive kind and considerate treatment by the father of the child, and vice versa he by her, and none is to he forced into humiliating terms by the other party.

563. (in case the father dies). The duty of bringing up the child on the death of the father, devolves on his heir.

564. i. e., the parents.

565. (before the completion of two years).

566. (in the interest of the child).

567. (in their own interests, to a wet-nurse).

568. i. e., according to what is just, reasonable and equitable.

569. i. e., the widows.

570. (before they remarry, in order to be known whether they are with child by the deceased or not).

571. (but if the widow is with child, her period of 'iddat would synchronise with the period of pregnancy and would expire at delivery immediately).

572. (of waiting).

573. (by your participating in their activities, or in allowing them unfettered liberty).

574. (in looking out for new husbands). Note that it is the widows themselves, not their male relations, who are the active dispensers of their future.

575. i. e., provided of course that they do nothing sinful or disreputable.

235. 577. i. e., your desire to marry them after the expiry of the waiting period or 'iddat.

578. (so he has allowed this much).

579. (of wedlock).

580. (much less in open). But السر is also synonymous with النكاح (Rgh). So the phrase may also be rendered : 'make no promise unto them of wedlock.'

581. 'A honourable saying' in the context means to speak of the intended marriage only indirectly—in a way that may suggest or imply, but not actually express or mention, the intention.

582. Or 'wedlock.'

583. (of waiting).

584. (so be on your guard even in thought and intention).

585. (to those who are quick in repenting).

586. (and not always punish sinners immediately).

587. (for not paying the dower money).

588. i. e., consummated your marriage.

589. (by way of dower money).

590. (i. e., present them with a gift, in place of dower). متعها is 'He gave her a gift after divorce.'

591. قدرة in both places is, literally, 'according to him.'.

592. i. e., a suitable present in any case.

593. i. e., incumbent, not optional.

594. (and every Muslim is expected to be a 'well-doer' in this respect).

الَّذِي بِيَدِهِ عُقْدَةُ النِّكَاحِ ۚ وَأَن تَعْفُوا أَقْرَبُ لِلتَّقْوَىٰ ۚ وَلَا تَنسَوُا الْفَضْلَ بَيْنَكُمْ ۚ إِنَّ اللَّهَ بِمَا تَعْمَلُونَ

وَاللَّهُ عَزِيزٌ حَكِيمٌ ﴿٢٤٠﴾ وَلِلْمُطَلَّقَاتِ مَتَاعٌ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ ۖ حَقًّا عَلَى الْمُتَّقِينَ ﴿٢٤١﴾ كَذَٰلِكَ يُبَيِّنُ اللَّهُ لَكُمْ آيَاتِهِ

237. (وان . . . بصير) And if you divorce them before you have touched them, but have already settled with them a settlement,[595] then due from you is half of what you have settled unless the wives forgo,[596] or he in whose hand is wedding-knot[597] forgoes ;[598] and that you[599] should forgo[600] is higher to piety.[601] And do not forget grace among yourselves;[602] surely Allah is the Beholder of what you do.[603]

238. (حفظوا . . . قنتين) Be watchful over the prayers,[604] and the middle prayer,[605] and stand up to Allah truly devout.[606]

239. (فان . . . تعلمون) And if you fear[607] then pray on foot or riding ;[608] then when you are secure, remember Allah in the way He has taught you[609] which you even knew not.

240. (والذين . . . حكيم) And those of you who die and leave wives, they shall make a bequest[610] to their wives a year's maintenance without their having to go out;[611] then if they go out[612] then there is no blame on you for what they[613] may do with themselves honourably,[614] and Allah is Mighty,[615] Wise.[616]

241. (وللمطلقت . . . المتقين) And for the divorced women an honourable present[617]: incumbent on the God-fearing.

595. (by way of dower money).

596. (their portion or one-half of the dower specified).

597. i. e., the husband. 'The husband has a right to dissolve the marriage as by such dissolution he only gives up his own right. But as marriage is founded on contract and the above rights of the husband arise by implication of such contract, it is open to a woman at the time of marriage or subsequently thereto to stipulate for their curtailment or to get some of them transferred to herself such as the right to dissolve the marriage.' ('Abdur Rahim, op. cit., p. 328).

598. (his own half) i. e., he pays the dower-money in full.

599. i. e., husbands and wives both.

600. (each, his or her own portion). العفو is here used in the sense of 'the withdrawing from a right, or due, and from seeking, or demanding it.' (LL)

601. (than your insistence on the execution of your dower). So this relinquishment is approved of as the most commendable.

602. Acts of benevolence, and voluntary, cheerful renunciation of dues, are far more acceptable in the sight of the Lord than insistence on one's rights. فضل in this sense is 'a free gift, or favour, a benefit; and bounty.' (LL)

603. (and so He shall requite you in full for your acts of benevolence and relinquishment in favour of others).

604. i. e., all the appointed prayers. محافظة على الامر is to attend or apply oneself constantly to the affair. And the phrase in the text means: 'Perform ye the prayers in their proper times; or keep ye, attend ye, apply yourselves constantly to the performance of the prayer in their proper time.' (LL)

605. (in particular). The middle prayer, according to the majority of the exegetes, is the afternoon (عصر) prayer. 'Particular note is taken of this prayer as that is usually the time of work and business. Muslims are required to be at least as regular in their prayers as are the 'civilised nations' in their meals.

606. (in prayer). 'Such a sight has, indeed, been one of the contributing motives to conversion, as an Alexandrian Jew, who embraced Islam in the year 1298, wrote of his own experience.' (Arnold, Islamic Faith, p. 29).

607. (any danger while praying) i. e., if, for instance, you feared the approach of an enemy.

608. (in whatever position or posture that may be possible), i. e., say your prayers as best as you can, at their proper times even if your faces be diverted from the qiblah, and no bowing down or prostration be possible, except by gestures. Worthy of note is the insistence on saying prayers at their regular hours, even in times of the greatest danger and excitement. Could a body of believers, so disciplined and so determined, lose any battle in the struggle for existence ?

609. i. e. say the prayers in their regular and proper way.

610. وصية, by its grammatical construction is not 'making a bequest,' but 'shall make a bequest.'

611. The verse refers to the earlier periods of Islam, before the law of inheritance was revealed, and when widows had no shares allotted to them in their husbands' property. Men were then required to make bequests for one year's maintenance and residence for their widows. The arrangement automatically ceased when laws of inheritance came into force, and widows obtained definite shares (one-fourth or one-eighth part) in their deceased husbands' property.

612. (of their own accord at the expiry of their 'iddat).

613. i. e., the widows.

614. i. e., their second marriage, for instance.

615. (so His injunctions are to be implicitly obeyed).

616. (so His injunctions are full of wisdom and benefit both to the individual and the community).

617. (made by their husbands). 'And for the divorced women there shall be a provision of necessaries with moderation, or right and just aim and beneficence.' (LL)

لعلكم تعقلون ۞ ألم تر إلى الذين خرجوا من ديارهم وهم ألوف حذر الموت فقال لهم الله موتوا ثم أحياهم
إن الله لذو فضل على الناس ولكن أكثر الناس لا يشكرون ۞ وقاتلوا في سبيل الله واعلموا أن الله
سميع عليم ۞ من ذا الذي يقرض الله قرضا حسنا فيضاعفه له أضعافا كثيرة والله يقبض ويبصط
وإليه ترجعون ۞ ألم تر إلى الملإ من بني إسرائيل من بعد موسى إذ قالوا لنبي لهم ابعث لنا ملكا
نقاتل في سبيل الله قال هل عسيتم إن كتب عليكم القتال ألا تقاتلوا قالوا وما لنا ألا

242. (كذالك . . . تعقلون) Thus does Allah expound to you His commandments ; haply you may reflect.[618]

SECTION 32

243. (الم . . . يشكرون) Hast thou not[619] looked at those who[620] went forth from their dwellings, and they were in their thousands to escape death ?[621] Then Allah said to them : 'die';[622] and thereafter revived them.[623] Surely Allah is Gracious to men, although most men do not give thanks.

244. (و قاتلو . . . عليم) And fight in the way of Allah,[624] and know that Allah is Hearer,[625] Knower.[626]

245. (من . . . ترجعون) Who is it that will lend to Allah a goodly loan,[627] so that He will multiply it to him manifold ?[628] And Allah scants and amplifies,[629] and to Him you all shall be returned.[630]

618. (and act accordingly).

619. (and be admonished, O reader !) 'When رايت is made transitive by means of الى, it denotes consideration that leads to the becoming admonished.' (LL)

620. ——sometime in the remote past.

621. i. e., to escape the risk of death by serving in a religious war.

622. (and they died). The reference is to some unknown people of antiquity, who in their thousands deserted their dwellings, it is related, for fear of being compelled to serve in a Jihād, or holy war. When they reached a certain valley, God struck them dead, through some epidemic or otherwise. Sometime later, He restored them to life. The story may well serve as a prelude to the injunction of fighting in the next verse; and the moral obviously is that life and death are absolutely in the hands of the Lord.

623. Compare for a similar experience an autobiographical narrative by the prophet Ezekiel in the OT. Ezek., 37 : 1-10.

624. (taking to heart the moral conveyed by the above story).

625. (who hears every word that human lips let fall).

626. (who knows inner motives and secrets). So He will requite the obedient and the disobedient both according to the deeds and motives of each.

627. (by spending in the way of God with pure heart, by making a right use of wealth, and by contributing to the establishment of the true religion).

628. i. e., He will reward it amply and most liberally: Cf. the NT:—'Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal.' (Mt. 6: 19, 20). Also Lk. 12: 33, 34.

629. (the means of subsistence as He willeth), i. e., so do not be afraid of poverty by spending in His cause lavishly and cheerfully.

630. (and by Him alone shall ye be judged).

نُقَاتِلَ فِي سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ وَقَدْ أُخْرِجْنَا مِن دِيَارِنَا وَأَبْنَائِنَا ۖ فَلَمَّا كُتِبَ عَلَيْهِمُ الْقِتَالُ تَوَلَّوْا إِلَّا قَلِيلًا مِّنْهُمْ ۗ وَ

عَلَيْنَا وَنَحْنُ أَحَقُّ بِالْمُلْكِ مِنْهُ وَلَمْ يُؤْتَ سَعَةً مِّنَ الْمَالِ ۚ قَالَ إِنَّ اللَّهَ اصْطَفَاهُ عَلَيْكُمْ وَزَادَهُ بَسْطَةً فِي الْعِلْمِ

246. (الم . . . بالظالمين) Hast thou not[631] looked at the chiefs of the Children of Isra'il after Mūsa ?[632] They said to a prophet of theirs :[633] 'raise for us a king[634] that we may fight in the way of God.'[635] He said,[636] 'may be that if the fighting were prescribed for you, you would not fight'. They said : 'why should we not fight in the way of God, whereas we have been driven away from our dwellings and children ?'[637] Yet when the fighting was prescribed for them, they turned away, save a few of them ;[638] and Allah is the Knower of the ungodly.[639]

247. (و قال . . . عليم) And their prophet said to them : 'surely Allah has raised over you Tālūt[640] as a king'.[641] They said ! 'how can there be kingship for him over us, whereas we are worthier of kingship than he ?[642] Nor has he been given plenty of riches.'[643] The Prophet said : 'surely Allah has chosen him over you,[644] and has increased him in knowledge[645] and physique,[646] and Allah grants kingship to whom He will,[647] and Allah is Bountiful,[648] Knowing'.[649]

631. (O reader !) See n. 619 above.

632. i. e., after his time.

633. i. e., Samuel (on him be peace !) 'Hebrew judge and prophet. His rule preceded the establishment of the kingly office. He belonged to the tribe of Levi, by Hannah. As judge he restored the worship of Jehovah and put a stop to the idolatrous practices of the Hebrews. He lived at Ramah in the hill-country of Ephraim (1110-1020 B. C.) . . . . He enjoyed the esteem of the people as seer and judge of Israil for many years . . . . He died at an advanced age in his home at Ramah and was buried there amid general lamentation.' (VJE, p. 574).

634. ملک is the chief ruler of a nation, people or tribe. 'In Palestine almost every chieftain bore this title.' (JE. VII p. 500). 'The Philistine oppression revealed to the Israelites the absolute necessity of united action. In that early age the only known form of political organisation that promised permanent independence, was the kingship.' (Kent, Founders and Rulers of United Israel, 73).

635. (under him with our enemies). 'The chief duty of the king was to act as war-lord and commander-in-chief of the army.' (JE. VII. p. 501). Cf. the OT:—'Then all the elders of Israel gathered themselves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah, and said unto him . . . . . Now make us a king to judge us like all the nations . . . . . We will have a king over us; that we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles.' (1 Sa. 8; 4-5; 19-20). الله in the phrase is translated as God, as the saying is from the mouth of the Israelites.

636. ——well aware as he was of the habit of indiscipline and insubordination of his people——The Hebrews, loyal to their desert instincts were 'very loath to acknowledge any central authority. An exceedingly strong pressure was required to make them unite. That pressure was at last furnished by the Philistines.' (Kent, op. cit. p. 73).

637. (by our enemies). 'The Philistines were conquerors, and slew above four thousand of the Hebrews, and pursued the rest of their multitude to their camp . . . . They (the Hebrews) were presently beaten as soon as they came to a close fight with their enemies, and lost about thirty thousand men, among which were the sons of the high priest . . . . . The whole city was full of lamentations.' ("Ant." V. 11: 1-2).

638. 'When the people about Saul observed how numerous the Philistines were, they were under a great consternation; and some of them hid themselves in caves and in dens underground, but the greater part fled into the land beyond Jordan.' ("Ant." VI. 6: 1).

639. (and shall requite them accordingly). The wrong-doers here are those who turned back.

640. 'Saul' of Bible. Reigned according to Sir Charles Marston's chronology from 1018 to 1003 B. C.

641. 'And when Samuel saw Saul, the Lord said unto him, Behold the man whom I spake to thee of! this same shall reign over my people.' (1 Sa 9: 17).

642. i. e., we have a better right to kingship than he has.

643. Saul belonged to the smallest of the Israelite tribes, the tribe of Benjamin, and his family was the smallest of all the families of the tribe. (Cf. 1 Sa 9: 21). So he was despised by many of the Hebrews. 'The children of Beli-al said, How shall this man save us? And they despised him, and brought him no presents.' (1 Sa. 9: 27). 'The greater part were ill men, who despised him, and derided the others, who neither did bring him presents, nor did they in affection, or even in words, regard to please him.' ("Ant." VI. 4: 6).

644. (and that fact alone must be sufficient to silence and convince you.) 'And Samuel said to all the people, See ye him whom the Lord hath chosen, that there is none like him among all the people?' (1 Sa. 10: 24).

645. (pertaining to government and military leadership).

646. i. e., he is distinguished for his splendid physique and is of commanding appearance. 'First king of Israel from about 1040 B. C noted for his courage and personal beauty.' (CE. VII, p. 2004). The Quranic word Tālūt is itself expressive of the tallness; and that he was tall and stood high is borne out by the Bible. 'He was higher than any of the people from his shoulders and upward.' (1 Sa. 10 : 23). 'From his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people.' (1 Sa. 9 : 2). 'In war he was able to march 120 miles without rest.' (JE. XI. p. 76). It was a fixed belief with the Hebrews that their leader, besides possessing other qualities, must be tall of stature. 'The Holy One, blessed be He, does not cause His Shechinah to alight except on one who is wise, strong, rich, and of tall stature.' (ET. p. 128).

647. The Hebrews objected to the kingship of Saul on the ground of his poverty. God's answer is : if he is not rich in wealth, We have made him rich in strength and knowledge ; he is your superior both in mind and in body. So he did fight successfully the Philistines, the Moabites, the Aramaeans, and the Amalekites.

648. (so He can elevate and exalt any humble and obscure individual He will).

649. (so He knows who is fit to lead and to govern).

لَكُمْ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ مُؤْمِنِينَ ۝ فَلَمَّا فَصَلَ طَالُوتُ بِالْجُنُودِ قَالَ إِنَّ اللَّهَ مُبْتَلِيكُمْ بِنَهَرٍ فَمَنْ شَرِبَ مِنْهُ فَلَيْسَ
مِنِّي وَمَنْ لَمْ يَطْعَمْهُ فَإِنَّهُ مِنِّي إِلَّا مَنِ اغْتَرَفَ غُرْفَةً بِيَدِهِ فَشَرِبُوا مِنْهُ إِلَّا قَلِيلًا مِنْهُمْ فَلَمَّا جَاوَزَهُ هُوَ
وَالَّذِينَ آمَنُوا مَعَهُ قَالُوا لَا طَاقَةَ لَنَا الْيَوْمَ بِجَالُوتَ وَجُنُودِهِ قَالَ الَّذِينَ يَظُنُّونَ أَنَّهُمْ مُلَاقُو اللَّهِ كَمْ مِنْ فِئَةٍ
قَلِيلَةٍ غَلَبَتْ فِئَةً كَثِيرَةً بِإِذْنِ اللَّهِ وَاللَّهُ مَعَ الصَّابِرِينَ ۝ وَلَمَّا بَرَزُوا لِجَالُوتَ وَجُنُودِهِ قَالُوا رَبَّنَا أَفْرِغْ

248. (وقال . . . مؤمنين) And their prophet said to them: 'surely the sign[650] of his kingship is that there shall come to you[651] the ark[652] wherein is tranquillity from your Lord[653] and the relic of what the household of Mūsā and the household of Hārūn had left,[654] the angels bearing it[655]; surely, here is a sign for you if you[656] are believers at all.'

SECTION 33

249. (فلما . . . مع الصبرين) Then when Tālūt sallied forth with the hosts, he said:[657] surely Allah will test you[658] with a river,[659] then whoso drinks of it shall not be mine, and whoso tastes it not, shall be mine, excepting him who takes a sip with his hand'.[660] Yet they drank of it, save a few of them.[661] Then when he had crossed it[662], he and those who believed with him, they said,[663] 'we have no strength[664] to-day against Jālūt[665] and his hosts'.[666] But those who believed reckoned that they were going to meet Allah[667] said, 'how often has a small group[668] prevailed against a large group by God's command. And Allah is with the steadfast'.[669]

---

650. i. e., the event portending his kingship.

651. (of itself).

652. i. e., the ark of the Covenant, 'an oblong chest 2½ cubits long by 1½ cubits in breadth and depth, was the most ancient and most sacred of the religious possessions of the Hebrew nation——a visible symbol of Yahowa's gracious presence. It guided them on their journey, and led them on from victory to victory. Moreover, 'it was venerated as the divine dwelling.' (EBr. II. 11th Ed. p. 365). Terrified with plague and pestilence that followed in its wake the Philistines placed the ark on a cart driven by nobody, drawn by two cows. The beasts took it of their own accord to Beth-Shemesh, a city of Judah. The Israelites were immensely joyed and highly cheered at its miraculous restoration. The ark 'was placed by Solomon in the first temple, after the destruction of which it does not reappear . . . . Some still hold that it lies hidden beneath the temple site.' (VJE. p. 50).

653. i. e., tablets of the law, fragments of Torah: the sacred articles radiating tranquillity or peace of mind.

654. (such as the shoes and the rod of Moses, the miter of Aaron, their garments, etc.).

655. The angles were directing the beasts that were drawing the ark-cart.

656. 'Through the prophet Samuel, the champion Saul is discovered . . . . . He wins victory . . . . . The ark is brought back to the joy of the people.' (Hosmer, The Jews, pp. 18-20). This is in harmony with the Qur'ān. Yet some Christian worthies have thought it fit to assert positively, on the sole authority of the First Book of Samuel (ch. 6), that the ark was restored 'before' the advent of Saul. To seek to impugne the accuracy of the Holy Qur'ān on the strength of a book thoroughly unreliable as a history, and full of discrepancies, requires an amount of audacity not ordinarily given to the mortals.

657. (to his men).

658. (in perseverance and self-control). The weather was violently hot, and Saul's troops demanded water of him.

659. i. e., the Jordan. 'The crossing of Jordan, one way or the other, was always an event in the history of Israel.' (EBr. XIII. 11th Ed. p. 148).

660. (and is satisfied therewith). غرفة is 'the quantity of water that is taken [or ladled out] with the hand [as with a ladle]; as much thereof as fills the hand.' (LL.)

661. (who were content with a handful of water).

662. (and perceived the immense numerical superiority of the enemy).

663. (to one another in anxiety and alarm). 'Saul and his army were therewith terrified.' ("Ant." 1. 9; 1).

664. (to all appearance).

665. i. e., Goliath of the Bible, the giant champion of the Philistinian army, 'whose height was six cubits and a span.' (1 Sa. 17 : 4). 'A man of vast bulk, for he was of four cubits and a span in tallness, and had about him weapons suitable to the largeness of his body.' ("Ant." VI. 9 : 1). 'The name the giant bore indicated his supernatural insolence, Goliath recalling that he stood with "uncovered (arrogant) countenance before even God." Goliath challenged the Israelites every morning and every evening, so as to disturb them at the hour set for reciting the Shema.' (JE. VI. p. 38).

666. 'And the Philistine said, I defy the armies of Israel this day; give me a man, that we may fight together. When Saul and all Israel heard those words of the Philistine, they were dismayed, and greatly afraid— . . . And all the men of Israel, when they saw the man, fled from him, and were scare afraid.' (1 Sa. 17: 10-11, 24). 'Saul and his army were therewith terrified, while they put themselves in array as if they would fight, but did not come to a close battle.' ("Ant." VI. 9 : 1).

667. (at the Resurrection), i. e., those of Saul's men who were stronger in faith, and were therefore not terrified and dismayed.

668. (gifted with faith and perseverance).

669. (as perseverance and faith in God are the main things).

عَلَيْنَا صَبْرًا وَثَبِّتْ أَقْدَامَنَا وَانْصُرْنَا عَلَى الْقَوْمِ الْكٰفِرِينَ ۝ فَهَزَمُوهُمْ بِإِذْنِ اللّٰهِ وَقَتَلَ دَاوُدُ جَالُوتَ وَاٰتٰىهُ
اللّٰهُ الْمُلْكَ وَالْحِكْمَةَ وَعَلَّمَهُ مِمَّا يَشَاءُ ۗ وَلَوْلَا دَفْعُ اللّٰهِ النَّاسَ بَعْضَهُمْ بِبَعْضٍ لَفَسَدَتِ الْأَرْضُ
وَلٰكِنَّ اللّٰهَ ذُو فَضْلٍ عَلَى الْعٰلَمِينَ ۝ تِلْكَ اٰيٰتُ اللّٰهِ نَتْلُوهَا عَلَيْكَ بِالْحَقِّ ۚ وَإِنَّكَ لَمِنَ الْمُرْسَلِينَ ۝

250. (ولما . . . الكفرين) And when they arranged themselves against Jālūt and his hosts, they said, 'Our Lord ! pour forth on us steadfastness and set firm our feet, and make us triumph over the infidel people',[670]

251. (فهزموهم . . . العلمين) Then they[671] vanquished them, by the command of Allah ;[672] and Dāūd[673] slew Jālūt,[674] and Allah gave him kingdom[675] and wisdom[676] and taught him of what He willed.[677] And had it not been for Allah's repelling some people[678] by means of others,[679] the earth was surely to be corrupted.[680] But Allah is Gracious to the worlds.[681]

252. (تلك . . . المرسلين) These are the revelations of Allah : We recite them to thee,[682] and, surely,[683] thou art one of the envoys.[684]

670. Observe the beautiful order in the prayer. First, it is the firmness of heart that is sought, then the firmness of feet, and then, as a natural sequel, triumph over the adversary.

671. i. e., Saul's men.

672. And when the Philistines saw their champion was dead, they fled. And the men of Israel and of Judah arose, and shouted, and pursued the Philistines.' (I Sa. 17 : 51, 52). 'And upon the fall of Goliath, the Philistines were beaten, and fled . . . . . So that there were slain of Philistines thirty thousand, and twice as many wounded. But Saul returned to their camp, and pulled their fortification to pieces, and burnt it.' ("Ant." VI, 9 : 5).

673. i. e., King David (1013-973 B. C.) of the Bible. He was in Saul's army, and was yet neither prophet nor king.

674. 'And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and slang it, and smote the Philistine in his forehead. . . . . . David ran and stood upon the Philistine, and took his sword, and drew it out of the sheath thereof, and slew him, and cut off his head therewith.' (I Sa. 17 : 49-51). 'The youth met his antagonist, being accompanied with an invisible assistant, who was no other than God himself.' ("Ant." VI, 9 : 5). For further details of this encounter see "Ant." VI. 9.

675. (of Israel a little later).

676. i. e., prophethood, which is wisdom in its highest and purest form. Kingship in Islam is not incompatible with the highest spiritual achievements. It can co-exist even with prophethood. In fact it is on occasions a special Divine reward——an excellent opportunity to serve one's fellow-creatures.

677. (either of Divine revelations or of worldly crafts).

678. i. e., of the wicked and the mischievous.

679. i. e., by the righteous and the rightly-guided.

680. (by the preponderance of the evil-doers and mischief-makers).

681. (and so He repels the rebellious and helps the righteous).

682. (correcting the inaccuracies and distortions and rectifying mistakes of the present Jewish and Christian Scriptures).

683. (O Prophet!)

684. i. e., one of the apostles: the Divine messengers. Note the significance of the epithet 'sent ones.' Prophets and apostles, in Islām, are always the sent ones——sent by God to the peoples——not themselves godlings or god-incarnations.

تِلْكَ الرُّسُلُ فَضَّلْنَا بَعْضَهُمْ عَلَىٰ بَعْضٍ ۘ مِّنْهُم مَّن كَلَّمَ اللَّهُ ۖ وَرَفَعَ بَعْضَهُمْ دَرَجَاتٍ ۚ وَآتَيْنَا

PART III

253. (تلك الرسل . . . ما يريد) These messengers ![1] We have preferred some of them above others; to some Allah spoke directly[2]; and some He raised in rank.[3] And We gave 'Isā,[4] son of Maryam[5], evidences[6], and We aided him with the holy Spirit[7]. And had Allah so willed, those who came after them[8] would not have fought one against the other[9] after the clear signs had come to them[10], but they fell into variance, then of them some believed and of them some disbelieved[11]. And had Allah so willed, they would not have fought one against the other, but Allah does whatever He intends[12].

SECTION 34

254. (يايها الذين . . . الظلمون) O you who believe ! spend[13] of what We have provided you before the Day arrives when there shall be neither trading[14] nor friendship[15] nor intercession.[16] And it is the infidels who are the ungodly.[17]

---

1. (just alluded to) i.e., 'the sent ones.'

2. (directly; without an angel as an intermediary). Such as the prophet Moses.

3. The obvious reference is to the holy Prophet of Iṣlām, the Prophet par excellence, the most exalted of all the exalted prophets and apostles.

4. i.e., the prophet Jesus.

5. i.e., Mary. In view of the Christian blasphemy, the fact of his being the son of a mere woman needed a clear pronouncement.

6. (of his apostleship).

7. 'Holy Spirit,' in Islām, is not the 'third Person of Trinity' but the archangel Gabriel, who was in constant attendance upon the prophet Jesus, and protected him—a mere mortal—from the wiles of his enemies. There is no trace, either here or elsewhere in the Holy Qur'ān, of any specially high rank being bestowed on Jesus above the prophets. He has simply his own place—a very honourable one no doubt,—in the long list of the messengers of God. For روح القدس see P I. n. 375.

8. i.e. after the apostle.

9. (refuting and contradicting each other in matters of faith).

10. (of Divine truths, through the apostles.)

11. This, in a nutshell, has been the history of the prophets and their peoples. The moral for the holy Prophet of Islam is to derive comfort by contemplating on this uniform fact of history, and not to expect wholesale conversion. (Th.)

12. (in accordance with His universal Plan, and without any let or hindrance from any one). In the Divine plan of creation, belief and unbelief are bound, like light and darkness, to go hand in hand. And God's power of action is not restricted or limited by any conditions. His omnipotence, like His omniscience, is absolute.

13. (in the cause of God).

14. i.e., compensation or compounding of sins.

15. (which could profit an infidel).

16. (on which both Jews and Christians—the latter even more than the former—were wont to presume). 'We were saved through the merits of one mediator, our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . Christ is well qualified to be a mediator, i.e., one who brings estranged parties to amicable agreement. Being God and man, He can best restore friendship between God and the human family.' (CD. p. 617) 'His (Christ's) action, to some extent His teaching, more explicity the apostolic teaching (represented by St. Paul, St. Peter, St. John and Ep to Heb) present Him as the Mediator with God on behalf of mankind, making intercession in His prayers on earth and in His heavenly life after the resurrection, but chiefly giving His life as a ransom, shedding His blood for the remission of sin, acting as means of propitiation, doing God's will.' (DB. III. p. 320). The Jews also believed in the mediation of angels and 'Logos.' And Philo, while speaking of 'the Word' on the mediation between God and His creation, is quoted to have said: 'The Father who created the universe has given to His arch-angelic and most ancient Word a pre-eminent gift to stand on the confines of both; while separating the created things from the Creator he pleads before the immortal God on behalf of the mortal race which sins continually, and is the ambassador sent by the Ruler to the subject race.' (JE. VIII. p. 409) Islām, as is evident, sweeps away all such fanciful, and essentially pagan, ideas of mediation, intercession and propitiation.

17. i.e., the wrong their own souls by their infidelity.

255. (الله . . . العظيم) Allah![18] there is no God but He,[19] the Living,[20] the Sustainer,[21] slumber seizes Him not, nor sleep.[22] His is whatever is in the heavens and whatever is on the earth.[23] Who can intercede with Him, save by His leave?[24] He knows whatever was before them[25] and whatever shall be after them.[26] And they encompass naught of His knowledge, save what He wills.[27] His Throne[28] comprehends the heavens and the earth; and the guarding of both wearies Him not.[29] and He is the High,[30] the Supreme.[31]

256. (لا إكراه . . . عليم) No compulsion is there in religion.[32] Surely rectitude[33] has become distinct from error.[34] Whoso then denies Devil[35] and believes in Allah has of a surety laid hold of[36] the firm cable of which there is no breaking;[37] and Allah is Hearing,[38] Knowing.[39]

18. The verse known as the Throne Verse has often won the admiration of non-Muslims, even of anti-Muslims. '. . . a magnificent description of the divine majesty and providence; but it must not be supposed the translation comes up to the dignity of the original. The passage is justly admired by the Mohammedans who recite it in their prayers; and some of them wear it about them.' (Sale) 'One of the most admiral passages in the Koran.' (Lane) 'One of the grandest verses of the Quran' (Wherry).

19. This is the creed of Islām, negativing all false gods, and affirming the unity of the one true God. 'There is no God but God—are words simply tantamount in English to the negation of any deity save one alone; and this much they certainly mean in Arabic, but they imply much more also. Their full sense is, not only to deny absolutely and unreservedly all plurality, whether of nature or of person, in the Supreme Being, not only to establish the Unity of the Unbegetting and Unbegot, in all its simple and incommunicable Oneness, but besides this the words, in Arabic and among Arabs, imply that this one Supreme Being is also the only Agent, the only Force, the only Act existing throughout the universe, and leave to all beings else, matter or spirit, instinct or intelligence, physical or moral, nothing but pure, unconditional passiveness, alike in movement or in quiescence, in action or in capacity.' (W. G. Palgrave, quoted in ERE. XI. p. 757).

20. i.e., the Ever-living; the Deathless; the Eternal; His existence having neither beginning nor end. Even a fact so patent as the deathlessness of God has needed a clear affirmation in view of the peculiar sacrifice of heathen gods every spring, as also in view of the 'Christ-God' who suffered death at the hands of his persecutors. 'The putting to death of a public man-god was a common incident of many religions.' (Allen, op. cit. p. 90).

21. He is Almighty and the sole Provider. He sustains the existence of everything and is Himself sustained or supported by nobody. By the mere mention of Life and Self-subsistence as His two essential attributes, the possibility of all co-partnership with Him is negatived outright. Contrast with this the Christian belief that 'the Father is no more God without the Son than the Son is God without the Father;' (ERE. VII. p. 536) as also the Hindu belief that certain deities, at any rate, 'are the offspring of others, and that the gods were originally mortal, who have only acquired immortality either by the practice of austerities or by drinking Soma or else by receiving it as a gift from Agni and Savita.' (XII p. 602) Obviously Islām brushes aside all such absurdities.

22. He is ever wakeful, ever watchful. Many pagan peoples have even ascribed sleep to God.

23. i.e., He is the absolute master; none is His co-partner; no, not even comparable to Him.

24. So that there exists none as permanent or independent 'Mediator.' This completely repudiates the 'doctrine of mediation' which is peculiarly Christian. 'It is not only that peace with God, or the forgiveness of sins, or reconciliation, or eternal life for the spiritually dead is mediated through Christ and His redemption; Christ is presented also as the mediator of creation. All that is has come into being through Him.' (ERE. VIII. p. 516) See also n. 16 above.

25. (in point of time), i.e., the past. Or, 'that which is in front of them' in point of space. The pronoun has for its antecedent 'His creatures' understood.

26. (in point of time), i.e., the future. Or, 'that which is behind them' in point of space. In any case, His knowledge is perfect, complete, all-embracing. He knows the hidden and the manifest. He knows what is in the present, what has been in the past, and what shall be in the future.

27. (in accordance with His universal Plan.) So that none of His creatures, no, not even the angels and prophets, can be His co-equal in respect of His Knowledge.

28. (of majesty) كرسى 'is the place or seat of the king, and of the learned man; and hence as used in the Koran it is explained as signifying Dominion, and the Power of God, whereby He holds the heavens and of the earth; and knowledge.' (LL).

29. (so that He needs no rest, and is never tired). This repudiates the Jewish and Christian idea of God 'resting' on the seventh day after His great exertion in creating the universe. 'And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made.' (Ge. 2: 2, 3).

30. i.e., above all imperfections and limitations.

31. i.e., possessor of every form of perfection.

32. (of Islam) i.e., there is no occasion for employing coercion in the matter of adopting and embracing Islām as its excellence is self-evident. This is the doctrine of toleration in the Islām. 'Convictions are not things that can be forced. Whatever compulsion there is, is not in religion but out of religion. Once "the way is made distinct from error" and faith and belief have taken a firm grip on the strong handle of the Truth, that service is due only to the Supreme and the Omnipotent Creator, Sustainer, and Developer of all creation: how can mistrust make us waver and hold us back from His service?' (MA).

33. i.e., the right direction; the religion of monotheism.

34. i.e., the wrong way: infidelity and polytheism.

35. (and renounces all false religions.) الطاغوت 'whatever is worshipped instead, or to the exclusion, of God.' (LL).

36. i.e., has indeed tenaciously clung to.

37. (either in this world or the next). True belief in God is our surest passport of safety both in this world and the next. If we but cling to faith, God's help will never fail us.

38. i.e., Hearer of what proceeds from our lips.

39. i.e., Knower of what we hide in our hearts.

خٰلِدُوْنَ ۝ اَلَمْ تَرَ اِلَى الَّذِىْ حَآجَّ اِبْرٰهٖمَ فِىْ رَبِّهٖٓ اَنْ اٰتٰىهُ اللّٰهُ الْمُلْكَ ۘ اِذْ قَالَ اِبْرٰهٖمُ رَبِّىَ الَّذِىْ

257. (الله . . . خلدون) Allah is the Patron of those who believe[40]. He brings them forth from darkness[41] into light[42]. And as for them who disbelieve, their patrons are the devils[43], they bring them forth from light into darkness. These are inmates of the Fire; therein they shall abide.

SECTION 35

258. (الم تر . . . ظلمين) Lookedest thou[44] not at him[45] who contended with Ibrāhim regarding his Lord[46], because Allah had given him dominion?[47] When Ibrāhīm said, 'my Lord is He who gives life and causes death[48]; he said, 'I give life and I cause death[49]' Ibrāhīm said[50], 'surely Allah brings the sun[51] from the east[52], then bring it thou from the west[53].' Thereupon he who disbelieved was confounded[54]. And Allah guides not wrongdoers[55].

40. (as He in fact is the only Patron or Guardian, besides Whom there exist no 'patron-saints,' 'gardian-angels' or 'saviours.'

41. (of infidelity and unbelief).

42. (of faith and belief). Note that النور, 'the light,' in the Quran is always in the singular, while its antithesis الظلمات 'darkness' is always in the plural. This means that the right way is only one, while the deviations from it are many.

43. i.e., constantly seducing them.

44. (O reader!)

45. The allusion is, according to the Muslim commentators, to Nimrod, the tyrant of Chaldea and perhaps the first Babylonian hero-god, who persecuted Abraham. His greatness as a king finds mention in the Bible: 'A mighty one in the earth' (Ge. 10:8), 'a mighty hunter before the Lord' (Ge. 10:9), and 'mighty upon the earth' (1 Ch. 1:10), he ruled over the cities of Babel, Erech, Accad and Calneh, in the land of Shinar (Ge. 10:10) . . . 'he was made king over all the people on earth, appointing Terah his minister. It was then, elated by so much glory, that Nimrod changed his behaviour toward YHWH and became the most flagrant idolater.' (JE. IX. p. 309) 'Of all the rulers who made themselves masters of lower Mesopotamia . . . the most famous was Sargon . . . and he was identified, perhaps rightly, with the Nimrod of the Old Testament who founded Caleh and was a mighty hunter before the Lord. Later documents were found which established the fact of his life and power, and now at Ur we have relics which add something to his history and illustrate the civilisation of his time.' (Woolley, Ur of the Chaldees, p. 107). 'The founder of the Babylonian monarchy. He flourished about 2450 B.C, establishing a kingdom in the plain of Shinar.' (CE. VI. p. 1609).

46. Abraham's 'contests with Nimrod . . . are not deemed as fantastic as they would have been half a century ago, when the very existence of Abraham was generally denied. At the International Congress of Orientalists in Oxford (1928) the lectures of Prof. Langdon and Mr. Woolley showed that at Abraham's city Ur, in Abraham's day and earlier, monotheistic speculations conflicted with crass idolatry.' (EBr. XIII. P. 165, 11th Ed.)

47. Sun-worshippers as the Chaldeans were, Nimrod claimed to be a soler hero, and aspired to the position of a god. To all appearance, this King Nimrod is not other than the solar god Merodoch. 'Notwithstanding the difference that appears to exist between these two names, it is certain that they are very closely related . . . The question whether Merodoch ever was really king of Babylon need not detain us here. Suffice it to say that "the king" par excellence was one of his titles. This he apparently bore as "King of the gods:" but there is no reason to suppose, on that account, that he was not king of men during his life on earth,' (DB. III, p. 552) 'Nimrod is described in Genesis as the first "to be a mighty one in the earth, which Skinner in his commentary paraphrases as originator of the idea of the military state, based on arbitrary force." Unlike the other names in the Genesis context, which are names of peoples, Nimrod is that of an individual.' (EBr. XVI. p. 44, 11th Ed.) See for his 'affront and contempt of God', "Ant". I.4:2.

48. i.e., all the forces of life and death are in His hands, whereas thou and thy gods are powerless. According to the Talmud, Abraham exclaimed before the King:—"Then wherefor serve him? Why cause thy subjects to follow in thy vain ways? Rather serve the great Lord of the world who has power to do all the things; who has the power to kill, the power to keep alive. Woe to thee, thou man of foolish heart! Turn from thy evil ways, serve Him in whose hands is thy life and the lives of all the people." (Polano. The Talmud Selections, p. 37).

49. The statement may either mean: 'I can slay whomsoever I wish and can let live whomsoever I wish;' or, 'all means of sustenance are in my power and under my control.' Nimrod evidently missed the point of Abraham's argument altogether.

50. (varying his illustration, to bring home to Nimrod's dull intelligence a yet clearer instance of his impotence and God's omnipotence).

51. (which is itself a created being, subject to the laws of God, and not a deity). The Chaldeans believed in the Divinity of the sun.

52. (everyday habitually).

53. (even once). The meaning is: can you even once alter the ordered course of God's universe?

54. (and worsted in argument; yet he did not submit to Abraham's true religion).

55. i.e., those who go deliberately wrong.

259. (اوكالذى . . . قدير) Or such as he[56] who passed by a town[57], and it lay overturned on its turrets[58]. He said, 'how[59] shall Allah quicken it[60] after its death?[61]' Thereupon Allah made him dead for a hundred years and then raised him up, and said, 'how long hast thou tarried'?[62] He said, 'I have tarried a day or part of a day'. Allah said, 'nay! thou hast tarried a hundred years; look at thy food and thy drink; they have not rotten[63]; and look at thy ass[64]. And this We have done in order that We may make of thee a sign[65] unto men; and look thou at the bones[66], how We shall set them up and clothe them with flesh[67].' Then when it became clear to him[68], he said[69], 'I know[70] that surely Allah is Potent over everything'.

260. (و اذ قال . . . حكيم) And re-call when Ibrāhīm said, 'my Lord! show me[71] how[72] Thou wilt quicken the dead[73].' He said[74], 'Dost thou not believe?' He said, 'Yea[75] but[76] that my heart may rest at ease[77].' He said, 'take four birds, and tame them unto thee[78], and then put a part of them[79] on each hill, and thereafter summon them; they will come to thee speeding[80]. And know then that surely Allah is Mighty[81], Wise[82].'

261. (مثل الذين . . . عليم) The likeness of those who spend their riches in the way of Allah is as the likeness of a grain[83] that grows seven ears and in each ear one hundred grains[84]; and Allah multiplies unto whom He will[85]. And Allah is Bountiful[86], Knowing[87].

56. i.e., the prophet Ezra or 'Uzair according to the commentators.

57. The town probably was Jerusalem, as guessed by the commentators, after its desolation, in 599 B.C., at the hands of Nebuchadnezzar.

58. i.e., desolate and completely in ruins. عرش is, 'the roof of a house, or the like.' And the phrase means: 'Having fallen down upon its roofs: meaning that its walls were standing when their roofs had become demolished and had fallen to the foundations, and the walls fell down upon the roofs demolished before them.' (LL)

59. i.e., in what way. The person is a believer in Resurrection. He has no intention to question the fact of it. Merely overpowered with awe and astonishment at a particularly desolate sight, he asks himself, how could a town so utterly ruined be brought back to life? To instil in him a yet greater assurance and to provide for him an ocular demonstration of His working, God wrought the miracle detailed in the text.

60. (town and its dwellers).

61. (on the Day of Resurrection).

62. (in this state of lifelessness).

63. (in spite of the lapse of years, and in this way We keep preserved and intact whatever We will).

64. (dead and turned to dust except for its bones).

65. (of Our Omnipotence, i.e., an instance of Our infinite and unbounded power.

66. (of thy ass).

67. (and reinspire the beast with life).

68. (as a matter of personal experience).

69. (in an outburst of fresh conviction and a faith strengthened a thousand times by immediate personal experience).

70. (in the very depths of my heart).

71. (by some practical instance).

72. i.e., in what particular way out of several conceivable ways. (Th).

73. (on the Day of Resurrection).

74. 'to enable Abraham to demonstrate to the world his staunch and unflinching faith in Him and His ways.' (Th)

75. i.e., certainly I do believe, and have full faith.

76. (I ask this).

77. (by having an ocular demonstration of God's OWN way of reviving the dead and in order to perfect my faith yet more). 'The prophet Abraham who uttered these words, after having requested God to show him the raising of the dead to life, was not lacking in faith; but he knew that, if he were to witness resurrection with his own eyes, all possible doubts would be dispelled for ever. He believed that God had this power; the mental acknowledgement (tasdīq) was already there. But his faith would become more intense if he were allowed to obtain full certainty by witnessing it with his bodily eyes ('ain-ul-yaqīn).' (ASB. I. p. 38).

78. (by taming them and keeping them as thy pets).

79. i.e., of each one of the four birds after cutting them to pieces and mingling their flesh and feathers together. The word جزء in correct Arabic does not imply an individual or one whole thing. It is only 'A part, or portion; . . . a constituent part of a thing: . . . an ingredient of any compound or mixture.' (LL) جزءاً ای ربعاً من الطیر (IQ)

80. i.e., one part of each animal shall fly to the other, till all of them recover their original form and figure.

81. i.e., Able to do anything and everything.

82. i.e., Doer only of what is in accordance with His universal Plan and infinite Wisdom.

83. (of corn).

84. Thus God rewards them seven hundred times.

85. (commensurate with the degree of the donor's disinterestedness and true piety).

86. (so that His bounty shall not fail any one deserving of it).

87. (so that He is well aware of the purity of motives, or its reverse, in every case).

مَنًّا وَّلَآ اَذًى لَّهُمْ اَجْرُهُمْ عِنْدَ رَبِّهِمْ وَلَا خَوْفٌ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا هُمْ يَحْزَنُوْنَ ۝ قَوْلٌ مَّعْرُوْفٌ وَّمَغْفِرَةٌ

262. (الذين . . . يحزنون) Those who spend their riches in the way of Allah and do not follow up what they have spent by taunt[88] or injury[89], therein is their wage with Allah, on them shall come no fear, nor shall they grieve[90].

263. (قول . . . حليم) An honourable word[91] and forgiveness[92] are better[93] than an alms followed by injury; and Allah is Self-sufficing[94], Forbearing[95].

264. (يايها الذين . . . الكفرين) O you who believe! void not your charities by taunt and by harm[96], like unto him who spends his riches to be seen of men[97], and does not believe in Allah and the Last Day[98]. The likeness of him is as the likeness of a smooth rock on which is dust; a torrent falls on it and leaves it bare[99]. They[100] shall not have power over aught they have earned[101]. And Allah guides not an infidel people.

---

88. i.e., words of taunt or reproach addressed to the person whom they have relieved.

89. i.e., deeds of violence. Charity, to be charity, must always be clean, pure, and disinterested.

90. (on the Day of Judgment).

91. (of refusal).

92. (granted to the beggar if he is wantonly insolent).

93. (a thousand times). The whole phrase means: 'Refusal with pleasing or gracious speech and prayer expressed to the beggar that God may sustain him, and forgiveness granted to the beggar for his importunity . . . are better than an alms with annoyance followed by reproach for a benefit conferred and for begging. (LL)

94. i.e., Independent of all wants. So he who spends benevolently does so for his own benefit, and not to do Him any good.

95. (so He does not punish the violators of these rules of conduct immediately).

96. Very noticeable is the emphasis which the Holy Qur'ān lays on the standard of charity being kept high. The kindly feeling of the giver is far more valuable than the gift itself.

97. Cf. the NT. 'Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven.' (Mt. 6:1)

98. i.e., who is an infidel and wastes his charity altogether. Note the difference between the two cases. The man of faith who follows his act of charity by words of reproach or deeds of violence deprives himself of its manifold reward; the unbeliever makes his charity void altogether, and shall get no spiritual benefit out of it at all. (Th)

99. (as before). So will these men without faith find themselves bare of all reward on the Day of Judgment.

100. i.e., those who are without faith; the infidels.

101. i.e., of their works.

يصبها وابل فطل ۗ والله بما تعملون بصير ۝ أيود أحدكم أن تكون له جنة من نخيل وأعناب

265. (و مثل الذين . . . بصير) And the parable of them who spend their riches seeking the pleasure of Allah[102] and for the strengthening of their souls[103] is as the parable of a garden on height; a torent falls on it, and it yields its fruits twofold; and if no torrent falls on it, then even a gentle rain[104]. And Allah is Beholder of whatever you do[105].

266. (ايود . . . تتفكرون) Would any of you have for himself a garden of date-palms[105-A] and grape-vines[105-B] beneath which rivers flow and all sorts of fruit therein are for him, then old age should befall him while he has a progeny of weaklings, and that thereafter a whirlwind wherein is fire should smite it,[106] so that all is consumed[107]? Thus dose Allah expound to you His signs that haply you may ponder.

SECTION 37

267. (يايها الذين . . . حميد) O you who believe! spend[108] out of the good things you have earned[109], and of what We have produced for you from the earth; and seek not the vile of it to spend, whereas you yourselves would not accept such except that you connived at it. And know that Allah is Self-sufficing[110], Praiseworthy[111].

---

102. This seeking of the goodwill of the Lord is the only real motive force with all true believers in every action of theirs.

103. Since every fresh act of self-sacrifice makes their love of good still deeper and stronger.

104. (Sufficeth it because of the excellence of the soil).

105. (and of the purity of your motives).

105-A. The tree par excellence of Arabia. 'Among the Arabian flora the date-palm tree is queen. It bears the most common and esteemed fruit: the fruit (tamr) par excellence. Together with milk it provides the chief item on the menu of Bedouin, and, except for camel flesh, is his only solid food.' (Hitti, History of the Arabs p. 19). The first care of the oasis-dweller Arabs is the date-palm. 'It is the main source of their wealth, the riches of a garden-owner being proportionate to the number of the date-trees he owns . . . By virtue of its manifold utility, the date-palm occupies the same important position in the practical life and general economy of the oasis-dwellers as does the camel in that of the pastoral nomads. Its fruit is the staple article of food among the settlers, and forms a substantial part of all their meals—breakfast, midday meal and supper—in the case of rich and poor alike.' (Inayatullah, Geographical Factors in Arabian Life and History, p. 81).

105-B. A plant well known in certain parts of Arabia. 'Among the domestic plants, the grape-vine, introduced from Syria after the fourth Christian century, is well represented in Al-Tā'if, and yields the alcoholic beverage styled nabīdh al-zabīb.' (Hitti, op. cit. 19).

106. i.e., the garden.

107. Such is the alms given by the infidels which shall perish, and will be of no service the giver of it in the Hereafter.

108. (in alms).

109. (in a lawful, honourable way).

110. (so He is in no need of your presents which even you deem worthless).

111. (and absolutely Perfect in His Person and Attributes; so strive for perfection in all that you offer in His name).

وَاسِعٌ عَلِيمٌ ۝ يُؤْتِي الْحِكْمَةَ مَن يَشَاءُ ۚ وَمَن يُؤْتَ الْحِكْمَةَ فَقَدْ أُوتِيَ خَيْرًا كَثِيرًا ۗ وَمَا يَذَّكَّرُ إِلَّا أُولُو الْأَلْبَابِ ۝

268. (الشیطٰن . . . علیم) Satan threatens you with poverty[112], and commands you to ungodliness, whereas Allah promises you forgiveness from Himself[113] and abundance[114]; and Allah is Bountiful[115], Knowing[116].

269. (یؤتی . . . الالباب) He grants wisdom[117] to whom He will, and he who is granted wisdom is indeed granted abundant good,[118] and none receives admonition[119] save men of understanding.

270. (وما . . . انصار) And whatever you spend or whatever you vow,[120] surely Allah knows them[121], and for the ungodly[122] there will be no helpers.

271. (ان تبدوا . . . خبیر) If you publish the alms[123], even so it is well, and if you conceal them and give them to the poor, it will be better for you[124], and He will expiate some of your misdeeds[125]. Allah is Aware of what you do[126].

272. (لیس . . . تظلمون) Not on thee[127] is their[128] guidance, but Allah guides whom He will[129]. And whatsoever of good you spend it is for your own souls; and you spend not save to seek Allah's countenance[130], and whatever of good you spend shall be repaid to you[131], and you shall not be wronged.

112. The devil instils the fear in your mind that you shall be reduced to poverty by your contributing liberally to the works of charity and public good.

113. (in the Hereafter, in return for that you expend cheerfully in His service).

114. 'to some even in this world, and to all in the Hereafter.' (Th).

115. i.e., Able to repay all and sundry.

116. i.e., Aware of the inner feelings and motives.

117. i.e., the understanding of the Divine truths.

118. Since no worldly gift can equal the great blessing of comprehending the Divine truths.

119. (thereby) i.e. none takes the lessons conveyed by the Divine Book to heart.

120. (to spend, or to offer in bodily devotions).

121. (and shall reward each and all accordingly).

122. i.e., those who do not observe the bounds of Allah.

123. (on occasions when publicity is needed or desirable in public interest).

124. The general rule is to conceal the acts of charity: manifesting them is allowed only on proper occasions. When, for instance, a man is dying of hunger at a public place, and is in dire need of instantaneous relief, to refuse to feed him because the place is an open one, would be sheer folly and an act morally criminal.

125. (thereby: for those acts of charity). Incidentally this repudiates the Christian doctrine that there is no remission without shedding of blood.

126. (so He looks above all to your inner motives).

127. (O Prophet!).

128. i.e., the 'infidels.'

129. (in accordance with His universal Plan). So relief may unhesitatingly be given to any one in distress whether believing or disbelieving. Nobody is to be denied help on the score of his unbelief. Some Muslims in the Prophet's time hesitated to support the infidel paupers. The verse removed their doubts.

130. (and this can be obtained by relieving any one in distress, apart from his views and beliefs).

131. (in full).

الَّذِينَ أُحْصِرُوا فِي سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ لَا يَسْتَطِيعُونَ ضَرْبًا فِي الْأَرْضِ يَحْسَبُهُمُ الْجَاهِلُ أَغْنِيَاءَ مِنَ التَّعَفُّفِ

273. (للفقرا . . . عليم) Charities are[132] for the poor who are sustained in the way of Allah[133], disabled from going about in the land[134]. The unknowing takes them for the affluent because of their modesty[135], thou[136] wouldst recognize them by their mark, they beg not of men because of their modesty. And whatever of good[137] you will spend, surely Allah is the Knower thereof.

SECTION 38

274. (الذين . . . يحزنون) Those who spend their riches night and day[138], secretly and openly[139], their wage shall be therein with their Lord; no fear shall come on them, nor shall they grieve[140].

132. (meant primarily and in the first place). For others also they are lawful.
133. i.e., in the service of the religion.
134. (to earn their livelihood).
135. (and abstention from begging).
136. (O reader !).
137. (to relieve such people).
138. i.e., at all hours.
139. (whatever may suit the occasion).
140. (in the Hereafter).

275. (الذين ... خالدون) Those who devour usury[141], shall not be able to stand[142] except as stands he whom Satan has confounded with his touch[143]. This is because they say: 'trade is but as usury'[144]; whereas Allah has allowed trade[145] and has forbidden usury[146]. So he who receives an admonition from his Lord, and has desisted[147], may keep[148] what is past[149], and his affair[150] is with Allah[151] but he who reverts[152]—such shall be the inmates of the Fire, therein they[153] shall abide.

276. (يمحق الله ... اثيم) Allah obliterates usury[153-A], and augments charity[154]. And Allah loves not any ingrate[155] sinner[156].

277. (ان الذين ... يحزنون) Surely those who believe and work righteously and establish prayer and pay the poor-rate, their wage shall be then with their Lord; and no fear shall come on them nor shall they grieve[157].

278. (يايها الذين ... مؤمنين) O you who believe! fear Allah and waive what has yet remained of the usury due to you[158], if you are believers[159].

279. (فان لم ... تظلمون) But if you do not, then beware of war from Allah and His messenger[160]. And if you repent[161], yours shall be your principal sums; neither wrong others[162] nor be wronged yourselves[163].

280. (و ان ... تعلمون) And if one[164] should be in difficulties, then let there be a respite till easiness[165]. But if you waive[166] the sum, it will be better for you, if you but know[167].

141. The Arabic word ربوا is but partially covered by the English word 'usury' which, in modern parlance, signifies only an 'exorbitant' or extortionate interest.' The Arabic ربوا, on the other hand, means any addition, however slight, over and above the principal sum lent, and thus includes both 'usury' and 'interest.' In the language of modern socialism, interest is an unjustifiable tax on the labouring classes, the unpaid wage of the labourer. According to the socialist writers of to-day, money is lent by them who have abundance and returns to them to increase that abundance, the increase being the unpaid dues of labour, which is the only source of wealth—the rich are thus made richer and the poor poorer, by every fresh act of taking interest, and the stability of social organism is disturbed.

142. (upon rising from their graves on the Day of Resurrection).

143. i.e., like possessed persons, distracted and horror-stricken, with their bodies in violent convulsions.

144. i.e., trading also has gain and profit as its object, and it is admittedly lawful; then why not usury?

145. Thus there is a world of difference between the two. The Author of all laws, physical as well as moral, has allowed the one and disallowed the other. What greater difference could there conceivably be between any two things in the world? The one was comparable to light; the other to darkness. Money-lending, it has truly been remarked, is neither a profession nor a trade. It is not a profession since it calls for no special education or technical knowledge. It is not a trade since there is no sale of any kind in it. It is an occupation, and one of the dirtiest since it takes mean advantage of human distress and thrives on it. Those who are engaged in this business, are as a rule callously mean, who find that the easiest way of increasing their riches is by taking advantage of men in distress who may safely be dominated and bullied. See appendix at the end of the surah.

146. The devastating propensities of usury are visible to every eye. The evils attendant on it are neither few nor far between—the collousness it engenders, the profligacy it lets loose, the greed it encourages, the jealousy it breeds, the misery it entails, the abjectness it inculcates, an so on. Yet it is Islam alone that has the unique distinction of declaring this pernicious practice illegal absolutely and unconditionally. Greece and Rome both groaned heavily under its yoke, but none of their legislators, like the economists of modern Europe, thought of banning it altogether. In Greece, 'the bulk of the population . . . became gradually indebted to the rich to such an extent that they were practically slaves.' And 'usury had given all the power of the state to a small plutocracy.' (EBr. XXVII. p. 812, 11th Ed.) The Romans fared still worse. 'The attempt to regulate the rate of interest utterly failed. In the course of two or three centuries the small free farmers were utterly destroyed. By the pressure of war and taxes they were all driven into debt, and debt ended practically, if not technically, in slavery.' (ib.) With all these horrors, experienced and patiently borne, nobody ventured to eradicated the evil root and branch. The utmost that a Solon among the ancients or a Bacon among the moderns could advise was to 'grind the tooth of usury, that it bite not too much, that is to say, to regulate its rate, without attaching the slightest moral taint to the usurer. The Bible went no doubt many steps further inasmuch as it forbade the advance of usurious loans to the Israelities. (Ex. 22 : 25 : Dt. 23 : 19). But even the Biblical prohibition did not include usurious loans to non-Israelities. It is the Holy Qur'an which, to its everlasting glory, has forbidden usury in all its forms categorically.

147. (from usurious dealings and from thinking them legal).

148. (the profit of).

149. i.e., the interest already received prior to the prohibitation: and he shall not be called upon to repay what he has already taken. So far with the legal aspect of the question.

150. (of conscience).

151. (who alone knows whether one's penitence is genuine or faked). The legal, the outward, the public aspect being definitely settled, the moral, the inner, the private 'affair' of each individual rests with God.

152. (to usury).

153. i.e., those who consider these dealings still legal.

153-A. The great Prophet Muhammad—peace be unto him—with inspired insight saw the harm and misery caused by the wretched tribe of money-lenders and enjoined the faithful not to lend money on interest. Certainly one of the wisest of economic laws. Economists have noted the fact that in countries where high rates of interests are permitted industry and commerce do not flourish. This fact is best exemplified in the U.S.A. where the laws of usury are not uniform throughout the States. In different States the legal rates of interest vary all the way from 3 per cent to 9 per cent per annum and it is noticeable that in the States where the rate of interest is low, commerce and industry flourish and the people are more prosperous; while in the other States, especially in those where 7 per cent and more are allowed, it is not so.

154. (invariably in the Hereafter; and sometimes also in this world).

155. i.e., he who still holds usury legal.

156. i.e., he who still has usurious dealings.

157. (in the Hereafter).

158. (when the prohibition was made known).

159. (for belief implies obedience to the Divine Law).

160. i.e., war will be declared upon you by the Prophet and the Muslims. Cf. the teaching of the OT:—'(He) hath given forth upon usury, and hath taken increase; shall he then live? He shall not live: . . . he shall surely die; his blood shall be upon him.' (Ezk. 18: 13.) On this passage of the OT, the comment of the Talmud is, "The money-lender is compared to a murderer." 'The Mishnah includes the usurer among those who are disqualified from giving evidence in a court of law.' (ERE. XII. p. 558). And among the Jews of the 20th century 'the trade of usury is looked upon with shame, and the usurer is stigmatised as a reproach to his people.' (ib.) 'The Book of Islam contains so many other prohibitory injunctions, but words so strong as the above have not been used in any other injunction. The Prophet too made great efforts to eradicate this evil of ribā. The treaty made with the Christians of Najrān contained a definite clause which laid down that if they would indulge in transaction involving ribā the treaty would become automatically null and void' (AAM).

161. (from usurious transactions, and mend your ways). 'The Banū Mughīra were famous money-lenders of Arabia. After the conquest of Makka the Prophet wrote to his 'āmil to declare all the sums due to them on account of ribā as unlawful and to wage war against them if they persisted in their demands for the same. On the day of the last Haj performed by him, the Prophet declared that all sums due on account of ribā since the days of Jāhiliya were cancelled and that he himself set an example by declaring the similar dues of his uncle 'Abbās as cancelled. He went to the length of saying that all the parties to a transaction involving ribā—even the transcriber and the witnesses—deserved the curse of Allah! All these injunctions do not imply that the form of interest known as usury alone was to be abolished and other forms to be maintained. They really aimed at eradicating the mentality, the ethical standards, the culture and the economic organization of the capitalistic system and to establish a new system in which niggardliness should give place to charity, selfishness to sympathy and co-operation, ribā to zakāt, banking to bait-ul-māl and thus to obviate the circumstances which may give rise to co-operative societies, insurance companies and provident funds.' (AAM).

162. (others, by demanding from them more than the amount lent). This, when a Muslim lends.

163. (yourselves, by having to pay more than the sum borrowed). This, when a Muslim borrows.

164. i.e., the debtor.

165. i.e., until he is in easy circumstances. 'The regulation does great credit to Muhammad, and is yet carried out in practice by many of his followers.' (Wherry).

166. (your loan altogether as alms). A practical lesson in humanity and human sympathy.

167. (the reward you will merit thereby). 'That the Prophet did much to put down injustice and oppression, no one can deny; and in his enactments concerning the treatment of debtors we have another proof to this.' (Roberts, Social Laws of the Qoran, p. 101). 'The law of the Qoran as well as the enactments of the Muhammedan doctors, when compared with those of the Old Testament and of Hammurabi are lenient and just. And especially so when we further compare them with the Roman law of debt, according to which a debtor might even be put to death, and where the cruel exactions of creditors several times led to serious disturbances.' (ib. p. 103).

وَهُمْ لَا يُظْلَمُونَ ۝ يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا إِذَا تَدَايَنتُم بِدَيْنٍ إِلَىٰ أَجَلٍ مُّسَمًّى فَاكْتُبُوهُ ۚ وَلْيَكْتُب

281. (واتقوا . . . يظلمون) And fear the Day when you shall be brought back to Allah, then each soul shall be repaid in full what he has earned and they[168] shall not be wronged.

SECTION 39

282. (يايها الذين ... عليم) O you who believe! when you borrow one from another for a time stated, write it down[169], and let a scribe write it down justly between you, and let not the scribe refuse to write according as Allah has taught him. So let him write then, and let the debtor dictate, and let him fear Allah, his Lord, and diminish not aught of it[170]. But if he who oweth is witless[171] or infirm[172] or unable to dictate[173], then let his guardian[174] dictate justly. And call to witness two witnesses of your men[175], and if the two be not men, then a man and two women[176] of those you agree upon as witnesses, so that if one of the twain errs[177], then the other will remind her[178]. And let not the witnesses refuse when they are called on. And be not loth to write it[179] down, be it small or big, with its term: this is most equitable in the sight of Allah and most upright for testimony, and likelier that you will not be in doubt—unless it be a transaction concluded on the spot between you[180]; for then there shall be no blame on you if you do not write it down. And call witnesses when you are transacting business with one another; and let not the scribe come to harm nor the witness[181]; and if you do[182], surely it shall be ungodliness in you[183]. Fear Allah; and Allah teaches you[184]; and Allah is the Knower of everything[185].

283. (و ان كنتم ... عليم) And if you be journeying and you do not find a scribe, then let there be a pledge taken; then, if one of you entrusts the other[186], let the one who is entrusted[187] discharge his trust[188], and let him fear Allah, his Lord. And do not withhold the testimony[189]; and whatsoever withholdeth it, his heart surely is sinful. And Allah is the Knower of what you do[190].

169. (in a document).

170. i.e. of what he owes.

171. سفيه may also signify, ignorant of the ordinances, or statutes; one who does not dictate well and does not know what dictation is.' (LL).

172. i.e., either of an immature age or senile.

173. i.e., dumb, for instance, or a foreigner, ignorant of the language of the land.

174. i.e., whoever manages his affairs, whether his father, heir or some one else.

175. i.e., from among the Muslims. They must be adults, of unimpaired reason, free men (not slaves), and of good character. Disputes are to be decided on the testimony of these witnesses, and not on the strength of the written documents, the role of which is only secondary or subsidiary.

176. In the Jewish code the testimony of a woman is inadmissible. 'The witnesses must be men, not women or minors' (ET. p. 326). 'Let not the testimony of women be admitted, on account of the levity and boldness of their sex' ("Ant". IV. 8:15). 'The witness must be a man, not a woman' (JE. V. p. 277).

177. (in her memory).

178. Compare the findings of modern science in regard to the status of female testimony:—'In women deception is almost physiological . . . The same fact is more coarsely and ungraciously stated in the proverbs of many nations, and in some countries it has led to the legal testimony of women being placed on a lower footing than that of men.' (Havelock Ellis, Man and Woman, p. 196) Lombroso and Ferrero actually regard deception as being 'physiological' in woman . . . The evidence of profound psychologists, the substance of myths, the content of national proverbs, the personal experience, in short, of all those who have learnt to know woman generation after generation, all point to this conclusion, that there is a certain duplicity and unscrupulousness in their nature.' (Ludovici, Woman, p. 281-82) 'The fact that women are difficult to deal with under cross-examination is well known among lawyers, and their skill in drawing red-herrings across the path of any enquiry directed against themselves, makes them stubborn and evasive witnesses at all times when they have anything to conceal.' (ib. p. 320). 'We are again and again forced to admit that a woman is not in a position to judge objectively, without being influenced by her emotions.' (Bauer, op. cit. I p. 289). And compare also an observation of Schopenhauer: 'In a court of justice women are more often found guilty of perjury than men. It is indeed to be generally questioned whether they should be allowed to take an oath at all.' On the suggestibility of women see also Sidis' Psychology of Suggestion, pp. 362-363.

179. i.e., the transaction.

180. i.e., hand-to-hand; not on credit. ادارة is, 'The giving and taking, from hand to hand without delay.' And the phrase in the text means, 'Ready merchandise, which ye give and take among yourselves, from hand to hand, without delay i.e. not on credit.' (LL).

181. (nor are they to be unnecessarily inconvenienced in any way).

182. (such harm).

183. i.e. it will be counted in you as a crime.

184. (all that is to your good). Commercial morality is here taught on the highest plane and yet in the most practical manner, both as regards the bargains to be made, the evidence to be provided, the doubts to be avoided, and the duties and rights of scribes and witnesses. Probity even in worldly matters is to be not a mere matter of convenience or policy but a matter of conscience and religious duty. Even our every-day transactions are to be carried out as in the presence of God.' (AYA).

185. (so He knows the obedient from the rebellious, and will requite each accordingly).

186. (and deposits a thing with another on trust).

187. (and who has now become a trustee or depositary in the legal sense).

188. This forbids all embezzlement and breach of trust.

189. (either by suppressing it altogether or by twisting or distorting, as both have the effect of concealing the truth). The injunction is of general application, and extends to all juristic acts, such as marriage, dower, divorce, mortgage, will, inheritance and the like.

190. (so no sinner can ever elude Him.)

284. (لله ما . . . قدير) Allah's is whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth, and whether you reveal what is in your mind[191] or hide it, Allah will reckon with you therefor[192], then He will forgive whom He will[193] and torment whom He will[194], and Allah is potent over everything[195].

285. (آمن الرسول . . . اليك المصير) The messenger believes in what is sent down to him from his Lord[196], and so do the believers. They all believe in Allah[197] and His angels[198] and His Books[199] and His messengers[200], saying 'we discriminate not against any of His messengers'[201]. And they say, 'we hear and obey; Thy forgiveness, our Lord! and to Thee is our return'.

286. (لايكلف . . . الكفرين) Allah charges not a soul excepting according to its capacity. For it shall be the good it earns[202], and against it the evil it earns[203]: Our Lord! reckon with us not if we forget or err. Our Lord! burden us not like unto those Thou burdenedest before us[204]. Our Lord! impose not on us that for which we have not strength. And pardon us, forgive us, and have mercy on us. Thou art our Master, so make us triumph over the disbelieving people[205].

191. (of deliberate evil intentions).

192. It is only deliberate and voluntary evil intentions, as distinguished from mere fleeting and involuntary evil thoughts that are punishable.

193. (in the exercise of His prerogative of Mercy).

194. (in order to meet the ends of justice and retribution).

195. (and therefore He acts in every case, without the intervention of any possible 'Saviour').

196. The first to believe in the Message is the apostle himself.

197. i.e., in His Existence, His Soleness, His Unity, and in the perfection of His Attributes.

198. (Who are not sub-deities or godlings).

199. (which are not human compilations--fruits of human ingenuity).

200. (who are not God's 'Sons' or 'Incarnations').

201. (so far as the fact of apostleship is concerned by accepting some and rejecting the others unlike the Jews who receive Moses and reject Jesus, also unlike the Christians, who receive the prophets of Israel but reject the holy Prophet of Islam).

202. (by choice), So no one shall be held answerable for such thoughts and feelings as intrude themselves on one's mind. All non-deliberate, non-voluntary states of mind are excluded from accountability. Each one is responsible for what he acquires, earns.

203. (by choice). So every one must win his own redemption. In Islam there is neither an 'original sin' nor 'universal redemption'. Every individual must work out the propensities of his soul—his own possibilities of spiritual success or failure.

204. (and the Jews in particular). Cf. the NT:— 'Why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?' (Ac. 15:10).

205. (who are Thy enemies). انصرنا على is not 'help us against——', as generally mistranslated, but 'grant us victory or conquest over——'.

APPENDIX

(See verse 275, Chapter II)

By Maulana ABUL A'ALA MAUDOODI

Editor : Tarjumān-ul-Qur'ān, Lahore

Bai' is a transaction in which the seller offers a commodity for sale to the buyer for some consideration as price by paying which the buyer takes possession of that commodity. The seller may have himself produced or manufactured the commodity or bought it of another person. In either case he charges an additional sum over and above the principal that he invested in producing or procuring the thing as compensation for his own labour which forms his profit.

Now let us see what is ribā. A man lends his capital to another on the condition that after a certain time he would charge a fixed amount of money in addition to his capital. This additional amount, which is interest or ribā, is a consideration not of any labour or commodity but of the time for which the principal has been borrowed. Even in bai' if the payment of the price of a commodity is deferred on the condition that in the case of non-payment on the fixed date the price will be increased, this will mean interest or ribā.

Ribā, in essence, is thus an amount charged on the principal as a consideration for the time during which the principal is to be used, and it consists of three elements, viz., addition to the principal, the rate of that addition according to time, and the payment of the additional amount being a condition of the bargain. All transactions involving these three elements come under the category of ribā.

Between the buyer and seller there is an equal exchange of profit, for the buyer utilises the commodity purchased and the seller gains the profit of his labour, time and intellect used by him in the production of the commodity. In contrast to this in the transactions involving ribā, the exchange of profits is not equitable and reciprocal. The creditor receives a fixed amount of money which is a sure profit to him, but the debtor has only the consideration of time which is not a sure source of profit. If he has borrowed money for his personal use the time element is of no use to him. If he has borrowed it for the purpose of trade, agriculture or industry, the time element is equally likely to cause harm or give benefit. The creditor is entitled to the fixed profit whether the debtor gains or loses. The transaction thus involves one party in loss and is a source of gain to the other or while it is a source of sure and definite gain to one it is a source of uncertain and indefinite gain to another.

There is another very important difference between bai' and ribā. While in a commercial transaction the seller may gain the maximum amount of profit which has to be paid by the buyer only once, in a transaction involving ribā the creditor receives profit over his capital continuously, the amount of the profit increasing as the time passes. The profit of the debtor gained out of the capital borrowed will be definite, the profit of the creditor will be indefinite and may engulf within its octopus-like grip all that the debtor possesses besides the capital borrowed by him.

The third important difference between bai' and ribā is that while in bai' the transaction is complete with the exchange of commodity and price, and the buyer has not to return anything to the seller which is likely to be consumed (in the case of the renting of a house or land the same is not to be consumed in any way and is returned intact), in the transaction involving ribā, the debtor, after having utilised or consumed the capital, has to produce it anew for repayment to the creditor along with an additional amount of interest.

Again, while in commercial, industrial or agricultural transactions a man reaps the profit of his labour and intellect; in the transactions involving ribā he has a lion's share in the income of his debtor by lending him his surplus capital. He is not a proportionate partner both in gain and loss, but he is a partner entitled to profit irrespective of the fact whether the debtor is benefiting by the transaction or not, and in the case of gain, without any reference to the extent of that gain.

Such are the reasons on account of which God has allowed bai' and disallowed ribā. There are ethical reasons too, besides these. Ribā inculcates niggardliness, selfishness, cruelty, worship of wealth and other similar vices. It destroys the spirit of sympathy and mutual help and co-operation. It exhorts people to accumulate wealth and to spend it in their personal interests only. It checks the free circulation of wealth in the community. It creates a channel through which wealth flows from the poor to the rich. Owing to it the wealth of the community accumulates in the coffers of a selected few which ultimately involves the whole community in economic ruin.

As is well known to the expert in the principles of economic science, all the above effects of ribā are natural. Nor can anyone deny that the ethical, social and economic system that Islam propounds has no place in itself for ribā which is in conflict with every detail of that system. Even the remotest and the most innocent form of ribā is derogatory to the fair face of that system. That is why the Book of Islam so forcefully declares:

> O you who believe! fear Allah, and give up what remains of (your demand for) usury, if you are indeed believers. If you do it not, then take notice of "war" from Allah and His Prophet. And if you repent (for your past wrongs), you shall have your capital back. Deal not unjustly (to your fellow-men) and you shall not be dealt with unjustly.

1. (الم) Alif—Lam—Mim[207].

2. (الله . . . القيوم) Allah! there is no God but He[208], the Living[209], the Sustainer[210]

3. (نزل . . . الانجيل) He has revealed[211] the book to thee with truth[212], confirming what went before it[213], and He sent down the Tawrāt[214] and Injil[215].

4. (من . . . انتقام) Aforetime, for a guidance to the people[216], and sent down the Criterion[217]. Surely those who deny the signs of Allah[218], for them shall be a terrible torment, and Allah is Mighty[219], Lord of Retribution[220].

5. (ان الله . . . السماء) Surely Allah! naught is hidden from Him[221] in the earth or in the heaven[222].

6. (هوالذى . . . الحكيم) He it is who[223] fashions you[224] in the wombs[225] as He will[226]; there is no God but He[227], the Mighty[228], the Wise[229]!

206. In the tenth year of Hijrah, a deputation of fourteen leading men from the Christian colony of Najrān, in the south of Arabia, waited upon the Prophet in Madina. He had an argument with them on the Divinity of Jesus, and they were completely confounded. Early sections of this surah have frequent allusions to the fatuity of the Christian doctrine.

207. See P. I. n. 28.

208. Note that the Qur'an does not say that Allah is the greatest among gods, the chief god. It affirms that no other gods exist at all. The gods so-called are nothings, non-entities, figments of imagination. See also n. 19 above.

209. i. e., the Deathless; the Ever-living. See n. 20 above.

210. i. e., One who is Self-subsisting and by whom all things subsist. See n. 21 above.

211. نزّل as distinguished from انزال is not mere 'sent down,' but sent down text after text by means of exact verbal revelation; and this literal inspiration is a distinguishing feature of the Qur'an.

212. (and propriety, O Prophet!) i. e., with perfect arguments and clear proofs; and at proper time, and at proper place. The primary significance of حق is 'Suitableness to the requirements of wisdom, justice, right, or rightness, truth, reality, or fact, or to the exigencies of the case.' (LL.)

213. (of God's revelations).

214. Which is certainly not identical with the OT, or even with the Pentateuch, but is synonymous with Torah, of which only fragments can at best be found in the extant Pentateuch. What the Qur'an commends as a Holy Writ is certainly not the same book of which it is freely and openly stated that it is 'the work' not of God but of 'of godly men.' See P. I. nn. 323, 340.

215. Which is not at all identical with the NT or even the Four Gospels of the Christian Church. 'Injīl,' according to the teachings of Islām, was a Book sent down on Jesus (on whom be peace!), not a collection of reports and stories about him compiled at dubious dates by unknown persons,—'an undesigned and unforeseen product of the apostolic age.' (EBr. III. p. 513) The NT, according to the Christian belief, far from being the Revealed Word of God, 'was or is no "book" at all, properly speaking, but a collection of writings, a great many of which were at the outset not destined for publication and multiplication .... Sentences may have been abbreviated or expressions changed. It is similar with the Gospels. When the first collection of sayings of Jesus or the first narrative of His deeds was set down in writing, the next who copied it might feel inclined to enlarge it or to change any detail according to the form in which he had heard it, without any bad intention .... It is not possible here to count up all the ways in which errors may originate.' (DB. IV. pp. 732, 735). In the words of Bishop Gore, 'it was a calamity that verbal infallibility was ever claimed for them (the Gospel Documents). (Renan, Life of Jesus, Intro. p. XII)

216. (addressed by the said Books).

217. فرقان is 'anything that makes a separation, or distinction, between truth and falsity. Hence الفرقان signifies the Kuran ...... And proof, evidence or demonstration.' (LL) Here it may mean:

(i) either the Qur'an, since it distinguishes between true and false,
(ii) or the Divine Scriptures in general,
(iii) or miracles, with which every prophet is gifted.

218. i.e., in the clear proofs and evidences of His unity.

219. i.e., able to requite; One whom none can prevent from punishing, unlike a mere mortal, who could not save himself from being arrested and, to all appearance, crucified.

220. i.e., Inflicter of retribution on the guilty. Ends of righteousness and equity demand that God must be Just even before being Generous. This attribute of His, like other Divine attributes, will appear in its fulness on the Day of Requital. The fact of His being Merciful, surely does not mean that He is incapable of strong likes and dislikes. He is, above all, a Person, and not an inert First Cause. In Him uprightness is not a passive feeling; it is a character. He must as surely punish the wicked as reward the righteous. His loving-kindness, infinite no doubt, is not to be had at the expense of His justice.

221. i. e., His knowledge is all-comprehensive; nothing, not the smallest detail of anything can escape it. This not only contradicts the heathen notion that even God's knowledge is imperfect or partial, but also negatives the foolish idea of some ancient philosophers who held that God knew only the universals, and not the particulars, since a knowledge of the things which change, implied a change in God's knowledge. He knows everything, great or small, universal or particular.

222. (How could Jesus then with his limited human knowledge be even conceived of as God?) 'Earth' and 'heaven' are only mentioned because the senses cannot go beyond them.

223. (and not any other god or godling). In the Hindu mythology there is a special deity named Tvashtri the fashioner, 'whose special office it is to form the foetus in the womb.' (Barth, Religious of India, p. 21)

224. (O mankind!)

225. (Of your mothers).

226. (Whether with or without the father's seed). Just as His knowledge is all-comprehensive, His power of creation and formation too is absolute, unlimited, and all-comprehensive.

227. (and His four chief attributes of Life, Sustenance, Knowledge and Power, all absolute, perfect and unrestricted have already been affirmed.

228. i.e., Able to inflict retribution on the guilty any moment.

229. (and so He defers retribution to its most proper time).

فِي قُلُوبِهِمْ زَيْغٌ فَيَتَّبِعُونَ مَا تَشَابَهَ مِنْهُ ابْتِغَاءَ الْفِتْنَةِ وَابْتِغَاءَ تَأْوِيلِهِ ۗ وَمَا يَعْلَمُ تَأْوِيلَهُ إِلَّا اللَّهُ ۗ وَالرَّاسِخُونَ
فِي الْعِلْمِ يَقُولُونَ آمَنَّا بِهِ كُلٌّ مِنْ عِنْدِ رَبِّنَا ۗ وَمَا يَذَّكَّرُ إِلَّا أُولُو الْأَلْبَابِ ۝ رَبَّنَا لَا تُزِغْ قُلُوبَنَا بَعْدَ إِذْ هَدَيْتَنَا

7. (هوالذی . . . الالباب) He it is Who has sent down to thee the Book[230] in which some verses are firmly constructed[231]—they are the essence of the Book[232]; and others consimilar[233]—But those in whose hearts is a deviation[234] follow only what is consimilar therein[235], seeking dissension[236] and seeking to misinterpret[237] the same whereas none knows their interpretation[238] save Allah[239]. And the firmly-grounded in knowledge[240] say, 'we believe in it[241], it is all from our Lord[242];' and none receives admonition save men of understanding[243].

8. (ربنا . . . الوهاب) 'Our Lord! suffer not our hearts to deviate[244] after that Thou hast guided us[245], and bestow on us from Thy presence mercy[246]. Surely it is Thou Who art the Bestower[247]!

9. (ربنا . . . الميعاد) Our Lord! Surely Thou art the assembler of mankind on a Day of which there is no doubt. Surely Allah does not fail His promise[248].

SECTION 2

10. (ان الذین . . . النار) Surely those who disbelieve, neither their riches nor their offspring will avail them aught against Allah[249], and it is they who shall become the fuel of the Fire.

11. (کداب . . . العقاب) Like[250] Fir'awn's[251] folk and those before them[252]. They belied Our signs, so Allah seized them for their sins[253]. And Allah is Terrible in chastising.

---

230. (O prophet!)

231. i.e., unambiguous, free from all obscurity, and admitting of one interpretation.

232. أم is 'The source, origin, foundation, or basis, of a thing, its stay, support, or efficient cause of subsistence. Anything to which other things that are next thereto are collected together, or adjoined . . . . . . the main, or chief, part of a thing; the main body thereof' (LL). Here it signifies the fundamental part of the Book, its essence, comprising its principal tenets and central doctrines in consonance with which other passages, less clear and less definite, are to be interpreted and understood. And the principle enunciated here holds good of every other Scripture. All indistinct, figurative, and ambiguous passages occurring in the Taurāt and Injīl are to be understood in the light of, and in accordance with, those others that are clear, definite and unequivocal.

233. i.e., open to various interpretations; those verses whose drift is not clear, owing either to their being too general or to their seeming opposition to some clear text.

234. زيغ means a doubting, and a declining, or deviating, from the truth. الزيغ deviation from the truth, or the right way of belief or conduct.' (LL)

235. (and adhere to a false interpretation thereof in complete disregard of what is positive, clear and definite in the fundamental texts).

236. (and mischief thereby). i. e., seeking to draw men away from the religion of God by suggesting doubts and difficulties, and making the equivocal texts contradict the unequivocal.

237. i.e., seeking to explain it to mean what they want; seeking the text to fit in with their own notions, their whims and personal desires.

238. i.e., true import and full significance of the ambiguous texts.

239. (and He can give that true interpretation either in the Qur'an itself, or through the sunnah of His prophet). Hence the importance of the sunnah as, next to the Qur'an, the source of Islamic law.

240. i.e., the well-versed and steadfast in Divine truth.

241. i.e., in the Qur'an.

242. (and so there can be no discrepancy or contradiction in His work). With this belief those well-grounded in the knowledge refer all such passages to the principle laid down above, and interpret them accordingly.

243. i.e., those who exercise their commonsense. Reason also commends this course of interpreting the equivocal in the light of the unequivocal.

244. (from the right course, as has happened in the case of the 'people of the Book' formerly). Thus cry the 'firmly-grounded in knowledge' in true humility and with befitting piety.

245. (to the right path of interpretation).

246. i.e., keep us rightly guided to the very end; help us towards abiding in the truth, unlike the Jews and Christians who are addicted to misinterpreting their Scriptures.

247. (of all gifts and favours). It shall be remembered that whatever good comes to men from God it comes as a mere favour, and not as a matter of right on our part.

248. His very Divinity negatives such a supposition. Note the change, to magnify and intensify what is promised, from the second person to the third.

249. (as has been the false belief of certain heathen peoples).

250. i.e., like the case of. Connected with the last words of the preceding verse the phrase means: 'it shall not avail them, as it did not avail in the case of—'

351. (the persecutor of Moses). All his efforts to avert the doom not only failed signally but directly led to his destruction.

252. i.e., ungodly nations of antiquity.

253. (and extirpated them).

قُل لِّلَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا سَتُغْلَبُونَ وَتُحْشَرُونَ إِلَىٰ جَهَنَّمَ ۚ وَبِئْسَ الْمِهَادُ ۝ قَدْ كَانَ لَكُمْ آيَةٌ فِي فِئَتَيْنِ الْتَقَتَا
فِئَةٌ تُقَاتِلُ فِي سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ وَأُخْرَىٰ كَافِرَةٌ يَرَوْنَهُم مِّثْلَيْهِمْ رَأْيَ الْعَيْنِ ۚ وَاللَّهُ يُؤَيِّدُ بِنَصْرِهِ مَن يَشَاءُ ۗ إِنَّ فِي
ذَٰلِكَ لَعِبْرَةً لِّأُولِي الْأَبْصَارِ ۝ زُيِّنَ لِلنَّاسِ حُبُّ الشَّهَوَاتِ مِنَ النِّسَاءِ وَالْبَنِينَ وَالْقَنَاطِيرِ الْمُقَنطَرَةِ مِنَ الذَّهَبِ
وَالْفِضَّةِ وَالْخَيْلِ الْمُسَوَّمَةِ وَالْأَنْعَامِ وَالْحَرْثِ ۗ ذَٰلِكَ مَتَاعُ الْحَيَاةِ الدُّنْيَا ۖ وَاللَّهُ عِندَهُ حُسْنُ الْمَآبِ ۝ قُلْ
أَؤُنَبِّئُكُم بِخَيْرٍ مِّن ذَٰلِكُمْ ۚ لِلَّذِينَ اتَّقَوْا عِندَ رَبِّهِمْ جَنَّاتٌ تَجْرِي مِن تَحْتِهَا الْأَنْهَارُ خَالِدِينَ فِيهَا

12. (قل . . . المهاد) Say thou to them who disbelieve[254], 'soon[255] shall you be overcome[256], and gathered unto Hell—an evil couch'.

13. (قد . . . الابصار) Indeed there has been for you a sign[257] in the two hosts[258] that met[259], one host fighting in the way of Allah, and the other disbelieving, beholding themselves[260] with their own eyes[261], twice as many as they[262]. And Allah aids with His succour whom He will. Surely in this[263] is a lesson[264] for the men of insight[265].

14. (زين . . . المآب) Fair-seeming to mankind[266] is made the love of pleasurable things[267] from women and offspring and treasures hoarded[268] of gold and silver and horses branded and cattle and tilth[269]. All that is the enjoyment[270] of the life of this world[271], and with Allah is the best resort[272].

254. (and are unceasing in their hostility to Islam, O Prophet).

255. i.e., in this very world; your chastisement is near at hand, and you shall have not to wait long.

256. (by the little band of the Muslims whom in your vanity you utterly despise). The threat is probably addressed to the pagans of Makka who received a crushing defeat at the battle of Badr; or it may refer to the Jews of Madina, who openly boasted of their financial resourcefulness and military skill, but were soon to be exterminated. In either case the fulfilment of the prophecy, so bold and definite and yet so opposed to the apparent realities at the time, was in itself a singular vindication of the holy Prophet's claims.

257. (demonstrating the power of Almighty and the truth of His Prophet's claims).

258. i.e., the Muslims and the Makkan pagans.

259. (each other at Badr in the second year of the Hijrah era). 'There were 950 men of the Meccans; more than threefold the number of the Muslim force. They were mounted on 700 camels and 100 horses, the horsemen all clad in mail'. (Muir op cit. p. 221). The Battle of Badr was indeed a critical point in the career of Mohammad . . . . . . Not only was a most decisive victory gained over a force three times his own in number but the slain on the enemy's side included in a remarkable manner many of his most influential opponents. In addition to the chief men killed or made prisoner, Abu Lahab, who was not present in the battle, died a few days after the return of the fugitive army—as if the decree marking out the enemies of the Prophet was inevitable.' (ib. pp. 235, 236) Admissions like these by a writer whose bias against Islam is so palpable, are an eloquent commentary on the battle of Badr being a 'sign' or a 'token'.

260. (as they actually were).

261. (and not fancying or imagining).

262. i.e., the Muslims. The pagans found themselves, with clear face-to-face vision several times the number of the Muslims, and yet were completely routed.

263. i.e., in this crushing defeat of the powerful confederacy of the Makkan state at the hands of ill-fed, ill-clad and ill-equipped Muslims.

264. (by which one could take warning or example).

265. i.e., for those who make use of their insight.

266. (for the purpose of their trial).

267. Or 'desires' . . . . . . شهوة is 'Desire, or longing, or yearning of the soul for a thing ; . . . . . . sometimes it is applied to the object of desire or thing desired.' (LL) It is agreeably with the latter usage that the word is used in the plural.

268. Or 'hoards or hoarded,' قناطير مقنطرة is, 'Much riches collected together.' (LL).

269. All these are mentioned as instances of the objects of pleasure or desire.

270. متاع has two entirely different meanings. In one sense, it is provision, goods or chattles; in another sense, it is enjoyment. It is in the latter sense that it is used here.

271. (which is itself perishable). So all these ephemeral pleasures are but empty forms before the lasting bliss of the Hereafter.

272. i.e., with Him are the real and imperishable pleasures.

وازواج مطهرة ورضوان من الله والله بصير بالعباد ﴿١٥﴾ الذين يقولون ربنا اننا امنا فاغفر لنا ذنوبنا وقنا

15. (قل . . . بالعباد) Say thou[273], 'shall I declare to you what is far better than these[274]? For those who fear Allah are gardens with their Lord[275], beneath which rivers flow where they shall abide, and spouses clean[276], and goodwill of Allah' [277]. And Allah is Beholder of His servants[278]—

16. (الذين . . عذاب النار) Who[279] say[280], 'Our Lord! surely we have believed, so forgive us our sins, and keep us from the torment of the Fire,——

17. (الصابرين . . . بالاسحار) The steadfast ones and the truthful ones and the devout ones and the spenders in charity[281], and the praying ones at early dawns[282] for forgiveness.

18. (شهد الله . . . الحكيم) Allah bears witness[283]—and also the angels[284] and those endowed with knowledge[285]—that there is no God but He, the Maintainer of equity[286]; there is no God but He[287], the Mighty[288], the Wise[289].

19. (ان الدين . . . الحساب) Surely the true faith with Allah[290] is Islam[291], and those who were given the Book disputed not[292] among themselves save after the knowledge had come to them[293], out of spite among themselves[294]. And he who disbelieves in the revelations of Allah, then surely Allah is Swift in reckoning.

273. (O Prophet !).

274. i.e., infinitely better in quality, quantity and duration than the ephemeral pleasures of the world.

275. 'And his mercy is on them that fear him from generation to generation.' (Lk. 1 : 50) 'Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh uda spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.' (2. Co. 7 : 1)' . . . . . . and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great.' (Re. 11 : 18).

276. (from all pollutions). See P. I. n. 108.

277. (which is the most supreme bliss conceivable).

278. (and He shall recompense each accordingly).

279. Case in apposition with 'those who fear Allah' in the preceding verse.

280. (as befits men of true piety).

281. (in God's cause). i.e., almsgivers.

282. 'Early dawns' are particularized as prayer at those hours is rather irksome, although the mind is refreshed and spiritual faculties are purer.

283. (in the old Scriptures as well as through the ever-fresh cosmic order). He proves His unity, first, by establishing the evidence in nature, which indicate it; secondly, by revealing the holy texts which declare it.

284. (who far from being gods or demi-gods are the first and foremost confessors of His unity).

285. i.e., men of true religious insight.

286. (in His creation), i.e. absolutely just in His distribution of gifts and His judgements.

287. Note the frequency with which this formula of Divine unity is repeated in this chapter, presumably to emphasise the doctrine of monotheism in the face of Christian Trinity and tri-theism.

288. i.e., of transcending power.

289. i.e., of transcending wisdom.

290. i.e., acceptable to Him; true in His sight. 'The only true religion in God's sight is el-Islam.' (WGAL. II. p. 264).

291. (and Islam alone). Islam is the technical name of the creed preached by the holy Prophet. It has been the religion of all prophets in all climes, other religions (so-called) being only so many deviations from it. No religion is acceptable with God save Islam, which consists in acknowledging the Unity and Soleness of God and embracing the Code which Muhammad (peace be on him!) brought. Literally, and in practice, it is 'self-surrender.' 'Submission, absolute surrender to the divine will was a fit designation of the faith revealed to Abraham Ishmael, and the Arabs.' (Torrey, Jewish Foundation of Islam, p. 104). Islam, the name applied by Muhammad himself to his religion, means the religion of resignation, submission to the will, the service, the commands of God'. (Klein, The Religion of Islam, p. 1).

292. (with the Muslims and among themselves). Some accepted the Qur'ān, others rejected it altogether, and yet others said that it was meant for the Arabs only.

293. (of truth). i.e., arguments and evidences supporting it.

294. (and out of desire for supremacy over the Muslim Arabs). It was a matter of deep envy to the Israelities—or of injured national pride, as they thought,—that the great and highly honoured gift of prophethood should now be transferred from them to the race of Ismail (on him be peace!)

فان اسلموا فقد اهتدوا وان تولوا فانما عليك البلغ والله بصير بالعباد ﴿٢٠﴾ ان الذين يكفرون بايت الله ويقتلون
النبين بغير حق ويقتلون الذين يامرون بالقسط من الناس فبشرهم بعذاب اليم ﴿٢١﴾ اولئك الذين حبطت

دينهم ما كانوا يفترون ﴿٢٤﴾ فكيف اذا جمعنهم ليوم لا ريب

20. (فان . . . بالعباد) So[295] if they contend with thee[296], say thou, 'I have surrendered myself to Allah[297] and also he who follows me[298]. And say thou to those who have been given the Book and to the illiterates[299], 'accept Islam[300]. Then if they accept Islam, they are indeed guided[301]; but if they turn away then upon thee is only the preaching[302], and Allah is Beholder of His servants[303].

SECTION 3

21. (ان الذين . . . اليم) Surely those who disbelieve in the revelations of Allah and put to death the prophets without right[304] and kill those among mankind who enjoin equity[305] —announce thou to them a torment afflictive[306].

22. (اولئك . . . نصرين) These are they whose works have come to naught in this world and the Hereafter, nor shall they have helpers[307].

23. (الم . . . معرضون) Hast thou[308] not observed those given a portion of the Book[309] called to the Book[310] of Allah, that it may judge between them[311]? Then[312] a party of them turns away, unheeding[313].

24. (ذالك . . . يفترون) This is because[314] they say, 'the Fire shall not touch us save for a few days numbered[315]. And what they have been fabricating[316] has deluded them in their religion.

---

295. i.e., after every evidence has been established for the truth of Islam.

296. (regarding the truth of Islam, O Prophet !)

297. i.e., I have given over my whole soul and all my person to God. On its subjective side this is the essence of Islam—absolute surrender to the will of God. وجه literally is 'face or countenance اسلمت وجهي لله I resigned, or resign, myself to God, i.e., I became, or become, a Muslim. وجه here is used for the whole because it is the most noble part.' (L.L.).

298. (does the same), i.e., they have all become Muslims heart and soul.

299. (of Makka), i.e., the pagans who have no knowledge of the Scriptures. امی properly means, a gentile, as distinguished from an Israelite. 'Whence in a secondary, or tropical sense, a heathen; one not having a revealed scripture, so applied by those having a revealed scripture; and particularly an Arab, or in the proper language of the Arabs of or belonging to, or relating to, the nation (امة) of the Arabs, who did not write nor read; and therefore metaphorically applied to any one not knowing the art of writing nor that of reading.' (LL)

300. الف الاستفهام or the interrogative alif sometimes denotes command, as in this instance. So أأسلمتم is equivalent to أسلموا enter ye into the religion of Islam. (LL). 'This simple creed demands no great trial of faith, arouses as a rule no particular intellectual difficulties and is within the compass of the meanest intelligence . . . The first half of it enunciates a doctrine that is almost universally accepted by man as a necessary postulate, while the second half is based on a theory of man's relationship to God that is almost equally widespread, viz., that at intervals in the world's history God grants some revelation of Himself to men through the mouthpiece of inspired prophets.' (Arnold, Preaching of Islam, p. 413)

301. i. e., they have surely found guidance. "If this be Islam," asks Goethe, "do we not all live in Islam?" "Yes," answers Carlyle, "all of us that have any moral life, we all live so." 'I am often asked when and why I became a Moslem . . . It seems that I have always been a Moslem. This is not so strange when one remembers that Islam is the natural religion that a child left to itself would develop. Indeed, as a Western critic once described it, Islam is the religion of commonsense.' (Lady Cobbold, Pilgrimage to Mecca, p. XIII).

302. (of the Divine message, O Prophet!) The apostle has only to deliver the Message and to preach it, but has nothing to do with its results.

303. (and He shall recompense each accordingly). A promise to the faithful, and a threat to the infidels.

304. For the consistently rebellious attitude of the Jews towards the prophets of their own race, see P. I. nn. 267, 269, 270, 271.

305. 'They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly.' (Am. 5 : 10)

306. 'The wicked have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and to slay such as be of upright conversation. Their sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken.' (Ps. 37 : 14, 15).

307. (able to avert or even commute their punishment).

308. (O Prophet!)

309. (sufficient for the purpose of guidance). The reference is to the Jews and the 'Book' stands for God's Revealed Books in general.

310. i.e., Taurāt.

311. (concerning their religious differences and disputes).

312. ثُمَّ here implies distance not in time but in thought, since it was not to be expected that they would turn away from their own Book (Bdh). An expression of surprise at their behaviour.

313. (by old confirmed habit and refuse to accept the judgment of their own Book). Cf. the OT: 'And my people are bent to back-sliding from me: though they called them to the most High, none at all would exalt him. (HO. 11: 7). 'But where are thy gods that thou hast made thee? let them arise, if they can save thee in the time of thy trouble: for according to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah! Wherefore will ye plead with me? ye all have transgressed against me, saith the Lord. In vain have I smitten your children; they received no correction; your owns word hath devoured your prophets, like a destroying lion.' (Je. 2: 28-30)

314. i.e., their habitual backsliding persists because—.

315. 'We can see alike from the Gospels and from St. Paul how constantly the Jews had upon their lips, We have Abraham to our Father.' (DB. II. p. 606). See P. I. nn. 343, 344.

316. i.e., doctrines falsely attributed to God, such as the fiction that the Fire would not touch them save for certain days or that their fathers, the prophets, would intercede for them, or that God had promised Jacob that He would not punish his children except so far as the fulfilment of His oath required.

25. (فكيف ... يظلمون) How will it be then[317] when He gather them on the Day about which there is no doubt, and every soul shall be repaid what it has earned[318]; and they shall not be wronged[319].

26. (قل ... قدير) Say thou[320], 'O Allah, Sovereign of the dominion! Thou givest dominion to whom Thou wilt,[321] and Thou takest away dominion from whom Thou wilt[322]. Thou exaltest whom Thou wilt[323], and Thou abasest whom Thou wilt[324]. And in Thy hand is the good[325]; and surely Thou art Potent over everything[326]

27. (تولج ... حساب) Thou plungest night into day and Thou plungest day into night[327]; and Thou bringest forth the living from the lifeless[328], and Thou bringest forth the lifeless from the living[329]; and Thou providest for whom Thou wilt without stint[330].

28. (لا ... المصير) Let not the believers take to themselves the infidels as friends beside the believers[331], and he who does that, does not in aught belong to Allah[332], unless you[333] indeed fear from them a danger[334]. And Allah warms you of Himself[335] and to Allah is the last return[336].

317. (with them). The words indicate the magnitude of the evil which shall encompass them.

318. (either of good or of evil).

319. i.e., nobody's virtues shall be undervalued, nor shall anybody's misdeeds be over-estimated.

320. (O Prophet!)

321. Contrast with this the Hindu idea that the king 'is a great deity in human form:' (ERE. VII. p. 720) and that among 'eight sacred objects which must be reverenced, worshipped, and circumambulated sun-wise the eighth is a King.' (ib) In Islam, a king is a king, a mere man, not a godling. This strikes at the root of 'the Divine right of the king' and all forms of king-worship and emperor-worship—Pharaoh-worship of the Egyptians and Mikado-worship of the Japanese.

322. Contrasc with this simples Godlike teaching of Islam the amazing theories and grotesque practices of Christian Europe. 'The principle that kingship is "descendible in one sacred family" . . . . . . is not only still that of the British constitution, as that of all monarchical states, but is practically that of kingship from the beginning . . . . The crowning and anointing of the emperors, borrowed from Byzantium and traceable to the influence of the Old Testament, was imitated by lesser potentates; and this 'sacring' by ecclesiastical authority gave to the king a character of special sanctity . . . . . . In England it is not without significance that sacerdotal vestments . . . . continued to be among the insignia of the sovereign. Moreover, this sacrosanct character he aquired, not by virtue of his "sacring" but by hereditary right; the coronation, anointing and vesting were but the outward and visible symbol of a divine grace adherent to the sovereign by virtue of his title. (EBr., XV. p. 3010). And the half successful attempt for deification of himself by the pagan Julius Caesar in perhaps too well-known to be recapitulated. See EBr. IV, p. 524.

323. (and the prophetic office is the highest honour that can possibly be conferred on any individual or nation).

324. Withdrawal of prophetic office in the case of an individual being out of the question, in the context it can only refer to transference of that incomparable gift from Israel to another nation.

325. (of every description). And it is good that is to be sought, hence express mention of it, and not of evil which is equally in His hands.

326. (it is no wonder then, that the children of Isma'il hitherto weak and down-trodden, are now being raised to honour and glory, and a noble soul among them is elevated to the highest pitch of spiritual glory).

327. Both of which are created beings like all other things, and the notion of a 'night-deity' and 'day-deity' is preposterous.

228. i.e., as a bird from an egg.

329. i.e., as an egg from a bird.

330. One who is so Mighty and so Good is also Able to alternate humilitation and glory, and to bestow sovereignty as well as withdraw it.

331. i.e., neither to the exclusion of the Muslims, nor in addition to them. Friendship implies nearness of heart, and this sort of relationship with the infidels is absolutely forbidden to the Muslims. Such isolation from disintegrating forces is imperative as a prerequisite to the solidarity of the Islamic community. This, however, does not preclude affability of manners and politeness of speach.

232. i.e., he stands in no relationship to God worthy to be called friendship. Friendship with the enemies of God is a direct negation of friendship with God.

333. (O Muslims!)

334. (for yourselves). Real friendship in such circumstances is out of the question. Only an alliance is permitted in times of danger.

335. i.e., of His Judgment.

336. i.e., Him ultimately you will have to face; so do not expose yourselves to His wrath by breaking His commands and befriending His enemies.

29. (قل . . . قدير) Say thou[337]: whether you hide what is in your hearts or publish it Allah knows it[338]; and He knows what is in the heavens and in the earth[339]; and Allah is Potent over everything[340].

30. (يوم . . . بالعباد) The Day when each soul shall find presented[341] whatever it has worked of good and whatever it has worked of evil, it would like that there were between it and that Day a wide space[342]. And Allah warns you of Himself[343], Allah is Tender to His servants[344].

SECTION 4

31. (قل . . . رحيم) Say thou[345], 'if you[346], are wont to love Allah[347], then follow me[348], and Allah shall love you[349] and forgive you your sins[350]; and Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.

32. (قل . . . الكفرين) Say thou[351], 'Obey Allah and the messenger[352]; then if they turn away, surely Allah does not love the infidels[353].

33. (ان . . . العلمين) Surely did Allah choose Adam and Nūh[354] and the house of a Ibrāhīm[355] and the house of 'Imrān[356], above all worlds[357]—

34. (ذرية . . . عليم) The seed of one another[358]; and Allah is Heating[359], Knowing[360].

---

337. (O Prophet!)

338. i.e., unlike so many heathen gods, His knowledge is perfect, all-pervading, all-embracing; He is not to be beguiled by any of your excuses.

339. (venture not, therefore, to offend Him, since there can be no offence which He does not know).

340. (venture not, therefore, to offend Him, since there can be no offence which He is not able to punish).

341. (along with itself).

342. (of time). امد is 'any space of time; or space of time of unknown limit. (LL) Note that even those who have some good works to their credit shall long to have wide space between them and that Day with its terrors. Far sadder and immensely more frightful would that Day be for those who are evil-doers out and out.

343. Repeated for the sake of emphasis and to impress it on the memory.

344. (and it is only out of that infinite tenderness, and with a regard for their own welfare, that He constantly reminds them, forbids them, and warns them).

345. (O Prophet!)

346. (O Jews and others!)

347. (as you profess).

348. (and perfect your life on my model). The great Prophet is the perfect man; so his life is to serve as a model in every little detail for all true believers.

349. (which is the highest conceivable object of life). Cf. the NT: 'If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I shall pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever.' (Jn. 14: 15, 16). This "another Comforter" (a Prophet like Jesus himself) did come a few centuries later, "to abide for ever" as the Final Prophet, and those who pride themselves on being "Christians" chose to reject him!

350. i.e., He will be satisfied with you, and pass over your inadvertencies, and will bring you near to His glorious holiness.

351. (O Prophet! to the mankind).

352. (commissioned by Him to teach mankind the ways of His worship) i.e., submit to His will through His Prophet; worship Him as preached by His apostle. Worship of God, and God alone, is of course the goal of a Muslim's life, but the way to attain that end can be known only by Revelation through His apostle, and not by mere human reason.

353. (and they are the veritable infidels, and their lip-profession of the love of God is moonshine).

354. i.e., Noah of the Bible.

355. (which family includes Ismā'īl and his progeny as well as Isaac and his sons).

356. Two distinct personalities of this name, with an intervening period of several centuries between them, have been recognised by the Qur'ān——one the well-known father of the prophet Moses and Aaron (peace be on both!); the other, the less known father of Mary (peace be on her!) and the grandfather of the prophet John and Jesus (peace be on both!), known to Christian writers as Joachim or Iyokem. The identity of names has led to a curious confusion and to a 'comedy of errors' on the part of many a Christian 'scholar.' Either of the 'Imrāns or both of them may be meant in this place.

357. (to be His apostles and to possess certain moral and religious privileges).

358. The whole phrase is permutative of the word 'house' occurring twice. Noah was descendant of Adam; Abraham a descendant of both; the two 'Imrāns descendants of all the three.

359. i.e., Hearer of men's words.

360. i.e., Knower of men's motives. So He chooses those whose words and motives are right.

فَنَادَتْهُ الْمَلَائِكَةُ

35. (اذ . . . العليم) Re-call when the wife of Imrān[361] said, 'my Lord! surely I have vowed to Thee what is in my belly to be dedicated[362]; accept Thou this of me. Surely Thou! only Thou: art the Hearer[363], the Knower[364].

36. (فلما . . . الرجيم) Then when she bore her[365], she said[366], 'my Lord! surely I bore a female[367]—And Allah knew best what she had born[368],—and the male is not as the female[369], and surely I have named her Maryam[370], and I commit her and her progeny to Thee[371] for protection from Satan the accursed' [372]!

37. (فتقبلها . . . حساب) Then her Lord accepted her[373] with goodly acceptance[374], and made her grow up with a goodly growth,[375] and He made Zakariyya[376] take care of her[377]. Whenever Zakariyya entered the apartment[378] to see her, he found provision by her[379], He said, 'O Maryam! whence[380] hast thou this'? She said, this is from before Allah[381]. Surely Allah provides for whom He will without stint.[382]

38. (هنالك . . . الدعاء) Immediately[383] did Zakariyya[384] pray to His Lord, 'my Lord! bestow on me from Thy presence[385] a goodly offspring, surely Thou! only Thou art the Hearer of prayer.'

361. i.e., Mary's mother, Jesus' grandmother, known as Hannah or Anne. 'It has been generally imagined by Christian writers that the Koran here confounds Mary the mother of Jesus with Mary or Mariam, the sister of Moses and Aaron. . . . Yet I do not see how it can be made out from the words of the Koran.' (Sale) Muslim historians have traced the genealogies of both. The Christians admit that in their own records and genealogies nothing of any historical value is recorded of parentage of Mary. (EBr. XVII. p. 811).

362. (to Thy sole service). حرر is, 'He set apart a child for the worship of God and the service of the mosque or oratory: or he devoted him to the service of the church as long as he should live.' And محرر means, 'A child devoted by the parent to the service of a church.' (LL) The phrase thus means: 'I will not occupy him with anything else; he shall be freed from all worldly occupations and wholly devoted to the service of thy Sanctuary.' The Protestant Christian version, based on 'legends,' is :'......—An angel comforted her by the news that Joachim was returning, and that who would bear him a child, whom she at once vowed to dedicate to the service of the temple.' (DB. II, p. 258) The Catholic Church holds, on the authority of the apocryphal literature :—'Anne and Joachim had reached old age and still remained childless; their prayers were answered, an angel of the Lord announcing to Anne that the fruit of her womb would be blessed by all the world.' (CD. p. 48) And according to the tradition of the Coptic Church :—'And Hannah said. "My Lord and my God! If it is be that Thou hast given me a son I will give him to God, and I will dedicate him to the service of the sanctuary all the days of his life." (Budge. Legends of Our Lady Mary, p. 124).

363. (of my prayer).

364. (of the sincerity of my motives)

365. i.e., a daughter, Mary (of blessed memory).

366. (in her great disappointment).

367. and not a son as I had desired and expected). The birth of a daughter naturally seemed to Hannah to be a disappointment, since a girl could not be very suitable for the service of the sanctuary.

368. A parenthetical proposition directly from God, intended to glorify the child and to show that the mother knew nothing of its worth.

369. i.e., in this particular instance. No male child (such as Hannah desired) could be like this female child in worth (Th). The principle, though enunciated only incidentally, is also of general application, and emphasises the fundamental biological differences between the sexes. 'From the moment of fertilisation onwards, man and woman differ in every cell of their body in regard to the number of their chromosomes—these bodies which, for all the world's unfamiliarity, have been shown by the last decade's work to be the bearers of heredity, the determiners of our characters and qualities . . . The differences then are considerable; so considerable that they can never permit of the simple equivalence of the sexes . . . . . . It is temperament which in the long run decrees what we shall make of our intellects, and in temperament there is and will be—not for centuries but for biological periods—a fundamental average difference between the sexes.' (Julian Huxley, Essays in Popular Science, pp. 64-65) See also P. II. nn. 511, 514; P. V. nn. 58, 73.

370. i.e., Mary of the Bible.

371. i.e., I commit her and her descendants to Thy care and protection. Hannah intercedes with her Lord and begs that He will protect the child and let her prosper.

372. رجيم or 'accursed' is simply one lying under a curse, execrable, driven away from the Divine grace, and has, in this connection, nothing whatever to do with the 'pelting of stones' so inaptly alluded to by the Christian translators of the Qur'ān.

373. (and was satified with her in place of the male for the fulfilment of the vow).

374. And when the maiden was three years old, Iyakem called his pure. Hebrew maid-servants . . . . . . and brought her into the house of the sanctuary . . . . . . And the priests, and the elders, and all the children of Israel blessed her, and God made great joy to come upon her.' (Budge, op cit. p. 127).

375. Note that it is the Qur'ān, not the Bible, that makes mention in terms of high honour and glory, of Mary's birth and upbringing. 'Godly growth' may either be of her body and physique, or of her righteousness and virtue, or of both.

376. i.e., Zechariah of the NT : commended as blameless before God. "There was in the days of Herod, the king of Judea, a certain priest named Zechariah, of the course of Abijah : and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth. And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." (LK. 1 : 5, 6). He was Mary's maternal uncle, i.e., husband of Hannah's sister.

377. (and to act as her guardian after 'Imrān or Iyakem, the grandfather of Mary, and the chief priest at the sanctuary, who was dead by now).

378. i.e., the loneliest part of the sanctuary to which she had retired out of the way of the people.

379. This naturally excited wonder in him, since none could enter her apartment except himself, and he used to lock doors upon her.

380. i.e., from what direction or quarter.

381. i.e., from God direct, so do not be surprised.

382. (miraculously, without the intervention of any physical agency).

383. i.e., at that time, or at that place. هنالك originally an adverb of place, is also used as an adverb of time.

384. (moved at the sight of the miraculous supply of provision to Mary).

385. (as Thou bestowedest on the old and barren Hannah).

وَهُوَ قَائِمٌ يُصَلِّي فِي الْمِحْرَابِ أَنَّ اللَّهَ يُبَشِّرُكَ بِيَحْيَىٰ مُصَدِّقًا بِكَلِمَةٍ مِّنَ اللَّهِ وَسَيِّدًا وَحَصُورًا وَنَبِيًّا

39. (فنادته . . . الصالحين) Then the angels[386] called him while he stood praying in the appartment, surely Allah announces to thee Yahya[387]! confirming the word from Allah[388], a leader[389], and chaste,[390] and a prophet, from among the righteous'[391].

40. (قال . . . مايشاء) He said, 'my Lord! how will there be[392] unto me a son while old age has overtaken me and my wife is barren[393], Allah said, 'so it shall be[394], Allah does what He will[395].

41. (قال . . . والابكار) He said, 'my Lord! appoint to me a sign[396]. Allah said, thy sign is that thou shalt not speak to anyone[397] for three days[398] save by tokens[399], and remember thy Lord much[400], and hallow Him in the evening[401] and morning[402].

SECTION 5

42. (و اذ . . . العلمين) And re-call when the angels[403] said, 'O Maryam' surely Allah chose thee[404] and cleansed thee[405] and chose thee[406] above the women of the worlds.

43. (يمريم . . . الركعين) O Maryam ! 'be devout unto thy Lord, prostrate thyself and bow down with those who bow down'[407].

386. i.e., some of the class of angels: like the expression, 'he rides horses,' i.e., certain of them.

387. i.e., a son so named. 'John the Baptist' of the Bible. Cf. the NT: 'But the angel said unto him, Fear not, Zechariah: for thy prayer is heard; and thy wife Elisabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John. And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth.' (Lk. 1: 13).

388. 'A word from Allah' is the Prophet Jesus (peace be on him!), He is called 'a word' because he came into existence by His command, without the ordinary instrumentality of a father. (Bdh)

389. (of men in matters religious and spiritual). 'Large crowds flocked to his teaching'. (EBr. XIII. p. 17). 'It is clear that very large numbers came to him, and he was generally accepted as a prophet.' (DB. II. p. 679).

390. i.e., continent: one who preserves his soul from all worldly pleasures and enjoyments, حصور is 'Very fearful or cautious, who abstains, or refrains, from a thing through fear.' (LL) 'And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit.' (Lk. 1: 80). John was a man of austere ascetic life, symbolising the severity of his attitude as a moral critic of his time; preaching to all classes the necessity of repentance.' (EBi. c. 2437)

391. Note that the Qur'ān distinctly affirms John's prophethood as well as righteousness.

392. i.e., in what particular way shall it come about? The expression is not of wonder, much less of incredulity, but merely a request for further enlightenment.

393. 'For I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years.' (Lk. 1 : 18) 'Their union was not blessed with offspring. It was due to Elisabeth's barrenness; and she keenly felt the reproach which is occasioned, for it was a common opinion among the Jews that childlessness was God's punishment for guilt.'(Hastings, Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels, II. p. 844) According to the Muslim computation, he was 99 and his wife 98.

394. i.e., it would happen to thee whilst thou art of this very age, without the restoration of youth.

395. 'For with God nothing shall be impossible.' (Lk. 1 :36)

396. (whereby I may know that my wife has conceived, and in order that I may prepare some special offering to Thee).

397. (but shalt remember and hallow God). Cf. the NT :—'And, behold, thou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed . . . And when he came out, he could not speak unto them.' (Lk. 1 :20-22)

398. (and three nights).

499. (with the hands or the head). 'For he beckoned unto them, and remained speechless.' (Lk, 1 : 22) 'Silence, as an aid to worship or as a method of preparing the soul for spiritual experiences, has been practised among large or smaller groups in almost all periods of religious history and in almost all parts of the world . . . . . . The OT contains many references to the value of silence as a preparation for spiritual vision or revelation . . . . . . The voice in the stillness was felt to be a clearer revelation of God than earthquake, fire, or storm.' (ERE, XI. p. 512).

400. i.e., both in thy heart and by word of mouth during the period.

401. i.e., from the afternoon until sunset.

402. i. e., from dawn until midday.

403. See n. 386 above.

404. (in the childhood, inasmuch as no other female had been accepted before her for Divine service in the sanctuary). The 'choice' may also have reference to her being supplied with sustenance in a miraculous way.

405. (of sins and moral impurities).

406. (once again, on thy attaining maturity, by certain privileges; such as conception without a male agency, and the like). Cf. the NT:—And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women.' (Lk. 1: 28).

407. With all her great gifts. Mary is a mere mortal, and has no part of Divinity in her whatsoever. She is, like all true and devout servants of God, specially enjoined to pray, and the canons of prayer are mentioned in detail in order to lay stress on their accurate observance. She is neither a goddess, nor a demi-goddess, nor yet a Mother-God!

45. (اذ قالت . . . المقربين) Re-call when the angels[413] said, 'O Maryam! surly Allah announces to thee a word from Him[414]: his name[415] shall be the Masīh[416] 'Isa[417] son of Maryam[418], illustrious in this world[419] and the Hereafter[420], and one of those brought nigh[421]—

46. (و يكلم .. الصلحين) And he shall speak to mankind[422] in the cradle[423] and maturity[424] and be one of the righteous[425].

47. (قالت . . . فيكون) She said, 'my Lord! how will there be a son unto me while no man has touched me[426]! Allah said[427], 'so it shall be[428]. Allah creates what He will[429]. When He decrees a thing, He only says to it, 'Be', and it becomes[430].

48. (و يعلمه . . . الانجيل) And He shall teach him the Book[431] and wisdom and the Tawrāt and the Injīl[432].

408. (O Prophet!) i.e., this is among those events of which the accurate records are now obliterated altogether, and there is no means of knowing it in full and exact details except by Revelation.

409. i.e., the priests at the sanctuary.

410. (in the river Jorden, as lots).

411. (as his ward). Mary being the orphan-daughter of the chief priest Iyakem, the priests discussed and disputed as to who should have her in his charge. Zechariah (peace be on Him!) an elderly kinsman put forward his claim; others demurred. Recourse was eventually had to the casting of lots. All of them threw their reed-pens with certain passages of the Torah written upon them in the Jordan. The reeds of all, except the reed of Zechariah, either sank down or drifted with the current; his alone swam against it. Thus he had the charge of her.

412. (among themselves on the point of the guardianship). The reminder is not superfluous. It is to emphasize that nobody could narrate these details with truth unless aided by Revelation.

413. See no. 386 above.

414. See n. 388 above. The announcement is of a son; who, being without a father, would be known as a word from Him.

415. اسم in Arabic denotes surname as well as name.

416. i.e., Messiah of the Bible. Messiah, the surname of Jesus, is a title of honour, literally meaning 'the anointed.' Notice that the Qur'ān fully concedes the Messiahship of Jesus; it is only his Divinity, his Son-ship, his God-head that it is so unsparing in assailing.

417. i.e., Jesus of the NT. and Arabicized form of Ishu.

418. Himself a mere mortal, Jesus was also the son of a frail, ordinary woman, and not the son of God. The epithet ابن مريم calls attention to, and emphasizes, the fact of his humanity. It is one of the miracles of the Qur'ān that in speaking of Jesus it refutes both the Jewish and the Christian misconceptions simultaneously and constantly uses a language that implies answers both to the Christian deification and to the Jewish denunciation.

419. i.e., above the ridicule and vilification of his enemies, the Jews. وجيه literally is, 'worthy of regard.' The Qur'ān affirms the honour and glory of Jesus (peace be on him!) chiefly in answer to the calumnies of the Jews who remember him 'as the man who had chiefly brought dissension to Israel,' and as one who 'practised magic and deceived and led astray Israel,' with 'coarse allusions to His birth.' (ERE. VII. p. 551). The few allusions to Him contained in the Talmud and the contemporary literature are, for the the most part, contemptuous references to one who deceived Israel, and who owed his birth to the unfaithfulness of his mother; (Hastings. op. cit. II. p. 877) even they before long have learnt to speak of his person and character in terms of respect and appreciation. Witness recent books on Jesus by Jewish writers.

420. (like all other prophets).

421. (unto God). Notice the form of the words من المقربين 'one of those brought nigh'; one of the many. Not even in this respect was Jesus unique or without parallel.

422. (and discourse on serious subjects).

423. i.e., while yet he shall be mere boy. There would be no sense in recording the fact if it meant nothing more than 'the ordinary experience of every child who is not dumb.' A truism like that could hardly merit mention in the Qur'ān. Compare the GB: 'Jesus having come to the age of twelve years, went up with Mary and Joseph to Jerusalem . . . The third Day they found the child in the temple, in the midst of the doctors, disputing with them concerning the law. And every one was amazed at his questions and answers, saying: How can there be such doctrine in him, seeing he is so small and hath not learned to read.' (p. 15). And also the NT:

And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem . . . And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions. And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers.' (Lk. 2 : 42, 46, 47).

424. كهلا is "of mature age," of any age between 30 and 50, and not necessarily "old age." The mention of the infancy of Jesus and then of his maturity emphasizes the obvious fact that he lived and grew like all human beings, there being no meaning in a God-man or man-God 'growing.'

425. Note that Jesus (peace be on him!) in his great attributes is not spoken of singly but as one of a company of good souls. He is "of the righteous," "of those nigh," that is to say that he is one of the many chosen by God.

426. (by way of intercourse). 'Then said Mary unto the angle, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?' (Lk. 1 : 34) Mary is natutally amazed and puzzled at the announcement of the birth of a son when she was a virgin. The story is related in the GB. at greater length. (pp. 3 and 5).

427. (through an angel).

428. i.e., without the touch of a man; out of the ordinary course of nature.

429. His will alone is sufficient to bring anything into being. He can create anything out of His mere will. He is not bound in His creative activities by His usual methods—the so-called 'laws of nature'.

430. (whether attended or not with the circumstance generally associated with it). This explains the nature of His 'willing.' Just as He creates things in stages and by intermediary causes, equally able is He to create them immediately, directly, and without intermediary causes.

431. i.e., the revealed Books in general.

432. All these topics are introduced, among other reasons, to ease the mind of Mary, and to banish fears of censure that must have troubled her when she knew that she would conceive without a husband.

49. (و رسولا . . . مؤمنين) And a messenger[433] to the Children of Israel[434] with this message, 'surely I have come to you with a sign[435] from your Lord[436]. Surely I form for you[437] out of clay the likeness of a bird, and then I breath in it, and a bird[438] it becomes by Allah's leave[439]. And I heal the blind from birth[440] and the leper[441] and revive the dead[442] by Allah's leave[443]. And I declare to you what you have eaten and what you have stored in your houses[444]. Surely in this[445] is a sign[446] for you if you be believers[447].

50. (و مصدقا . . . اطيعون) And I come confirming the Tawrāt that was before me[448], and to allow to you[449] some of what was forbidden to you[450]. And I have come to you with a sign from your Lord[451]; so fear Allah and obey me[452].

51. (ان الله . . . مستقيم) Surely Allah is my Lord and your Lord, so worship Him[453] this is the straight path.[454]

52. (فلما . . . مسلمون) Then when 'Isa perceived infidelity[455] in them,[456] he said, 'who will be my helper unto Allah?[457] The disciples[458] said, 'we are helpers of Allah,[459] we believe in Allah, and bear thou witness[460] that surely we are Muslims [461]

433. (of God) which is a very different thing on the one hand from God Himself, as misconceived by the Christians, and on the other from a criminal wonder-worker as misjudged by the Jews.

434. (and not as a universal messenger). Witness his own words in the NT, plain and conclusive: 'Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.' (Mt. 10 : 5, 6) 'I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.' (15 : 24). And modern Christian scholars have to acknowledge the reluctance of Jesus and his earliest disciples to treat his message as universal in ways as round about as their conscience would permit:—'The earlier group of disciples, it is true, did not appreciate the universality of the teaching of Jesus. (EBr. V. p. 632)' . . . nor did He seek converts outside Israel' (p. 631).

435. i.e., a miracle; a credential of my prophethood, Cf. the NT: We know that thou art a teacher come from God : for no man can do these miracles that thou doeth, except God be with him.' (Jn. 3 : 2). 'When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these which this man hath done.' (7 : 31). A miracle is an extraordinary occurrence which cannot be produced by any natural agency but only by the direct will of God. It may be either above natural (ordinary law or contrary to it or else independent of it. Once the existence of an Almighty God is granted, there is no a priori difficulty in blieving that He can perform whatever He wills in any manner that pleases Him. The possibility of miracles can never be questioned by a theist. A miracle is only an exercise of free-will on the part of the Creator and Author of the life with all its laws—a mere fulfilment of His purpose in a way that is novel to the onlookers.

436. (to generate conviction in you). It does sometimes happen that popular mind is led to the acceptance of the Divine truths not by any rational arguments or moral and spiritual evidences but only by the miraculous manifestations of the Divine power at the hands of His approved servants.

437. خلق as the act of God signifies 'the bringing into existence from a state of non-existence,' but ordinarily it means : 'The act of measuring, or determining the measure, proportion, or the like, of a thing ; and the making a thing by measure, or according to the measure of another thing' . . . . This is the primary meaning.' (LL) And the phrase means : 'I will form for you, or I will make according to its proper measure for you, and will form, of clay, a thing like the form of the bird ; or of birds' (ib).

438. i.e., a real live bird. 'He also made figures of birds which could fly' (Budge, op, cit. p. XXIX).

439. Note the emphasis on the fact that it is God, not he who makes the thing alive.

440. Cf. Mt. 9 : 27-30 ; Mk. 8 : 22-25 ; Jn. 9 : 1-7.

441. Cf. Mt. 8 : 3 ; Lk. 17 : 14. 'The healing ministry, judged by critical tests, stands on as firm historical ground as the best accredited parts of the teaching.' (EBi, C. 2445). 'Jesus wearied Himself with the healing of man's physical ailments, and He was remembered as the great physician. Early Christian literature is filled with medical terms, applied, it is true, for the greater part to the cure of souls.' (EBr. V. p. 634).

442. Cf. Mt. 9 : 18, 19, 23-25 ; Lk. 7 ; 12-15 ; Jn. 11 : 11-44. The Evagelists report an extension of His power beyond cases of a physical or psychophysical nature, to include the curing of fever, paralysis, leprosy, blindliness, dead-mutism and even the rising of the dead as having characterized His ministry (EBr. XIII. p. 17). 'Jesus having come to the sepulchre, where every one was weeping, said : "Weep not, for Lazarus sleepeth, and I am come to awake him." . . . Said Martha, "Lord he stinketh, for he hath been dead four days." . . . Then Jesus lifted up his hands to heaven, and said : "Lord God of Abraham, God of Ismael and Isaac, God of our father, have mercy upon the affliction of these women, and give glory to thy holy name." And when every one had answered "Amen," Jesus said with a loud voice: "Lazarus, come forth." Whereupon he that was dead arose.' (GB. pp. 431, 437).

443. See n. 439 above.

444. This is only by way of illustration, meaning, 'I can tell you your most secret affairs.' 'It was not as the teacher of the new religious principles nor as a new lawgiver, but as a wonder-worker that Jesus won fame and influence among the simple inhabitants of Galilee in his life-time.' (JE. VII. p. 167).

445. i.e., in all these 'wonders' and freaks of nature. Cf. a hostile witness Josephus, an eminent Jew, who lived in a generation only next to that of Jesus': 'Now there was about this time Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man, for he was a doer of wonderful works.' ("Ant", 18 : 3 :3). So it was pre-eminently in the character of a 'wonder-worker' that Jesus was known to those around him.

446. (of my prophethood; of my being aided by God).

447. i.e., if you are disposed to believe at all.

448. 'I am not come to destroy but to fulfil.' (Mt. 5 : 17, 18). 'And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.' (LK. 16:17) 'Not only does Jesus Himself quote from the OT frequently but in his own language the modes of speech of the OT are recalled.' (DB. V. p. 332).

449. (by the command of God).

450. (in the code of Moses). Annulment in part of the law of Moses (on him be peace!) is not at all incompatible with confirmation of it in general Cf. the NT: 'Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.' (Mt. 11 : 28-30).

451. i.e., I have brought you sign after sign; my claim is supported with powerful arguments and convincing miracles. See n. 435 ff. above.

452. (in that to which I invite you).

453. (only). This, the worship of One and Only God, is the true message of Jesus, the gist of his real teaching. Absolute Unity, and pure God-worship; no 'trinity,' no 'incarnation,' no 'son-worship', no 'mother-worship.' Cf. the NT: 'Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only thou shalt serve.' (Mt. 4 : 10) And GB:—'I confess thee one God alone that hast not had beginning nor shalt ever have end; for by thy mercy gavest thou to all things their beginning, and by thy justice thou shalt give to all an end; that hast no likeness among men, because in thine infinite goodness thou art not subject to motion nor to any accident. Have mercy on us, for thou hast created us, and we are the works of thy hand.' (p. 195) Also see P. VI. n. 526.

454. 'There is no indication that He ever acted independently of God, or as an independent God. Rather does He acknowledge his dependence upon God, by His habit of prayer and in such words as "this kind goeth not forth save by prayer." He even repudiated the ascription to himself of goodness in the absolute sense in which it belongs to God alone.' (EBi XIII. p. 24) . . . . There is nothing in these three Gospels to suggest that their writers thought of Jesus as other than human, a human being specially endued with spirit of God and standing in an unbroken relation to God which justified His being spoken of as the "Son of God." p. 18)

455. (and also persecution)

456. i. e., on the part of the Jews.

457. i. e., for the cause of God.

458. i. e., the adherents of Jesus. حواری is 'one who whitens cloths, or garments, by washing and beating them. Hence its plural حواریون is applied to the companions, i. e., apostles and disciples of Jesus, because their trade was to do this. (LL)

459. i. e., helpers in the cause of God : in the cause of His religion.

460. (O Prophet of God! both in this world and on the Day of Judgment when the prophets shall testify for or against their peoples)

461. Literally, 'we have surrendered ourselves.' 'The faith of the Musalman is concentrated in a single word Islam : devotion, resignation of our own will to the supreme decree. That word was not limited by Muhammad to his own followers : it was used ungrudgingly for his Judaic Christian predecessors. There is no fitter word for the religion of the human race.' (Dr. J. H. Bridges)

53. (ربنا . . . الشهدين) Our Lord ! we believe in what Thou hast sent down[462] and we follow the messenger: write us up therefore with the witnesses.[463]

54. (و مكروا . . . المكرين) And they[464] plotted,[465] and Allah plotted[466] and Allah is the Best of plotters.[467]

SECTION 6

55. (اذ قال . . . تختلفون) Re-call when Allah said,[468] O 'Isa surely I shall make thee die[469] and am lifting thee[470] to Me,[471] and am cleansing thee from those who disbelieve,[472] and shall place those who follow thee[473] above[474] those who deny[475] thee till the Day of Resurrection;[476] then to Me shall be the return of you all;[477] then I shall decide between you[478] concerning that in which you have been differing.

56. (فاماالذين . . . نصرين) Then[479] as for those who disbelieved, I shall torment them[480] with a severe torment in this world[481] and the Hereafter, nor shall they have any helpers.

57. (واما . . . الظلمين) And as for those who believed and worked righteous works He shall repay them their wages, in full, and Allah loves not the ungodly.[482]

58. (ذالك . . . الحكيم) This[483] We recite unto thee[484] of the signs[485] and[486] of the wise admonition.[487]

462. (upon the apostle of our day)

463. (to Thy unity and to the truth of Thy prophet)

464. i. e., the disbelieving Jews; the oppressors and persecutors of Jesus.

465. (to put him to death; to crucify him)

466. (to save him; to frustrate his enemies' plots)

467. (to His plan succeeded, the Jews being unable to detect it even). Somebody else, who resembled Jesus to an extraordinary degree, was crucified in his place, and Jesus escaped death at their hands altogether.

468. (to Jesus by way of consolation on the eve of his arrest and trial, when he was naturally a little perturbed)

469. (a natural death at thy appointed hour, so these persecutors are powerless to do thee any harm). The original sense of توفية is 'to perform a promise', 'to fulfil a covenant' and 'to give full measure'. So the meaning may also be, 'I will fulfil thy span of life', or 'I will achieve the whole of thy term.'

470. (in the meantime bodily). 'A similar conception was promulgated by the earliest gnostics, Corinthus, Basilides, Carpociates and others'. (Earnest De Busen, Islam, or True Christianity, p. 143. fn.) See P. VI. n. 38.

471. i. e., to the place of My glory; to the Higher Region.

472. (in thy prophethood) i. e., clear thee from their false charges and unworthy accusations.

473. i. e., those who believe in the truth of thy mission.

474. (in arms, or in arguments, or in both)

475. (in thy prophethood)

476. The meaning is: thy friends shall always prevail over thy foes by argument and by the sword.

477. i. e., of Jesus, his followers and his detractors.

478. (finally and in a practical, demonstrable way)

479. This verse and the next explain the Divine Judgment alluded to in the verse 55.

480. i. e., the slanderers of Jesus.

481. The terrible plight of the Jews in Germany and elsewhere is only a matter of recent past.

482. i. e., the Jews and the Christians both, as both have transgressed the proper limits in the matter of Jesus—the former by slandering him, the latter by their deification of him.

483. (true story of Jesus and of things connected therewith)

484. (O Prophet!)

485. (of the truth of thy mission)

486. (in itself)

487. i. e., stories like these serve at once to substantiate thy mission, since nothing save Divine revelation can make them known to thee, and they are wise admonitions in themselves.

لَهُ كُنْ فَيَكُونُ ۝ اَلْحَقُّ مِنْ رَّبِّكَ فَلَا تَكُنْ مِّنَ الْمُمْتَرِيْنَ ۝ فَمَنْ حَآجَّكَ فِيْهِ مِنْۢ بَعْدِ مَا جَآءَكَ

59. (ان . . . فيكون) Surely the likeness of 'Isa[488] with Allah is as the likeness of Adam;[489] him He created out of dust; then He said to him, 'Be', and he became.[490]

60. (الحق . . . الممترين) This is the Truth from thy Lord, so be thou not of the doubters.[491]

61. (فمن الكذبين) So those who contend[492] with thee therein[493] after what has come to thee of the knowledge[494]—say thou,[495] 'come! let us[496] call our children and your children[497] and our women and your women[498] and ourselves and yourselves, then let us humbly pray,[499] and invoke the curse of Allah upon the liars.'[500]

62. (ان . . . الحكيم) Surely this[501] is the true recital; and God there is none save Allah,[502] and surely Allah it is who is Mighty,[503] Wise.[504]

63. (فان . . . بالمفسدين) But if they turn away,[505] Allah is the Knower of the corrupters.[506]

SECTION 7

64. (قل . . . مسلمون) Say thou,[507] 'O people of the Book! come to a word common to us[508] and you,[509] that we shall worship none save Allah,[510] and that we shall not join aught[511] with Him, and that none of us shall take others[512] as Lords beside Allah;[513] then if they turn away,[514] say[515] thou, 'bear witness that we are Muslims'.[516]

---

488. (in being without a father, and in being a mere man)

489. (who was created without a father and a mother). This is the point of comparison and resemblance. Jesus' wonderful nature is like that of Adam. He is not 'consubstantial with God.' He is as much a created being as Adam. Divinity of Jesus has been denied by some ancient Christian sects themselves. 'Arius taught that the Son of God was a created being. There was a time when He did not exist.' (EBr. II. p. 598) Paul of Samosata also held that "Jesus Christ," begotten of the Holy Ghost and born of the virgin, was a mere man. But "the man" was anointed by the Holy Ghost and for that reason was called Christ . . . . . . Though the Logos was in Christ, it did not invest him with divinity.' (EBR XI. p. 171)

490. (similar is the nature of Jesus; where, then, is the occasion to ascribe Eternity or Divinity to him ?)

491. (O reader!) Human documents may lie; not so the divine Revelation. So there is no room here for any doubt at all.

492. (O Prophet!)

493. i. e., concerning Jesus. The reference is to the Christians.

494. The knowledge that is absolutely true, certain and Revealed.

495. (unto them, now that they have proved unamenable to reason and argument).

496. i. e., both of us; each of the two parties.

497. 'Sons,' in both instances, includes grandsons and sons-in-law.

498. 'Women' in both instances, includestee daughters and wives.

499. The passage was revealed on the occasion of a visit from some Christians of Najran to the holy Prophet in the 10th year of Hijrah. See n. 206 above. They had full discussion with him on their 'Christology.' The Islamic doctrine about Jesus was explained and his Divinity refuted; all to no purposes. Then the holy Prophet took the only course that was open for an intensely religious man in the circumstances to take. He invited them to come to a decision by earnestly invoking the curse of God on the party that still clung to falsehood, and came out himself with his beloved daughter, Fatima, her husband, 'Ali, and their two sons. Thereupon the courage of the Christians failed them. They dared not risk their lives by invoking Divine curse on the liar. They submitted to pay tribute to the Islamic government and to live peaceably under it.

500. 'We cannot but see throughout the earnestness of Muhammad's belief, and his conviction that a spiritual illumination had been vouchsafed to him, bringing with it knowledge and certainty where to the Christians, as he conceived, all was speculation and conjecture.' (Muir, op. cit. p. 460) A curse, in this sense, is not only a righteous wish that retribution my immediately visit the guilty but also an earnest appeal to God to execute it. It is essentially a prayer, leaving the justice of the wish to the decision of the All-Just and All-Highest. When uttered after all methods of persuation and argument have failed it indicates on the part of the invoker the passion of righteous indignation in its highest and noblest form, and is perhaps the strongest possible spiritual weapon in the hands of a wronged and oppressed party.

501. i. e., the account of Jesus and his mother just given, and the fact that they were nothing more than mere mortals. Another instance of the emphatic repudiation of the Christian trinity.

502. i. e., there is none to share His person as there is none to share His nature.

503. i. e., All-powerful, which a mortal, Jesus, was not.

504. i. e., All-knowing, which a mortal, Jesus, was not.

505. (even after these exhortations and arguments)

506. (and He is sufficient to deal with them according to their deserts). 'The substantive, "the corrupters,' is used instead of the pronoun, 'them' in order to show that to reject the evidences and to repudiate the doctrine of Monotheism constitute corruption of religion and faith.' (Bdh)

507. (O Prophet !)

508. i. e., the Muslims.

509. i. e., wherein there is no variance between various apostles.

510. (and shall worship neither 'Logos' nor 'Incarnations' nor yet any 'saints') Cf. the NT:—'Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve.' (Mt. 4 : 10)

511. (such as the Saints and 'the Holy Relics'). 'In the long period of twelve hundred years . . . . . . the worship of saints and relics corrupted the pure and perfect simplicity of the Christian model,' (GRE., III. pp. 209-210)

512. (such as the Pope, the Church and the Father). Compare and contrast the tenets of orthodox Christianity:—'The church of Christ is the fellowship of all those who accept and profess all the articles transmitted by the Apostles and approved by General Synods. Without this visible Church there is no salvation. It is under the abiding influence of the Holy Ghost, and therefore cannot err in the matters of faith.' (EBr. XVI. pp. 939-940)

513. This formula of the Sole-ness of God and of the rejection of all major and minor deities beside Him, the basic principle of Islam, as it is, has ever been the common doctrine of all the faiths in their origin. The Jews and the Christians had abandoned, in practice as well as in theory, this simple truth for man-made dogmas of later growth.

514. (and reject the doctrine of monotheism)

515. (O Muslims !)

516. i. e., declare that we rather than you are Muslims—the upholders of the true doctrine of God. 'In spite of the rich development, in every sense of the term, of the teachings of the Prophet, the Qur'ān has invariably kept its place as the fundamental starting-point, and the dogma of the unity of God has always been proclaimed therein with a grandeur, a majesty, an invariable purity and with a note of sure conviction, which it is hard to find surpassed outside the pale of Islam.' (Montet quoted in Arnold's Preaching of Islam, p. 414)

65. (ياهل . . . تعقلون) O people of the Book! why do you contend regarding Ibrāhīm[517] whereas the Tawrāt and Injīl were not sent down save after him?[518] Will you not then understand?

66. (هانتم . . . تعلمون) Ah![519] it is you who fell to contending that of which you had some knowledge;[520] why then should you contend regarding that of which you have no knowledge at all?[521] And Allah knows and you do not know:[522]

67. (ما كان . . . المشركين) Ibrāhīm was not a Jew, nor a Christian, but he was an upright Muslim;[523] nor was he of the polytheists.[524]

68. (ان . . . المؤمنين) Surely the nearest of mankind to Ibrāhīm[525] are those who followed him,[526] and this prophet[527] and those who believe.[528] And Allah is the Patron of the believers.[529]

69. (ودت . . . يشعرون) A section of the people of the Book yearns to mislead you,[530] and none they mislead but themselves, and they perceive not.[531]

70. (ياهل . . . تشهدون) O people of the Book! why do you deny the revelations of Allah,[532] while you are witnesses thereof![533]

---

517. (each sect maintaining that he belonged to their faith)

518. i. e. Judaism and Christianity were instituted only after the revelation of the Torah and the Injil to Moses and Jesus respectively, while Abraham lived centuries and centuries before the two; how then could he be either a Jew or a Christian, in the accepted sense of these terms?

519. ها is a particle for calling attention.

520. i. e., respecting matters mentioned in the Torah and the Injil.

521. i. e., respecting matters which are not recorded in your books, such as the religion of Abraham.

522. The doctrine that the Holy Qur'ān propounded is 'that to every people a prophet had been sent, so that a grand catholic faith had pervaded all ages and revelations,—a faith which, in its purest form, had been held by the patriarch

Abraham . . . . This grand fact it was now the mission of Mohammad to reaffirm. Each successive dispensation had been abused by its votaries, who in the course of time had turned aside from its catholic grand work.' (Muir. op. cit. pp. 151-152).

523. See P. I. nn. 617, 618, 619.

524. 'He was the first who had the courage to proclaim God as the sole Creator of the universe, to whose will all heavenly bodies are subject.' (JE I. 85)

525. (in point of faith)

526. (in this day)

527. i. e., the Prophet of Islām.

528. i. e., the Muslims, since they have the same essentials of religion. 'The true heir of Jewish thought,' observes a Christian historian of recent times, 'is Islamism, the modern religion of the Semitic race. By depriving Christianity of its Greek elements, by setting aside the idea of the incarnation of the Divine in humanity, which spanned the gulf between God and man, Mohammad restored Semitic monotheism to its pristine severity.' (HHW. II. p. 171)

529. i. e., He helps them and gives them good recompense for their faith.

530. (O Muslims!) Not content with their own corruption, some of the Jews had the further ambition of seducing the Muslims.

531. (that their misleading shall rebound upon themselves)

532. (proving the mission of Muhammad, by distorting and manipulating those texts)

533. (to those texts being the revelations of God)

71. (يااهل . . . تعلمون) O people of the Book! why do you clothe the truth with falsehood,[534] and hide the truth[535] while you know it.[536]

SECTION 8

72. (وقالت . . . يرجعون) And a section of the people of the Book says,[537] 'believe at day-break in what has been sent down to those who believe[538] and deny at day-end[539]; perhaps they[540] may turn away.[541]

73. (ولا . . . عليم) And 'believe not save one who follows your religion'. Say thou,[541A] 'surely the true guidance[542] is the guidance of Allah.[543] Do you envy[544] that any one[545] should be given the like of what was given to you;[546] or do you fear,[547] that those others[548] might overcome you in argument before your Lord?[549] Say thou,[550] 'surely the grace[551] is in the hand of Allah. He bestows it on whom He will and Allah is Bountiful,[552] Knowing.[553]

74. (يختص . . . العظيم) He singles out for His mercy whom He will,[554] and Allah is the Owner of Mighty grace.[555]

534. (by mutilating the truth). See P. I. n. 183.

535. i. e., the mission of Muhammad, and the description of him.

536. i. e., are cognizant of what you conceal. See P. I. nn. 184, 185.

537. (among themselves). The allusion is to the Jews of Khaibar.

538. i. e., affect to believe in the Qur'ān.

539. i. e., renounce your belief in it in the evening. Instances of such mendacious conduct are not unknown to Jewish history. Even so late as during the twelfth century of the Christian era certain Jews of Spain left their homes, but 'others agreed to pronounce the formula of Muslim Creed, while secretly combining the observance of their own religion'. (JE. I. 432-433)

540. i. e., the Muslims.

541. (from Islam by this stratagem). Some of the Jews, true to their traditions of perfidy, counselled among themselves that in the morning they should display their belief in the Qur'ān, and in the evening should renounce it openly, thereby creating an impression in the minds of the Muslims themselves that there must be after all some flaw in the religion of the Qur'ān, or else the Jews, so learned in religious lore, would not have gone back. Modern European biographers of the Prophet, with huge pretensions to learning and impartiality, who begin by admiring his earnestness, his sincerity of purpose and the depth of his conviction, and end by denouncing him as a deluded visionary and a false prophet, are almost playing the same old game with modern variants.

541A. (O Prophet !)

542. (and not your concoctions)

543. (such tricks therefore would not avail anything). They who receive guidance, receive it from God; none is able to mislead them. He guides whom He will to the right faith and establishes him therein.

544. (O Children of Israel !)

545. (other than you) i. e., who is not of your race or tribe.

546. i. e., the gift of prophecy; Divine revelation.

547. (O Jews !)

548. i. e., the Arabs; the children of Ismā'īl, who formed the first Muslim community.

549. (and hence your frenzied and frantic envious attacks on those doctrines)

550. (to the Jews, O Prophet !)

551. i. e., the gift of prophethood.

552. i. e., unstinting in the conferment of His grace. He can bestow the gift of His prophecy on anyone.

553. i. e., knowing well when and on whom to confer His grace. He makes the recipient of His grace only him who is fitted to receive it.

554. (so all these envious antics are fruitless)

555. i. e., there is no dearth of grace and mercy on His part. He can exalt any people, and raise any person He likes.

78. (وان ... يعلمون) And surely among them[574] are some who pervert the Book with their tongues,[575] that you might consider it[576] of the Book yet it is no part of the Book. And they say, 'it is from God', whereas it is not from Allah, and they forge a lie against Allah,[577] while they know.[578]

556. (O reader!)

557. قنطار is 'A large unknown quantity, or aggregate, or property; or much property heaped up; or four thousand deenars.' (LL)

558. A beautiful way of saying that even among the Jews are some whose honesty and integrity cannot be impugned. Such God-fearing Jews eventually embraced Islam.

559. Denarius was a well-known coin in later Roman currency, which the Arabs must have used in the early days of Islam. At first they (Arabs) issued gold and bronze pieces imitated from contemporary Byzantine coins' (EBr. XVI, p. 630). Dinar is still a unit of currency in Yogoslavia.

56.0 (Vigorously demanding it of him by litigation, appeals and production of evidence). A faithful picture of the Jew's proverbial love of gold.

561. i. e., the refusal to pay.

562. (in justification of this attitude of theirs)

563. i. e., there is no reproach attaching to us in the matter of those who are not of our race and faith; we owe no duty to them. This sums up the attitude of the Jew to the Gentile. 'Israel's attitude towards other nations, never marked by much cordiality underwent most important modifications in the post-exilic period. The reformation of Ezra deliberately aimed at fostering that spirit of exclusiveness which gave so much offence to the Gentile world, and which lent not a little colour to the charge of Tacitus and others, that the Jews were enemies of the human race.' (DB. II. p. 149)

564. i. e., these ignorant pagans of Arabia. Of the origin and meaning of the word أمي says a modern Jew:—"It was not coined by Mohammad, but was taken over by him from the speech which he heard. It designated any and all who were not of the Israelite race . . . Elsewhere, it means precisely "Gentile." (Torrey, op. cit. p. 38) See n. 299 above.

565. (by promulgating a false religious principle)

566. (that they are enunciating a false doctrine)

80. (ولا . . . مسلمون) And he[585] would not bid you to take the angels and the prophets for Lords.[586] Would he bid you to infidelity[587] after you have become Muslims?[588]

81. (و اذ اخذ . . . الشهدين) And re-call when[589] Allah took a bond from the prophets,[590] 'whatever of the Book and wisdom[591] I gave you and afterwards there comes to you a messenger[592] confirming what is with you,[593] you shall surely believe in him[594] and help him'.[595] Allah said, 'do you affirm, and do you take My burden thereto'?[596] They said, 'we affirm'. He said, 'Then bear witness,[597] and I am with you among the witnesses'.[598]

82. (فمن . . . الفسقون) Now whoso[599] turns away thereafter,[600] it is they who are the ungodly.

579. (such as He gave to the man Jesus).

580. All this is said to confute and contradict the trinitarian Christians. Jesus (on him be peace!) as a prophet, could never have taught people to worship him or to make him as co-equal with God in any sense of the word. An apostle of God invites people to follow him to the obedience of God, and surely not to deify himself.

581. (he would say).

582. Or 'divines,' or 'worshippers of the Lord.'

583. (O Christians!)

584. These are additional reasons for the Christians believing in the Unity of God and for their negativing the 'divinity' of Jesus. The advantage of studying and teaching the Scripture is plainly to arrive at the truth.

585. i. e., the person endowed with the prophetic office and wisdom.

586. To expatiate on the Christian worship of a prophet of God would be to underline the obvious; but Christian angelolatory is not perhaps so widely known. It may be well, therefore, to call attention to the fact that 'a certain tendency to angel-worship manifested itself' in the very early Christian Church; in the 4th century a Council of Laodica found 'it necessary to forbid the angel-worship then prevalent in the country . . . In the next century we find Theodoret referring to this prohibition as necessitated by the spread of this worship through Phrygia and Pisidia.' (DCA. II. p. 1176). Some of the 'Apostolic Fathers' and 'the Apologists' of the early centuries held and taught that 'God committed the care of men and all things under heaven to angels whom He set over these.' (ERE. IV. p. 578), and that to the six holy angels 'the Lord delivered all His creation, to increase and to build it and to be members of all creation' (ib). And it was openly averred that along with the Father and the Son 'good angels' also were to be worshipped and adored. 'Both Him and the Son who came forth from Him and taught us true things, and the best of the other good angels, who follow and are made like unto Him, and the prophetic spirit we worship and adore.' (ib) Also that 'God has the general providence of the whole; particular parts are assigned to angels.' (ib) The Second Council of Nicea, in 787 A.D., went so far as to sanction the custom of depicting angels and venerating their images. 'By the action of this Council it would appear that the cults of the angels, which had originated before the beginning of the period under consideration as a private devotion, and had met with considerable opposition from various ecclesiastical writers, formally received the sanction of the Church, and may henceforward be regarded as part of the doctrine publica.' (p. 581)

587. (by asking you to believe in the divinity of apostles and angels).

588. (and have perfectly believed in His Unity).

589. (prior to the creation of the earth).

594. (with heart and soul).

595. (with words and deeds).

596. Or 'to that effect.'

597. A witness is less likely to go back upon his word than an interested party.

598. i. e., I too am witness to your consenting. Words stressing confirmation.

599. (of the people). The reference is to the peoples addressed by their prophets.

600. i. e., after the covenant so solemnly entered into and its ratification.

83. (افغير . . . يرجعون) Do they[601] seek other than the religion of Allah?[602] Yet to Him has submitted whoso is in the heavens and in the earth, willingly or unwillingly,[603] and to Him shall they all be returned.[604]

84. (قل . . . مسلمون) Say thou,[605] 'we believe in Allah and in what has been sent down to us, and what was sent down to Ibrāhīm and Ismā'īl, and Ishāq and Y'āqūb and the tribes,[606] and what was given to Mūsā and 'Isā and other prophets from their Lord: we discriminate against none of them,[607] and to Him we are submissive.[608]

85. (ومن . . . الخسرين) And whoso seeks a religion other than Islam,[609] it shall not be accepted of him[610] and in the Hereafter he shall be of the lost.[611]

86. (كيف . . . الظلمين) How will Allah guide a people who disbelieved[612] after their belief and after they bore witness that the messenger was true and after evidences[613] had come to them. And Allah guides not an ungodly people.[614]

---

601. i. e., the infidels.

602. Note that Islam is here made synonymous with God's own religion. See n. 291 above.

603. All things in nature, whether the heavenly ones or the earthly, bow down to His decrees and have perforce to submit to His physical laws—so Exalted is He! His religion alone is worthy of acceptance.

604. (when everyone shall be dealt with according to his deserts). An additional reason for submitting to His commands.

605. (on behalf of the Muslims, O Prophet!).

606. i. e., the prophets among them.

607. (so far as the fact of their apostleship is concerned, by accepting some and rejecting others). 'The essence of Mohamedanism,' says a Christian student of the Qur'ān and Islam, 'is its assertion of unity of God, as opposed to polytheism—and nothing new; it was, as Mohammad said of it, the ancient faith of Abraham, and it was upon that faith that the greatness of the Jewish nation was founded; nay, it was the truth which Christ himself made more fully known and understood.' (Palmer, The Quran. Intro. p. L).

608. (as Muslims). See P. I. n. 626.

609. 'There is no fitter word for the religion of the human race. If there is any one word in the Western languages which can translate it fully, it is the word religion itself; and that word needs interpretation for ears untrained in Latin speech.' (Dr. J. H. Bridges) 'Islam is among the simplest of all the revealed religions, its simplicity is attractive and appealing alike to the man in the street and to the philosopher in the closet. Goethe fell into raptures over the Kuran and Gibbon found in it a glorious testimony to the unity of God. Belief in One God and belief in Mohammed as the prophet of God—such is the quintessence of the Islamic faith.' (BK. IV. p. 2282). See also n. 291 above.

610. This repudiates the comfortable doctrine that all religions are equally good, and that different 'paths' adopted by different nations and different grades of society converge to the same Divinity. There is only one straight line possible between any two points. Even so there is only one true, perfect and sound religion. All other religions are but so many deviations. See nn. 291, 602 above.

611. 'This verse contradicts the idea, prevalent in our day among some Muslims, that the choice of religion is a matter of individual preference, and that every unitarian religion is equally good . . . . . The Quran says : . . . . the path of Islam is the only right path . . . . Salvation, according to the tenets of Islam, can be obtained only by him who recognises the Oneness of God and the Prophethood of Muhammed (which implies the recognition of the former prophets) and does good works.' (ASB. p. 51).

612. i. e., turned back on it; apostatized.

613. (Of the truth of Islam).

614. i. e., who do sheer injustice to their ownselves. He does not guide them who wilfully reject His guidance and substitute unfaith for faith.

وَالنَّاسِ أَجْمَعِينَ ﴿٨٧﴾ خَالِدِينَ فِيهَا لَا يُخَفَّفُ عَنْهُمُ الْعَذَابُ وَلَا هُمْ يُنْظَرُونَ ﴿٨٨﴾ إِلَّا الَّذِينَ تَابُوا مِنْ

87. (اولئک . . . اجمعین) They are those whose meed is that on them shall be the curse of Allah and of angels and of mankind, all;[615]—

88. (خلدین . . . ینظرون) Abiders therein,[616] their torment shall not be lightened nor shall they be respited—

89. (الا الذین . . . رحیم) Save such as shall repent thereafter[617] and make amends;[618] verily Allah is Forgiving,[619] Merciful.[620]

90. (ان الذین . . . الضالون) Surely those who disbelieve after they have believed and thereafter wax in infidelity, their repentance[621] shall by no means be accepted.[622] It is those who are astray.[623]

91. (ان الذین . . . نصرین) Surely those who disbelieve and die while they are infidels, not an earthful of gold shall be accepted from any such.[624] were he to offer it as a ransom.[625] It is they whose shall be a torment afflictive; nor shall they have any helpers.

---

615. See p. II, nn. 100, 105.

616. i. e., in that curse.

617. i. e., after apostasy, and make good the harm they have done.

618. Penitence must come from heart, and not be merely verbal.

619. (so He will accept their repentance).

620. (so He will be gracious to them).

621. (from other sins).

622. (because they do not repent of the root cause of all their sins—their unbelief). Unacceptable is the repentance of those who persist in their apostasy, and merely repent from what they fancy to be their wrong conduct.

623. (and they shall remain unredeemed in spite of their repentnace of other sins).

624. (in the Hereafter).

625. It may also mean: from none such shall be accepted an earthful of gold, though he were to give it in alms in this world, and though he were to ransom himself therewith from punishment in the Next.

PART IV

SECTION 10

92. (لن تنالوا ... عليم) You can not attain virtue[1] unless you spend of what you love[2] and whatever you spend[3] Allah is the Knower[4] thereof.

93. (كل ... صدقين) All food[5] was allowable to the Children of Israel,[6] save what Israel[7] had forbidden for himself,[8] before the Tawrāt was revealed.[9] Say thou,[10] 'bring you then the Tawrāt and read it, if you are truthful'.[11]

94. (فمن ... الظالمون) Then he who fabricates a lie after this[12] against Allah,[13]—it is those who are the ungodly.

95. (قل ... المشركين) Say thou,[14] 'Allah has spoken the truth ;[15] follow therefore the faith of Ibrāhīm the upright,[16] and he was not of the polytheists.

96. (ان ... للعلمين) Verily the first House[17] set apart for mankind[18] was that at Bakka,[19] blest[20] and a guidance to the worlds,[21]

1. (O Muslims!) i. e., to perfect good ; to the acme of piety.

2. (and cherish) i. e., all that you hold dear and near to your heart. The term covers the spending of one's wealth and the sacrificing of one's dignity in the service of God's creatures as well as the shedding of one's blood in the service of God. . With supreme trust in Him it appears sometimes unspeakably mean to retain one's hold of the most valued of personal possessions.

3. —whether that be an object of special love to you or not—

4. (and He shall reward accordingly). The point is that there is a recompense for every act of charity, big or small, but the highest reward is for those who spend in His service what they love most.

5. (allowed in the code of Islam).

6. 'Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you ; even as the green herb have I given you all things.' (Ge. 9 : 3).

7. i. e., the Prophet Jacob (on him be peace)!

8. (such as milk and flesh of the camel, for some special, medical reason).

9. (forbidding certain foods to the Jews). For التوراة see P. III, n. 214.

10. (O Prophet! to the Jews).

11. The Jews in the holy Prophet's time were accusing the Muslims of taking certain foods which, they said, had been unlawful since the days of Abraham (on him be peace!). The Qur'ān denies the charge, and puts the Jews to silence by a reference to their own scripture.

12. (clear exposition) i. e., after the evidence has held the Jews.

13. (by repeating the charge that certain foods, lawful in the code of Islam, had been unlawful since the very beginning).

14. (O Prophet! to the Jews).

15. (in regard to the old law and practice of Israel).

16. (the progenitor of your race and the fountainhead of your faith). Ad the faith of Abraham is no other than Islam. See P. I, n. 618, III, n. 523.

17. Built first by Adam, and then, after it had been in ruins, rebuilt by Abraham and Ismā'īl. See P. I, nn. 563 and 577.

18. (for His worship by Himself). The great antiquity of this House is undisputed. 'This square stone temple, ... itself of unknown antiquity, was situated within the precincts of the town of Mecca.' (HHW, VIII, p. 108). 'It had been throughout the ages the object of the greatest veneration; it was looked on as a present made by Jehovah to the Arab race to bear witness to its condition privileged beyond all others. It was the oratory of Abraham and of Ishmael, the house of Allah.' (p. 162) See also P. I n. 563; P. XVII, n. 338.

19. A variant for Makka. There is a mention of the valley of Baca in the Bible (Ps. 84 : 6). The old translators gave the word the meaning of 'a valley of weeping,' but better sense seems to have come now. According to more recent of the Biblical scholars, the word 'signifies rather any valley lacking water.' And 'the Psalmist apparently has in mind a particular valley whose natural condition led him to adopt its name.' (JE. II. p. 415). Now this waterless valley can by its natural condition be easily identified with the valley of Makka—a town of great importance even in antiquity. 'On the trade with the East, rather than upon any local products, depended the prosperity of Arabia. Even as far back as the tenth century B. C. the spices, peacocks, and apes of India were brought by ship to the coast of Oman. . . . . . A glance at the map will show how Mecca, which lay about half-way between Hadharmaut and Petra, must have benefitted by this land commence, and explains why it became a centre of population and a resort of merchants.' (Sykes, History of Persia, I, pp. 504-505, see also P. XXVI, n. 303)

20. i. e., rich in blessings; abounding in good. The sanctuary at Makka possessed 'a worldwide fame, surpassing even that of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre or of St. Peter's at Rome.' (ERE. I, p. 667)

21. (in virtue of its being the Qibla). The address is mainly to the Jews who are told that as the first House of worship and more ancient than the Temple at Jerusalem, Ka'ba has the greater right to be regarded as Qibla.

وَلِلّٰهِ عَلَى النَّاسِ حِجُّ الْبَيْتِ مَنِ اسْتَطَاعَ إِلَيْهِ سَبِيلًا ۚ وَمَنْ كَفَرَ فَإِنَّ اللّٰهَ غَنِيٌّ عَنِ الْعٰلَمِينَ ۞
قُلْ يٰأَهْلَ الْكِتٰبِ لِمَ تَكْفُرُونَ بِآيٰتِ اللّٰهِ ۖ وَاللّٰهُ شَهِيدٌ عَلٰى مَا تَعْمَلُونَ ۞ قُلْ يٰأَهْلَ الْكِتٰبِ لِمَ تَصُدُّونَ
عَنْ سَبِيلِ اللّٰهِ مَنْ آمَنَ تَبْغُونَهَا عِوَجًا وَأَنْتُمْ شُهَدَاءُ ۗ وَمَا اللّٰهُ بِغٰفِلٍ عَمَّا تَعْمَلُونَ ۞ يٰأَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ
آمَنُوا إِنْ تُطِيعُوا فَرِيقًا مِنَ الَّذِينَ أُوتُوا الْكِتٰبَ يَرُدُّوكُمْ بَعْدَ إِيمَانِكُمْ كٰفِرِينَ ۞ وَكَيْفَ تَكْفُرُونَ وَأَنْتُمْ تُتْلٰى
عَلَيْكُمْ آيٰتُ اللّٰهِ وَفِيكُمْ رَسُولُهُ ۗ وَمَنْ يَعْتَصِمْ بِاللّٰهِ فَقَدْ هُدِيَ إِلٰى صِرٰطٍ مُسْتَقِيمٍ ۞ يٰأَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ
آمَنُوا اتَّقُوا اللّٰهَ حَقَّ

97. (فيه . . . العلمين) In it are clear signs[22] and the station of Ibrāhīm.[23] And he who enters it shall be secure.[24] And incumbent on mankind is pilgrimage to the House for the sake of Allah—on him who is able to find a way thereto.[25] And he who disbelieves[26]—then Allah is Independent of all creatures.[27]

98. (قل . . . تعملون) Say thou,[28] 'O people of the Book ![29] why do you deny the revelations of Allah,[30] while Allah is Witness of what you work.[31]

99. (قل . . . تعملون) Say thou,[32] 'O people of the Book ! why do you hinder[33] those who believe from the way of Allah[34] seeking to make it[35] crooked,[36] while you are witnesses ?[37] And Allah is not unmindful of what you work'.[38]

100. (يايها . . . كفرين) O you who believe ! were you to obey[39] any section of those who have been given the Book,[40] they would[41] render you infidels[42] after your having believed.

101. (وكيف . . . مستقيم) Yet how can you disbelieve[43] while to you are recited the revelations of Allah,[44] and in your midst is the messenger[45] of Allah. And he who holds fast to Allah, is assuredly guided to a straight path.[46]

---

22. (of its greatness both material and spiritual, it being the permanent all-world centre of the monotheists).

23. See P. I, n. 568.

24. See P. I, n. 566.

25. i. e., one who has sufficient money, bodily health, etc. The pronoun in اليه may refer either to the House or the pilgrimage.

26. Note the extreme importance of the Pilgrimage. Wilful neglect of this commandment of God amounts to the abandonment of His faith.

27. (so he who wilfully neglects the pilgrimage does so to his own peril, and not to any possible hurt to his Lord and Creator). The tribal or national god of the polytheistic peoples existed only with and through his tribe or nation. Not so the God of Islam. He is Ever-Living, Self-Sufficient. Whether the whole of mankind served Him or none observed His commandments, it made no difference to Him whatsoever.

28. (O Prophet!)

29. The address is mainly to the Jews.

30. (in the face of their manifest truth).

31. (so that your concealment will not avail). He is the Ever-Living, Ever-Present, Witness of all human actions, passions and motives. If not His love, then His fear and the consciousness of His omniscience, ought to prompt one to a life of truth, integrity and honour.

32. (O Prophet!)

33. (by guile and deceit).

34. (in the truth of Islam). Not content with themselves wantonly denying the truth of God, the Jews plotted to seduce the Muslims from the faith. The particular person alluded to, whom the Jews endeavoured to pervert from Islam, was, as named by the commentators, one 'Amr of Medina.

35. i. e., the religion of Islam. The pronoun refers to 'the way of Allah.'

36. The Jews hoped to achieve their object by creating schism among the Muslims and sowing dissensions among them. A Jew named Shams ibn Qais happened one day to pass by men of the tribes of Aus and Khazraj, and found them engaged in familiar and friendly conversation. Intensely vexed at this harmony which now existed among them as Muslims after they had been most mortal and inveterate enemies to each other for 120 years, he directed a young man to sit by them and to recite loudly the poem of the battle of Buāth depicting one of the deadliest of the encounters. This had the designed effect. The tribes began to reflect on each other, till at length they came to arms. The holy Prophet, however, soon stepped in, and his remonstrances immediately quelled what might have been a formidable rising.

37. (of its truth in your heart) i. e., while your conscience bears witness to the truth of Islam.

38. (so His chastisement is sure to arrive at its proper time).

39. (or to allow yourselves to be influenced by).

40. (but are as yet inveterate enemies of Islam).

41. (in sheer malice and envy).

42. (in practice at any rate). For the Muslims to fall to fighting among themselves without good reason is, in effect, to revert to paganism and infidelity.

43. i. e., how is it possible for you to revert to such acts as are tantamount to paganism and infidelity.

44. i. e., while the Holy Qur'ān is in your midst.

45. (physically, so long as he is alive, and in spirit, after his death, that is, through his works and words, or sunnah). The point is that there is no earthly reason for any one to go back to irreligion so long as the Qur'ān and the sunnah are in existence. On the contrary every one has every motive to be a good and true Muslim.

46. (and is, therefore, assured of the highest bliss).

تُقٰتِهٖ وَلَا تَمُوْتُنَّ اِلَّا وَاَنْتُمْ مُّسْلِمُوْنَ ۝ وَاعْتَصِمُوْا بِحَبْلِ اللّٰهِ جَمِيْعًا وَّلَا تَفَرَّقُوْا ۠ وَاذْكُرُوْا نِعْمَتَ اللّٰهِ

SECTION 11

102. (يايها . . . مسلمون) O you who believe! fear Allah with fear due to Him,[47] and do not die except you be Muslims.[48]

103. (واعتصموا . . . تهتدون) And hold fast, all of you[49] to the cord of Allah,[50] and separate not.[51] And remember Allah's favour to you,[52] in that you were enemies,[53] and He joined your hearts together,[54] so you became brethren[55] by His favour; and you were on the brink of a pit of Fire,[56] and He rescued you from it.[57] Thus does Allah expoundeth to you His revelations that perhaps you may remain guided.[58]

104. (ولتكن . . . المفلحون) And let there be among you a community calling others to good and commanding equity and forbidding evil.[59] And it is these who are blissful.

105. (ولا تكونوا . . . عظيم) And be not as those who[60] separated[61] and differed among themselves[62] after there had come to them evidences.[63] These[64] are the ones for whom shall be a torment mighty.

47. i. e., with as much fear as you are capable of. The verse does not mean; fear Him with a fear that is worthy of Him—a command impossible of fulfilment. The meaning is: keep clear of sins and transgressions, as you have already kept clear of idolatry and paganism.

48. i. e., full of faith, perfect in conduct, and strict in the observance of the Law. To die as Muslims is indeed to 'die like a gentleman,' while to die in infidelity is to 'die as a beast.'

49. (with one mind and purpose). The address is to the Muslim community, both collectively and individually.

50. i. e., His religion of Islam.

51. (from each other). The Prophet 'succeeded in introducing into the anarchical society of his time a sentiment of national unity, a consciousness of rights and duties towards one another such as the Arabs had not felt before. In this way

Islam was uniting together classes that hitherto had been continually at feud with one another.' (Arnold, Preaching of Islam, p. 41).

52. i. e., the guidance which has, besides conferring other benefits, led to unity and solidarity.

53. (to one another). Internecine warfare in pre-Islamic Arabia has been proverbial and pagan Arabia, divided into mutually hostile clans and tribes, very much after the fashion of modern European states presented the sight of a veritable armed camp. 'Of the time of ignorance which preceded Mahomet, seventeen hundred battles are recorded by tradition; hostility was embittered with the rancour of civil faction; and the recital, in prose or verse, of an obsolete feud was sufficient to rekindle the same passions among the descendants of the hostile tribes. In private life, every man, at best every family was the judge and avenger of its own cause.' (GRE. V, p. 323). 'A petty affront or unpremeditated blow, not unfrequently, involved whole tribes and tracts of country in protracted and bloody strife,' (Muir, op. cit. Intro. p. cix)

54. (by Islam) 'Within a brief span of mortal life Muhammad called forth out of uncompromising material a nation never united before, in a country that was hitherto but a geographical expression.' (Hitti, History of Arabs, pp. 121-122).

55. (in common faith suppressing every distinction of race and kindred, and regarding each other as brethren). The Holy Prophet in the early days of his settlement in Medina coupled his principal followers with the rights and obligations of brethren. 'The expedient was crowned with success; the holy fraternity was respected in peace and war, and the two parties vied with each other in a generous emulation of courage and fidelity.' (GRE. V, p. 357). 'It required the genius of Muhammed to unite old enemies, and bind them together.' (EBr. XV, p. 657).

56. (of Hell by your idolatrous tenets and practices).

57. (in His infinite loving-kindness by directing you to Islam and its worldly blessings). 'A new starting-point was made in Arabia; the whole past was obliterated. A new Arabia arose and a new Arabian nation was summoned into existence to take its place in the history of the world and to hold aloft the torch of monotheism, or the worship of the one true God.' (BK. IV, p. 2282). 'Here was a truly marvellous reform. Muhammed had created a religion which had none of the features of the ancient cults, no priesthood, and no ceremonial, which was based on no forms but upon a spiritual relationship to an unseen God. It was not designed to give prestige to a special group but to create a universal brotherhood composed of all men of every race who would accept this God and promise loyalty to His prophet.' (Denison, Emotion as the Basis of Civilization, p. 274).

58. i. e., steadfast in the guidance and seeking increase therein.

59. Since the duty of enjoining the right and forbidding the wrong entails conditions in which the whole nation cannot share, the Holy Qur'ān, while addressing the entire Muslim people, demands the action of a part of it only.

60. (like the Jews and the Christians, moved by self-interest and other ignoble motives).

61. (and split into sects and sub-sects).

62. (concerning the nature, person and attributes of God, the Resurrection and other vital doctrines).

63. (of the truth of God's religion)

64. i. e., the wilful rejectors of God's truth from among the Jews and the Christians.

فذوقوا العذاب بما كنتم تكفرون ۝ وأما الذين ابيضت وجوههم ففي رحمة الله هم فيها خالدون ۝
تلك آيات الله نتلوها عليك بالحق وما الله يريد ظلما للعالمين ۝ ولله ما في السماوات وما في الأرض
وإلى الله ترجع الأمور ۝ كنتم خير أمة أخرجت للناس تأمرون بالمعروف وتنهون عن المنكر

إلا بحبل من الله وحبل

106. (يوم . . . تكفرون) On a day when some faces[65] will become whitened[66] and other faces[67] will become blackened.[68] Then as for those whose faces shall have become blackened; 'did you disbelieve after your profession of belief?[69] Taste the torment,[70] for you have been disbelieving'.

107. (و اما . . . خلدون) And as for those whose faces shall have become whitened, they shall be in Allah's mercy; therein they shall abide.[71]

108. (تلک . . . للعلمین) These are revelations of Allah; We rehearse them to thee[72] with truth; and Allah intends not wrong to His creatures.[73]

109. (و لله . . . الامور) Allah's is whatever is in the heavens and in the earth;[74] and to Allah are committed all affairs.[75]

SECTION 12

110. (کنتم . . . الفسقون) You are the best community ever sent forth to mankind;[76] you enjoin good and forbid evil, and you believe in Allah.[77] Now if the people of the Book have faith,[78] it were better for them; among them some are believers,[79] and most of them are ungodly.[80]

111. (لن . . . ينصرون) They[81] shall not be able to harm you[82] except with small hurt,[83] and if they fight you, they shall turn their backs upon you;[84] then they will not be helped.[85]

---

65. (of the good-doers).
66. (with the radiance of joy).
67. (of the evil-doers).
68. (with the gloom of fear).
69. Thus they will be addressed. The interrogatory form is indicative of reproach.
70. 'Taste' is here ironical, indicative of contempt.
71. (for ever). It is the eternal nature of the heavenly bliss that is here emphasised.
72. (O Prophet!)

73. (so his judgments shall be, in every instance, absolutely just and equitable). It is not a capricious spite but absolute and stern justice that leads God of Islam to inflict punishment on His guilty creatures. He is in no way comparable to the malevolent deities of the polytheists.

74. See P. III, n. 23.

75. (for disposal and judgment). Another reminder of the fact that He is the sole Judge and Arbiter.

76. (to benefit it by your precept and practice, O Muslims !)

77. Thus the Muslims are the creators, preservers and custodians of moral order in God's universe, i. e., His policemen on the earth. 'This is the moral justification of the aggressive activism of Islam, the justification of the early Islamic conquests and its so-called "Imperialism" . . . . Moral knowledge, according to the teachings of Islam, automatically forces a moral responsibility upon men. A mere Platonic discernment between Right and Wrong, without the urge to promote the Right and to destroy the Wrong is a gross immorality in itself. In Islam, morality lives and dies with the human endeavour to establish its victory upon earth.' (Asad, Islam on the Crossroad, pp. 27-28).

78. (as they should, and as the Muslims do).

79. (such as Abdullah ibn Salām and his companions).

80. (and persistent scoffers).

81. The allusion is to the Jews of Medina.

82. (O Muslims !)

83. أذى is A slight evil ; less than what is termed ضرر (LL). The Muslims are here definitely told that the Jews, rich and powerful though they were, would not be able to inflict upon them any serious injury.

84. i. e., if they ever muster courage to fight, they are sure to receive a crushing defeat. And as this actually happend in the case of the tribes Quraizā and Nadhīr, the Bani Quinuqā' and the Jews of Khaibar. It affords one more instance of the prophetic texts corroborated by the events.

85. i. e., far from being victorious they shall receive no help from any quarter ; their end will be complete isolation.

مِّنَ النَّاسِ وَبَآءُو بِغَضَبٍ مِّنَ اللَّهِ وَضُرِبَتْ عَلَيْهِمُ الْمَسْكَنَةُ ۚ ذَٰلِكَ بِأَنَّهُمْ كَانُوا يَكْفُرُونَ بِآيَاتِ اللَّهِ
وَيَقْتُلُونَ الْأَنبِيَاءَ بِغَيْرِ حَقٍّ ۚ ذَٰلِكَ بِمَا عَصَوا وَّكَانُوا يَعْتَدُونَ ﴿١١٢﴾ لَيْسُوا سَوَاءً ۗ مِّنْ أَهْلِ الْكِتَابِ أُمَّةٌ قَائِمَةٌ

وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ بِالْمُتَّقِينَ ﴿١١٥﴾ إِنَّ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا لَن تُغْنِيَ عَنْهُمْ أَمْوَالُهُمْ وَلَا أَوْلَادُهُم مِّنَ اللَّهِ شَيْئًا ۖ
وَأُولَٰئِكَ أَصْحَابُ النَّارِ ۚ هُمْ فِيهَا خَالِدُونَ ﴿١١٦﴾

112. (ضربت . . . يعتدون) Stuck upon them is abjection[86] wherever they may be,[87] except in a compact with Allah[88] and in a compact with men;[89] and they have drawn upon themselves wrath from Allah,[90] and stuck upon them is poverty.[91] That is because they have been denying the signs of Allah[92] and killing the prophets of Allah without right.[93] That is because they have disobeyed, and they have been transgressing.[94]

113. (ليسوا . . . يسجدون) Yet were they not all alike.[95] Among the people of the Book there is a community steadfast, reciting the revelations of Allah[96] in the watches of night while they prostrate themselves.[97]

114. (يؤمنون . . . الصالحين) And they believe in Allah and the Last Day and enjoin good and forbid evil,[98] and vie with each other[99] in virtues. And these are among the righteous.

115. (وما . . . بالمتقين) And whatever of good they do shall not be denied.[100] And Allah is Knower of the pious.[101]

116. (إن . . . خلدون) Surely those who disbelieve, neither their riches nor their progeny shall avail themselves aught against Allah.[102] These are the inmates of the Fire; therein they shall abide.

86. i. e., insecurity of their lives and ruin of family and property; see P. I, nn. 261, 262 ff.

87. Witness the plight of the Jews, even at the present day (1938), in Berlin, and Vienna, and elsewhere. 'While they dominate the realm of international finance and may even dictate in the realm of international politics, ... they seem still to exist on sufferance, as aliens, more or less, undesirable,' (MA).

88. This covers the exceptions prescribed by the Islamic law, such as the religious recluses, women and children.

89. This covers the case of those who obtain security by entering into treaties.

90. See P. I., n. 264.

91. See P. I., nn. 262 ff.

92. See P. I., n. 267.

93. See P. I., nn. 269, 270.

94. (the bonds of the Law habitually). See P. I, nn. 271, 272.

95. (in their attitude towards the true Faith).

96. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

97. (and it is they who have realised and recognised the truth of Islam). Night devotions are particularly meritorious.

98. Virtuous characteristic of the best community. See verse 110 above.

99. مسارعة signifies the hastening with one another or crying, or striving, with another in hastening; or hastening to be, or get before another or others.' (LL).

100. (because of their past). No good action or the need thereof is ever to be lost.

101. (and as these are transparently among the God-fearing, He knows them also very well).

102. (either by way of compensation, or by way of offering sacrifices on behalf of their ancestors). 'The Hindu unites in some degree with the Chinese as to ancestor-worship, and specially as to the necessity of having a son by blood or adoption, who shall offer the proper sacrifices to him after death.' (PC. II, p. 119) In Sanskrit the very word 'putra' (son) means, according to Manu, "he that delivers his father from the Hell called Put." (ERE. I, p. 540)

117. (مثل . . . يظلمون) The likeness[103] of what they[104] spend in the life of this world[105] is that of a wind in which is intense cold; it befalls the cornfields of a people[106] who have wronged themselves[107] and lays them waste.[108] Allah wronged them not,[109] but themselves they wrong.[110]

118. (يايها . . . تعقلون) O you who believe ! take not for an intimate[111] anyone besides yourselves;[112] they shall not be remiss in corrupting you.[113] They yearn for what distresses you; surely their malice[114] has shown itself of their own mouths,[115] and what their breasts hide is greater still. Verily We have expounded you the signs,[116] if you will reflect.

119. (هانتم . . . الصدور) Lo! it is you who love them,[117] while they love you not,[118] and you believe in the Book, all of it.[119] When they[120] meet you, they say, 'we believe'.[121] And when they are alone, they bite their fingers at you in rage.[122] Say thou,[123] 'perish in your rage.[124] Allah is Knower of what is in your breasts'.[125]

103. (in point of fatuity).

104. i. e., the infidels; those devoid of true faith.

105. (to gain fame, or out of vanity, or from fear, or for appearances' sake).

106. (and smiting the herbage and the seed-produce of the field).

107. (by impiety and irreligion).

108. (by way of punishment).

109. (in bringing to naught what they spent).

110. (by spending their riches in a way disapproved of by God).

111. (to whom you may confide your secrets), بطانة is 'A friend, who is consulted respecting one's circumstances,' or a bosom friend.

112. i. e., the Muslims. Obviously a wise maxim to preserve the faithful from the contaminating influence of impiety and irreligion.

113. خبال is 'A state of perdition or destruction; or a thing's going, passing or wasting away; or being consumed or destroyed.' And the phrase means: 'They will not fall short, or flag, or be remiss, in corrupting or vitiating, your affairs.' (LL).

114. (towards you). The allusion is to the Medinian Jews.

115. (unwillingly, since they cannot control themselves in their extreme hatred).

116. (of their intense hatred and enmity towards you).

117. —simple and trusting as you are—

118. (nor believe in your Book).

119. (including theirs as believers in all revealed religions). The word الكتاب is here used in generic sense. The Muslims are bound to believe in all Revealed Books.

120. i. e., the hypocrites among the Jews.

121. i. e., they aver that they are Muslims.

122. i. e., in the height of their impotent rage.

123. (unto them, O Prophet!).

124. (as never shall the end you seek be achieved; the power of Islam shall continue and increase and shall not perish).

125. (so He knows the spite that is rankling in the breasts of the enemies of Islam, and has laid it bare).

حسنة تسؤهم وإن تصبكم سيئة يفرحوا بها وإن تصبروا وتتقوا لا يضركم كيدهم شيئا إن الله

120. (ان . . . محيط) If there happens to you any good,[126] it grieves them,[127] and if there befalls to you an ill,[128] they rejoice at it.[129] And if you remain perserving and God-fearing their guile shall not harm you at all. Surely Allah is Encompasser of what they work.[130]

SECTION 13

121. (و اذ . . . عليم) And re-call when thou[131] went forth[132] from thy house early to assign position[133] to the believers in the battle.[134] And Allah is Hearing,[135] Knowing.[136]

122. (اذهمت . . . المؤمنون) Re-call when two sections of you[137] meditated that they should flag,[138] whereas Allah was the Patron of the twain.[139] And upon Allah, then, should the believers rely.[140]

123. (ولقد . . . تشكرون) And assuredly Allah succoured you[141] at Badr,[142] while you were humble.[143] So fear Allah[144] that perhaps you may return thanks.[145]

124. (اذ . . . منزلين) Re-call when thou saidst to the believers,[146] 'suffices it not, to you,[147] that your Lord should reinforce you with three thousand angels sent down.[148]

---

126. (such as unity among the ranks of the Muslims, or their victory over pagans).

127. So spiteful are they!

128. i. e., any temporary set-back.

129. So malicious are they!

130. (and He is sure to requite them accordingly).

131. (O Prophet! as the military commander of the Muslim army).

132. (in the direction of the Mount of Ohud).

133. i. e., places which the Muslim troops should occupy. The choice of 'position' was of immense importance then, as it is, to a considerable extent, even now. And the Prophet, remarkable strategist as he was, paid special attention to proper arraying of his troops in the battle-field. Speaking of the first battle of Islam, says a modern Christian biographer of the holy Prophet:—'In contrast with his opponents, who fought with careless bravado, ... Mohammed championed a comparatively modern tactical idea. To the exuberant martial mood and the knightly bravery of the Meccans he opposed strict discipline and careful deliberation' (Andre, Mohammed, p. 144-45).

134. (of Ohud). Twelve months after the battle of Badr, when the third year of the Prophet's stay at Medina was drawing to a close, there burst out a storm of unprecedented violence. After exceedingly elaborate preparations, the Quraish 'commenced their march, 3,000 strong; 700 were mailed warriors, and 200 well-mounted cavalry: the remainder rode on camels ... The chiefs of Koraish all joined the force ..... Women were allowed to accompany them .... Taking timbrels in their hands, they sang to their wild cadence songs of venegeance for kinsmen slain at Badr' (Muir, op. cit., pp. 253). The Muslim army, all told, was 1,000, and the holy commander had no more than one horse, besides his own, in his whole army. And then at dawn, while the columns of the enemy were in sight, and while the Muslim army, led by the holy Prophet, prostrated itself in worship, 'Abdullah ibn Obayy at this moment wheeled suddenly round, and, deserting the army with his 300 followers took the road back to city.' (p. 275). Thus the Prophet was left with but 700 followers, of whom only a hundred were clad in mail, facing a well-equipped army four times their number.

135. (so that He heard all that was said then and there).

136. (so that He knew all that was happening then and there).

137. (momentarily losing heart by the precept and example of Abdullah bin Obayy, the ringleader of the hypocrites). The two clans of Salima (Kazraj tribe) and Hāritha (Aūs tribe), who occupied the two flanks.

138. (and withdraw from the battle-field). هم here implies only a passing thought, an inclination, a momentary weakness, not any definite action.

139. (so that He never allowed them to be actually guilty of cowardice). 'The early battles of Islam,' 'in the main historical,' 'are more than Homeric in the reckless valour and the chivalrous devotion that they exhibit' (Bosworth Smith, op. cit., p. 207).

140. (and let them never again be influenced and disturbed by disheartening thoughts).

141. (O Muslims!). This is said to awaken in their memory an occasion on which reliance on God had worked wonders.

142. Badr is a camping-ground and market, about twenty miles south-west of Medina noted for plentiful supply of water, and situated at the union of the road from Medina and the caravan route from Syria to Makka. 'Here was manifested for the first time how the hope of a blessed hereafter had filled the believing Moslems with an enthusiasm which defied death and despised pain .... The battle of Badr was of the greatest importance for the victory of Islam.' (HHW. VIII, pp. 120-121) 'However unimportant in itself as a military engagement, this Ghazwat Badr laid the foundation of Muhammed's temporal power. Islam had won its first and decisive military victory . . . Hitherto it had been a religion within a state; in al-Madinah, after Badr, it passed into something more than a state religion—it itself became the state. Then and there Islam came to be what the world has ever since recognized it to be—a militant polity' (Hitti, op. cit., p. 117), ب before a noun signifying place or time is almost synonymous with في. So that ب here may also be rendered as 'close by.'

143. i. e., poor in regard to numbers, mounts and armour. 'They mounted by turns a train of seventy camels,' but such was the poverty of the early Muslims 'that only two could appear on horseback in the field' (GRE. V. p. 361). See p. X. n. 37. The battle was fought on the 17th or 19th Ramzān, 2 A. H. or according to the Christian calendar on the 17th March, 624.

144. (as that Divine succour was the result of your fear of God). 'The spirit of discipline and contempt of death manifested at this first armed encounter of Islam proved characteristic of it in all its later and greater conquests' (Hitti, op. cit.). 'It laid the foundation of the Prophet's power and likewise for the further propagation of Islam and rarely did the superior ability of the Prophet show itself so clearly as on this occasion.' (EI. I, p. 559). See also P. X, n. 9.

145. (for such special favours as the Divine succour in war).

146. (to allay their alarm and dismay at the news of the enemy reinforcements, O Prophet!)

147. (for cheering you up and strengthening your hearts).

148. (from heaven for this very purpose)

مُسَوِّمِيْنَ ۝ وَمَا جَعَلَهُ اللّٰهُ اِلَّا بُشْرٰى لَكُمْ وَلِتَطْمَئِنَّ قُلُوْبُكُمْ بِهٖ ؕ وَمَا النَّصْرُ اِلَّا مِنْ عِنْدِ اللّٰهِ الْعَزِيْزِ

مِّنْ رَّبِّكُمْ

125. (بلى . . . مسومين) Yea! if you but remain steadfast and God-fearing,[149] and they should come upon you immediately,[150] your Lord shall reinforce you[151] with five thousand angels marked.[152]

126. (و ما . . . الحكيم) And this promise[153] Allah did not make except as a joyful announcement to you,[154] so that thereby your hearts might be set at rest—and no success is there but from Allah,[155] the Mighty,[156] the Wise[157]—

127. (ليقطع . . . خائبين) In order that[158] He may cut off[159] a portion of those who disbelieve,[160] or abase them[161] so that they may go back frustrated.[162]

128. (ليس . . . ظلمون) Nought with thee is of the affair;[163] He shall either relent towards them[164] or torment them[165] for they are the ungodly.[166]

129. (و لله . . . رحيم) Allah's is whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth.[167] He forgives whom He will, and torments whom He will; and Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.[168]

SECTION 14

130. (يايها . . . تفلحون) O you who believe! do not devour usury[169] multiplied manifold;[170] and fear Allah, haply ye may thrive.[171]

131. (واتقوا . . . للكفرين) And beware of the Fire prepared for the infidels.[172]

132. (و اطيعوا . . . ترحمون) And obey Allah and the messenger,[173] haply you may be shown mercy.

---

149. (at the time of war and be not inclined to indiscipline)

150. اتوامن فورهم means 'they came in a headlong manner.' (LL)

151. (even then, when human succour is most difficult to obtain). The Holy Prophet on the eve of his departure for Ohud said in the course of his address:—'If ye be steadfast, the Lord will grant you victory . . . . Wait on the Lord. Only be steadfast, and He will send you victory.' The entire emphasis is on the virtues of constancy and discipline.

152. (by their special badges). 'مسومين' in the Kuran may mean, either marked by the colours, or the like, of their horses, so as to be distinguished from others, or, sent forth' (LL).

153. i. e., the promise of reinforcements by the angels.

154. i. e., as an earnest of your victory.

155. (in fact and reality). The verse besides serving as a warning against the possible deification of angels and making it clear that it is God alone, and not His angels, who really cause victory, also demonstrates the truth, inexplicable on any other ground, that the expansion of Islam was due solely to the direct Divine intervention. 'Even though it be admitted,' says a non-believing Christian, 'that Mohamed laid the foundations of his laws in the strongest principles of human nature, and prepared the fabric of his empire with the profoundest wisdom, still there can be no doubt that the intelligence of no man could, during his lifetime, have foreseen, and no combination could have insured, on the part of one individual, the extraordinary success of his followers.' (Finlay, Greece under the Romans, p. 446)

156. i. e., Able to grant victory, without any ostensible and apparent cause.

157. i. e., making concession to the vulgar mind that looks up more and more to the immediate causes.

158. The conjunction is dependent on some such words as 'He succoured you.'

159. (at your hands).

160. This took place on the day of Badr when seventy of the chosen chiefs of the Quraish were slain and seventy others taken captive.

161. (by their complete rout).

162. i. e. broken and in utter despair.

163. (O Prophet!) i. e., the fate of the rebellious Makkans. With this verse is resumed the tale of Ohud left off in verse 120. The Prophet as he sat wounded in his face and as the blood was being wiped off him, reflected sorrowfully on the fate that awaited his rebellious people and is said to have remarked, 'How shall a people prosper who treat thus their prophet who calleth them unto the Lord!' Thereupon the verse was revealed.

164. (by opening their hearts to Islam)

165. (in this very world)

166. (and merit immediate punishment)

167. See P. III, n. 23.

168. (so that no special reason is required for the exercise of His forgiveness and mercy)

169. i. e., neither lend nor borrow money on interest. The close connection between war and national loans and debts is too plain to need expiation. 'The Talmud classes the usurer with the murderer, neither of them being able to atone for his crime. It even forbids the acceptance of interest and in the Middle Ages even the smallest interest of the pawn shops was considered usury.' (JE. IX,

p. 373). Yet the Biblical law 'does not impose any limit in dealings between Israelites and Gentiles' (XII, p. 388). And the Jews and the Christians both have found it 'impossible to carry out the canonical restrictions without stopping all progress in commerce.' (p. 391). It is thus the Holy Qur'ān alone that has forbidden the practice for all ages and in all circumstances, regardless of all 'commercial' considerations. For 'usury' see P. III, nn. 141, 146 and the Appendix.

170. (making the rich richer and the poor poorer). 'What offends the moralist to-day is that money is lent by those who have abundance and returns to them to increase that abundance, the increase being the unpaid dues of labour, which alone, the argument runs, produces wealth.' (ERE, XII, p. 554). 'In some countries are found instances of the exaction of interest at thirty, fifty and even higher per cent' (CD. p. 988).

171. The basis of prosperity and success, both in this world and the Hereafter, is fear of God, not greed of gold.

172. (essentially and primarily). Hell is intended for the infidels. Muslims are warned to guard themselves against imitating them or practising their actions.

173. (cheerfully and with all your heart).

133. (وسارعوا . . . للمتقين) And hasten to forgiveness from your Lord and towards the Garden[174] as vast as the heavens and the earth,[175] prepared for the God-fearing;[176]

134. (الذين . . . المحسنين) Those who spend[177] both in weal and woe,[178] who repress anger[179] and who pardon men;[180] and Allah loves the well-doers.[181]

135. (والذين . . . يعلمون) And those who, when they have committed a misdeed[182] or wronged themselves,[183] remember Allah[184] and beg forgiveness of their sins[185]—and who forgives sins save Allah?[186]—and do not persist in what they have done while they know.[187]

136. (اولئك . . . العاملين) It is those whose recompense[188] is forgiveness from their Lord and Gardens beneath which rivers flow. They shall abide therein; excellent is the wage of the workers![189]

137. (قد . . . المكذبين) Dispensations have gone forth before you;[190] go about them on the earth, and see what has been the end of the beliers![191]

---

174. (by betaking yourselves to actions leading thereto).

175. This merely gives an idea of its unimaginable vastness.

176. Muslims are thus exhorted to acquire positive merits and win the way through to everlasting Bliss and not to rest content with the mere negative aspect of abstaining from evil.

177. (benevolently; in the service of the Creator and His creatures)

178. (alike) i. e., in all circumstances; in times of prosperity and comfort and in times of adversity and distress.

179. (even under grave provocation). Mark the word كظم. It is not the obliteration of the irascible emotion but only its repression or control that is commended in Islām. الكظمين الغيظ are those who refrain from giving vent to their wrath while they have the power to do so, and those who have mastered their anger.

180. i. e., those who refrain from punishing those whom they have a right to punish. Note that this teaching was given in the first place to the Arabs, the most revengeful of all the peoples. 'To the heathen Arab, friendship and hostility were as a loan which he sought to repay with interest, and he prided himself on returning evil for evil, and looked down on any who acted otherwise as weak ridering' (Arnold, Preaching of Islam, p. 43).

181. It is related of Hasan the son of Ali that a slave having once thrown a dish on him boiling hot, as he sat at table, and fearing his master's resentment, fell immediately on his knees and repeated these words, Paradise is for those who bridle their anger'. Hasan answered, I am not angry. The slave proceeded, and for those who forgive men. I forgive you, said Hasan. The slave, however, finished the verse, adding, for God loveth the beneficient. Since it is so, replied Hasan, I give you your liberty, and four hundred pieces of silver. (Sale, The Koran, London 1892, p. 46).

182. (involving injury to others). Literally, فاحشة is 'an excess; an enormity; anything exceeding the bounds of rectitude.' Here it signifies a sin involving injury to others.

183. i. e., committed a sin injurious to themselves.

184. i. e., His commandments and His prohibitions, immediately or soon after the deed.

185. (by remorse and repentance and by making amends in the way prescribed by the Law). Parenthetically, this encourages people to ask His pardon, and implies a promise that their repentance will be accepted.

186. (the God of Mercy and Forgiveness). A staggering blow to the Christian idea that the power of forgiving sins is in the hands of Christ and the pastors of his Church. Cf. the NT :—'Then said Jesus to them again. . . . Whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained'. (Jn. 20 : 21-23). 'Unlimited power of remitting sin was promised and conferred upon the Apostles and their successors by Jesus Christ. This power is exercised in the Sacrament of Penance' (CD. p. 821). And the following is an extract from Dr. Butler's 'Catechism' for the Roman Catholics :—

> 'Q. By whose power are sins forgiven ?
> A. By the power of God, which Christ left to the pastors of the Church,' (p. 84).

187. (that they have committed a sin and that they have to make proper amends for it) i. e., they do not repeat the sinful act knowingly.

188. (for all their sins and faults).

189. (of good).

190. (O Muslims!) i. e., different ways of life, of faith and unbelief, with their different fate.

191. i. e., ruin and perdition in this very world. March in the earth, and take warning by the vestiges of their destruction which you shall see.

138. (هذا ... المتقين) This[192] Qur'ān is an exposition for mankind and a guidance and an admonition for the God-fearing.[193]

139. (ولا ... مؤمنين) And do not faint nor grieve, you shall triumph,[194] if you are believers.

140. (إن ... الظالمين) If a distress has come in your way,[195] a like distress has surely befallen that people.[196] Such[197] are the haps[198] that We change about among mankind, so that Allah may know[199] those who believe and may take martyrs from among you;[200] and Allah does not love the ungodly[201]—

142. (أم ... الصبرين) Or, do you think that you shall enter the Garden[204] while yet Allah has not known,[205] those who have striven hard,[206] nor yet known the steadfast ?

143. (ولقد ... تنظرون) And certainly you[207] were wont to long for death[208] before you had met it.[209] Now you have seen it,[210] even when you are looking on.[211]

---

192. According to some the word 'this' may refer to the preceding passage, 'Dispensations have gone forth before you.'

193. Note once again that they alone can benefit by the Qur'ān who are alive to the fear of God; to them alone it can serve as a guide for right knowledge and right conduct.

194. (O Muslims!) i.e., be uppermost both in arguments and in arms, because you are on the side of truth, not falsehood.

195. (as in the battle of Ohud).

196. (as in the battle of Badr).

197. (vicissitudes of success and defeat).

198. Literally, 'days,'

199. (demonstrably) i.e., God intended by this reverse to sift the true from the false among those who professed Islam.

200. Martyrdom is the highest honour that a Muslim can aspire to achieve; so God intended, so far as the Muslim slain were concerned, to raise them to martyrdom.

201. (so that no number of victories on the part of the infidels can prove that they are in the right or are of the loved by God). He allows them occasional success either to tempt them or to test the believers, or with some such other end in view in accordance with His Universal Plan.

202. (of any impurities that they might have contracted). Trials and tribulations in the case of true believers have always the effect of purifying their hearts and improving their morals.

203. (gradually, by making them still more arrogant by temporary successes, and thus hastening them on to their final end). امحاق is to diminish a thing little by little. 'It is true that in the following year (625) the Makkans under Abū-Sufyān avenged at Uhud their defeat and even wounded the Prophet, but their triumph was not to endure. Islam recovered and passed on gradually from the defensive to the offensive and its propagation seemed always assured.' (Hitti, op. cit. p. 117).

204. (distinguishedly). Mere entering the Paradise is not necessarily subject to the test of 'striving hard' and 'great steadfastness.' But those who, like the companions of the holy Prophet, were ambitious of distinguished ranks and grades in Paradise, must undergo hard tests.

205. i. e., known in the world of experience, and not in His fore-knowledge of every event.

206. (in His cause).

207. i. e., some of you.

208. (by martyrdom). Persons who were not present at Badr desired to be present with the Apostle at another sacred battle in order to gain the distinction obtained by the heroes of Badr; so they urged him to go out on the day of Ohud.

209. i. e., before you faced it and had an actual experience of its terrors.

210. i. e., its near approach.

211. (then why waver now ?).

SECTION 15

144. (وما . . . الشكرين) And Muhammad is naught but a messenger;[212] and messengers have surely passed away before him.[213] Will you then, if he dies or is killed, turn round on your heels.[214] And he who turns round on his heels, does not harm Allah at all.[215] And surely Allah will recompense the grateful.[216]

145. (وما . . . الشكرين) It is not open to any person to die except by Allah's will[217] at a time recorded.[218] And whoso desires the reward of this world,[219] We grant to him of this,[220] and he who desires the reward of the Hereafter We grant to him of that.[221] And surely We will recompense the grateful [222]

146. (وكاين . . . الصبرين) And many a prophet has fought[223] with a number of godly men beside him. For aught that befell them[224] in the way of Allah, they never fainted nor they weakened,[225] nor they abased themselves.[226] And Allah loves the steadfast.[227]

147. (وما . . . الكفرين) And their speech was naught save they said,[228] 'our Lord ! forgive us our sins and our exorbitance in our affairs[229] and make our foothold firm[230] and make us triumph over the disbelieving people.'

212. (and therefore subject to the law of change; and not an immortal God, beyond the reach of death). 'Mohammed to the end of his life claimed for himself that title only with which he had begun, and which the highest philosophy and the truest Christianity will one day, I venture to believe, agree in yielding to him—that of a Prophet, a very Prophet of God.' (Bosworth Smith, op. cit., p. 344). The word محمد literally means, 'A man praised much, or repeatedly, or time after time: endowed with many praiseworthy qualities' (LL). 'The name was rare among the Arabs.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 5). 'No impartial student surveying the career and character of Mohammed can fail to acknowledge his loftiness of purpose, his moral courage, his sincerity, his simplicity, and his kindness. To these qualities must be added unsparing energy and a genius for diplomacy (Sykes, History of Persia, I, p. 520. See also P. XXVI, nn. 107 and 333).

213. (so he too will pass away at the end of his span of life). 'These verses constitute one of the most moving and impressive portions of the Qur'ān, and the lesson they taught was never forgotten. And yet when seven years later the Prophet lay dead in the lap of his beloved wife Aeysha, the news of his death produced such a consternation among his devoted followers that they expected the heaven to burst open and the earth to cleave asunder and wondered how long it could be for the end of the world to come. The loving Umar was entirely beside himself. . . . It was on a scene of such stormy emotions that the tender-hearted but ever tranquil Abū Bakr arrived from the suburb of Madina, where he lived . . . . He said to the assembled crowd with that sureness of conviction that had won him the title of Siddīq, "O Men! he who worshipped Muhammad, let him know that verily Muhammad has already passed away; but he who worshipped Allah, let him know that verily Allah is living and shall never die." And then he recited . . . . "And Muhammad is no more than an apostle . . . ." This allayed all doubts and fears, and a great tranquillity ensued. People who had constantly read . . . . the verse that Abū Bakr so appositely quoted, stated that when he recited it on this memorable occasion, it seemed as if it had just been revealed' (MA). Such is the evergreen freshness of the Holy Qur'ān!

214. (to apostasy). The Holy Prophet received serious wounds in the battle of Ohud, and a rumour went round that he was slain. Then some of the hypocrites said, 'had he been a prophet, he had not been killed, return therefore to your brethren and your ancestral religion.' The verse alludes to this incident.

215. (but only hurts himself).

216. i. e., those who show their gratitude to Him for the benefit of Islam by adhering to it.

217. (so that nobody can delay his death or anticipate it by keeping away from battle or plunging into it).

218. (in His fore-knowledge). So that death shall come neither before nor after that time.

219. (to the exclusion of his reward in the Hereafter).

220. (and he shall be deprived of his portion in the Hereafter).

221. (and We pledge Ourselves to that).

222. i. e., those who were thankful for His mercy, and were not diverted by anything from fighting in His cause.

223. (against the infidels, and in the cause of faith).

224. (by way of disasters).

225. i. e., their zeal did not diminish in the least.

226. (before the enemy).

227. (and so He helps them and exalts their station).

228. (with true humility and becoming modesty, and far from any faltering in act and deed, even in their word and speech they were so pure and sincere).

229. The godly and God-fearing in the fervour of their prayers and the purity of their hearts are ascribing sins and excesses to themselves by way of self-abasement.

230. (against infidels).

---

231. i. e., by reason of their steadfastness and their imploring forgiveness and taking refuge with Him.

232. i. e., glorious victory and good name.

233. The epithet 'excellent' is in order to indicate that the reward of the Hereafter only is of consequence with God.

234. (and He shall recompense them accordingly).

235. (to apostasy).

236. (and Protector).

237. (so have implicit confidence in His friendship and in His help, and through Him dispense with the alliance of others).

238. A remarkable instance of this terror-stricken mentality is furnished by the behaviour of the Makkans after their show of a 'victory' at Ohud. The natural course for them was to advance into Medina. Instead, they hastily retreated to Makka without making the least use of their 'success.' In fact, it was the Muslims who pursued them as far as Hamrā-ul-Asad, and succeeded in making one of the enemy a prisoner. A curious sight indeed of a 'victorious' army in retreat and the 'crest-fallen and crippled Muslims' in pursuit! 'The Quraish were seized with terror when they saw the serious and determined faces of the believers. For the emigrants and their brothers war was not a knightly sport or a festive parade to gain national honour. It was as serious as death. Already in this battle we gain an impression of the spirit which dominated the young militant congregation of Islam' (Andre, op. cit., p. 203).

239. i. e., those who are so unjust as to transfer to others what is due to God alone.

عَلَى الْمُؤْمِنِينَ ۝ إِذْ تُصْعِدُونَ وَلَا تَلْوُونَ عَلَىٰ أَحَدٍ وَالرَّسُولُ يَدْعُوكُمْ فِي أُخْرَاكُمْ فَأَثَابَكُمْ غَمًّا بِغَمٍّ لِكَيْلَا تَحْزَنُوا

152. (ولقد . . . المؤمنين) And Allah has assuredly made good His promise[240] to you[241] when you were extirpating them by His will,[242] until you flagged,[243] and you quarrelled about the command[244] and you disobeyed[245] after He had shown you[246] what you had longed.[247] Of you some[248] desired this world,[249] and of you some[250] desired the Hereafter,[251] therefore[252] He turned you away from them[253] that He might test you;[254] and verily He has pardoned you.[255] And Allah is Gracious to the believers.

240. (of help and assistance).

241. (in the early stages of the battle of Ohud, consequent on your obedience and steadfastness)

242. (and were in sight of complete victory).

243. i. e., the archers disobeyed. Muir's account of the battle will bear reproduction. The holy Commander of the faithful, before the battle had begun, 'posted on an adjoining eminence the flower of his archery, and gave their leader stringent orders on no possible contingency to quite the spot .... "Guard our rear," he said, "and stir not from this spot; ... if we be pursued and even worsted, do not venture to our aid," .... Pressed by the fierce ardour of the Muslims, the Meccan army began to waver .... The same daring contempt of danger was displayed as at Badr .... But now the Muslims pressed too hotly their success. Their line lost form and order; and a portion, piercing the enemy's ranks, fell to plundering its camp. The archers who had hitherto held the Meccan horse in check, saw from their height the tempting opportunity, and casting the Prophet's strict injunction to the winds, ... hurried to the spoil. The ready eye of Khālid saw the chance, and he hastened to retrieve the day .... The Muslims broke at every point' (Muir, Life of Mohammed, pp. 258-261).

244. (of the Prophet not to quit their post in any case). Ten, out of fifty archers, stayed with their leader at the position assigned, the rest making for the booty.

245. (the express injunction of our holy commander). 'The implicit obedience which the troops of the Prophet paid to his commands, rendered their discipline as superior to that of the imperial forces, as their tactics and their arms were inferior' (Finlay, op. cit., p. 355).

246. (with your own eyes).

247. (in the way of your victory and the complete discomfiture of the enemy).

248. i. e., the forty archers who left their station for the booty.

249. (by pursuing the enemy and getting the booty). So that this 'worldliness' also was not for its own sake, and not in itself an entirely unworthy goal.

250. i. e., those who kept their places.

251. (pure and simple). A goal yet higher and nobler.

252. i. e., on which account; in consequence of your disobedience and lack of discipline.

253. (and withheld the Divine aid from you).

254. (by misfortune, and test the endurance of your faith thereby). So that this set-back too, was not in the way of punishment, but merely as a means of the trial of faith.

255. This shows that the guilt of the forty impatient archers was intellectual rather than moral—a gross error of judgment, and not a wilful rebellion.

256. (in utter confusion).

257. (far more courageous than any of you).

258. ('Whither away ? come back ! I am the apostle of Allah !').

259. i. e., in recompense of the sorrow you caused to the Prophet. The address is to the Muslims who flagged at Ohud.

260. (in the future, by getting inured to steadfastness under adverse fortune, O Muslims !)

261. i. e., 'that you might accustom yourselves to endurance in tribulations, and not grieve thereafter over advantages which escaped you, nor to harm which befell you.' (Bdh).

262. (and He requites each accordingly).

154. (ثم . . . الصدور) Then after grief, He sent down to you a security, slumber coming over a section of you,[263] while another section, concerned about themselves thought of Allah unjustly: the thought of paganism.[264] They said,[265] 'have we aught at all of the affairs'? Say thou,[266] 'the affair is wholly Allah's.'[267] They hide within themselves what they do not disclose to thee,[268] saying,[269] had we aught of the affair, we would have not been slain here.[270] Say thou: 'had you stayed in your houses, even then those decreed to be slain would surely have gone forth to their deathbeds.[271] And this has happened in order that He might test what was in your breasts[272] and purge that was in your hearts;[273] and Allah is Knower of what is in the breasts.[274]

155. (ان . . . حليم) As for those of you who turned back on the day the two hosts met,[275] it was Satan who made them slip because of something they had earned,[276] and assuredly has Allah pardoned them.[277] Verily Allah is Forgiving,[278] Forbearing.[279]

SECTION 17

156. (يايها . . . بصير) O you who believe! be not[280] like those who disbelieve[281] and say of their brethren[282] when they[283] travel in the land[284] or go to religious war:[285] 'had they been with us,[286] they had not died nor had they been slain.' This is in order that Allah may cause an anguish in their hearts.[287] And it is Allah who makes alive and causes to die,[288] and Allah is the Beholder of what you work.[289]

157. (ولئن . . . يجمعون) Surely if you are slain in the way of Allah or die,[290] forgiveness from Allah and mercy are better than what they amass.[291]

263. The action over, the Muslims were by mid-day on the cliffs of Ohud, and the Makkans in the plain below. It was now that some of the Muslims had an agreeable and refreshing sleep. Surely nowhere is the blessing of sleep to be appreciated more than in the battlefield after a battle in war.

264. (questioning and doubting the Prophets's promise of Divine interposition and Muslim victory). The reference is to the hypocrites who could not conceal their satisfaction. الجاهلية is a well-known synonym for the Arabian dark ages or pre-Islamic Arabia; but an erudite Egyptian scholar has recently shown, as quoted by Dr. Zaki Ali, that instead of its literal meaning, the word 'rather denotes arrogance, ostentation and contention which were prevalent among the Arabs before Islam, in contradistinction to modesty, pious resignation conducive to peace, and the advantage of good deeds over the nobility of pedigree, these being distinctive features in the ethics of Islam.' (Zaki Ali, Islam in the World, p. 3. f. n.). According to an European scholar of some considerable merit, the term 'in reality means the period in which Arabia had no dispensation, no inspired prophet, no revealed book.' (Hitti, op. cit., p. 87). 'It is the collective noun form Djahili, a pagan Arab.' (EI. I. p. 999). Cf. the NT:—'And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent.' (Ac. 17 : 30).

265. (in great chagrin).

266. (O Prophet! unto them).

267. i. e., the decision is entirely His; He does what He decrees what He chooses.

268. (O Prophet!) i. e., they harbour inwardly disapproval and unbelief while ostensibly ask for direction.

269. (when they are alone with one another).

270 i. e., had our advice as to keeping within the town of Medina been taken and acted upon, and had we had any discretion in the matter we would not have moved, and our friends and relatives would never have been slain.

271. (since He has ordained all events and disposed them in His original plan and none can reverse His decrees).

272. i. e., your sincerity or otherwise. Now begins a resume of the positive benefits accruing from the Ohud reverse.

273. (from the Satan's suggestions).

274. (so that He is in no need of testing and sifting for Himself; all such tests by Him are by way of demonstration—for the purpose of making known to others).

275. (at Ohud).

276. i. e., because of their previous shortcomings, since each transgression induces another.

277. (owing to their repenting and asking pardon).

278. (i. e., He forgives sins ultimately).

279. i. e., He does not hasten the punishment of the sinner, in order that he may have yet time to repent.

280. (in your speech).

281. (in their hearts, but pass for Muslims) i. e., hypocrites.

158. (ولئن . . . تحشرون) And whether you die[292] or are slain,[293] assuredly unto Allah shall you be gathered.[294]

159. (فبما . . . المتوكلين) It was then of the mercy of Allah that thou hast been gentle with them,[295] and wert thou rough, hard-hearted, they had certainly dispersed from around thee.[296] So pardon them thou,[297] and ask thou forgiveness for them[298] and take thou counsel with them[299] in the affair,[300] and when thou hast resolved,[301] put thy trust in Allah.[302] Verily Allah loves the trustful.[303]

160. (ان . . . المؤمنون) If Allah helps you[304] there is none that can overcome you; and if He forsakes you,[305] who is there that can help you after Him?[306] And in Allah let the believers trust.

161. (وما . . . يظلمون) It is not the part of a Prophet[307] to hide anything away;[308] he who hides anything away,[309] he shall bring forth on Day of Judgement what he had hidden away;[310] then shall each one be repaid in full what he has earned and they shall not be wronged.[311]

162. (افمن . . . المصير) Is then he who follows Allah's pleasure[312] like him who has settled under the displeasure of Allah?[313]—his resort is Hell,[314] and ill is that destination.

292. (at home)

293. (in war)

294. Two things are thus made absolutely plain. First, the hour of death is immutable. It cannot be avoided whether one is at home or abroad, in peace or at war. Secondly, equally inevitable is the return of every soul to God. Why, then, should death in the cause of faith be feared at all? It ought rather to be courted and welcomed as a sure road to eternal bliss.

295. (O Prophet!), i. e., with those guilty of disobedience and indiscipline at Ohud. Gentle dealing with those guilty of gross misbehaviour on the battlefield resulting in a heavy disaster is perhaps unique in the annals of military operations. Particle ما is added for emphasis, and to indicate that the Prophet's

282. The brotherhood may be either of descent or of religion.

283. i. e., the latter; their brethren.

284. (in the cause of Islam and happen to die).

285. (and happen to be slain).

286. i. e., if they had stayed with us and had not gone out.

287. The purport of the passage is :—Muslims ! do not behave like the hypocrites in uttering such blasphemies and in cherishing such foolish ideas. Whatever was ordained by God in His infinite wisdom was bound to befall them. God is only causing such beliefs as a matter of sighing and lamentation in the hearts of the hypocrites.

288. i. e., it is He who is the sole operator in the matter of life and death; staying at home in peace or going out on war has nothing to do with either. Speaking of 'the prayer culture' of the Muslim Arabs says an American sociologist :—'The solidarity of the group gave it great power, and its efficiency in warfare was increased tenfold by the teaching of an absolute fatalism, which made it futile for a man to seek to avoid death, and by the assurance that at the moment of death in battle he entered paradise, there to dwell among its groves and fountains.' (Denison, op. cit., p. 376).

289. (so beware of imitating the hypocrites in thought and word !).

290. (while engaged in His cause.)

291. (of this world and its comforts). The meaning is: marching and campaigning is not a thing that can bring about death or hasten the end; but should that occur in the path of the Lord, His mercy and forgiveness which you shall obtain by such death are immensely better than what the others amass of this world and its comforts by their life. Everyone journeying or fighting in the cause of God shall be made a partaker of the delights of Paradise.

leniency with his people was definitely an act of providential mercy.

296. 'The Prophet, always inclined to mildness . . .' (HHW. VIII, p. 121). 'He never struck any one in his life . . . . He never first withdrew his hand out of another man's palm, and turned not before the other had turned . . . . He was the most faithful protector of those he protected, the sweetest and most agreeable in conversation; those who saw him were suddenly filled with reverence; those who came near him loved him.' (The Speeches and Table Talk of the Prophet Muhammad, op. cit., pp. 27-28). 'Cruelty was no part of Mohammad's nature' (LSK, p. LXX). 'Generous and considerate towards his friends, he knew, by well-timed favour and attention, how to gain over even the disaffected and rivet them to his service . . . . He rarely pursued a foe after he had tendered timely submission. His commanding mien inspired the stranger with an undefined and indescribable awe; but on close intimacy, apprehension and fear gave place to confidence and love.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 27).

297. (on thy own behalf for their disobeying thy commands). It is reported on good authority that the Prophet did not utter a single harsh word to those whose misbehaviour had brought such disastrous result at Ohud.

298. (regarding what concerns God directly).

299. (as before).

300. i. e., in the important affairs of the community, such as peace and war. Note the essentially democratic character of the commonwealth of Islam. Even the divinely-guided prophet is enjoined to establish, by his example, the practice of deliberation in the community.

301. (on a certain course after seeking their advice).

302. (and do not put off action any more).

303. i. e., those who put trust in Him and act accordingly. The adherents of Islam, even non-Muslims observe, 'enjoy a consciousness of contentment and resignation unknown among followers of other creeds. Suicide is rare in Muslim lands.' (Hitti, op. cit., p. 129).

304. (as He did at Badr).

305. (as He did at Ohud).

306. i. e., after desertion.

307. i. e., it is incompatible with the office of a prophet.

308. On the division of booty at Badr a red night-gown was found missing. Somebody remarked that it might have been taken away privately by the Prophet himself. The remark was made either by one of the hypocrites out of pure malice, or by some new convert to Islam under the impression that the Prophet had a perfect right to do so. The Qur'ān, in either case, refutes the presumption categorically, and regards the act absolutely unworthy of a prophet.

309. غل is 'He acted unfaithfully; . . . . it signifies also, he took a thing and hid it among his goods.' (LL).

310. (and shall be publicly exposed ; with the curse and sin thereof he shall be loaded)

311. The argument in effect is this : those guilty of corruption are bound to undergo punishment and exposure, their doom is certain ; but the prophets are due to be exalted to the highest pinnacle of honour and glory ; how then can an act of such infamy find a place in their spiritual equipment ?

312. (such as every prophet is bound to do). The Islamic conception of prophethood is entirely different from the Biblical description of the prophets— ascribing to them all manner of evil deeds and acts of the filthiest nature. A prophet, according to the Qurānic sense of the term, is himself sinless and pure before purifying others.

313. (on account of his transgressions).

314. (as a cheat's abode is bound to be).

(لقد . . . مبين) Assuredly has Allah conferred a benefit[319] on the believers[320] when He raised up to them a messenger[321] from amongst themselves,[322] who rehearses to them His revelations[323] and purifies them,[324] and teaches them the Book and wisdom,[325] while they were afore[326] in an error manifest.[327]

165. (اولما . . . قدير) Is it[328] that when a reverse has befallen you,[329] even though you had inflicted twice as much,[330] you say: whence is this ?[331] Say thou : it is but from yourselves.[332] Surely Allah is Potent over everything.[333]

166. (وما . . . المومنين) And what befell you on the day when the two hosts met[334] was by Allah's will,[335] and that He might know the believers.

317. (proportionate to their conformity with, and divergence from, the laws of God).

318. So that He will recompense each according to his desert.

319. (immense and unparalleled).

320. The benefit of the mission is of course universal, but the believers are specialized because they alone profit thereby.

321. (so eminent). See P. I, n. 589.

322. i. e., one of their kind. The word, according to a variant reading of the Qur'ān, may be read as انفسهم , meaning 'from the noblest of them.' See P. I, n. 590.

324. (of superstitious beliefs and evil practices). See P. I, n. 593.

325. i. e., the Sunnah. A prophet, in Islam, is not a mere medium, an inert, mechanical transmitter of Divine truths, but a teacher, interpreter, and expounder of those profound truths. See P. I, n. 592.

326. i. e., before his advent.

327. i. e., steeped in evil beliefs and worse morals.

328. The interrogation is expressive of reproach.

329. (at Ohud), i. e., loss of 70 men.

330. (on the foe at Badr, where you slew 70 and took 70 prisoners).

331. i. e., how has this defeat come about, believers though we are ?

332. (by your disobeying the Prophet's command and leaving your station). The promise of victory and Divine help was contingent on the Muslims remaining steadfast and obedient.

333. i. e., He is able both to give help and to withdraw it.

334. (at Ohud).

335. (comprising many benefits not apparent on the surface).

168. (الذين . . . صدقين) They say of their brethren,[346] while they themselves stayed[347] at home: 'had they obeyed us,[348] they had not been slain'. Say thou: 'then avert death from yourselves if you are truthful.'[349]

361. (at Ohud). One year after the Ohud catastrophe the Makkans under the leadership of Abū Sufyān set out with 2,000 foot and 50 horse for Medina, but only a day or two later their hearts failed them, and they retraced their steps.

363. (hired and bribed by Abū Sufyān, the pagan chief of Makka, for the purpose of spreading terror among the Madina Muslims).

364. i. e., the Quraish.

365. i. e., this alarming and disheartening news.

366. (instead of their being discouraged thereby).

367. (with their confidence in God redoubled).

368. (to protect us).

369. i. e., an excellent object of confidence. It is recorded that when Abū Sufyān went away from Ohud, he cried out, 'Mohammad! our rendezvous is the fair of Badr next year if thou wilt'; the apostle of God answered, 'If God will.' Then when the next year came, Abū Sufyān went out with the people of Makka, till he alighted at Marra Zahran, where God cast terror into his heart, and he went back. While on the return journey, some riders from 'Abd Qais passed by him making for Madina. He promised them a camel's burden of raisins if they discouraged the Muslims by circulating news of the Makkan supermacy. (Bdh). 'Koreish engaged No'aim, of a neutral tribe, to repair to Madina, and there give forth an exaggerated account of the preparations at Mecca in the hope that, with the field of Ohud yet fresh in memory, the Muslims might be deterred from setting out.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 286).

370. (from Badr).

371. i. e., merit in the sight of God and safety and increase in faith.

372. i. e., gain in merchandise. 'They carried with them great stores of wares and merchandise for the annual fair. They maintained a standing camp at Badr for eight days in defiance of Koraish, and, having bartered their goods to advantage, return to Madina' (Muir, op. cit., p. 287).

373. (whereon depends the acquisition of the best of both worlds).

374. His munificence towards them was evident.

(1) in His confirming and increasing their faith,
(2) in His aiding them towards hastening to the fray,
(3) in their remaining firm and displaying courage against the enemy,
(4) in His preserving them from anything that might hurt them,
(5) in their acquiring worldly gain, and
(6) in their assurance from Him of their reward.

375. (as personified in this instance by the hired emissary of the Makkans). See n. 369 above.

376. (O Muslims!).

377. i. e., those who follow him; his crew.

378. (indeed, as true faith implies that the fear of God shall be above the fear of men).

379. i. e., let not those be a cause of much concern to thee, O Prophet!

380. i. e., the hypocrites, who at the slightest turn of scales against the Muslims began to avow their unbelief openly.

381. i. e., His faith. The principal cause of anxiety to the holy Prophet was the thought that the hypocrites, by their constant machination, might retard to a certain extent the progress onwards of Islām and the Muslims. The verse sets at rest his anxiety on this score.

382. (and who are enemies of Islām either avowed or secret).

383. (but shall only harm themselves).

لِيَزْدَادُوٓا إِثْمًا ۚ وَلَهُمْ عَذَابٌ مُّهِينٌ ۝ مَا كَانَ اللّٰهُ لِيَذَرَ الْمُؤْمِنِيْنَ عَلٰى مَآ أَنْتُمْ عَلَيْهِ حَتّٰى يَمِيْزَ
الْخَبِيْثَ مِنَ الطَّيِّبِ ۗ وَمَا كَانَ اللّٰهُ لِيُطْلِعَكُمْ عَلَى الْغَيْبِ وَلٰكِنَّ اللّٰهَ يَجْتَبِيْ مِنْ رُّسُلِهٖ مَنْ يَّشَآءُ ۖ فَاٰمِنُوْا
بِاللّٰهِ وَرُسُلِهٖ ۚ وَإِنْ تُؤْمِنُوْا وَتَتَّقُوْا فَلَكُمْ أَجْرٌ عَظِيْمٌ ۝ وَلَا يَحْسَبَنَّ الَّذِيْنَ يَبْخَلُوْنَ بِمَآ اٰتٰهُمُ اللّٰهُ مِنْ
فَضْلِهٖ هُوَ خَيْرًا لَّهُمْ ۖ بَلْ هُوَ شَرٌّ لَّهُمْ ۖ سَيُطَوَّقُوْنَ مَا بَخِلُوْا بِهٖ يَوْمَ الْقِيٰمَةِ ۗ وَلِلّٰهِ مِيْرَاثُ السَّمٰوٰتِ وَ
الْأَرْضِ ۗ وَاللّٰهُ بِمَا تَعْمَلُوْنَ خَبِيْرٌ ۝ لَقَدْ سَمِعَ اللّٰهُ قَوْلَ الَّذِيْنَ قَالُوْٓا إِنَّ اللّٰهَ فَقِيْرٌ وَّ نَحْنُ أَغْنِيَآءُ
سَنَكْتُبُ مَا قَالُوْا وَقَتْلَهُمُ الْأَنْبِيَآءَ بِغَيْرِ حَقٍّ

178. (ولا . . . مهين) And let not those who disbelieve think that We respite them for their good: We respite them only that they may increase in sin;[384] and theirs shall be a torment ignominious.

179. (ماكان . . . عظيم) Allah is not one to leave the believers[385] in the state wherein you are unless He has discriminated[386] the impure from the pure. And Allah is not one to acquaint you with the Unseen.[387] but Allah chooses him whom He will[388] of His messengers.[389] Believe therefore in Allah and His messengers;[390] and if you believe and fear, yours shall be a mighty wage.

180. (ولا . . . خبير) And let not those who stint[391] with what Allah has granted them in His grace consider that this[392] is good for them. Nay, it is bad for them, and soon shall that with which they stint be hung round their necks[393] on the Day of Judgement. And Allah's is the heritage of the heavens and the earth.[394] And Allah is Aware of what you do.[395]

384. (as they grow in years).
385. (to continue indiscriminately mixed with the hypocrites).
386. (by means of repeated trials and tribulations)
387. (O mankind!) Such knowledge, for instance, as who is a true believer and who is not. The hypocrites had said, 'If Mohammad is a true prophet of God, let him tell us which of us believes and which does not.'
388. (out of mankind for this special knowledge; for a revelation of His mind).
389. The rendering of this verse is rather difficult. Here the construction adopted by Th. is closely followed.
390. Mark the catholicity of Islām. Even here the command is to believe in apostles (in the plural), and not only in the Last Prophet.
391. (when it is incumbent upon them to spend).
392. i. e., their niggardliness.
393. (in the form of a serpent twisting about). 'They shall have that whereof they were niggardly made to cleave to their necks like the neck-ring: as it is said in a tradition, it shall be made a biting snake upon the neck.' (LL)
394. i. e., to Him belongs in reality everything that can be bequeathed from one to another; so the niggardly really stint His own goods instead of spending them in His way.
395. (so be sincere in your motives, and spend promptly on proper occassions).

SECTION 19

181. (لقد . . . الحریق) Assuredly has Allah heard the words of those who say:[396] 'surely Allah is poor and we are rich.' Surely We shall write down[397] what they have said[398] and their killing of the prophets without right,[399] and We shall say,[400] 'taste the torment of the burning.'

182. (ذلک . . . للعبید) This is for what your hands have sent on before, for verily Allah is no wronger of His slaves.[401]

183. (الذین . . . صدقین) There are those who say:[402] 'verily God has covenanted with us[403] that we should not believe in a messenger unless he brings to us an offering which fire shall devour.'[404] Say thou:[405] 'surely there came to you messengers[406] before me with evidences and with what you speak of,[407] then why did you kill them, if you are truthful?'[408]

184. (فان . . . المنیر) If then they reject thee,[409] even so were rejected messengers before thee, who came with evidences[410] and scripture and the luminous Book.[411]

185. (کل . . . الغرور) Every soul[412] shall taste death[413] and only on the Day of Judgement you will be repaid your wages in full.[414] Then he who shall be removed[415] far away from the Fire and made to enter the Garden, indeed has achieved the goal: and the life of this world[416] is naught but an illusory enjoyment.[417]

---

396. (by way of ridicule). The reference is to the Jews. Banū Qainuqā', a Jewish tribe populating the outskirts of Madīna, followed the money-lending and goldsmith's craft. They were invited to embrace Islām, and the Prophet wrote to them exhorting, among other things, to 'lend unto Allah a goodly loan' (quoting Baqara: 245). Phineas Bin Azura, a leading Jew, thought it fit to make a fun of the expression, and mockingly remarked, 'Surely God is poor, since they seek to borrow for Him.'

397. (in the rolls of the recording angels).

398. (and We shall not let a saying so impertinent be passed over).

399. Those who had the hardihood to slay their own prophets wantonly were not unlikely persons to utter words like these. See P. I, nn. 269, 270.

400. (when sending them to chastisement on the Day of Judgment).

401. (so this punishment also is only an outcome of the culprits' own doings). ظلّام though intrusion in this form is here synonymous with ظالم.

402. (inventing a lie on God). The reference is again to the Jews.

403. i. e., the race of Israel.

404. i. e., God has charged us to believe in no apostle until he works this particular miracle. Cf. the Bible:—'And the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people. And there came a fire out from before the Lord, and consumed upon the altar the burnt offering and the fat.' (Le. 9: 23, 24). Also Jn. 13: 20-23; 1 Ki. 18: 38; 1 Ch. 21: 26, 2 Ch. 7: 1. Fire thus came to be regarded by the Jews 'as one of the agents of Divine will,' and Divine fires was expected to consume the acceptable offering. (JE. V. p. 392). 'In the ancient Jewish religion and many others fire is the means whereby offerings are transmitted to the deity.' (EBr. IX. p. 262). And it was also perhaps this deep-rooted superstition that led the Israelites of later times to offer their children as sacrifice to Moloch, the god of fire.

405. (O Prophet!).

406. (of your own race, O Israel!).

407. i. e., with that particular miracle. 'And there rose up fire out of the rock, and consumed the flesh and the unleavened cakes,' (Ju. 6: 21). 'Then the fire of the Lord fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice.' (1 Ki. 18: 38). 'Now when Solomon had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt offering and sacrifice' (2 Ch, 7: 1).

408. The argument is: if it is the working of this particular miracle that could generate belief in you, and your hesitating and refusing to believe in me is on account of it, why then did you refuse to believe in those who had wrought it among other miracles, and even made bold to slay them?

409. (O Prophet!).

410. i. e., evident signs and miracles. This is to serve as a consolation to the holy Prophet for the unbelief of his people and of the Jews.

411. (containing laws and ordinances). 'Zubūr' are books confined to wise maxims, counsels and reproofs.

412. (irrespective of merits and demerits).

413. Note that, in Islam, death is as natural a phenomenon as life, and a necessary concomitant of animal life, as the word 'soul' implies. Death, perhaps, had been known upon the earth long before the human species appeared and is in no way connected with the 'original sin' of Adam. This corrects and contradicts the Christian and the Jewish conception of death, Cf. the NT:—'Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.' (Ro. 5:12). 'For the wages of sin is death.' (5:23). 'And sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.' (Ja. 1:15). So in Christianity, 'death is a punishment for sin . . . . and though the character of punishment is wiped away in Baptism death itself remains as an effect of sin.' (CD. p. 283). Death came through sin; and human death is the common lot of man, first because of his own personal sin; and, secondly, because it is part of the inheritance which Adam has transmitted to his descendants.' (DB. I, p. 841). And among the Jews, 'death was held to be the consequence of sin and a sinless person would necessarily be immortal. "There is no death without sin".' (ET. p. 78). 'There are different views among Jews concerning the cause of death. Some assign it to Adam's first sin in partaking of the forbidden fruit. This view is somewhat modified by the Rabbis, who regard death as the fruit of personal sin; maintaining that, like Adam, each person dies on account of his own sin.' (JE. IV. p. 483).

414. (O mankind!). So that if any one escapes punishment in this world he is not to feel secure. The expression 'in full' also suggests that some part of the wages may be paid before that day.

415. (altogether, or only after a brief sentence).

416. i. e., its pleasures and its delusions.

417. Or 'a vain bauble,' i. e., a deceptive ware; unreal, unsubstantial, as compared with the everlasting Hereafter.

186. (لتبلون . . . الامور) You shall surely be tried[418] in your riches and in your lives and will surely bear much injury[419] from those who were given the Book before you, and from those who join gods,[420] and if you endure and fear[421] Allah, then surely that[422] is of the commandments determined.

187. (واذ . . . يشترون) And re-call when Allah took a bond from those who were given the Book, you shall surely expound it[423] to the people and you shall not hide it;[424] but thereafter they cast it behind their backs, and sold it for a small price.[425] Vile is that with which they have sold.[426]

188. (لا تحسبن . . . اليم) Imagine not thou[427] that those who exult in what they have brought,[428] and love to be praised for what they have not done,[429]— imagine not thou that they[430] shall be secured from the torment. And theirs shall be a torment afflictive.[431]

189. (ولله . . . قدير) Allah's is the kingdom of the heavens and the earth,[432] and Allah is Potent over everything.[433]

SECTION 20

190. (ان . . . الالباب) Verily in the creation of the heavens and the earth[434] and in the alternation of the night and the day[435] are signs[436] for men of understanding[437]——

418. (by God, O Muslims!)

419. i. e., many hurtful sayings in the way of ridicule of the Apostle and other things provocative to a believer.

420. (with the One true God: so you ought to accustom yourselves to patience and endurance and be prepared to meet these things when they come.

421. (to disobey God and to overstep the bounds of His law).

422. i. e., forbearance and fear of God.

423. i. e., the whole of Our message.

424. 'Teach them thy sons, and thy sons' sons.' (Dt. 4 : 9). 'We will not hide them from their children, showing to the generation to come the praises of the Lord, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.' (Ps. 78 : 4).

'What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops.' (Mt. 10 : 27).

425. i. e., the goods of this world.

426. (as leading to the everlasting Fire).

427. (O reader!).

428. (in the way of hiding the truth and concealing their sins).

429. (in the way of observing the bond and proclaiming the truth).

430. (who are guilty of suppression of many truths of their religion including the prophecies about the holy Prophet).

431. (even in this world). Exposure of their forgeries, banishment, and loss of life and property were some of the features of this punishment.

432. (and the governance of the affairs of mankind).

433. (and well able to punish the culprits).

434. The heavens and the earth are all created beings, and there is no such thing as a Sky-god or an Earth-god, as held by several polytheistic religions. In the Hindu cosmogony, for instance, 'both Heaven and Earth are regarded as gods and as the parents of god even though they are said to have been generated by gods.' (ERE. IV, p. 156).

435. Even 'night' and 'day,' like darkness and light, have been worshipped as deities.

436. (of His Unity and of the perfection of His Knowledge and power and other attributes).

437. The holy Prophet has observed: 'Woe to him who reads this verse and does not ponder thereon.'

اللّٰهَ قِيٰمًا وَّقُعُوْدًا وَّعَلٰى جُنُوْبِهِمْ وَيَتَفَكَّرُوْنَ فِىْ خَلْقِ السَّمٰوٰتِ وَالْاَرْضِ ۚ رَبَّنَا مَا خَلَقْتَ هٰذَا بَاطِلًا ۚ سُبْحٰنَكَ

اُخْرِجُوْا مِنْ دِيَارِهِمْ

191. (الذين . . . النار) Who remember Allah[438] standing and sitting and lying on their sides[439] and reflect on the creation of the heavens and the earth;[440] our Lord! Thou createdest not all this in vain.[441] Hallowed be Thou![442] save us Thou from the torment of the Fire.[443]

192. (ربنا . . . انصار) Our Lord! verily he whom Thou wilt cast into the Fire,[444] him Thou hast surely humiliated, and for the wrong-doers there shall be no helpers.

193. (ربنا . . . الابرار) Our Lord! verily we! we have heard a caller[445] calling to belief: believe in your Lord'. So we have come to believe Our Lord! forgive us our sins,[446] and expiate from us our misdeeds,[447] and let us die along with the pious.[448]

194. (ربنا . . . الميعاد) Our Lord! grant us what Thou hast promised us by Thy messengers,[449] and humiliate us not on the Day of Judgement.[450] Verily Thou! Thou failest not the tryst.[451]

438. (in thought and in words).

439. i. e., constantly and in all attitudes and postures. The thought of God, even according to the non-Muslim observers, occupies an 'abiding place' in the mind of every devout Muslim. 'The mere mention of any proposed activity or even of the recurring phenomena of Nature is accompanied with the phrase "If God will;" and pious phrases such as, "God is great" are frequently upon the lips of the devout, and are used to fill up pauses in ordinary conversation.' (Arnold, Islamic Faith, p. 19).

440. (to gain guidance and admonition). According to an authentic tradition of the holy Prophet 'there is no form of devotion like meditation.'

441. i. e., without some wise Plan and Purpose. باطلا in the context is 'In play, or sport; acting unprofitably; or aiming at no profit.' (LL). This repudiates the well-known Hindu doctrine of Māyā calling the whole universe an illusion. This also affirms the reality of the external world. The world as we perceive by senses is real, not a phantasm of imagination.

442. i. e., far be Thou from creating it aimlessly as a mere sport.

443. This prayer of the believers is an outcome of their intense belief in Him and His perfection.

444. (as his everlasting punishment). This eternal damnation of the infidels is to be distinguished from temporary sentence of certain believers for the sake of purification.

445. i. e., the holy Prophet, whose call may have been heard either directly or through others.

446. i. e., capital offences.

447. i. e., light offences.

448. (and be privileged with their fellowship and numbered in their company).

449. i. e., Paradise and Thy Grace. The request is made obviously not out of any fear that the promise may be broken, but out of sheer apprehension lest the petitioner may not be one of those to whom the promise is made, due to some fault of his own—a touching sign of deep devotion and humility.

450. i. e., so make us enter the Paradise from the very start.

451. (i. e., His promise to reward the believer and to answer him who prays and implores).

إِلَيْكُمْ وَمَا أُنْزِلَ إِلَيْهِمْ خَاشِعِينَ لِلَّهِ لَا يَشْتَرُونَ بِآيَاتِ اللَّهِ ثَمَنًا قَلِيلًا ۗ أُولَٰئِكَ لَهُمْ أَجْرُهُمْ عِنْدَ رَبِّهِمْ ۗ إِنَّ
اللَّهَ سَرِيعُ الْحِسَابِ ﴿١٩٩﴾ يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا اصْبِرُوا وَصَابِرُوا وَرَابِطُوا وَاتَّقُوا اللَّهَ لَعَلَّكُمْ تُفْلِحُونَ ﴿٢٠٠﴾

195 (فاستجاب . . . الثواب) Then did their Lord hearken unto them saying: 'I let not the work of a worker amongst you to waste, man or woman,[452] one of you from the other.[453] So[454] those who emigrated and were driven forth from their houses and persecuted in My cause, and who fought and were slain,[455]—surely I will expiate from them their misdeeds and surely I will make them enter into Gardens beneath which rivers flow, a reward from before Allah.[456] And Allah! with Him is the excellent reward.

196. (لا يغرنك . . . البلاد) Let not beguile thee[457] the moving to and fro in the cities of those who disbelieve[458] —

197. (متاع . . . المهاد) A brief enjoyment;[459] and then Hell shall be their abode; ill is that resort.[460]

198. (لكن . . . الابرار) But as to those who fear their Lord,[461] theirs shall be Gardens beneath which rivers flow. They shall abide therein—an entertainment[462] from their Lord, and what is with Allah[463] is still better[464] for the pious.

199. (وان . . . الحساب) And among the people of the Book there are some who surely believe in Allah and in what has been sent down to you[465] and what has been sent down to them,[466] humbling themselves before Allah,[467] and they do not sell the revelations of Allah at a small price.[468] These! they shall have their wage with Allah.[469] Verily Allah is Swift at reckoning.[470]

200. (يايها . . . تفلحون) O you who believe! persevere[471] and excel in perserverance[472] and be steadfast,[473] and fear Allah, that haply you may thrive.

452. The word 'woman' needed special mention in view of the sub-human status allotted to women in almost all ancient philosophies and religions.

453. The phrase is parenthetical, meaning that man and woman are counterparts to each other and of the same human status. Remember that this truth was proclaimed to the world not in the twentieth but in the sixth century of the Christian era.

454. —to name only one, and the most prominent, of such good works—,

455. The allusion is to the companions of the holy Prophet, who in addition to their faith, deep and sound, cheerfully underwent such hard ordeals as are mentioned in the text.

456. i. e., out of His munificence.

457. (into thinking that they are approved of God, O reader !).

458. i. e., their journeyings for traffic; their seeking and enjoying the pleasures of this world.

459. (is this). 'This present world in comparison with the Hereafter is like one of you putting his finger in the sea, and let him see how much he brings out.' (The holy Prophet).

460. (which the ungodly have prepared for themselves).

461. (and have accepted Islam).

462. (shall be this).

463. (of His eternal bliss).

464. (in quantity as well as in permanence than the ephemeral worldly prosperity).

465. (O Muslims !).

466. i. e., the Torah and the Injīl in their genuine and unadulterated state.

467. Humility thus is the predominant feature of their character.

468. i. e., do not corrupt their Books for the sake of some worldly gain.

469. (immediately; without having to wait).

470. (and in recompensing).

471. (in the face of troubles attending on acts of piety and the afflictions that may overtake you).

472. (the enemies of God) i. e., outdo them in perseverance and endurance.

473. (with your bodies to face the enemy, and with your souls to face the inner foe).

Sūrat-ul-Nisā

The Woman IV[474]

(Madinian—24 Sections, 177 Verses)

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION 1

1. (يايها . . . رقيبا) O you mankind ! fear Allah[475] Who created you[476] of a single soul,[477] and He created from it[478] its mate,[479] and out of the twain[480] He spread abroad manifold men and women.[481] And fear Allah[482] by Whom[483] you importune one another[484] and the wombs.[485] Verely Allah is ever a Watcher[486] over you.[487]

2. (وآتوا . . . كبيرا) And give to the orphans[488] their substance,[489] and do not substitute the bad for the good,[490] and do not devour their substance by adding it to your substance;[491] surely that[492] is a great crime.[493]

---

474. The chapter is so named for its main theme is the subjects concerning women,—their rights in general and laws of marriage, divorce, inheritance and dower in particular.

475. i. e., be ever vigilant in your duties towards Him, and do not disobey His laws. The word رب is suggestive of His great solicitude for us, and implies that all His laws and ordinances are for our own good.

476. (all) i. e., entire mankind, irrespective of sex, rank, age, colour, race and nationality. This emphasizes the fact, so obvious and yet so often forgotten, that man is a being created, and therefore stands sharply marked off from his Creator, having nothing in common with Him, and is not joined with Him by a chain of 'heroes,' 'incarnations,' demi-gods' and the like. Also, evolution, or no evolution creation of man is the standing verity.

477. (and are therefore children of a common ancestor). The single soul referred to is Adam. The Qur'ān here positively asserts the basic unity of mankind and repudiates the doctrine of polygenism ascribing multiple ancestry to mankind, and incidentally also does away with the idea of 'castes' or 'classes' as forming a barrier to the common humanity. Contrast with this the Hindu conception that the Brahman is a caste derived from the gods; the Sudra is one derived from the Asuras, or demons.' (ERE. XI, p. 915). Also see P. XXIII n. 481; IX. n. 346.

478. i. e., from that single soul.

479. i. e., the first woman; Eve, or Hawwā. This implies the essential equality of men and women as human beings. It was not in Islam, but in Christianity, to its eternal shame, that woman was considered 'an inferior, empty-headed moron; for several days in each month she was so unclean as to require secluding like a laper. The Council of Trent, in the sixteenth century, was dubious about her possessing a soul'. (Love, Marriage, Jealousy, ed. A. Forbath, p. 371) This council, let it be further noted, held from 13th December, 1545, to 4th December, 1563, was one of the greatest significance in the history of Roman Church. 'It would be hard to exaggerate the importance of the council of Trent' (C. D. p. 97). For the Jewish and Christian account of the creation of woman from Adam's rib see Ge. 2 : 18, 21-25.

480. i. e., the said pair; Adam and Eve. 'And Adam called his wife's name Eve; because she was the mother of all living.' (Ge. 3 : 20).

481. This clearly means that all mankind is descended from one original stock and from a single pair—a fact corroborated by modern anthropology. Naturalists believing in evolution 'will feel no doubt that all the races of men are descended from a single primitive stock.' (Darwin, Descent of Man, p. 273).

482. i. e., beware of your duties towards Him.

483. i. e., in Whose name.

484. i. e., 'ye demand one of another your rights, or dues.' (LL)

485. Or 'kinship.' The word has direct reference to the high status of motherhood and wifehood in Islām. Notice that the word is grammatically coupled with God. Kinship in Islām is regarded as one of the most important social institutions.

486. As He is the Creator of all and Preserver of all, so is He Watcher over all alike.

487. (and over your dealings with one another).

488. (who happen to be in your charge). They were the children of those who had lost their lives in the wars for the cause of Islām. The property of these children was entrusted to the care of those who had agreed to become their guardians.

489. (in full, when they come of age).

490. i. e., do not act in such a way as to transfer to your own account what you find of value in their effects and to substitute something worse for them. The property of these orphans was appropriated by the guardians, by tending the good goats or camels of the orphan-wards along with their own herds, and then selecting the bad ones as the orphan's share.

491. الى sometimes 'occurs in the sense of مع, when a thing is joined to another thing.' (LL). الى also shows that one thing is added to another (المعية or (المصاحبة and hence we find it construed with زاد to increase, augment.' (WGAL. II, p. 145) أي مع اموالكم مضمومة اليها (IQ).

492. i. e., this appropriation and manipulation of the orphans' property.

493. 'One of the most commendable things which one finds in reading the Qoran is the solicitude which Muhammad shows for the young, and especially for such as have been deprived of their natural guardians. Again and again he insists upon a kind and just treatment being accorded to children. And working upon his words, the Muhammadan doctors have framed a system of rules concerning the appointment and duties of guardians which is most complete, and extending to the most minute details.' (Roberts, Social Laws of the Qoran, pp. 40-41).

وَثُلٰثَ وَرُبٰعَ ۚ فَإِنْ خِفْتُمْ أَلَّا تَعْدِلُوا فَوَاحِدَةً أَوْ مَا مَلَكَتْ أَيْمَانُكُمْ ۚ ذٰلِكَ أَدْنٰى أَلَّا تَعُولُوا ۝ وَ
اٰتُوا النِّسَآءَ صَدُقٰتِهِنَّ نِحْلَةً ۚ فَإِنْ طِبْنَ لَكُمْ عَنْ شَيْءٍ مِّنْهُ نَفْسًا فَكُلُوهُ هَنِيٓـًٔا مَّرِيٓـًٔا ۝ وَلَا تُؤْتُوا
السُّفَهَآءَ أَمْوَالَكُمُ الَّتِي جَعَلَ اللّٰهُ لَكُمْ قِيٰمًا وَّارْزُقُوهُمْ فِيهَا وَاكْسُوهُمْ وَقُولُوا لَهُمْ قَوْلًا
مَّعْرُوفًا ۝ وَابْتَلُوا الْيَتٰمٰى حَتّٰى إِذَا بَلَغُوا النِّكَاحَ ۚ فَإِنْ اٰنَسْتُمْ مِّنْهُمْ رُشْدًا فَادْفَعُوا إِلَيْهِمْ أَمْوَالَهُمْ
وَلَا تَأْكُلُوهَا إِسْرَافًا وَّبِدَارًا أَنْ يَّكْبَرُوا ۚ وَمَنْ كَانَ غَنِيًّا فَلْيَسْتَعْفِفْ ۚ وَمَنْ كَانَ فَقِيرًا
فَلْيَأْكُلْ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ ۚ فَإِذَا دَفَعْتُمْ إِلَيْهِمْ أَمْوَالَهُمْ فَأَشْهِدُوا عَلَيْهِمْ ۚ وَكَفٰى بِاللّٰهِ حَسِيبًا ۝ لِلرِّجَالِ

3. (وان . . . تعولوا) And if you apprehend[494] that you will not be able to deal justly[495] with the orphan-girls, then[496] marry of other women[497] such as please you, by two, or three, or four,[498] but if you apprehend[499] that you shall not be able to act equitably,[500] then marry one only,[501] or what your right hands own.[502] That[503] will be more fit that you may not swerve.[504]

4. (و آتوا . . . مريئا) And give to women[505] their dowries[506] as a gift,[507] and if they[508] abandon of themselves[509] aught of it[510] to you, then eat it in pleasure and profit.[511]

5. (و لا . . . معروفا) And do not give to the weak-witted[512] the property[513] which Allah has made for you a means of support,[514] but feed them out of it,[515] and clothe them, and speak to them a word of kind advice.[516]

6 (و ابتلوا . . . حسيبا) And test the orphans[517] till they attain the age of wedlock,[518] then[519] if you perceive in them a discretion,[520] hand over to them their property[521] and do not consume it extravagantly or hastily for fear that they may grow.[522] And whoso[523] is well-to-do,[524] let him abstain,[525] and whoso is needy let him take from it honourably.[526] And when you hand over their property to them[527] call in witnesses[528] in their presence and Allah suffices as a Reckoner.[529]

---

494. (even in a light degree, O Muslims!)

495. (in regard to their dower and other conjugal rights helpless as they are and in your charge).

496. (—instead of taking those orphan-girls in marriage—).

497. 'Polygamy was the rule among the Eastern peoples before Mohammad's time.' (Roberts, op. cit., p. 8). 'When we see thousands of miserable women who crowd the streets of Western towns during the night, we must surely feel that it does not lie in Western mouth to reproach Islam for its polygamy. It is better for a women, happier for a woman, more respectable for a woman, to live in Mohammadan polygamy, united to one man only, with the legitimate child in her arms surrounded with respect than to be seduced, cast out in the streets—perhaps with an illegitimate child outside the pale of law—unsheltered and uncared for to become a victim of any passer-by, night after night, rendered incapable of motherhood, despised of all.' (Mrs. Annie Besant).

498. i. e., the Muslim may marry of women such as are pleasing to him, two, three or four, but not more. See Appendix at the end of the Surah.

499. (in an appreciable degree).

500. (towards all wives).

501. Monogamy is thus the ideal; and polygamy is only allowed as a safeguard against greater social evils. 'The often-quoted prescriptions for marriage limit rather than introduce the practice of polygamy.'

502. i. e., the slave-girls you legally possess, who do not require so large a dower nor so plentiful a maintenance as free women do.

503. i. e., your remaining content with one wife or a slave-girl.

504. (from the course of righteousness and virtue).

505. (themselves, and not to their fathers and guardians), as was the custom in pre-Islāmic days.

506. صداق of a wife 'a dowry or nuptial gift' is, in Islamic law, either a sum of money or other form of property to which the wife becomes entitled by marriage. 'It is not a consideration proceeding from the husband for the contract of marriage, but it is an obligation imposed by the law on the husband as a mark of respect for the wife as is evident from the fact that the non-specification of dower at the time of marriage does not affect the validity of the marriage.' (Abdur Rahim, op. cit. p. 334.) 'The payment of dower is enjoined by the law, merely as a token of respect for its object, the woman, wherefore the mention of it is not essential to the validity of a marriage.' (Hidāya). Thus it has no relation to the 'purchase-money,' of pre-Islāmic Arabia, handed over not to the wedded girl, but to the father or brother or relative in whose guardianship she was.

507. i. e., cheerfully and in good spirits. نحلة is synonymous with عطية, meaning as a free gift.' (IQ). This once again emphasizes that صداق in Islām is not to be confused with the price of the bride or the purchase-money so customary in the ancient world. 'Marriage by consideration has prevailed in all branches of the Semitic race. In Babylonia a suitor had to give to the father of his intended wife a bride price or present. . . Among the ancient Arabs a bride price, a mahr, was given by the bride-groom to the father or guardian of the bride. . . . Wife purchase was the basis of Aryan marriage before the separation of peoples took place. In Vedic times brides were won by rich presents to their fathers . . . . Notwithstanding the prohibition in the Laws of Manu, marriage by purchase occurs to this day even among high castes, and is frequently practised among the Sudras.' (Westermarck, Short History of Marriage, pp. 166-169).

508. i. e., the wives themselves, nor their parents or guardians.

509. i. e., without any pressure or undue influence from outside.

510. (or the whole of it).

511. i. e., enjoy it with satisfaction and good conscience' (Bell). 'The Arabic idiom for the enjoyment of property being to eat it up, the sentence might be paraphrased "and if they are kind enough to remit any portion of it of their own accord, then enjoy it, and much good may it do to you." (LL)

512. (even when they have attained to the age of majority, as they are likely to spend away their property wastefully).

513. (which belongs to the orphan or orphans under your guardianship).

514. (all). Property, as a means of support and sustenance, is a thing to be valued, and not to be lightly squandered. The pronoun refers to property in general, and not to the particular property of an orphan. (Th).

515. The property of a ward is to be managed in a way entirely beneficial to him, and in a way that the whole of it may not be consumed in poor-rate. Capital, for instance, may be invested in trading. (Th).

516. (to the affect that this withholding of their property from them is in their own interest).

517. (to find out, in the case of males, if they have intellect and capacity to judge and act for themselves, and, in the, case of females if they have ability to perform household duties).

518. i. e., the age of majority, which, in the Hanafi school of Islāmic law, is 18 years for boys and 17 years for girls.

519. i. e., after the ward has been so tested at the attainment of majority.

520. i. e., maturity of intellect; capacity to manage one's affairs.

521. (unless they are found even at that age wanting, either by nature or by habit, in that discretion and judgment). 'A person though not an idiot, may be so foolish by reason of weakness of intellect that his actions generally are not in accord with what reason or commonsense would dictate, so that he wastes his property by extravagance, and from incapacity to take care of it.' (Abdur Rahim, op. cit, p. 245).

522. i. e., when you see them growing up rapidly to years of discretion, do not hasten to spend the orphans' inheritance, seeing it is soon to pass from your hands. Guardians are hereby warned against all forms of misappropriation and embezzlement.

523. (of the guardians).

524. i. e., is not in dire need of emoluments.

525. (entirely from touching the orphans' estate).

526. i. e., no more than what will make sufficient recompense for his labour. Guardians, if needy, are thus allowed wages, but not on a luxurious, lavish scale.

527. (on their attaining majority and discretion).

528. —to make the transaction formally legal and to avoid future litigation—

529. i. e., a taker of accounts. This is to make it clear that the main thing is the guardian's purity of heart, his integrity, his fairness in dealings, and his innocence before the Omniscient God. Calling in of witnesses is only a formal matter needed for the courts of law. 'Consequently among the Muhammedans the misappropriation of the estate of an orphan is regarded as one of the great sins, the number of which is generally reckoned to be seven.' (Roberts, op. cit. p. 42).

8. (و اذا . . . معروفا) And when those of kin are[536] present at the division[537] and the orphans and the needy, provide for them[538] out of it,[539] and[540] speak to them a word of kindness.[541]

9. (و ليخش . . . سديدا) And let them[542] beware who, should they leave behind them a weakly progeny, would be anxious on their account,[543] let them therefore fear Allah[544] and speak[545] to them honourable words.[546]

10. (ان . . . سعيرا) Verily those who devour the property of the orphans wrongfully, only devour fire into their bellies, and soon they shall roast in the Blaze.

---

530. (Whether minor or adult).

531. (at their death).

532. (whether minor or adult).

533. (at their death). This means that womanhood or childhood—sex or infancy—shall be no bar to the inheritance as had been in the past not only in Arabia but in many parts of the ancient world. 'The importance of this reform,' says Wherry, 'cannot be over-rated. Previous to this women and helpless children might be disinherited by the adult male heirs, and thus be reduced to absolute penury, for no fault but that of being widows and orphans.'

534. And of this property women shall not be dispossessed when entering on marriage, as was the law in many lands. Even in the much-vaunted Roman law, 'the great majority of women became by marriage, as all women had originally become, the daughters of their husbands. The Family was based, less upon actual relationship than upon power, and the husband acquired over his wife the same despotic power which the father had over his children. There can be no question that, in strict pursuance of this conception of marriage, all the wife's property passed at first absolutely to the husband, and became fused with the domain of the new family.' (Maine, Early History of Institutions, p. 312: Murray).

535. This Islamic law of inheritance is a land-mark in the history of legal and social reform. In pre-Islāmic Arabia, women of all ages, and minor boys, had no share in their husbands' and in their fathers' inheritance, on the principle that they alone had the right to inherit who could bear arms. Thus wives, daughters and sisters were excluded altogether, and so were minor sons and brothers. In Islām the cardinal principle of inheritance is to distribute the property among all near relatives, and not to have it centred in the hands of the eldest son—a wise and effective check on capitalism.

536. i. e., relatives of distant and remote degrees, and therefore not legal heirs of the deceased.

537. (of what is left).

538. i. e., for the three classes who are likely to be expecting something for them.

539. i. e., out of the portion allotted to the adults. No charity is allowable out of the share of the minors. The injunction is only recommendatory, not obligatory.

540. (if the estate is too small to allow of free gifts).

541. (expressing your inability and regret).

542. i. e., the heirs.

543. (and be solicitous for them). Calling to mind the plight of their own orphan progeny, should they happen to leave them, they should be considerate and solicitous for the right of other fatherless children.

544. (and refrain from hurting the orphans in word and deed).

545. (to the orphans).

546. (with a view to comfort them; or, for their good).

SECTION 2

11. (يوصيكم . . . حكيما) Allah enjoins you in the matter of your children;[547] the male will have as much as the portion of two females,[548] but if they[549] be females[550] more than two, then they will have two-thirds of what he has left, and if only one, she will have a half,[551] and as for as his[552] parents, each of the twain will have a sixth of what he has left if he have a child; but if he has no child and his parents be his heirs, then his mother will have a third, but if he have brothers, then his mother will have a sixth; all[553] after paying a bequest[554] he may have bequethed or debt.[555] Your fathers and your sons[556]— you do not know which of them is nigher to you in benefit:[557] an ordinance this[558] from Allah.[559] Verily Allah is Knowing, Wise.[560]

547. i. e., concerning their inheriting property.

Says Macnaughten, the author of Principles and Precedents of Mohammedan Law in his Preliminary Remarks:—'In these provisions we find ample attention paid to the interest of all those whom nature places in the first rank of our affections; and indeed it is difficult to conceive any system containing rules more strictly just and equitable.' And Rumney, the annotator of Sirajiyya, a Muslim book of the law of inheritance, observes:—'The Mohammedan Law of Inheritance comprises beyond question the most refind and elaborate system of rules for the devolution of property that is known to the civilised world.' (Mahmudullah, The Muslim Law of Inheritance, Preface, p. i: Allahabad, 1934).

548. The underlying principle almost makes a new departure. Women and minor males were denied inheritance not only in the pagan Arabia but in the law of the Bible also, 'women appear to have been universally and in every respect regarded as minors so far as rights of property went . . . . Only sons, not daughters, still less wives, can inherit.' (EBi, cc. 2724, 2728). Then the inequality between the share of a son and that of a daughter in the law of Islām is more apparent than real. 'The share of the daughter is determined not by any inferiority inherent in her but in view of her economic opportunities, and the place she occupies in the social structure of which she is a part and parcel . . . While the daughter, according to Mohammedan law, is held to be full owner of the property given to her both by the father and the husband at the time of her marriage; while, further, she absolutely owns her dower-money which may be prompt or deferred according to her own choice, and in lieu of which she can hold possession of the whole of her husband's property till payment, the responsibility of maintaining her throughout her life is wholly thrown on the husband.' (Iqbal, Reconstruction of Religious Thought in Islam, pp. 236-237).

549. i. e., the heirs.

550. (among the offspring of the deceased) i. e.; daughters are the only heirs.

551. (of the total estate)

552. i. e., the legator's.

553. (these shares and quotas)

554. (recognized in law) i. e., not exceeding one-third of the total estate. وصیۃ, in legal terminology, is a transfer of property to come into operation after the testator's death.

555. (and also funeral expenses). Deduction of lawful bequests, debts and funerary expenses must, in all cases, precede the distribution of shares.

556. (both of them so equally near related to you).

557. i. e., in point of benefit which may be either of this world or of the Next.

558. (scheme of shares and quotas).

559. (so that this allotment of shares is not to be subjected to any human alteration).

560. (so remembering His infinite Knowledge and Wisdom you need not tax your brain as to who should and who should not inherit your estate).

إن كان رجل يورث كللة أو امرأة وله أخ أو أخت فلكل واحد منهما السدس فإن كانوا أكثر من

12. (ولكم . . . حليم) And you will have half of what your wives may leave, if they have no child:[561] but if they have a child then you will have a fourth of what they may leave, after paying a bequest they may have bequethed or a debt. And they[562] will have a fourth of what you may leave[563] if you have no child, but if you have a child then they will have a eighth of what you may leave, after paying a bequest you may have bequethed or a debt. And if a man or a women who leaves the heritage has no direct heirs but has a brother or a sister, each of the twain will have a sixth; and if more than one,[564] then they[565] will have equal shares[566] in one-third after paying a bequest they may have bequethed or a debt without prejudice:[567] an ordinance this from Allah;[568] and Allah is Knowing,[569] Forbearing.[570]

13. (تلك . . . العظيم) These are the statutes of Allah,[571] and whoever obeys Allah and His messenger,[572] him He shall admit into the Gardens beneath which rivers flow, as abider therein; and that is an achievement mighty.

14. (ومن . . . مهين) And whoever disobeys Allah and His messenger, and transgresses His statutes,[573] him He shall cast into the Fire, as an abider therein, and to him shall be a torment ignominous.

561. (either by yourselves or by your wives' former husbands).

562. i. e., the wives. In this point at least, the Qurānic legislation is acknowledged to be 'in advance of' not only 'the greatest number of barbarous societies' but also 'the Bible.' For, it recognizes 'the right of a widow to inherit from her husband . . . . . The Bible was lass kind to the widow. . . It does not place her among her husband's heirs. The Jewish widow was a charge on her children, or, if she had none, on her own family.' (Letourneau, Evolution of Marriage, pp. 259-260).

563. In the case of a plurality of wives that one-fourth will be equally divided.

564. (brothers and sisters).

565. i. e., brothers or sisters.

566. This equality of shares between males and females is an exception to the general rule of giving a male twice as much as a female. 'Where,' notices a Christian writer on the Muslim law, 'a deceased man's parents, brothers and sisters are entitled to only a small share of the inheritance, that share is to be equal to all without distinction of sex.' (Roberts, op. cit. p. 66).

567. (to the heirs, either in deed or in intention).

568. (and therefore all these laws are to be implicitly obeyed).

569. (so that He knows the obedient from the disobedient).

570. (so that He does not punish the disobedient immediately).

571. (and are therefore not to be taken lightly). Allotments here set forth, coming as they do from the Almighty, are not to be subjected to human interference.

572. (complying with these commandments of His).

573. (by denying these commandments altogether, or considering them of no binding value).

SECTION 3

15. (والّتي . . . سبيلا) As for those of your women[574] who may commit whoredom,[575] call against them[576] four witnesses[577] from among you;[578] then if they testify,[579] confine them[580] to their houses,[581] till death completes their term of life,[582] or Allah appoints for them some other way.[583]

16. (والذان . . . رحيما) And as for those twain[584] of you[585] who commit it, hurt them both;[586] then,[587] if they repent[588] and amend[589] turn away from them,[590] surely Allah is Relenting,[591] Merciful.[592]

17. (انما . . . حكيما) Upon Allah is the repentance of those[593] who do an evil[594] foolishly[595] and then repent speedily;[596] surely it is they to whom Allah shall relent.[597] And Allah is Knowing,[598] Wise.[599]

18. (وليست . . . اليما) And repentance[600] is not for those who go on working evil[601] till death presents itself to one of them,[602] and[603] he says: 'now I repent'; nor for those who die while they are infidels. These! for them We have prepared a torment afflictive.

574. (duly married) i.e., wives.

575. فاحشة in its general significance is 'an excess; an enormity; anything exceeding the bounds of rectitude,' but when particularized, signifies 'adultery or fornication,' and, in the context, evidently means an act of adultery.

576. The evidence in the case of adultery must be, according to the law of Islām, ocular, not hearsay or conjectural, known in modern legal phraseology as 'circumstantial.' Every possible safeguard is taken against hasty and false accusations.

577. Who must be males, adults (not children), free men (not slaves) and of sound mind.

578. The witnesses must be Muslims, not infidels.

579. (assuring that they saw with their eyes the actual carnal conjunction)

580. i. e., the adulterous wives.

581. (by way of punishment). The address here is to those in authority, among the believing community, and not to husbands or citizens in general.

582. This was the penalty imposed in the beginning of Islām.

583. (through His Apostle). This other punishment was later on ordained by the holy Prophet as follows:—maidens to be scourged with a hundred stripes, and married women to be stoned to death.

584. (whether men or women, married or unmarried). The enactment here is general. It speaks of any two persons guilty of the act, in contradistinction to 'married women' of the previous verse. In several nations, as among the Greeks and in the earlier period of Roman history, there was no recognition of the offence of adultery, 'unless a married woman was the offender.' (EBr. I, p. 234).

585. i. e., from among the adult Muslims of sound mind.

586. The form and the extent of 'hurt' (punishment), in each case, are to be determined by those in authority. The enactment held good previous to the law revealed in sūrat un-Nūr.

587. i. e., after undergoing the punishment, and not without it.

588. (and are contrite over the past).

589. i. e., mend their ways for the future.

590. i. e., persecute them and reproach them no further. This letting them alone is after their undergoing the punishment. No mere repentance however deep and sincere, can before an Islāmic court of law do away with the punishment for an offence violating the rights of men, as distinct from the rights of God.

591. (so that He has now accepted their repentance).

592. (so that He has now forgiven them).

593. i. e., of those alone He promises to accept the repentance. Repentance has for its elements:—

(i) enlightenment of the heart,
(ii) detestation of the sin,
(iii) a resolve to avoid it in the future,
(iv) an earnest crying for God's forgiveness.

It has both a negative and a positive aspect—a turning from sin, and a turning to God. A penitent must not be taunted with his past. In the ethics of Islām, the penitent is superior to the sinless.

594. (whether capital or minor).

595. Or 'ignorantly,' i. e., sins committed in a fit of passion; in a moment of forgetfulness; without clear consciousness of guilt.

596. (as soon as their guilt is brought home to them).

597. (in forgiveness and mercy)

598. (so He knows whose repentance is genuine and sincere).

599. (so He decides in accordance with His universal Plan, whose repentance is to be rejected).

600. i. e., its acceptance by Him.

601. (and having committed it once, never feel sorry for their sin).

602. (and the Hereafter has begun to unfold itself before him).

603. (at that moment; when on death-bed).

وَعَاشِرُوهُنَّ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ ۚ فَإِن كَرِهْتُمُوهُنَّ فَعَسَىٰ أَن تَكْرَهُوا شَيْئًا وَيَجْعَلَ اللَّهُ فِيهِ خَيْرًا كَثِيرًا ﴿١٩﴾ وَإِنْ أَرَدتُّمُ
اسْتِبْدَالَ زَوْجٍ مَّكَانَ زَوْجٍ وَآتَيْتُمْ إِحْدَاهُنَّ قِنطَارًا فَلَا تَأْخُذُوا مِنْهُ شَيْئًا ۚ أَتَأْخُذُونَهُ بُهْتَانًا وَإِثْمًا مُّبِينًا ﴿٢٠﴾
وَكَيْفَ تَأْخُذُونَهُ وَقَدْ أَفْضَىٰ بَعْضُكُمْ إِلَىٰ بَعْضٍ وَأَخَذْنَ مِنكُم مِّيثَاقًا غَلِيظًا ﴿٢١﴾ وَلَا تَنكِحُوا مَا نَكَحَ آبَاؤُكُم

19. (يايها . . كثيرا) O you who believe! it is not allowed to you that you may heir the women[604] forcibly,[605] nor shut them up[606] that you may take away from them part of what you had given them,[607] except when they are guilty of manifest indecency.[608] And live with them honourably;[609] if you dislike them,[610] perhaps you detest a thing and yet Allah has placed abundant good[611] therein.[612]

20. (وان . . . مبيلا) And if you intend to replace a wife by another, and you have given[613] the one of them[614] a talent,[615] take not back anything of it.[616] Would you take it back by slander and manifest sin.[617]

21. (وكيف . . . غليظا) And how can you take back[618] when one of you has gone in to the other,[619] and they[620] have obtained from you[621] a rigid bond.[622]

22. (ولا . . . سبيلا) And wed not of women those whom your fathers[623] have wedded,[624] except what has already passed.[625] Verily that has been an indecency and an abomination and an evil way.[626]

---

604. (as you used to do in pre-Islamic days). In pagan Arabia, widows were divided amongst the heirs of a deceased as goods and chattels. Immediately after a man died, his son or heir would cast a sheet of cloth on each of the widows (except his own mother), and this signified that he had annexed them to himself. Nor was this treatment of the widows confined to Arabia. Even in Greco-Roman civilization, the married woman at Athens 'was part of the paternal patrimony,' and 'the dying husband could leave her by will to a friend, with his goods and by the same title,' and 'at Rome the wife was bought and subjected to the terrible right of the marital manus'' (Letourneau, op. cit. p. 261). 'The widows . . . . were regarded as part of the estate, and as such passed ordinarily into the hands of their husbands' heirs.' (Roberts, op. cit. pp. 62-63). The heirs, in such cases, either married the widow to some one else and kept her dower, or refused to let her marry unless she redeemed herself by paying off handsomely, or else married her himself. One verse of the Qur'ān was sufficient, as by one stroke, to sweep aside all such barbaric customs—a reform of truly revolutionary character.

605. 'Forcibly' is a mere statement of fact, not a condition precedent. The practice of taking widows in heritage was actually carried on against their will.

There is no suggestion here that the practice would become any the more lawful if the widows submitted to it willingly.

606. (in some part of the house so that they may not marry others).

607. Unscrupulous and covetous husbands, in the days of paganism, often used to harass their wives by imprisoning them in their houses for nothing, in order that they might be forced to claim separation and thus to relinquish their dower or their inheritance. This evil is here put a stop to.

608. (such as doing harm to the person or property of the husband or his family). As the fault in such cases lies with the woman, so it is she who must relinquish her dower, whole or in part, to obtain separation.

609. This is the basic principle, in Islām, of men's relation with their wives. Their faults and foibles are to be tolerated, overlooked, and an attitude of considerateness towards them is to be maintained. To view the same truth biologically:— 'Woman will never be able to overcome these handicaps which are deeply rooted in her physical nature.... Anyone familiar with the physiology and biology of woman will be less annoyed and irritated at her sudden changes of mood, allegedly unreasonable flares of temper, her unmotivated acts. Understanding this, man will deeply sympathise with the bearers of the egg cells who, having the same aspirations and claims upon life, are burdened with more difficult biological tasks.' (Nemilow, Biological Tragedy of Women, pp. 187-188).

610. (for no wilful fault of theirs).

611. (material as well as spiritual).

612. Insistence upon justice, goodwill and fair treatment of the wife will thus be found to be the essence of the matrimonial code of Islām. 'The law of Islam concerns itself with the happiness and well-being of the wife in a way in which no Christian country does.'

613. (either in payment of dower, or as free gift)

614. i. e., the first of them.

615. i. e., any good sum, be it ever so big.

616. (nor force her to relinquish it, whole or in part, in your favour).

617. i. e., by giving out a false report of immorality, in order to escape the necessity of forfeiting the dowry. The pagan husband, when he desired to replace his old wife by a new one, was wont to accuse the former, falsely and maliciously, of some gross immorality, and thus forced her to obtain a divorce by parting with a large sum of her money. بهتان is 'a false accusation of adultery against a woman.'

618. i. e., what justification, in law and in morality, have you for withholding from them the money you owe them or for taking it back from them after you have paid it to them?

619. i. e., after the consummation, either actual or presumed, of marriage. Consummation is presumed when the pair have been together under circumstances that may give rise validly to the inference, and is technically known as 'valid retirement.'

620. i. e., the wives.

621. i. e., the husbands.

622. (of paying them their dower-money). This is an additional argument. How can you go back upon your word ? Note that this has been the law of Islām for 1400 years—centuries before the West could hear of a Married Woman's Property Act!

623. (or grandfathers).

624. Widows in pagan Arabia, along with the estate of the deceased, passed on to the eldest son, and he very often married any of them he liked. See nn. 604, 605 above.

625. i. e., worry not about the past, be on your guard in the future.

626. (morally and spiritually).

عَمّٰتُكُمْ وَخٰلٰتُكُمْ وَبَنٰتُ الْاَخِ وَبَنٰتُ الْاُخْتِ وَاُمَّهٰتُكُمُ الّٰتِيْٓ اَرْضَعْنَكُمْ وَاَخَوٰتُكُمْ مِّنَ الرَّضَاعَةِ وَاُمَّهٰتُ نِسَآئِكُمْ وَرَبَآئِ
بُكُمُ الّٰتِيْ فِيْ حُجُوْرِكُمْ مِّنْ نِّسَآئِكُمُ الّٰتِيْ دَخَلْتُمْ بِهِنَّ فَاِنْ لَّمْ تَكُوْنُوْا دَخَلْتُمْ بِهِنَّ فَلَا جُنَاحَ عَلَيْكُمْ وَحَلَآئِلُ

SECTION 4

23. (حرمت . . . رحيما) Forbidden[627] to you are your mothers[628] and your daughters[629] and your sisters[630] and your father's sisters[631] and your mother's sisters,[632] and your brother's daughters[633] and your sister's daughters,[634] and your foster mothers[635] and your foster sisters,[636] and the mothers of your wives[637] and your step-daughters[638] that are your wards,[639] born of your wives to whom you have gone in, but if you have not gone in to them, no sin shall be on you,[640] and the wives of your sons[641] that are from your own loins,[642] and also that you should have two sisters together,[643] except what has already passed.[644] Verily Allah is ever Forgiving, Merciful.

627. (as wives). So marriage with them would be not only sinful but also illegal—null and void ab initio—creating in fact, as in law, no civil rights and obligations whatsoever.

628. (and all their ascendants). The grounds of permanent prohibition are three:—consanguinity, affinity and fosterage. 'By reason of consanguinity a man cannot marry any female ascendant or descendant of his or the daughter of any ascendant, how high soever or of any descendant how low soever, or the daughter of his brother or sister or the daughter of a brother's or sister's daughter, and so on. On the ground of affinity he is debarred from marring a woman who has been the wife of any ascendant of his, any ascendant or descendant of the wife if marriage has been consummated, or of any woman with whom he has had unlawful connection and any woman who has been the wife of his son or grandson. Generally speaking fosterage induces the same limits of relationship prohibitive of marriage as consanguinity.' (Abdur Rahim, op. cit. p. 329).

629. (and all their descendants).

630. (whether from the same parents or not).

631. (as also all sisters of paternal ascendants).

632. (as also all sisters of maternal ascendants).

633. (and all brother's descendants).

634. (and all sister's descendants).

635. i. e., those women who have suckled you. So the tie of milk is as much a bar to marriage as the tie of blood.

636. i. e., sisters by fosterage, whether it is their mothers who have suckled you or it is your mothers who have suckled them.

637. (and all the female ascendants of your wives).

638. (and all the female descendants of your wives).

639. (as is usually, though not invariably, the case).

640. i. e., step-daughters born of such wives are not forbidden.

641. (as also the wives of all your male descendants).

642. (and not your sons by adoption).

643. 'Sisters' here includes foster-sisters.

644. i. e., what took place in the days of paganism, previous to the revelation of the Qur'ān, would be forgiven.

PART V

24. (والمحصنات . . . حكيما) And[1] also forbidden are the wedded among women[2] save those whom your right hands possess:[3] Allah's ordinance for you. And allowed to you is whosoever is beyond that,[4] so that you may seek them with your riches,[5] as properly wedded men,[6] not as fornicators.[7] And for the enjoyment[8] you have received from them, give them their dowres stipulated.[9] And there will be no blame on you in regard to aught[10] on which you[11] mutually agree after the stipulation.[12] Verily Allah is Knowing,[13] Wise.[14]

---

1. The conjunction couples this verse with the words 'forbidden unto you are' in the preceding verse.

2. This repudiates the extreme communist doctrine that, within the community, every woman may be the wife of every man, and any man could cohabit with any woman, as also the custom in many sevage tribes of lending and exchanging wives. 'The custom of lending wives is wellnigh universal among savages' (ERE, I, p. 125), though for different reasons. Westermarck frequently refers to 'the custom of lending wives being found among many peoples in different parts of the world.' (Short History of Marriage, p. 14) حصن originally signifies a fortress, and محصنات means, in the first instance, only 'women who are fortified or fenced in.' المحصنات, in the context, signifies married women, or women having husbands. The word strongly suggests the idea of chastity and purity.

3. (as slaves). ما ملكت ايمانكم literally 'those whom your right hands possess,' signifies in the context, 'such married women as shall come in your possession as prisoners of war,'—war being the chief source of the acquisition of slaves, male and female. Such women, when not taken back on payment of ransom or otherwise, are to be lawful as wives, even though their previous marriage has not been formally dissolved,—religious warfare in itself being sufficient to sever previous ties. According to the Hanafī school of law it is not lawful to take such women as wives whose husbands also are captured, or are in slavery with them. A bondwoman must at the time of her capture be an unbeliever. 'Though the creation of the status of slavery in a public right, once it has been brought about, it becomes transmitted into a private right in the nature of property. Hence though a Muslim cannot be made a slave, yet if an infidel slave becomes Muslim, he still remains a slave, for otherwise the proprietary rights of the master would be affected.' ('Abdur Rahīm, op. cit., p. 246). See also P. IV, n. 502; P. XVIII, n. 8.

4. i. e., all other women as wives.

5. i. e., by paying them their dower-money.

6. i. e., as those who take their wives in marriage in its proper legal form, with at least two witnesses to attest, and with intent to permanent companionship. The institution of marriage sanctions sexual relationship between a man and wife for the propagation of the human species and for the promotion of love and union between the parties. Sanctity of marriage is one of the leading features of Islamic Jurisprudence.

7. This rules out as un-Islamic all forms of temporary and 'companionate' marriages where lust is the sole motive. 'Real satisfaction,' says an American observer, 'comes not from mere sexual experience but from a relationship which is lasting and continuous and which is built on feelings of affection, devotion and tenderness.' (Pollens, 'The Sex Criminal', p. 196).

8. (as your wives).

9. Any sum can be stipulated as dower, although it is always desirable to keep it within reasonable bounds. 'She or her guardians may stipulate at the time of marriage for any sum, however large, as dower. If no sum has been specified, she is entitled to her proper dower مہر مثل that is the dower which is customarily fixed for the females of her family.' ('Abdur Rahīm, op. cit., p. 334). اجر when used in its plural form اجور and with reference to wives, is not 'recompense' or 'hire', but 'A dowry, or nuptial gift; a gift that is given to, or for, a bride.' (LL).

10. i.e., any change in the amount of the dower-money.

11. i.e., the husband and the wife.

12. (by either increasing the sum or relinquishing it in part or in full).

13. (so He knows well your inmost feelings and varying circumstances).

14. (so He enacts laws according to your needs and requirements).

25. (ومن . . . رحيم) And he among you who has not the affluence so that he may wed believing free women,[15] let him wed such of the believing handmaid[16] as the right hands of you people[17] posses. And Allah knows well your belief,[18] the one of you[19] is as the other.[20] You may wed them,[21] then, with the consent of their owners,[22] and give them[23] their dowers as properly[24] wedded women,[25] not as fornicatresses, nor as taking to themselves secret paramours.[26] And when they have been wedded, if they commit an indecency,[27] on them[28] the punishment shall be a half of that for free wedded women.[29] This[30] is for him among you, who fears perdition;[31] and that you should abstain[32] is better for you.[33] And Allah is Forgiving,[34] Merciful.[35]

SECTION 5

26. (يريد . . . حكيم) Allah desires to expound to you[36] and to guide you into the institutions of those before you[37] and relent towards you. And Allah is Knowing, Wise

27. (والله . . . عظيما) And Allah desires[38] to relent towards you, and those who follow their lusts[39] desire that you shall[40] incline[41] a mighty inclining.

28. (يريد . . . ضعيفا) Allah desires that He shall lighten things for you,[42] and[43] man has been created a weakling.[44]

29. (يايها . . . رحيما) O you who believe! devour not your property among yourselves[45] unlawfully, but let there be a trading among you by mutual agreement;[46] and kill not yourselves.[47] Verily Allah is to you ever Merciful.[48]

15. (who required considerable sum of money for the payment of her dower as well as her support and maintenance). 'She is entitled to be provided with proper accommodation separate from the husband's relations and to be maintained in a way suitable to his own means and the position in the life of both. If he refuses or neglects to maintain her she can pledge his credit . . . . She is further entitled to the payment of her dower.' ('Abdur Rahīm, o. p. cit., p. 334).

16. (whose dower-money and upkeep would naturally cost much less).

17. i.e., the Muslim community.

18. (which is the only test of merit with Him) i.e., He alone knows whose faith is great and strong, and whose is little and weak. So that it is easly conceivable that a bondwoman might be more honourable with her Lord than her free husband. This implies as exhortation against holding bondsmen and bondswomen in contempt.

19. —whether free-born or slaves.

20. i.e., you as Muslims belong to the same honourable community, and as human beings have sprung from the common progenitor. Why, then, should a free-born among you fear any loss of dignity in taking a bondwoman as his wife ? Here is another little neat sermon on the equality of the free-born and the slave in Islam.

21. i.e., the Muslim bondswomen.

22. (who have proprietary rights in them).

23. i.e., the handmaids themselves, as understood by Imām Mālik; or, the owners of these handmaids, as interpreted, through an implied word اهل, by other jurists.

24. Mark the implication of the word. The dower is to be paid to handmaids as to the wives; in the prescribed, legal, honourable way, not as hire to the whores and harlots.

25. Notice the high ideal of chastity and purity pervading the entire system of these enactments.

26. As was customary with bondswomen in pre-Islāmic Arabia.

27. Which here signifies an act of fornication or incontinence.

28. Who have not the same advantages of sound education, good upbringing, etc., as the respectable free women enjoy, and are therefore not subject to the same degree of responsibility. The corruptions of life under which a slave has to work and live makes it plain that, while purity is always hard to attain, slavery makes it far more difficult.

29. Which means that the guilty slave-wife shall receive 50 stripes.

30. i.e., this permission to marry slave-girls.

31. (in consequence of fornication) i.e., who for want of a respectable free-born wife fears to fall into the sin of adultery and is anxious to avoid it.

32. (altogether, and practise self-restraint).

33. As it obviously is from the stand-point of good breeding and preservation of high descent.

34. (so that in any case and circumstance He overlooks and foregives your marrying a slave-girl).

35. (so that He has not forbidden such alliances).

36. (His ordinances for your benefit).

37. (by recounting their tales, in order that you may be both warned and cheered).

38. (by the ordinances of the Holy Qur'ān as well as by its narratives).

39. i.e., the infidels.

40. (like themselves).

41. (from the right path).

42. (your burden). He seeks not only to confer benefits on man but also to make light his burden.

43. i.e., for; because.

44. i.e., subject to be inclined by desire; unable, if left to himself and unaided by Divine guidance, to avoid pitfalls. So Providence, in His infinite mercy and wisdom, has chalked out a way for him, safe, straight and free from dangers.

45. i.e., do not consume one another's property. Every believer's property is his own. Islam totally rejects the communistic doctrine of the state ownership of all property.

46. Trade, in the code of Islam, thus receives not only full permission but also approval and merit.

47. This interdicts suicide in all its forms, and has led a famous Christian writer to observe:—'Suicide, which is never expressly condemned in the Bible, is more than once forbidden in the Koran.' (Lecky, History of European Morals, II, London, 1869, p. 56.) انفسكم may also be taken in a collective sense. The rendering in that case would be: 'And slay not one another.' This would make the life of a believer as intrinsically inviolable as has been made his property in the preceding part of the verse.

48. (and so He promulgates laws and ordinances so beneficial to mankind).

وَمَنْ يَفْعَلْ ذَٰلِكَ عُدْوَانًا وَظُلْمًا فَسَوْفَ نُصْلِيهِ نَارًا ۚ وَكَانَ ذَٰلِكَ عَلَى اللَّهِ يَسِيرًا ۝ إِنْ تَجْتَنِبُوا كَبَائِرَ

فَآتُوهُمْ نَصِيبَهُمْ ۚ إِنَّ اللَّهَ كَانَ عَلَىٰ كُلِّ شَيْءٍ شَهِيدًا ۝ الرِّجَالُ قَوَّامُونَ عَلَى النِّسَاءِ بِمَا فَضَّلَ اللَّهُ
بَعْضَهُمْ عَلَىٰ بَعْضٍ وَبِمَا أَنْفَقُوا مِنْ أَمْوَالِهِمْ ۚ فَالصَّالِحَاتُ

30. (ومن . . . يسيرا) And whoever does that[49] in transgression[50] and wrong,[51] him We will soon[52] roast in Fire, and with Allah that is ever easy.

31. (ان . . . كريما) If you shun the grievous sins from which you have been prohibited, We will expiate from you your misdeeds,[53] and make you enter a noble Entrance.

32. (ولا . . . عليما) And do not covet[54] that[55] wherewith Allah has excelled[56] one of you[57] above another.[58] To men[59] shall be the portion[60] of what they earn,[61] and to women[62] shall be the portion[63] of what they earn.[64] And[65] ask Allah for some of His grace.[66] Verily Allah is Knower of everything.[67]

33. (ولكل . . . شهيدا) And to everyone We have appointed inheritors[68] of what the parents or relations leave behind,[69] and to them[70] with whom you have made your pledges[71] give them their portion.[72] Verily Allah is ever a Witness over everything.

49. i.e., commits murder or suicide.

50. i.e., overstepping the bonds of the law; without justification.

51. i.e., with deliberate criminal intent; not through an error of judgement.

52. i.e., at his death.

53. i.e., minor offences.

54. (O men and women!)

55. i.e., the inborn excellence implanted by nature, not that which can be acquired.

56. (without any exertion on your part). This explodes the myth of the absolute equality of mankind. Some classes of mankind are surely privileged with superior brain or superior physical strength.

57. i.e., the male sex.

58. i.e., the female sex. That in the scheme of life the role of the male is different in many fundamentals from that of the female is recognised by the modern sciences of Biology and Psychology alike. 'The desires and conduct of the two sexes are not similar, but are complementary and reciprocal. In courtship the male is active; his role is to court, to pursue, to possess, to control, to protect, to love. The role of the female is passive . . . . Consequent on this fundamental difference are certain others. For pursuit, greater ardour is necessary than for mere reception; and the courting activity of the male is, throughout the whole animal kingdom, more ardent than that of the female; and this greater ardour is connected with certain other differences.' (Mercier, Conduct and its Disorders Biologically Considered, pp. 289-290). 'We have seen that a deep difference in constitution expresses itself in the distinctions between male and female, whether these be physical or mental.' (Thompson and Geddes, Evolution of Sex, p. 286). 'It is generally true that the males are more active, energetic, eager, passionate, and variable: the females more passive, conservative, sluggish, and stable.' (p. 289). 'Man perhaps even down to the protein molecules of his tissue cells, is biologically different from woman. From the very moment of sex formation in the embryo, the biological dusting of the sexes develops along entirely divergent paths . . . . We must recognize the unquestionable existence of the biological inequality of the sexes. It goes deeper and is of far greater import than it would appear to those not familiar with natural science.' (Nemilov, Biological Tragedy of Women, pp. 76-78). 'Will it be possible for woman's emancipation to remove those differences between man and woman which are rooted in their innermost beings? Even the most rabid advocates of woman's rights must accept the undeniable fact that woman bears children, not man; that woman menstruates, not man. It remains equally true that these primitive functions will always be a hindrance to complete emancipation, though they do not preclude advance and improvement in the intellectual and social position of women, which every fair-minded man willingly recognises as necessary . . . . According to Mrs. Hawthorne, home is the woman's great arena, and will, she hopes, remain so. There she can exercise a sway that no king or emperor can rival. And it is compatible with culture, intellect and earnestness. I should like to cry aloud to the modern woman: Educate yourself; dedicate your time to science; take part in the thoughts and occupations of men, but do not seek to do so as he does. For you will never be his equal, even as he never will be your equal.' (Bloch, Sexual Life in England, pp. 48-49). 'I venture to prophesy not only that the inherent differences between the sexes will not tend to diminish in the course of evolution but that man will continue, as now and in the past, to emphasise them by custom and convention.' (Julian Huxley, Essays in Popular Science, p. 63).

59. (however, in spite of their physical and mental superiority).

60. (in the Hereafter).

61. (through their moral acts), i. e., in matters spiritual men as such can have no advantage over women.

62. (despite the terrible natural handicap they suffer from).

63. (in the Hereafter).

64. (through their moral acts). The purport is: in spite of many and varied differences between men and women in their physical and mental make-up, in matters of spiritual grace and in acts leading to moral perfection, there is no disparity at all between the two sexes. In God's sight as responsible moral agents both are equal.

65. (if you are keen on acquiring merit in His sight.)

66. (in matters of your moral perfection and spiritual development, instead of longing for absolute equality in physical and mental equipment).

67. (and He shall judge and requite each one of His creatures according to his or her merit).

68. i. e., legal heirs, blood relations; not heirs by compact. The Arabs used to enter into a contract that, on the death of one of them, the surviving party to the contract would be a heir to the deceased. The verse rules out all such heirs.

69. In pre-Islamic Arabia, succession was either by blood relationship or by adoption, or by compact. This last system, which was allowed by the holy Prophet in Madina for some time, is hereby annulled, and is replaced by the system of blood relationship.

70. i. e., persons not your legal heirs.

71. (for a share of inheritance). 'The next class of heirs in the order of succession are مولى الموالاة or successor by contract, that is, a person with whom the deceased entered into a contract that he would be his heir, such person undertaking on his part to pay any fine or compensation to which the deceased might become liable.' (Abdur Rahim, op. cit., p. 349).

72. (which is fixed as one-sixth of the total estate).

SECTION 6

34. (الرجال . . . كبيرا) Men are overseers over women,[73] by reason of that wherewith Allah has made one of them[74] excel[75] over another,[76] and by reason of what they[77] spend of their riches.[78] So[79] the righteous women are obedient[80] and watchers[81] in husbands' absence by the aid and protection of Allah.[82] And those wives whose refractoriness you fear,[83] admonish them[84] and[85] avoid them in beds and[86] beat them;[87] but if they obey you,[88] do not seek a way against them.[89] Verily Allah is ever Lofty, Grand.[90]

35. (وان . . . خبيرا) And if you[91] fear a break[92] between the pair,[93] set up[94] an arbiter from his family and an arbiter from her family; then if the pair[95] seek amity[96] Allah shall bring harmony between the two.[97] Verily Allah is ever Knowing, Aware.[98]

36. (واعبدوا . . . فخورا) And worship Allah, and do not join aught[99] with Him;[100] and to parents show[101] kindness and also to kinsmen and orphans and the needy and the near neighbour and the distant neighbour and the companion by your side[102] and the wayfarer and those whom your right hands possess.[103] Verily Allah does not love the vainglorious[104] and the boastful[105]—

73. Compare the attitude of the Bible towards woman :—'Unto the woman he said . . . thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.' (Gn. 3 : 16) 'Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church : and he is the saviour of the body. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing.' (Eph. 5 : 22-24). A قوام is, in the parlance of modern sociology, a protector or guardian of the family, and this is a position to which man is by his very nature and constitution entitled. 'A connected result of male superiority in strength, activity and courage is the element of protection in male love, and of trust on the side of the female.' (ERE. VIII, p. 156). 'That the functions of the husband and father in the family are not merely of the sexual and procreative kind, but involve the duties of supporting and protecting the wife and children, is testified by an array of facts relating to peoples in all quarters of the world and in all stages of civilisation.' (Westermarck, op cit., p. 23). 'Among the lowest savages, as well as the most civilised races of men, we find the family consisting of parents and children, and the father as its protector and supporter.' (p. 7) 'Until recently women were typically engaged throughout youth and maturity in conceiving, bearing, feeding, nursing, transporting and burying infants. From girlhood, women were attached to infants. The period of gestation for a human infant is long. Once born, it must be carried upon the back and fed from the breast for a long time, under primitive conditions. Its birth constitutes an ordeal for the mother, in the course of which she may be crippled, at least for enough days to suffice for starvation unless ministered to by others . . . How to master the uncertain food supply, ravenous wild beasts, hostile tribes, storms and cold is a hard puzzle for a creature carrying heavy children within and upon her body, year in and year out. There is, nevertheless, a way to open this hard cage, that will lead to sustenance and shelter without sacrifice of the child. This way is to get the protection of those who are not cumbered with burdensome generative systems. Thus if men could be induced to supply subsistence women could live without killing or abandoning their infants. At the same time, men were motivated by sex attraction, by the luxury of having routine labours performed for them, and doubtless by pity, to undertake the protection of women and of the helpless offspring to which they were mysteriously subject. Thus men, women and children came to be arranged in family groups, in which men were inevitably lords and masters, because they needed the arrangement least.' (EBr. IX, p. 61). In the words of the German philosopher, E. Von Hartmann, from the moral standpoint, "the greater number of women pass the whole of their lives in a state of minority, and, therefore, to the end stand in need of supervision and guidance" (quoted in Kisch's Sexual Life of Woman, p. 153). In the beautiful summing up of D. H. Lawrence, 'Primarily and unprimarily, man is always the pioneer of life, adventuring onward into the unknown, alone with his temerarious, dauntless soul. Woman for him exists only in the twilight by the campfire when day has departed' (quoted in Reader's Maxim Currents in Modern Science, p. 192). And according to a modern French writer and thinker :—'Women can direct great business enterprises, and some do with astonishing skill, but the role does not suit them. One of the most successful of these made the following admission : "Do you know that I've always wanted to find a man who could take over my job ? Then I would be his assistant, and what a marvellous assistant I could be if I loved him !" 'It must be recognized that women are excellent assistants rather than original creators. Woman's real creation is her child . . . Even those who are forced by circumstances to play men's roles play them as women. Queen Victoria was not a great king, but a great queen acting the king.' (Andre Maurois, Art of Living, pp. 49-50).

74. i. e., the male sex.

75. (by their very nature and constitution).

76. i. e., the female sex. The very word 'woman', in English, 'etymologically meaning a wife . . . sums up a long history of dependence and subordination, from which the women of today have only gradually emancipated themselves in such parts of the world as come under Western civilization.' (EBR. XXVIII, p. 782, 11th Ed.). The word alludes to 'qualities attributed to the female sex, as mutability, proneness to tears, or physical weakness; also to their position of inferiority or subjection.' (SOED. II p. 2443).

77. i. e., the husband.

78. (for the support and maintenance of their wives and as their dower).

79. i. e., as recognizing the obvious truths of nature.

80. (to their husbands).

81. (of the honour and property of their husbands).

82. To mark its special merit, this act of obedience and watchfulness on the part of women is ascribed to the grace of God.

83. This evidently refers to another class of wives, entirely different from the first, evil-natured and given to misbehaviour.

84. (in the first place).

85. as the next step, if exhortation and verbal warning have proved unavailing.

86. as the last resort; in stubborn cases, after milder methods have failed.

87. The fact must not be lost sight of that the Holy Word is addressed to peoples of all ages and of all grades and stages of social evolution; and it may well be that a remedy that is unthinkable in a particular grade of society is the only feasible and effective corrective in another. Beating is not after all so incompatible with law and considerateness as it appears at first sight. Among the natives of New Mexico 'women have to prepare the food, tan the skins, cultivate the ground, fabricate the clothes, build the houses, and groom the horses. In return for this, the men, whose sole occupations are hunting and war, beat their wives without pity.' (Letourneau op cit., p. 132). Among peoples of a lower class of culture the subjection of woman is extended even to brutality. 'This flagrant proof of dependence is felt by woman even with sexual pleasure and accepted as a token of love.' (Kaaft-Eling, Psychopathia Sexualis, p. 211). In certain stages of society this beating is even sought and keenly desired. European critics, before venturing to ridicule this Quranic permission (not recommendation), would do well to ponder over the prevalence of flagellomania in their own countries. Though 'a specifically English abuse it was widespread among all ranks and ages, it formed one of the most interesting features of their sexual life.' It is equally true that 'flogging, beating and whipping have been practised as punishment everywhere in the world since the dawn of history, both among the civilised and the savage.' (Bloch, Sexual Life in England p. 320).

'England was at one time the classic land of flagellation.' (ib.) 'The spread of flagellation-mania among people of every rank and age in English society affords further evidence that it was a specific national quality and not a passion limited to a small circle of sensualists and the like.' (ib., p. 322). For the sexual aspect of flagellation see Croft's The Cloven Hoof, (pp. 95, 96). "Nietzsche's famous saying is well-known:—"When you go to a woman forget not your whip." In the Slavic countries beating the woman is a part of man's regular love procedure. Benvenuto Callini reports a particular instance in his famous autobiographic memoirs: (Forbath, 'Love, Marriage, Jealousy, pp. 192-193). 'Among the Slavs of the lower class the wives feel hurt if they are not beaten by their husbands; the peasant women in some parts of Hungary do not think they are loved by their husbands until they have received the first box on the ear; among the Italian community a wife if not beaten by her husband regards him as a fool.' (Havelock Ellis, quoted in ERE. VIII, p. 156). Even now in England working-class women receive thrashing by their men who 'generally make excellent husbands.' (Ludovici, Woman, p. 154. n). 'The Englishman's privilege of beating his wife with a stick not thicker than his thumb, has become rather favourite, Cf. Sinclair, Sylvia's Marriage,' p. 13. Further, it is contended by Freud and his disciples that masochism is part and parcel of feminine nature. 'Helene Dentach has elaborated Freud's assumption and generalized it in calling masochism the elemental power in feminine mental life. She contends that what woman ultimately wants in intercourse is to be raped and violated, what she wants in mental life is to be humiliated; menstruation is significant to woman because it feeds masochistic fantasies; childbirth represents the climax of masochistic satisfaction.' (Horney, New Ways in Psychoanalysis, p. 110).

88. i. e., submit to you and mend their ways.

89. i. e., do not seek excuses and pretences for harassing and ill-treating them.

90. (so think of your own duties towards your Creator, and do not be too exacting towards your wives).

91. The address here is to the Muslim community in general.

92. (which cannot be made up by the parties themselves).

93. i. e., the husband and the wife.

94. (in order that the differences may be composed).

95. i. e., two arbitrators.

96. (and are earnest and sincere in their mission of peace).

97. i. e., the husband and the wife.

98. i. e., well Aware of their inmost thoughts and feelings.

99. (in worship and adoration).

100. (either in His Person or in His Attributes).

101. 'In fact, in almost every group of legislative revelations a place is given to the respect due to parents. 'The greatest importance is attached in the Qoran to filial piety.' (Roberts, op. cit., pp. 46, 48).

102. i. e., the travelling companion ; the companion in a journey, no matter what the duration of that companionship be.

103. Note that all these injunctions to be good and kind to one's fellow-beings are coupled with the duty to worship the one true God and to shun idolatry.

104. i. e., proud in his heart.

105. i. e., vain with his tongue.

الَّذِينَ يَبْخَلُونَ وَيَأْمُرُونَ النَّاسَ بِالْبُخْلِ وَيَكْتُمُونَ مَا آتَاهُمُ اللَّهُ مِن فَضْلِهِ ۗ وَأَعْتَدْنَا

37. (الذين . . . مهينا) Those who are miserly and bid people to miserliness, and conceal what Allah has granted them of His grace;[106] and We have prepared for the infidels[107] a torment ignominous:

38. (والذين . . . قرينا) And those who spend of their wealth to show off to men,[108] and do not believe in Allah nor in the Last Day; and whoso has for him Satan[109] as a companion, a vile companion has he.

39. (وماذا . . . عليما) And what harm would befall them were they to believe in Allah and the Last Day and spend out of that wherewith Allah has provided them? And Allah is ever Knower of them.[110]

40. (ان . . . عظيما) Surely Allah does not wrong any one a grain's weight,[111] and if there is a virtue He will double it and give from His presence a mighty wage.[112]

41. (فكيف . . . شهيدا) How will it be then, when We bring, out of each community, a witness,[113] and We will bring thee[114] against these[115] as a witness?

---

106. (either in the form of wealth or in that of Divine knowledge such as the Jews were endowed with).

107. The word كافرين here may also be taken in its original meaning, 'the ungrateful' i. e., unresponsive to the many Divine favours conferred on mankind. (Th.).

108. The sentence is coupled with 'Allah loveth not one who is vainglorious, boaster' in verse 36.

109. (the arch-seducer).

110. i. e., of their virtues and misdeeds.

111. (by either punishing an innocent person, or by not rewarding in full any good action). God being ex hypothesi the sole Author and absolute Master of every being, subject to no superior will or higher law, no action of His can, in any conceivable circumstance, be unjust or iniqutious. What is meant to convey here is that even according to the human standard of justice, His judgments are never unjust. مثقال ذرة signifies the smallest measure.

112. So transparently Benign and so infinitely Merciful is He!

113. (to bear testimony to the rejection of His message by them). This witness would, in each case, be the prophet sent to the particular people.

114. (O Prophet!)

115. (people who are thy contemporaries).

وَلَا يَكْتُمُونَ اللَّهَ حَدِيثًا ۝ يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا لَا تَقْرَبُوا الصَّلَاةَ وَأَنتُمْ سُكَارَىٰ حَتَّىٰ تَعْلَمُوا مَا تَقُولُونَ

42. (يومئذ . . . حديثا) That Day those who had disbelieved and disobeyed the Messenger would wish[116] that the earth would be levelled over them, and they will not be able to hide any discourse[117] from Allah.

SECTION 7

43. (يايها . . . غفورا) O you who believe! do not approach prayer while you are drunken[118] until you understand[119] what you say,[120] nor yet while you are polluted,[121] save when you are wayfaring,[122] you have washed yourselves.[123] And if you are ailing[124] or on a journey[125] or one of you comes from the privy[126] or you have touched women,[127] and you do not find water[128] then betake yourselves to clean earth and wipe your faces and your hands with it.[129] Verily Allah is ever Pardoning.[130] Forgiving.[131]

44. (الم . . . السبيل) Hast thou[132] not observed those[133] to whom was given a portion of the Book[134] purchasing[135] error,[136] and intending that you[137] would err as regards the way?[138]

45. (والله . . . نصيرا) And Allah is Knower of your enemies[139]; suffices Allah as a Friend,[140] and suffices Allah as a Helper.[141]

---

116. (in their extreme anguish and consternation).

117. (and they would have no option but to make clean confession).

118. (the state of intoxication being absolutely incompatible with the worship attitude).

119. i. e., you are able to understand well, to comprehend fully.

120. The prayers at their appointed hours being obligatory, the injunction not to pray when drunk evidently leaves little room for indulgence in drink. The verse as the first step towards prohibition was revealed sometime before the command came for total abstinence.

121. i. e., after the emission of seed, either in waking or in sleep, and therefore under an obligation to perform total ablution or bathing.

122. For which case provision is made in the next sentence.

123. i. e., have performed a total ablution or bathing. Physical cleanliness, in Islam, is a sine qua non for moral and spiritual purification.

124. (and the use of water is likely to aggravate or prolong disease).

125. (and water is not obtainable nearby).

126. In which case a fresh wudhū, or ablution of face is obligatory for praying purpose.

127. i. e., have had intercourse with them, which makes bathing obligatory.

128. (for use) i. e., whether it is unobtainable or injurious to health.

129. i. e., by clapping palms of hands twice on clean dust and passing them over on hands up to elbows and face as if they were being washed by water. The process is technically known as تيمم.

130. i. e., And so His injunctions are never burdensome.

131. And so He enjoins only what is easy to bear.

132. (O reader!).

133. i. e., the Jews, and specially those learned in their religious lore.

134. By a portion of the book is meant the Torah. The word 'Book' is here used in a generic sense.

135. The word 'purchase' implies their choice and deliberation. Their guilt is not accidental but intentional.

136. i. e., deliberate unbelief and infidelity.

137. (also, O Muslims!).

138. Not content with their own wrong-headedness, the Jews are also endeavouring to lead the Muslims astray.

139. (who would lead you off the way).

140. (so He warns you against them).

141. (so the Muslims need not be over-anxious).

وَاسْمَعْ غَيْرَ مُسْمَعٍ وَرَاعِنَا لَيًّا بِأَلْسِنَتِهِمْ وَطَعْنًا فِي الدِّينِ ۚ وَلَوْ أَنَّهُمْ قَالُوا سَمِعْنَا وَأَطَعْنَا وَاسْمَعْ وَ
انْظُرْنَا لَكَانَ خَيْرًا لَهُمْ وَأَقْوَمَ وَلَٰكِنْ لَعَنَهُمُ اللَّهُ بِكُفْرِهِمْ فَلَا يُؤْمِنُونَ إِلَّا قَلِيلًا ۝ يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ
أُوتُوا الْكِتَابَ آمِنُوا بِمَا نَزَّلْنَا مُصَدِّقًا لِمَا مَعَكُمْ مِنْ قَبْلِ أَنْ نَطْمِسَ وُجُوهًا فَنَرُدَّهَا عَلَىٰ أَدْبَارِهَا أَوْ نَلْعَنَهُمْ
كَمَا لَعَنَّا أَصْحَابَ السَّبْتِ ۚ وَكَانَ أَمْرُ اللَّهِ مَفْعُولًا ۝ إِنَّ اللَّهَ لَا يَغْفِرُ أَنْ يُشْرَكَ بِهِ وَيَغْفِرُ مَا دُونَ ذَٰلِكَ
لِمَنْ يَشَاءُ ۚ وَمَنْ يُشْرِكْ بِاللَّهِ فَقَدِ افْتَرَىٰ إِثْمًا عَظِيمًا ۝ أَلَمْ تَرَ إِلَى الَّذِينَ يُزَكُّونَ أَنْفُسَهُمْ ۚ بَلِ اللَّهُ
يُزَكِّي مَنْ يَشَاءُ وَلَا يُظْلَمُونَ فَتِيلًا ۝

46. (من . . . قليلا) Among those who are Judaised[142] are some who pervert words[143] from their meanings and say:[144] 'we have heard and we disobey'[145] and[146] 'hear thou without being made to hear', and RA'INA[147] twisting their tongues[148] and scoffing at the faith. And had they said: 'we have heard and obey' and: 'hear thou', and 'UNZURNA,'[149] it surely had been better for them[150] and more upright.[151] But Allah has cursed them[152] for their infidelity. So they shall not believe, save a few.[153]

47. (يايها . . . مفعولا) O you who are given the Book[154] believe in what We have sent down[155] confirming what is with you, before We change faces,[156] and turn them upon their backs,[157] or We might curse them even as We cursed the people of the Sabt,[158] and Allah's command is ever carried out.[159]

48. (ان . . . عظيما) Surely Allah will not forgive that aught be joined with Him,[160] and He will forgive[161] all else[162] to whom He will.[163] And whoso joined aught with Allah,[164] he has certainly fabricated a mighty sin.[165]

49. (الم . . . فتيلا) Hast thou[166] not observed those who hold themselves to be pure?[167] Nay, it is Allah who purifies[168] whom He will,[169] and they shall not be wronged a whit.[170]

---

142. And they are the enemies spoken of.

143. i. e., they dislocate and corrupt the very words and passages of the holy texts, alter their sense, and twist their rendering. The Holy Qur'ān was not the first to charge the Jews with the falsification of their Scriptures. Even Justin, in the beginning of the second century of the Christian era, charged them 'with immorality and with having expunged from their Bibles much that was favourable to Christianity. These charges were repeated by the succeeding Christian polemists. (JE. X, p. 103). Modern Jewish theology of the Reform school not only admits 'the human origin of the Holy Scriptures' and recognizess that 'the matter recorded is sometimes in contradiction to the proved results of modern historical, physical, and psychological research,' but also arrives at the following conclusions:—

(1) 'The ancient view of a literal dictation by God must be surrendered.'

(2) 'The seers and writers of Judea must be regarded as men with human failings, each with his own peculiarity of style and sentiment.'

(3) And that though 'the prophet and sacred writer were under the influence of the Divine Spirit while revealing, by word or pen, new religious ideas . . . . the human element in them was not extinguished, and consequently, in regard to their statements, their knowledge, and the form of their communication, they could only have acted as children of their age.' (JE. VI. pp. 608-609). So the fallibility and the human origin of the Jewish Scriptures are self-confessed.

144. (in pride and conceit).

145. See P. I, n. 403.

146. Thus they said, when addressing the Holy Prophet, by way of imprecation.

147. See P. I, no. 466.

148. The Jews, unchastened, used language of banter when addressing the Holy Prophet—words bearing a good sense in Arabic, but really spoken by them in derision and ridicule according to their meaning in Hebrew. 'Not satisfied with tormenting Mohammed with questions on Torah which they were always wrangling about themselves, they took hold of the everyday formulas of Islam, the daily prayers and ejaculations, and twisting their tongues, mispronounced them so that they meant something absured or blaphemous.' (LSK Intro., pp. LXII-LXIII). 'Political inferiority, indeed, compelled them to disguise their hatred; but their real feelings transpired in various ways, and among others in expressions of double meaning.' (Muir, op. cit. cit., p. 327).

149. See P. I, n. 467 ff.

150. i. e., condusive to their own good.

151. i. e., meet and proper in itself.

152. i. e., has cast them away from His special grace and mercy.

153. (and those few will find their way to Islam).

154. i. e., Taurāt.

155. (now) i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

156. (beyond all recognition).

157. i. e., back parts of their faces. Or the phrase may mean: 'before we make faces to be like the backs of necks.' (LL). The passage emphasizes the liability of the culprits to these penalties, although the Divine mercy may never have permitted the actual infliction of the sentence. (Th).

158. i. e., the violaters of the Sabbath. See P. I, nn. 291, 292.

159. (so beware of your persistent misbehaviour).

160. (so that the polytheist is doomed to punishment, extreme and everlasting). Notice for the hundredth time an indescribable enormity of the sin of polytheism. 'Throughout whole of Muslim theological literature the heresy most dreaded is that of shirk, or giving to God a partner, and the exposition of the Being of God is set forth in such a way as always to emphasize His absolute Unity.' (Arnold, Islamic Faith, pp. 5-6).

161. (wholly or in part).

162. i. e., all other sins, whether capital or minor.

163. (in accordance with his universal Plan).

164. i. e., gives Him a co-partner in any form whatever.

165. i. e., the most heinous of all sins; and it is this extreme heinousness of sin that would lead him to eternal perdition.

166. (O reader!)

167. i. e., holy, free from all sins; children of God, or claiming special relationship with Him.

168. i. e., it is He alone who can and shall purify.

169. (and obviously it shall please Him to purify the believers, not the infidels).

170. i. e., the punishment of the guilty ones will only be commensurate with their guilt, and will not exceed it.

انظر كيف يفترون على الله الكذب وكفى به إثما مبينا ۞ ألم تر إلى الذين أوتوا نصيبا من الكتب
يؤمنون بالجبت والطاغوت ويقولون للذين كفروا هؤلاء أهدى من الذين آمنوا سبيلا ۞ أولئك الذين
لعنهم الله ومن يلعن الله فلن تجد له نصيرا ۞ أم لهم نصيب من الملك فإذا لا يؤتون الناس
نقيرا ۞ أم يحسدون الناس على ما آتاهم الله من فضله فقد آتينا آل إبراهيم الكتب والحكمة و
آتيناهم ملكا عظيما ۞ فمنهم من آمن به ومنهم من صد عنه وكفى بجهنم سعيرا ۞ إن الذين
كفروا بآياتنا

50. (انظر . . . مبينا) Look! how they[171] fabricate a lie against Allah,[172] and enough is that[173] as a manifest sin.

SECTION 8

51. (الم . . . سبيلا) Hast thou[174] not observed those to whom is given a portion of the Book[175] testifying to idols and devils,[176] and speaking of those who have disbelieved![177] 'these are better guided as regards the way than the believers'?[178]

52. (اولئك . . . نصيرا) Those are they whom Allah has cursed, and whom Allah curses,[179] for them thou shalt not find a helper.[180]

53. (ام . . . نقيرا) Have they a share in the kingdom?[181] If so, they will not give mankind[182] a speck.[183]

54. (ام . . . عظيما) Or do they envy the people[184] on account of what Allah has granted them out of His grace?[185] So surely We granted the house of Ibrāhīm[186] the Book and wisdom and We granted them a mighty kingdom.[187]

55. (فمنهم . . . سعيرا) Then among them were some who believed in it,[188] and among them were others who turned aside from it[189] and enough is Hell as a Flame.

---

171. i. e., the infidels, specially the Jews.

172. (by implying that God approves their methods of infidelity and impiety.

173. i. e., their audacity in imputing to God an approval of sin and unbelief.

174. (O reader!)

175. 'A portion of the genuine Divine Book' is Taurāt; and the reference is to the parties of the Jews who out of their inveterate enmity of Islam and the Holy Prophet, had gone over to the idolatrous Arabs and formed alliance with them.

176. (by their conduct and attitude). Their poets and poetesses wrote 'satirical verses on the battle of Badr,' and by their verses 'stirred up the Kuraish at Mecca.' (JE. VIII, p. 646). يؤمنون here is not 'believing'. It must be translated, as the context makes it amply clear, by some such expression as 'testifying',

'preferring' or 'having a partiality for'. The Jews did not actually declare their faith in idols and images, but by siding with the pagans they unmistakably showed their preferment for idolatry. The verse lays bare their tacit approval, by their conduct, of idolatry and paganism.

177. i. e., of the Arab pagans; the idolaters.

178. This the Jews said openly. Their approval of idolatry was only implied; their encouragement of the idolaters was avowed and explicit. 'When asked which they preferred, Islam or idolatry, the frankly avowed that they preferred idolatry'. (LSK. Intro., p. LXIII).

179. i. e., for delivering Him from the appointed doom both in this world and the Hereafter.

180. (even in this world). Of the three Jewish clans flourishing in Arabia two 'were sent into exile, just as they had previously come into exile, and the third was exterminated—the men killed, and the women and children made slaves.' (LSK. Intro., p. CXIV.).

181. i. e., are these Arab Jews the masters of territory ?

182. i. e., their fellow-men.

183. So niggardly are they of spirit!

184. Here the Muslims are meant. When the Muslim forces suffered a temporary set-back at Ohud, the Jews were specially jubilant.' (JE. VIII, p. 646).

185. i. e., the gifts of apostleship and temporal power.

186. which house, of course, includes Ismā'īl as well as Isaac.

187. See P. I., p. 586. The emphasis is on the words 'house of Ibrāhīm'. It was they who were promised leadership in religion and greatness as a nation. The argument runs: why should the Jews express surprise at all at the conferment of these gifts, spiritual and temporal, on the Holy Prophet of Islam ? Is he not as good a descendant of Abraham as any of the Israelite prophets ?

188. i. e., in the Divine revelations of their days.

189. So acceptance of the Divine truth by some and rejection by others has always been the case with the Jews.

سَوْفَ نُصْلِيهِمْ نَارًا كُلَّمَا نَضِجَتْ جُلُودُهُم بَدَّلْنَاهُمْ جُلُودًا غَيْرَهَا لِيَذُوقُوا الْعَذَابَ ۗ إِنَّ اللَّهَ كَانَ
عَزِيزًا حَكِيمًا ۝ وَالَّذِينَ آمَنُوا وَعَمِلُوا الصَّالِحَاتِ سَنُدْخِلُهُمْ جَنَّاتٍ تَجْرِي مِن تَحْتِهَا الْأَنْهَارُ خَالِدِينَ فِيهَا
أَبَدًا ۖ لَّهُمْ فِيهَا أَزْوَاجٌ مُّطَهَّرَةٌ ۖ وَنُدْخِلُهُمْ ظِلًّا ظَلِيلًا ۝ إِنَّ اللَّهَ يَأْمُرُكُمْ أَن تُؤَدُّوا الْأَمَانَاتِ إِلَىٰ
أَهْلِهَا وَإِذَا حَكَمْتُم بَيْنَ النَّاسِ أَن تَحْكُمُوا بِالْعَدْلِ ۚ إِنَّ اللَّهَ نِعِمَّا يَعِظُكُم بِهِ ۗ إِنَّ اللَّهَ كَانَ سَمِيعًا بَصِيرًا
يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا أَطِيعُوا اللَّهَ وَأَطِيعُوا الرَّسُولَ وَأُولِي الْأَمْرِ مِنكُمْ ۖ فَإِن تَنَازَعْتُمْ فِي شَيْءٍ فَرُدُّوهُ إِلَى
اللَّهِ وَالرَّسُولِ

56. (ان . . . حكيما) Verily those who disbelieve in Our revelations, them We will soon cast in Fire. Whenever their skins are burnt up[190] We will change them for other skins,[191] to keep up their tasting of the torment.[192] Verily Allah is ever Mighty,[193] Wise.[194]

57. (والذين . . . ظليلا) And those who believe and work righteous works, soon We will admit them to the Garden beneath which rivers flow abiding there for ever. For them shall be spouses,[195] and We will admit them to a sheltering shade.[196]

58. (ان . . . بصيرا) Verily Allah commands that you[197] shall render dues to the owners thereof, and that, when you judge between men, judge with equity.[198] Excellent[199] is that with which Allah exhorts you; verily Allah is ever Hearing,[200] Seeing.[201]

190. i. e., thoroughly burnt and their sensibility has been deadened.

191. (endowed with full sensibility).

192. This is to emphasize that the torment shall be unremittant.

193. i. e., Able to inflict any punishment in any form He wills.

194. (so He shall choose the forms of the torment at its proper time).

195. See P. I, n. 108.

196. ظل ظليل is 'constant shade, or, extensive shade; or in this case, the latter word denotes intensiveness, meaning dense' (LL). The allusion obviously is to the ease and pleasentness of life in Paradise.

197. (O men in authority!)

198. 'That the Prophet did much to put down injustice and oppression, no one can deny.' (Roberts, op. cit., p. 101).

199. (both as regards the temporal benefits and the spiritual merits).

200. i. e., cognizant of what you say of your words.

201. i. e., cognizant of what you do of your acts.

إن كنتم تؤمنون بالله واليوم الآخر ذلك خير وأحسن تأويلا ۞ ألم تر إلى الذين يزعمون أنهم آمنوا
بما أنزل إليك وما أنزل من قبلك يريدون أن يتحاكموا إلى الطاغوت وقد أمروا أن يكفروا به
ويريد الشيطن أن يضلهم ضلالا بعيدا ۞ وإذا قيل لهم تعالوا إلى ما أنزل الله وإلى الرسول رأيت
المنفقين يصدون عنك صدودا ۞ فكيف إذا أصابتهم مصيبة بما قدمت أيديهم ثم جاءوك
يحلفون بالله إن أردنا إلا إحسانا وتوفيقا ۞ أولئك الذين يعلم الله ما في قلوبهم فأعرض عنهم و
عظهم وقل لهم في أنفسهم قولا

59. (يايها . . . تاويلا) O you who believe ! obey Allah[202] and obey the Messenger[203] and men of authority from amongst you;[204] then if you[205] quarrel[206] in aught refer it[207] to Allah[208] and the Messenger,[209] if you indeed believe in Allah and the Last Day.[210] That is the best[211] and the fairest[212] interpretation.

SECTION 9

60. (الم . . . بعيدا) Hast thou[213] not observed those[214] who assert that they believe in what has been sent down to thee and what has been sent down before thee, and yet desiring to go to the devil for judgement[215] whereas they[216] have been commanded to deny him; and Satan desires to mislead them far off.[217]

61. (اذا . . . صدودا) And when it is said to them: 'come to what Allah has sent down and to the Messenger',[218] thou wilt see the hypocrites hang back far from thee.

62. (فكيف . . . توفيقا) How then,[219] when some ill[220] befalls them because of what their hands have sent forth[221] and then they came to thee swearing by Allah ; we meant naught[222] save kindness[223] and concord.[224]

---

202. (as the Supreme Law-giver). Obedience to God means voluntary submission to His will and commands ; and by obedience to God man completes his sacrifice, and surrenders to Him all that he yet holds as his own, his most precious goods.

203. (as the infallible interpreter of the Divine Will). Obedience to the apostle means obedience to Him through His vicegerent.

204. i. e., men of authority and learning among the Muslim community. 'In general, those who are termed اولو الامر of the Muslims, are those who superintend the affairs of such with respect to religion, and everything conducing to the right disposal of their affairs.' (LL). The 'Ulamā (or guardians of the Law) are laymen only, claiming no status or privilege apart from that of the general community. The only authority they could exercise was derivable from their deep knowledge and assiduous study of the Qur'ān and the Sunnah.

205. i. e., the community in general on the one hand, and those in authority on the other.

206. Note that obedience to the men in authority is not on a par with obedience to God and His apostle, the latter being absolute and unconditional. There is no such thing in Islam as an 'infallible Church, protected from error, and guided by the Holy Ghost.' Right of differing from those in authority implies and allows full scope of private judgment even to the humblest member of the community.

207. i. e., the matter in dispute.

208. i. e., His Holy Book; the Qur'ān.

209. i. e., the mouthpiece of Revolution; his precepts and practices.

210. Note the extreme necessity of referring back, in cases of disagreement, all mutual disputes to the original sources—the Qur'ān and the Sunnah.

211. i. e., conducive to peace, prosperity and contentment in this world.

212. i. e., conducive to happiness and bliss in the Hereafter.

213. (O Prophet!)

214. The reference is to the hypocrites, specially those from among the Jews.

215. i. e., they resort, while professing Islam, to non-Islamic tribunals for judgement in their disputes. طاغوت here stands for 'any un-Islamic tribunal'.

216. i. e., those who profess Islam.

217. (so they ought to have been on their guard against his seductive methods).

218. (for the decision of your disputes).

219. (will it fare with them).

220. i. e., an exposure of their duplicity, for instance.

221. i. e., as an outcome of their own handiwork.

222. (by seeking redress elsewhere).

223. (to the accused).

224. (between the parties). The excuse of the hypocrites, on such occasions, amounted to this: the prerogative of decision certainly belongs to the Prophet; we never meant to question that. Our object in going to some one else was not to secure exactly a judicial pronouncement, but to bring about mutual agreement, conciliation somehow or other between the parties.

بليغا ۞ وما أرسلنا من رسول إلا ليطاع بإذن الله ولو أنهم إذ ظلموا أنفسهم جاءوك فاستغفروا
الله واستغفر لهم الرسول لوجدوا الله توابا رحيما ۞ فلا وربك لا يؤمنون حتى يحكموك فيما شجر
بينهم ثم لا يجدوا في أنفسهم حرجا مما قضيت ويسلموا تسليما ۞ ولو أنا كتبنا عليهم أن اقتلوا أنفسكم
أو اخرجوا من دياركم ما فعلوه إلا قليل منهم ولو أنهم فعلوا ما يوعظون به لكان خيرا لهم
وأشد تثبيتا ۞ وإذا لآتيناهم من لدنا أجرا عظيما ۞ ولهديناهم صراطا مستقيما ۞ ومن يطع الله
والرسول فأولئك مع الذين أنعم الله عليهم

63. (اولئك . . . بليغا) Those are they of whom Allah knows whatever is in their hearts;[225] so[226] turn thou from them[227] and admonish them,[228] and speak to them for their souls[229] an effective word.

64. (وما . . . رحيما) And not a Messenger have We sent but to be obeyed[230] by Allah's will. And if they, when they had wronged their souls,[231] had come to thee[232] and begged forgiveness of Allah and the Messenger had begged forgiveness for them,[233] they would surely have found Allah Relenting,[234] Merciful.[235]

65. (فلا . . . تسليما) Aye! by thy Lord, they shall not really believe[236] until they have made[237] thee[238] judge of what is disputed among them, and then find no demur[239] in their hearts against what thou hast decreed and they submit with full submission.[240]

66. (ولو . . . تثبيتا) And had We prescribed to them:[241] 'kill yourselves or go forth from your dwellings', they would have not done it, save a few of them.[242] And did they[243] perform what they were exhorted to perform,[244] it would be for them better[245] and more strengthening.[246]

67. (واذا . . . عظيما) And then[247] surely We would have given them from Our presence a mighty wage.

68. (ولهديهم . . . مستقيما) And surely We would have guided them to a path straight.

225. (of hypocrisy and dissimulation, and in accordance with that knowledge He shall punish them at the proper time).

226. i. e., taking thy support in the Divine knowledge, and contenting thyself with the Divine punishment. (Th).

227. (and be not hard upon them).

228. (as befits thy mission). Admonition and exhortation are the sine qua non for the prophetic office.

229. i. e., for their good; with this object that they might discard their hypocrisy.

230. (so they ought to have obeyed thee and not have sinned against thee at at all).

231. (by disobeying thee).

232. (in penitence).

233. (and by joining his prayer with theirs would have strengthed their cause).

234. Note that it is not the holy Prophet who is empowered to forgive the sinners; he can only beseech God on their behalf. Forgiveness is entirely in the hands of God.

235. (so that out of His mercy He would have relented towards them and forgiven them).

236. (in the sight of God) i. e., their Islam would not be held genuine and sincere.

237. (and willingly accepted).

238. (and thy law, after thou art no more).

239. (bordering on denial).

240. (to thy decision). The acceptance of the Prophet's decision must be heartfelt, and not merely external.

241. i. e., the mankind.

242. (men of true faith, such as the companions of the holy Prophet). True and devout Muslims are always 'few' as compared with the disobedient 'many'.

243. i. e., the hypocrites; those with lip-profession of Islam.

244. (by way of unquestioning obedience and devotion to the Prophet).

245. i. e., as substantiating their claims to merit.

246. (of their faith). Deeds of faith make faith itself deeper.

247. i. e., with their substantial claims to merit and on the strength of their faith.

69. (ومن . . . رفيقا) And whoso obeys Allah and the Messenger,[248] then those shall be[249] with them whom Allah has blessed[250]—from among the prophets,[251] the saints,[252] the martyrs,[253] and the rightous.[254] Excellent are these as a company !

70. (ذلك . . . عليما) That[255] is the grace from Allah,[256] and Allah suffices as Knower!

SECTION 10

71. (يايها . . . جميعا) O you who believe ! be on your guard ;[257] then sally forth in detachment or all together.[258]

72. (وان . . . شهيدا) And surely there is among you[259] he who tarries behind,[260] and if an ill befalls you,[261] he says:[262] surely God has been gracious to me in that I was not present with them.[263]

73. (ولئن . . . عظيما) And if there comes to you a favour from Allah,[264] then, as if there had been no affection between you and him, he says :[265] would that I had been with them ! then I would have achieved a mighty achievement [266]

74. (فليقاتل . . . عظيما) Let them therefore fight in the way of Allah[267] those who have purchased the life of this world for the Hereafter. And whoso fights in the way of Allah, and is then slain or triumphs,[268] We will in any case give him a mighty wage.[269]

---

248. (in the obligatory articles of faith).

249. (out of His grace and bounty, with no claims to the highest merit for themselves).

250. (in the fullest and highest degree).

251. (who stand highest in spiritual rank).

252. (who rank next to the prophets). For صديق see p. XVI, n. 151.

253. i. e., those who have laid down their lives in the cause of faith. See p. II, nn. 73-74.

254. i. e., those who observe His laws and ordinances in every little detail of of their lives.

255. i. e., the gift of so exalted a companionship; elevation in Paradise to the ranks of the prophets, etc.

256. i. e., a reward far higher than what they are entitled to by their works.

257. (against your enemies at the time of war) i. e., be on your guard, and provide yourselves with arms and necessaries.

258. (whatever may suit the occasion).

259. i. e., in your camp. The word comprises both the believers and the hypocrites.

260. This alludes to the hypocrites.

261. i. e., the Muslims.

262. (rejoicing at his hanging back).

263. (in the battle-field).

264. (in the shape of victory).

265. (grieving over the loss of his share of booty, and without being at all happy at the Muslim victory itself).

266. i. e., a rich share of booty.

267. The import of 'in the way of Allah' is that the holy war must be joined with pure heart and clean motives and not from greed of booty.

268. Note that for a believing, devout warrior there are but two alternatives: Paradise through martyrdom, or victory in the battle-field. In no case does he know vanquishment or ignominy of defeat.

269. (in the Hereafter, which is the only and real prize worth striving after).

75. (وما . . . نصيرا) And what ails you that you do not fight in the way of Allah[270] and[271] for the oppressed among men and women and children[272] who say,[273] 'our Lord ! take us from this town[274] the people of which are ungodly,[275] and appoint us from before Thee a friend[276] and appoint us from before Thee a helper'.

76. (الذين . . . ضعيفا) Those who believe fight in the way of Allah[277] and those who disbelieve fight in the way of the devil.[278] Fight then against the friends of Satan;[279] verily the craft of Satan is ever feeble.[280]

---

270. i. e., to defend and vindicate His true religion. That must always be the primary motive.

271. as an additional reason.

272. One of the well-recognized objects of the holy war is to rescue the down-trodden.

273. i. e., cry out in sheer helplessness.

274. (of Makka).

275. i. e. ungodly and oppressive.

276. (to champion our cause and to deliver us from the plight we are in).

277. i. e., to aid and exalt the cause of faith, truth and virtue.

278. i. e., to aid and exalt the cause of unbelief, untruth and vice. Note the utmost contrast between the view-points of the Muslims and their opponents.

279. (who is backing, instigating and inspiring them, O believers !)

280. Satan, in Islam, is not a dreadful power, a thing to be afraid of. He is to be despised by true believers, and his hosts are sure to be vanquished in the long run. This teaching deals a death-blow to the conception of Satan as an Evil Deity or sub-deity who has to be propitiated.

SECTION 11

77. (الم . . . فتيلا) Hast thou[281] not observed those[282] to whom it was said:[283] withold your hands,[284] and establish prayer and pay the poor-rate[285] but when thereafter[286] fighting was prescribed to them, lo! there is a party of them[287] dreading men[288] as with the dread of Allah or with even greater dread;[289] and they say:[290] our Lord! why hast thou prescribed to us fighting.[291] Wouldst that Thou hadst let us tarry till a term nearby![292] Say thou,[293] 'trifling is the enjoyment of this world, for better[294] is the Hereafter[295] for him who fears Allah;[296] and you[297] shall not be wronged a whit.[298]

78. (اين . . . حديثا) Death shall overtake you[299] wheresoever you may be, even though you are in fortresses plastered.[300] And if there reaches them some good they[301] say: this is from Allah;[302] and if there reaches them some ill, they say:[303] this is because of thee.[304] Say thou: from Allah[305] is everything.[306] What ails then this people, that they do not understand any speech?[307]

79. (ما . . . شهيدا) Whatsoever of good reaches thee[308] is from Allah,[309] and whatsoever of ill reaches thee[310] is because of thyself.[311] And We have sent thee[312] as a Messenger to the mankind,[313] and suffices Allah as a Witness.[314]

80. (من . . . حفيظا) He who obeys the Messenger has indeed obeyed Allah,[315] and he who turns away[316]—We have not sent thee over them as a keeper.[317]

---

281. (O reader!).

282. The allusion is to the faint-hearted among the Muslims.

283. (when they were impatient to go to war and were insistent in their demand for leave to fight, harassed and persecuted as they were by the idolaters).

284. (for the time being; while at Makka).

285. Duties incumbent at all times, war or no war.

286. i. e., after their migration to Madina, when the immediate strong incentive to war—the Makkan persecution had ceased to operate.

287. i. e., the faint-hearted ones.

288. i. e., the enemy.

289. This fear, arising out of faint-heartedness, was not at all the result of full deliberation or lack of conviction, and thus did not draw the censure that it would have otherwise deserved.

290. (in their hearts, if not openly).

291. (so soon).

292. (that we might have enjoyed life a little longer). The verse gives lie to the imaginary eagerness of the early Muslims for warfare from love of booty. The truth of the matter is that they felt hesitant, and very naturally so, considering the heavy odds against them and the obvious risks it involved, and went to the battle-field only when impelled by a sense of duty.

293. (O Prophet).

294. i. e., infinitely more pleasant, and of abiding nature.

295. (which can be won by means of Jihād).

296. (and is therefore a believing, devout Muslim).

297. (O mankind !)

298. i. e., none shall be deprived of the reward for his acts of merit, and Jihād is such an act pre-eminently.

299. (at its appointed time, which you cannot escape, so why lose merit by evading Jihād ?)

300. i. e., in buildings most strongly built and best guarded. Noticeable in this connection is an amusing and amazing theory of death being expounded by certain men of science. There is a mysterious ray coming from outside the earth, so runs the theory, which constantly beats down upon us from the moment of our birth and destroys the cells comprising our bodies. Gradually, as we grow older, the process of making good the damage slows down, until finally the ray gets the upper hand, and death is the inevitable result. Now how to dodge this ray of death ? The 'solution' is to spend the whole of our lives inside a house with lead walls 20 feet thick, for it has been experimentally found that the ray cannot penetrate more than 19 feet of lead.

301. i. e., the hypocrites.

302. Intending to mean thereby that it has been due to mere fortuitous set of circumstances, and not to any excellence on the part of the holy Prophet and the Muslims.

303. (in their intense hatred of the Prophet and the Muslims).

304. (and thy companions).

305. The passage not only repudiates every form of 'dualism' but also generates in the believing mind adamant fortitude. This is how the doctrine strikes even an avowed traducer of Islam :—'When overtaken by misfortune, no matter how undeserved, the Arab says: "It was written !" or "Allah is Great !" Such a discipline makes heroic soldiers, patient and resigned workers.' (Reinach, Orpheus, p. 175). This doctrine of referring every event to the One and Only God has been the consolation of millions and millions in countless ages, and is the one unfailing support to every individual in his dire calamity. It was this doctrine that in the early history of Islam nerved its adherents with a courage and heroism that proved matchless.

306. (whether good or evil). Cf. the OT:—'I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things. (Is. 45:7). 'Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?' (Am. 3:6)

307. even a thing so self-evident.

308. (O man!).

309. i. e., an act of pure Divine grace; unpreceded by any act of special merit on the part of man.

310. (O man!)

311. i. e., a manifestation of Divine justice; in part requital of some sin on the part of man. Clearly, then, there is no disharmony between what is stated now and what has been said in the preceding verse. Afflictions befalling the righteous and the saintly, it should be noted, are not afflictions at all. They are only so in appearance, not in reality. They are in the nature of a training ground.

312. (O Prophet).

313. i. e., the whole of it, and not to a particular race or people.

314. i. e., one who has furnished the holy Prophet with clear proofs of his universal ministry.

315. Once we have accepted the great Muhammad (on him be peace!) as the true apostle of God, we are bound by all canons of reason and logic to follow every one of his precepts and commands implicity, no matter we are able to understand the ultimate object of a particular order or not. 'Take the example of a soldier who has been ordered by his General to occupy a certain strategic position. The good soldier would follow and execute the order immediately. If, while doing so, he is able to explain to himself the ultimate strategic object which the General had in view, the better for him; but in case the deeper aim which underlies the General's command does not reveal itself to him at once, he is nevertheless not entitled to give up or even postpone its execution.' (Asad, op. cit., p. 109)

316. (from obeying and following the Prophet). A corollary to the proposition laid down in the verse is that he who disobeys the apostle, disobeys God.

317. i. e., so grieve not, O Prophet! at the consequences of their rebellion.

وَاللَّهُ يَكْتُبُ مَا يُبَيِّتُونَ ۖ فَأَعْرِضْ عَنْهُمْ وَتَوَكَّلْ عَلَى اللَّهِ ۚ وَكَفَىٰ بِاللَّهِ وَكِيلًا ۝ أَفَلَا يَتَدَبَّرُونَ الْقُرْآنَ ۚ وَلَوْ كَانَ مِنْ

81. (ويقولون . . . وكيلا) And they[318] say,[319] 'obedience'.[320] Yet when they go forth from before thee, a group of them plan together by night[321] other than they had said;[322] and Allah writes down what they plan by night.[323] So turn thou from them[324] and trust in Allah, and suffices Allah as a Trustee.[325]

82. (افلا . . . كثيرا) Do they[326] not then ponder on the Qur'ān?[327] Were it from other than Allah they would surely find therein many a contradiction.[328]

83. (و اذا . . . قليلا) And when there comes to them[329] aught of security[330] or alarm,[331] they spread it abroad,[332] whereas had they referred it to the Messenger[333] and those in authority among them,[334] then those of them who can think it out[335] would have known it.[336] And had there not been Allah's favour with you[337] and His mercy,[338] you would surely have[339] followed Satan, save a few of you.[340]

84. (فقاتل . . . تنكيلا) Fight thou therefore in the way of Allah;[341] thou are not tasked except for thy own soul,[342] and persuade the believers;[343] Allah will perchance withhold the might of those who disbelieve.[344] And Allah is Stronger in might[345] and Stronger in chastising.[346]

---

318. i. e., the hypocrites.

319. (in when thy presence, O Prophet!)

320. i. e., we obey thee.

321. (and in secret)

322. (before thee) i. e., they profess obedience before thee, but when alone, their chiefs conspire against thee. The passage may also be rendered: 'A part of them meditateth by night upon doing otherwise than that which thou hast said': تقول meaning both 'they were saying' and 'thou sayest'.

323. (and He shall punish them accordingly at the proper time)

324. (and feel no anxiety on their account, O Prophet!)

325. i. e., as Disposer of all affairs and as Protector of His faithful servants, and as one who is Able to settle accounts with their enemies.

326. i. e., the infidels.

327. (and endeavour to obtain a clear knowledge of what is in it). The Holy Qur'ān being so transparently full of exquisite beauties and excellences, moral and spiritual, that an unbiased study of it is sure to convince everyone of its Divine origin.

328. (from which both in its external and internal aspects, it is remarkably and singularly free). Thus it is that all the numerous sects and parties among the Muslims have the same Holy Text and are agreed as to its purity. Even the Christian critics who cherish to find 'its many errors and defects' have to acknowledge that there are no 'intentional alterations and mutilations' in it at all. This is clearly one of the most powerful arguments in support of the claim of the Qur'ān, specially in view of the glaring fact that the canoncial books of the Bible, adopted as the foundation of faith after prolonged deliberation, not only contradict each other in details but are entirely at variance with a large number of equally respectable books rejected as a spurious or apocryphal.

329. i. e., the hypocrites.

330. For instance, the news of Muslim victories.

331. For instance, tha news of Muslim reverses.

332. (immediately, without stopping to make a proper investigation).

333. (instead of publishing it themselves).

334. i. e., among the Muslim community.

335. i. e., the chief companions of the Prophet.

336. (whether the news was correct or not, or, if correct, worth publishing or not)

337. (O Muslims !)

338. God's grace and mercy, in this instance, consisted in blessing the Muslim community with two such marvellous gifts as the Holy Qur'ān and the Holy Prophet.

339. (as instigated and misguided by the hypocrites).

340. Those very few, by their rare and exceptional good sense, might have arrived independently at the true notions of Divinity; but then this gift of so sound and discerning an intellect is also an outcome of special Divine providence and mercy.

341. (nor when jihād has been prescribed for thee, O Prophet !)

342. i. e., so thou art not at all accountable for the action or inaction of others.

343. (to fight). All this refers to a period before Jihād was prescribed as a public duty.

344. (and shall vanquish them). Surely no mere human brain could have ventured on such a prophecy with all the odds against the triumph of Islam and with hardly any resources at its command.

345. (against rebels and offenders, in this world) i. e., powerful and invincible as the anti-Islamic forces seem to be, Allah's power is immeasurably greater, and He is well-able to smash them.

346. (against rebels and offenders, in the hereafter).

85. (من . . . مقيتا) He who intercedes with a goodly intercession,[347] his shall be a portion[348] therefrom[349] and he who intercedes with an ill intercession[350] his shall be a responsibility thereof: And Allah is Controller of everything.[351]

86. (و اذا . . . حسيبا) And when you are greeted with a greeting,[352] then greet back with one better than that or return that.[353] Verily Allah is Reckoner of everything.[354]

87. (الله . . . حديثا) Allah! there is no god but He.[355] Surely He will gather you together on[356] the Day of Judgement of which there is no doubt, and who is more truthful in discourse than Allah?[357]

SECTION 12

88. (فمالكم . . . سبيلا) What ails you then[358] that you are[359] two parties regarding the hypocrites,[360] whereas Allah has overthrown them[361] because of what they have earned.[362] Would you[363] lead aright those whom Allah has sent astray?[364] And whomso Allah sends astray for him thou[365] shall not find a way.[366]

89. (ودوا . . . نصيرا) They yearn that you[367] disbelieved even as they have disbelieved, so that you[368] may be all alike.[369] So do not take friends from among them unless they migrate[370] for the sake of Allah;[371] and if they turn away[372] then seize them and kill them[373] wherever you find them, and do not take from among them a friend or a helper.[374]

347. i. e., one desirable both in regard to its object and its method.

348. (Of merit)

349. i. e., due to that goodly intercession.

350. i. e., intercession for an evil cause or with improper methods.

351. (and so requiting both good and evil)

352. (by a Muslim, known or presumed, in the Muslim fashion, O Muslim!). The customary greeting in Islam is:—'Peace be upon you,' says one. 'And with you be peace and the mercy of God,' replies another.

353. It is this command, in the main, which is responsible for the following scene; so general in the Muslim lands, witnessed and commented upon by an English lady:—"As-salam-alaikum, these gentle words of greeting each other, as they pass, is a music to the ear. It is amusing to watch the dexterity with which two friends will sustain a competition in greeting; each one endeavouring to outdo the other in compliments. . . . Master and servant, the rich and the poor, the learned and the unlettered, greet each other with the same dignity on both sides, leading to no loss of self-respect to either'. (Lady Cobbold, op. cit., pp. 59-60).

354. (great or small).

355. See P. III, n. 19.

356. الى in this phrase is in the sense of فى (LL).

357. (and it is He who is announcing the advent of that Day).

358. (O Muslims!) Certain Makkans professing Islam had migrated to Madina, but later pretending to fetch their merchandise, obtained leave to go back to Makka whence they never returned, and joined the pagans. The verses now relate to this brand of apostates and renegades.

359. (even now).

360. i. e., divided as to whether they should be treated as infidels, and be slain or not.

361. (to infidelity open and avowed).

362. i. e., because of the act they have deliberately and wilfully committed: the act of their leaving, under false pretences, Madina, the only Dār-ul-Islām at the time.

363. The address is to the Muslims who were till then unaware of the severe guilt of the offenders.

364. (in consequence of their deliberate choice to go astray).

365. (O reader!).

366. i. e., nobody can create sense of belief and righteousness in one who chooses to go wrong. No human efforts can make him who is wilfully blind see.

367. (O Muslims!).

368. (and they).

369. (in ungodliness). This shows the zeal of the hypocrites for misleading the Muslims.

370. (to Madina as Muslims). Migration to Madīna, was, at the time, an obligatory act of duty and a visible token of the acceptance of Islam.

371. i. e., as true Muslims. Mere entry into Madīna was not enough, as pagans also visited Madina for trade purposes.

372. (from complying with these terms and conditions, and remain infidels as heretofore).

373. now that a state of belligerency exists.

374. i. e., have nothing whatever to do with them; have them neither as friends in peace nor as helpers in distress.

90. (الا الذين . . . سبيلا) Excepting those[375] who join a people between whom and you there is a compact[376] or who came to you with their breasts straitened that they should fight you or fight their own people.[377] And had Allah so willed, He would have surely set them upon you.[378] If then they withdraw from you,[379] and do not fight against you, and offer you peace, then Allah does not assign you a way against them.[380]

91. (ستجدون . . . مبينا) Surely you will find others desiring[381] that they may be secure from you and may be secure from their people, and yet whenever they are brought back[382] into the temptation[383] they revert to it.[384] Then if they do not withdraw from you, nor offer you peace, nor restain their hands,[385] seize them and kill them wherever you find them. These ! against them, We have given you a clear authority.[386]

375. (of the infidels).

376. (of alliance). Thus, being allies of your allies, such infidels enter into an indirect alliance with the believers.

377. (and thus seeking your alliance directly), i. e., their hearts shrinking from fighting you or their own people. ان يقاتلوكم is here synonymous with عن قتالكم (LL).

378. (but in His immeasurable grace and infinite mercy He did not so will, and now they are of themselves offering you submission and seeking your alliance and good-will).

379. (with no intent to molest you)

380. (either of slaying them or of taking them prisoners).

381. (out of their cunning and design).

382. (by the open and avowed enemies of Islam).

383. (of waging war upon the Muslims).

384. (without compunction).

385. (against you).

386. (for war).

SECTION 13

92. (وما كان . . . حكيما) It is not for a believer to kill a believer save by a mischance;[387] and he who kills a believer by a mischance, on him is the setting free of a believing slave[388] and bloodwit[389] to be delivered to his family[390] except that they forgo.[391] Then if he[392] is of a people hostile to you and is himself a believer, then the setting free of a believing slave;[393] and if he be of a people between whom and you is a compact[394] then the blood-wit to be delivered to his family[395] and the setting free of a believing slave.[396] Then whoso does not find the wherewithal,[397] on him is the fasting for two months in succession:[398] a penance[399] from Allah. And Allah is ever Knowing, Wise.

93. (ومن . . . عظيما) And he who kills a believer willfully,[400] his requital[401] is Hell as an abider therein,[402] and Allah shall be wroth with him[403] and shall curse him[404] and shall prepare for him a torment terrible.[405]

---

387. i. e., by accident, not by design.

388. (or a bondwoman).

389. Murder, in Muslim jurisprudence, is not only a capital criminal offence but also a civil wrong; and the life of a murderer, in the law of Islam, as in ancient Greece, was forfeited to the kinsmen of the slain, who could, if they chose accept a fine as satisfaction. See II, n. 177, 183 ff.

390. i. e., the deceased's legal heirs.

391. (that compensation in part or in full).

392. i. e., the person slain.

393. (or bondwoman, but not blood-wit, since his relations are infidels, and no infidel has a right to a Muslim's inheritance).

394. (of alliance, and he himself is an infidel).

395. Since there is no objection to an infidel inheriting an infidel's property.

396. (or a bondwoman).

397. (in case where the setting free of a slave is obligatory).

398. (in lieu of the freeing of a slave).

399. i. e., enjoined by.

400. i. e., by design, not by accident, and is unrepentant.

401. (originally and primarily).

402. (for ever). But since eternal damnation is incompatible with faith, this original sentence is not carried out in full, by the grace of God, in the case of believers.

403. (for a definite period).

404. i. e., shall deprive him of His special mercy.

405. (for a definite period).

95. (لايستوي . . . عظيما) Not equal[416] are the holders back among the believers,[417] save those who are disabled[418] and the strivers in the way of Allah with their riches and their lives.[419] Allah has preferred in rank the strivers with their riches and their lives above the holders-back,[420] and to all[421] Allah has promised good.[422] And Allah has preferred the strivers above the holders-back with a mighty wage—

96. (درجت . . . رحيما) Ranks from Him and forgiveness and mercy;[423] and Allah is ever Forgiving, Merciful.

406. (to fight the infidels).

407. (for yourselves, in every act of yours) i. e., investigate fully before you proceed to slay.

408. (doubting his sincerity or genuineness of his conversion).

409. (in a Muslim fashion, or meets you with other tokens of friendship and submission)

410. (at heart, but only pretendest to be so in order to save thy life from our hands).

411. (by killing him in holy war and apportioning to you his property as your share of booty).

412. (which every Muslim can easily win by walking in His way).

413. i. e., you yourselves were judged Muslims, some time before, by no other means than your verbal declaration of the faith and outward tokens of Islam. Many of the distinguished pagans had not at once become converts at heart; their genuine conversion came only gradually.

414. (so that the Muslims took you at your words, without having an inquiry into your inner feelings and in the sincerity or otherwise of your declarations).

415. (for yourselves, and be ever careful in observing this injunction).

416. (in degrees of merit).

417. i. e., those, who without reasonable cause stayed at home and did not join the holy war.

418. (by illness or for some other good reason).

419. (by spending their money lavishly and recklessly, and by risking their lives).

420. (at home). Note that these stay-at-home are not counted as sinners, since the duty of joining the holy war was not, at the time, obligatory on every able-bodied individual.

421. (comprising the two classes mentioned).

422. (in the Hereafter, as reward for their respective deeds of merit).

423. Words explanatory of 'mighty hire'.

97. (ان . . . مصيرا) Verily to those whom the angels carry off in death while yet they are wronging their souls,[424] they will say :[425] what were you in.[426]? They will say[427] 'weakened were we in the land'.[428] They[429] will say, 'was not Allah's land wide so that you could migrate thereto'?[430] These ! their resort is Hell : an evil retreat——

98. (الا . . . سبيلا) Excepting the weak ones among men, women and children, unable[431] to find a stratagem and not guided to the way.

99. (فاولئك . . . غفورا) These are they whom Allah is likely to pardon, and Allah is ever Pardoning, Forgiving.

100. 424. (by not migrating to Madina). Their offence consisted in their not joining the Holy Prophet and the Muslim community at Madina, which was a duty incumbent upon them, but staying without any justification at Makka with and among the idolaters and not wishing to break with them.

425. (while taking away their souls).

426. (so that you found it impossible to fulfil the obligations of your faith)

427. (excusing themselves).

428. (of our birth and dwelling and unable to resist the infidels, and also unable to observe the obligations of our faith).

429. (i. e. the angels).

430. (for the proper observance of the obligations of your faith). The meaning is : if the exercise of your religion was impossible in the land of your birth and dwelling, why did not you migrate to some other place on God's wide and spacious earth ?

431. (in fact, and not feigning inability).

432. (charged with migration).

433. (wherein to practise his faith).

434. (before he has reached his destination).

435. (which in Divine bounty is conferred upon mere good intention).

436. (for this act of migration, though only undertaken and not completed).

437. (and so He shall forgive his many other faults).

438. (so that He counts the incomplete act of migration as complete, and rewards it in full).

101. (واذا . . . مبينا) And when you are journeying in the earth,[439] it will be no fault in you that you shorten the prayer[440] if you apprehend that those who disbelieve will molest you;[441] verily the infidels are ever unto you an avowed enemy.

102. (واذا . . . مهينا) And when thou[442] art amidst them[443] and hast set up the prayer for them,[444] then let a party of them stand with thee and let them retain their weapons;[445] then when they have prostrated themselves,[446] let them go behind you,[447] and let another party who have not yet prayed[448] come[449] and pray with thee; and let them also take their pre-cautions and their weapons. Those who disbelieve wish that you neglected your weapons and your baggage, so that they might swoop down upon you a one swoop.[450] No fault there will be in you if there is an injury to you from rain or you are ailing,[451] that you lay down your arms and yet take your caution. Verily Allah has prepared for the infidels a torment ignominious.

439. (or by the sea, O Muslims!) The distance to be covered must be at least for three 'stages or manzils, i. e., about 60 English miles, according to the Hanafi school of law, and a much shorter distance according to other schools.

440. (by half, so that the number of rak'at at Zuhar (noon), 'Asr (afternoon) and 'Ishā (night) prayers would be reduced to two.

441. (by your halting at a place too long). فتنة here may also be taken in the sense of 'slaying.'

442. (O Prophet! or any other in thy place).

443. i. e., the Muslims.

444. (and an attack by the enemy may be imminent).

445. (while in prayer, the other half is to be on the look-out for the enemy). Note that even at this moment of imminent danger, prayer is not to be put off or held over. So pre-eminently important is the duty of offering prayers in the code of Islam!

446. (and have finished one rak'at).
447. i. e., in the hindermost row.
448. (but have been on the look-out for the enemy).
449. (forward into the front row).
450. So you need be ever vigilant and on your guard.
451. (and thus are impeded from taking your arms).

103. (فاذا . . . موقوتا) Then when you have finished the prayer,[452] remember Allah,[453] standing, sitting, and lying on your sides.[454] Then when you are secure[455] establish prayer;[456] verily the prayer is prescribed to the believers at definite times.[457]

104. (ولا . . . حكيما) And do not slacken in seeking the enemy people;[458] if you are suffering,[459] then they[460] suffer even as you suffer,[461] and you hope from Allah what[462] they hope not.[463] And Allah is ever Knowing,[464] Wise.[465]

SECTION 16

105. (انا . . . خصيما) Verily We; it is We who have sent down the Book to thee[466] with truth, that thou mightest judge[467] between people by[468] what Allah has shown thee;[469] and be not thou[470] a pleader on behalf of the deceivers.

106. (واستغفر . . . رحيما) And beg thou forgiveness of Allah;[471] verily Allah is ever Forgiving, Merciful.

107. (ولا . . . اثيما) And plead not[472] thou for those who defraud their souls,[473] verily Allah does not love one[474] who is a defrauder,[475] sinner.[476]

---

452. (thus curtailed and circumscribed).

453. (as usual).

454. i. e., in every attitude and posture as may be practicable; and do not infringe the prescribed law of prayer in any of its details.

455. i. e., out of danger, and not journeying.

456. (in its proper, regular form as duly prescribed).

457. (so it must be offered in every circumstance and at appointed hours). 'The religion of the Muslim is continually present with him and in the daily prayer manifests itself in a solemn and impressive ritual, which cannot leave either the worshipper or the spectator unaffected.' (Arnold, Preaching of Islam, p. 417). 'The timing of the daily prayer which according to the Qur'ān restores self-possession to the ego by bringing it into closer touch with the ultimate source of life and freedom, is intended to save the ego from the mechanising effects of sleep and business.

Prayer in Islam is the ego's escape from mechanism to freedom.' (Iqbal, op. cit., pp. 151-152).

458. (through lack of grip, when that pursuit is necessary).

459. (of wounds and privations, O Muslims !).

460. i. e., the enemy.

461. (so that you and they are equal so far as the physical aspect of the war is concerned).

462. (high reward).

463. (so in strength of mind and spirit you are their superior).

464. (so that He knows well your enemies' weakness of heart and body).

465. (so that He does not command you to do acts that are beyond you).

466. (O Prophet !).

467. (in this particular affair).

468. i. e., in accordance with ; by means of.

469. (by revelation). اراك is here synonymous with عرفك and علمك (LL).

470. (in the future, as thou hast never been in the past). Bashīr, a hypocrite, of the clan of Obeiraq, had stolen a bag of flour and some arms from the house of Rifā'a, a companion of the Prophet. The theft was detected. The Obeiraq people, in order to shield their kinsman, laid the guilt at the door of Labīd, a faithful Muslim, and protested to the Prophet with an air of injured innocence that they were being unjustifiably suspected by Rifā'a. The holy Prophet thereupon is reported to have remonstrated with the party of the complainant for suspecting without warrant members of the Muslim community. It was at this stage that real facts of the case became known to him by Revelation, and Bashīr, the real culprit, was exposed. Offended at this he returned to paganism and joined the Makkans openly.

471. (for thy remonstrating with the people of the complainant). The act on the part of the Prophet on the basis of the facts than available was perfectly innocent—even meritorious—but it might have had the effect of silencing the complainant, and was thus, in Divine wisdom, not quite politic for the Prophet.

472. (as they wish thee to contend).

473. (by wronging others and accusing them falsely).

474. —like Bashīr, in this instance—

475. i. e., persistent deceiver.

476. i. e., addicted to sin.

108. (يستخفون . . . محيطا) They feel ashamed of men[477] and not feel ashamed of Allah,[478] whereas He is[479] present with them when by night they plan together of discourse which does not please Him; and Allah is ever an Encompasser of what they do.[480]

109. (هانتم . . . وكيلا) Lo! it is you[481] who have contended for them in the life of this world;[482] then who will contend for them with Allah on the Day of Judgement, or who will be their champion?

110. (ومن . . . رحيما) And he who works an evil[483] or wrongs his own soul and thereafter begs forgiveness of Allah,[484] shall find Allah Forgiving, Merciful.[485]

111. (ومن . . . حكيما) And he who earns a sin, only against his own soul earns it;[486] and Allah is ever Knowing,[487] Wise.[488]

112. (ومن . . . مبينا) And he who earns a vice[489] or a sin[490] and thereafter[491] casts it on an innocent one,[492] has certainly borne a calumny[493] and a manifest sin.

---

477. (who are in reality as powerless as themselves).

478. i. e., the Omniscient, the Omnipotent.

479. (as ever).

480. (so it is He alone who ought to be feared).

481. (O Muslims!).

482. This refers to the unsuspecting neutral Muslims who had assembled before the Prophet to defend and support Bashīr, the offender.

483. (to others).

484. (in the way prescribed).

485. (so Bashīr and his accomplices ought to have asked Divine forgiveness in the proper way).

486. i. e., hurts himself and not others. This makes immediate penitence on his part the more necessary.

487. (so He is aware of every sin and sinner).

488. (so that His punishments are suited to every individual case).

489. (relatively small).

490. (grave or heinous).

491. (instead of asking forgiveness).

492. (as did Bashīr and his associates).

493. Calumny, denoting all the unjust accusations which have the effect of damaging or lowering another's reputation, is always a prominent feature of a depraved society. Islam condemns it in the strongest terms, so that it may not raise its head even in forms too subtle to be reached by the arms of law.

113. (ولولا . . . عظيما) Were not the grace of Allah and His mercy on thee,[494] a party of them had surely resolved to mislead thee,[495] whereas they mislead not but themselves;[496] and they shall not be able to hurt thee in aught.[497] And Allah has sent down to thee the Book and wisdom,[498] and has taught thee[499] what thou knowest not; and the grace of Allah on thee is ever mighty.[500]

114. (لا خير . . . عظيما) No good[501] is there in much of their whispers[502] except in him who commands charity or kindness or reconciliation among mankind;[503] and he who does this, seeking the goodwill of Allah,[504] him We will presently give a mighty wage.

115. (ومن . . . مصيرا) And he who opposes the Messenger after the truth has become manifest to him and follows other way than that of the believers,[505] him We will let follow[506] that to which he has turned[507] and him We will roast in Hell—an evil retreat!

SECTION 18

116. (ان . . . بعيدا) Verily Allah shall not forgive that aught be associated with Him,[508] and He shall forgive all else[509] to whom He will,[510] and he who associates aught with Allah has certainly strayed far away.[511]

117. (ان . . . مريدا) They[512] invoke not beside Him but females,[513] and they invoke not but a Satan rebellious.[514]

118. (لعنه . . . مفروضا) Allah has accursed him,[515] and he said:[516] 'I will surely take[517] of Thy creatures a portion allotted;[518]

494. (in this instance, as always, O Prophet!)

495. (by causing thee to deliver an unsound judgment).

496. i. e., as they have failed in their unholy attempt in the past, so also they shall fail in the future.

497. (in this respect) i. e., they shall not be able to cause thee to fall into error and they shall not succeed in wringing from thee a wrong verdict.

498. (and it is impossible for error to co-exist with these Divine gifts).

499. (of higher truths).

500. It was this unvarying and constant Divine grace which made it impossible for any one to lead the Holy Prophet astray.

501. i. e., merit or virtue.

502. The hypocrites in their secret counsels mostly talked in whispers. The pronoun هم refers to the multitude of mankind.

503. (and to effect these ends have to counsel in secret).

504. (and not with an unworthy or ignoble motive). Note the emphasis Islam lays on the rightness of motives, on the purity of the springs of action.

505. This 'way of the believers' includes dress, food, personal appearance, and many other habits and customs generally believed to lie outside the path of religion and spirituality. And that the Muslims have, or, at any rate, till very recently have had, a definite and distinctive culture of their own goes without saying. 'Up to the nineteenth century it was generally possible to recognise Muhammadans by their external appearance. They felt that they were heirs of a culture which was bound up with their creed, and they wished to preserve the characteristic marks of their civilization. So persistent has been the influence of this distinctive Muslim culture that a strong sense of corporate unity may often survive the disappearance of intellectual assent to the dogmas of the faith and may serve as a social bond long after faith is dead.' (Arnold, Islamic Faith, p. 48).

506. (in this world without let or hindrance).

507. i. e., to the ways that are not of the believers. 'The imitation of outward appearance leads, by degrees, to a corresponding assimilation of the mental disposition . . . Only very superficial people can believe that it is possible to imitate a civilization in its external appearance, without being at the same time affected by its spirit. A civilization is not an empty form only, but a living energy. The moment we begin to accept its form, its internal currents and dynamic influences set to work in ourselves and mould slowly, imperceptibly our whole mental attitude.' (Asad, op. cit., pp. 83-84).

508. (either in His Person or in His Attributes). Note the unique and unmistakable insistence with which the Holy Qur'ān follows this one theme, the absolute unity of God. See n. 160 above.

509. (either altogether or after some initial punishment).

510. (in accordance with His universal Plan).

511. (from the right path, and so eternal damnation must be his natural due).

512. i. e., the infidels in general, and Arab pagans in particular.

513. i. e., female deities; goddesses. It was not only the Arabs who worshipped as 'daughters of God' angels and certain of their images, but many divinities throughout the world, including the sun, the moon, and the 'Great Mother,' have been construed as feminine, and the cult of goddesses has been almost universal. 'The emotional side of Semitic heathenism was always very much connected with the worship of female deities, partly through the associations of maternity, which appealed to the purest and tenderest feelings, and partly through other associations connected with woman, which too often appealed to the sensuality so strongly devleoped in the Semitic race.' (Robertson Smith, Religion of the Semites, p. 59). And as to other religions :—'In the religious imagination and devotion of the Cretans the goddess was markedly predominant over the God.' (UHW. II, p. 1365). 'The characteristic which specially distinguishes the Anatolian religion is its conception of the Divine Being as the mother, not the father, of mankind . . . . . . The God, the male element in the Divine nature, was conceived as a secondary figure to the Great Mother.' (DB. V, p. 122). 'The goddess was the fountain and source of human life. The principles on which that life must be lived emanated from her.' (ERE. IX, p. 905). Among the Hindus of south India, who mostly worship nondescript local village deities, 'these local deities are nearly all of the female, not the male, sex.' (EBr. XI, p. 577). 'Amongst many primitive peoples, and at the present time in a large number of less developed cults, goddesses occupy important places in the pantheon.' (ERE. V, p. 827). 'إناثا also signifies inanimate things as trees and stones and wood'. (LL)

514. i. e., this goddess-worship is, in effect, nothing but devil-worship.

515. (for his rebellion)

516. (at the time of his expulsion from the Heaven).

517. (by seducing them).

518. i. e., limited in number ; determined in regard to time.

519. (from the path of faith and rectitude).

520. i. e., with false hopes and a craving to commit sins.

521. The pagan Arabs used to slit the ears of camels and other animals invoking on them the names of their gods and goddesses.

522. (by putting it to uses not intended by the creator). For example, the castration of slaves ; or, to take a modern instance, the artificial change of sex. The Amazons' practice of burning off their right breast may also be cited as a further example.

523. (by obeying his commands instead of God's).

524. i. e., eternal damnation.

525. (under false pretences).

526. i. e., the dupes of the devil.

527. (as contrasted with the false pretences of the devil).

528. (are these promises of God to be obtained). No mere wish and desire, shorn of acts and deeds, would avail anything.

529. Or, 'on account of it.'

125. (ومن ... خليلا) And who can be better in religion than he who submits his face to Allah,[532] and is sincere,[533] and follows the faith of Ibrāhīm, the upright ?[534] And Allah has taken Ibrāhīm for a friend.[535]

126. (ولله ... محيطا) And Allah's is whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is in the earth,[536] and Allah is ever an Encompasser of everything.[537]

SECTION 19

127. (ويستفتونك ... عليما) And they[538] ask thy decree[539] concerning women.[540] Say thou : 'Allah decrees to you concerning them and so do the revelations that have been recited to you in the Book[541] concerning the orphan women[542] to whom you[543] do not give what is prescribed for them[544] and yet desire that you will wed them, and concerning the oppressed children,[545] and concerning this that you will deal[546] with the orphans in equity,[547] and whatsoever good you do, then verily Allah is ever Aware of it.[548]

---

530. This means that so far as spiritual merits are concerned there is no difference between man and woman. It has never been a subject of discussion among the Muslims whether woman possessed a soul or not.

531. This, in a nutshell, is the Islamic law of Divine requital. The proviso وهو مؤمن is vital, for without right faith 'righteous works' are meaningless.

532. i. e., who has surrendered his entire self to God, and is obedient to God, both in word and deed.

533. (not simulating faith).

534. See P. 1, nn. 617, 618.

535. Cf. the OT :—' . . . the seed of Abraham, my friend.' (Is. 41 : 8). ' . . . and gavest it to the seed of Abraham thy friend.' (2 Ch. 20 : 7). But the English word 'friend' does scant justice to the idea of خليل which, in Arabic, denotes the dearest or most sincere friend who has no rival in the love and reliance placed upon him.

536. (so His sovereignty is all-comprehensive).

537. (so His knowledge is all-comprehensive).

538. i. e., the people.

539. O (Prophet!) i. e., Divine decree received by the Prophet through Revelation.

540. i. e., concerning their dower and their share in inheritance.

541. (in the beginning of the Surah). Questions are referred back to the previous commandments with respect to all these subjects already dealt with in the opening verses of this chapter.

542. Orphan girls, in pre-Islamic Arabia, with properties of their own, in charge of their wards, were of two descriptions. Either they happened to be handsome or not. If handsome, the guardians used to take them as their own wives, but not to pay them their dower in full. If otherwise, the guardians, in order to profit by the estate of their wards, suffered them not to seek husband elsewhere. Islam at one stroke did away with this dual injustice.

543. (O guardians!)

544. i. e., their proper dower.

545. i. e., male children of tender age who also were subjected to many inequities and hardships in pagan days. Taking the Holy Qur'ān as the work, not of God but of the Prophet, says a Christian writer:—'One of the most commendable things which one finds in reading the Qoran is the solicitude which Muhammed shows for the young, and especially for such as have been deprived of their natural guardians. Again and again he insists upon a kind and just treatment being accorded to children. And working upon his words, the Muhammedan doctors have framed a system of rules concerning the appointment and duties of guardians which is most complete, and extending to the most minute details.' (Roberts, op. cit., pp. 40-41).

546. (in all your dealings).

547. 'The enactments of the Qoran have supplied the foundation for a most comprehensive law on the subject of guardians and wards. And since this law is thus based upon the express teaching of the Qoran, we find a greater agreement here between the Shiahs and Sunnis than in any other matter of law' (Roberts, op. cit., p. 43).

548. (so ye ought to hasten towards good).

552. (in any case than separation or incessant wrangling).

553. (of mankind in general).

554. (so that man is likely to consent to live with his wife, if she is prepared to part with some of her rights).

555. (towards your wives : and do not coerce them into relinquishing their dues).

556. (in fulfiling the obligations to your wives).

557. (so He is sure to reward you for your acts of equity and benevolence).

558. (by your very constitution, O men !)

559. (when they are more than one in the matter of heart) i. e., to hold the balance even in love and affection, which feelings are of involuntary nature and beyond human control.

560. (for that reason).

561. (to one wife, in your dealings, in your voluntary conduct, even when absolute justice and perfect equality are impossible).

562. (to the exculsion of others), i. e., be fair and considerate in respect of outer duties at least. The purport of the whole passage is: while unable constitutionally to observe perfect equality among your wives in respect of your feelings of love and attachment, you are not, on that account, by any means warranted in bestowing your favour, voluntary favour, entirely on the one, to the utter neglect of the others. Your duties you have to perform, so far as lies in your power, to every one of them.

563. i. e., the less favoured wife.

564. i. e., like the one neither in wedlock, nor divorced and free to marry someone else. This condemns the Christian institution of 'separation from bed and board' which even when perpetual 'does not however give either party the right to remarry during the lifetime of the other.' (EBr. XVI, p. 952)

565. i. e., if you improve your relations with the less favoured wives, and they willingly pardon you for your undutiful ways in the past.

566. (in fulfilling your obligation towards them in the future).

567. (in an approved, legal way after all the attempts at reconciliation have failed)

568. (of each other). So none should regard himself or herself as indispensable.

569. i. e., He shall bless the wronged party either with a better match or with peace of mind.

570. The commands, therefore, of this Sovereign Lord are to be carried out most implicitly and in every little detail.

571. This fear of God is the true basis of wisdom and all good actions. (See P. I, n. 182)

572. (so you will disobey to your own peril, and cannot hurt this Sovereign Lord in the least).

573. i. e., independent of all His creatures; standing in no need of service on the part of His creatures. His commands and injunctions are all for our own good.

574. i. e., Perfect in His essence and attributes.

132. (و لله . . . وكيلا) And Allah's is whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is in the earth,[575] and sufficies Allah as a Champion.[576]

133. (ان . . . قديرا) If He will, He can take you away, O mankind ![577] and bring forward others.[578] And Allah is ever Potent over that.[579]

134. (من . . . بصيرا) He who seeks the reward of this world,[580] with Allah is the reward of this world and the Hereafter,[581] and Allah is ever Hearing,[582] Seeing.[583]

SECTION 20

135. (يايها . . . خبيرا) O you who believe! be you maintainer of equity[584] and bearers of testimony[585] for Allah's sake[586] though it be against yourselves[587] or your parents or kindred.[588] Be he[589] rich[590] or poor[591] Allah is nigher unto either;[592] so follow not the caprice,[593] lest you may deviate.[594] If you incline[595] or turn away,[596] then verily Allah is Aware of what you work.[597]

---

575. i. e., He alone is All-Mighty; He alone is to be looked up to.

576. (so why should His servants fear others, or look up to them for favours ?)

577. So Powerful is He! He can destroy everything without the slightest harm to Himself.

578. i. e., other creatures, or another race, to serve Him.

579. (but purely out of His grace and beneficence He asks you, again and again, to observe His commands and to fulfil His law, entirely for your own benefit).

580. (for his acts of devotion and piety).

581. (how foolish is then to seek from Him the immediate rewards of this world only and to be indifferent to a reward that is infinitely more precious!) Note that it is not the desire to get riches of this world that is discouraged. Every one is quite at liberty to pray for, and strive after, health, prosperity, offspring and the like. It is the habit of seeking worldly rewards for acts of duty, devotion and piety that is condemned. Duties to God and men are to be performed for their own sake entirely irrespective of abundant gains and rewards.

582. (so He listens to your words and petitions).

583. (so He is Aware of your motives and intentions).

584. (in every dealing as a party, and in every decision as a judge).

585. i. e., veracious and incorruptible in bearing testimony when any matter comes up before the tribunal.

586. i. e., to win His approval and goodwill.

587. i. e., even though it may amount to an admission of your guilt.

588. i. e., no fear of self-injury and no ties of love and kinship are to stand in the way of giving absolutely true evidence.

589. i. e., the party opposite.

590. (so that you might be tempted to seek his favour).

591. (so that you might be moved by pity or compassion to shield him).

592. (than you) i. e., the Creator has far stronger ties with the party concerned than you can possibly have; so allow not yourselves to be influenced by any extraneous considerations while tendering evidence.

593. (of your heart) i. e., your inclination or prejudice.

594. (from the truth). 'False testimony is not regarded as evidence by the Muhammedan jurists, as the very object of information is to disclose what occurred. In fact according to them false testimony or false evidence or false information would be a contradiction in terms.' (Abdur Rahim, op. cit., p. 375).

595. (from true testimony).

596. (from tendering evidence at all).

597. (so that you can by no means escape His punishment).

136. (يايها . . . بعيدا) O you who believe! believe[598] in Allah[599] and His Messenger[600] and the Book He has sent down to His Messenger and the Book He sent down formerly; and he who disbelieves in Allah and His angels and His books and His messengers and the Last Day, has strayed far away.

137. (ان . . . سبيلا) Verily those who believed and then disbelieved, and then[601] believed[602] and then[603] disbelieved,[604] and thereafter waxed in infidelity,[605] Allah shall not forgive them nor guide them on the way.[606]

138. (بشر . . . اليما) Announce thou[607] to the hypocrites that theirs shall be a torment afflictive.[608]

139. (الذين . . . جميعا) Those who take infidels, instead of the believers, for friends,[609]—do they seek honour with them[610]?—verily then honour is Allah's altogether.[611]

140. (وقد . . . جميعا) And it has been revealed to you in the Book[612] that when you hear Allah's revelations being disbelieved in and mocked at, do not sit down with them[613] until they plunge into a discourse other than that; for, then,[614] you would surely become like unto them.[615] Verily Allah is about to gather hypocrites and infidels in Hell together—[616].

---

598. (perfectly, in full and complete faith, and in every little detail). There is no phase of a Muslim's life which his religion leaves untouched. Nothing that he does or even thinks lies outside the scope of his religion.

599. i. e., in His essence and attributes. This is the first and foremost article of faith, the rest of the articles following in the verse.

600. i. e., the Prophet Muhammad; the apostle par excellence.

601. (Once again).

602. (but this time again they did not stick to the faith, or else their sin of apostacy would have been condoned).

603. (once again).

604. (to return no more to Islam)

605. (as did certain waverers in the early days of Islam, going over again and again to paganism and ending their life in infidelity).

606. (to Paradise).

607. (O Prophet).

608. (in the Hereafter).

609. This refers to such of the hypocrites as could not even keep up appearances, and mixed freely with the open enemies of Islam.

610. i. e., is that their motive in cultivating the friendship of the pagans?

611. He is the fountain of all honour and its sole dispenser.

612. (O believers!) Cf. Surat-ul-An'ām, verse 68, revealed prior to this surah.

613. i. e., the scoffers and blasphemers.

614. i. e., in case you do not withdraw from such company.

615. (in point of sinfulness).

616. The guilt of both being the same, the punishment must also be common.

141. (الذين . . . سبيلا) Those who wait about you.[617] If then there is victory for you[618] from Allah, they say: 'were we not with you?[619]' And if there is a portion for the infidels, they say:[620] 'did we[621] not gain mastery over you[622] and did we[623] not keep you back from the believers?[624] Allah shall judge[625] between you[626] on the Day of Judgment, and Allah shall not make[627] a way for the infidels against the believers.[628]

SECTION 21

142. (ان . . . قليلا) Verily the hypocrites would beguile Allah,[629] whereas it is He who beguiles them[630] and when they stand up to prayer, they stand up languidly,[631] making a show to the people,[632] and they remember Allah[633] but little.[634]

143. (مذبذبين . . . سبيلا) Wavering between this and that,[635] neither for this nor for that;[636] and he whom Allah sends astray,[637] for him thou wilt not find a way.[638]

144. (يايها . . . مبينا) O you who believe! do not take infidels,[639] instead of believers, for friends. Would you give Allah a manifest authority against you?[640]

617. (that some misfortune befall you, and long for it).

618. (in the war).

619. (so give us our share of the booty).

620. (to the infidels taking advantage of the occasion).

621. This 'we' refers to the total Muslim army with which the hypocrites used to remain in contact for appearance sake.

622. (and had we not it in our power to slay you).

623. i. e., the hypocrites.

624. (by our deserting the Muslim army or by our effort to dishearten them). The hypocrites did not fail to take advantage of temporary pagan successes, and used to say to them: we were in the Muslim ranks on purpose to protect you when they were overpowering you.

625. (in a demonstrable, practical way).

626. i. e., the believers on the one hand and the open and secret disbelievers on the other.

627. (in the final judgment).

628. (the believers entering their abodes of eternal Bliss and the infidels their abode of eternal perdition).

629. (by the lip-profession of their faith, and by the suppression of their heartfelt denial and defiance).

630. Or 'requites them for their deceit'. معناه مجازيهم بالخداع (Rgh).

631. (since they have no faith in prayer and since motive force in their case is entirely wanting).

632. (in order that they may be counted as Muslims).

633. (even with their tongue and outwardly).

634. i. e., of real, genuine faith they have none, but even by way of affectation they make but a poor show.

635. i. e., vacillating between faith and infidelity.

636. i. e., they belong neither to the Muslims wholly, but only in appearance, nor to the infidels wholly, but only at heart.

637. (consequent on the individual's own will to go astray).

638. (of deliverance, O reader!) The case of these deliberate and wilful offenders is hopeless, no Muslim need be solicitous on their account.

639. (of either description, whether overt or covert).

640. (by making friends with the enemies of Islam).

تَجِدَ لَهُمْ نَصِيرًا ﴿١٤٥﴾ إِلَّا الَّذِينَ تَابُوا وَأَصْلَحُوا وَاعْتَصَمُوا بِاللَّهِ وَأَخْلَصُوا دِينَهُمْ لِلَّهِ فَأُولَٰئِكَ مَعَ الْمُؤْمِنِينَ ۖ وَ
سَوْفَ يُؤْتِ اللَّهُ الْمُؤْمِنِينَ أَجْرًا عَظِيمًا ﴿١٤٦﴾ مَا يَفْعَلُ اللَّهُ بِعَذَابِكُمْ إِنْ شَكَرْتُمْ وَآمَنْتُمْ ۚ وَكَانَ اللَّهُ شَاكِرًا عَلِيمًا ﴿١٤٧﴾

145. (ان . . . نصيرا) Verily the hypocrites shall be in the lowest abyss of the Fire,[641] and thou[642] wilt not find for them a helper—

146. (الا . . . عظيما) Except those who will yet repent[643] and amend[644] and hold fast by Allah and make their religion solely for Allah. These[645] then shall be[646] with the believers,[647] and soon shall Allah give the believers a mighty wage.

147. (ما يفعل . . . عليما) What will Allah[648] do with your torment, if you return thanks[649] and believe?[650] And Allah is ever Appreciative,[651] Knowing.[652]

641. (corresponding with their lowest moral depths). The hypocrites 'outward conformity, cloaking an apposition ill concealed, was more dangerous than open animosity.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 182).

642. (O reader !).

643. (of their hypocrisy).

644. (their ways, specially their habit of playing false to the Muslims).

645. (seekers of His goodwill and approval).

646. (in Paradise).

647. i. e., those who have been believers all along.

648. —the Benign One who is so unlike the malevolent, vindinctive deities of paganism, and to whom surely infliction of pain is no pleasure—

649. (to your Lord for his countless favour, O ungrateful men !)

650. (in His religion, which is the only approved way of expressing your gratitude). This clearly shows that the attributes of mercy, compassion and loving kindness are part and parcel of His essence, while His retributive justice is only called forth by the handiwork of the rebellious creature.

651. (so He bestows immense reward for small services, and multiplies them to His servants).

652. (so no service, however, trivial, can escape His notice).

لَا يُحِبُّ اللّٰهُ الْجَهْرَ بِالسُّوْٓءِ مِنَ الْقَوْلِ اِلَّا مَنْ ظُلِمَ ۭ وَكَانَ اللّٰهُ سَمِيْعًا عَلِيْمًا ۝ اِنْ تُبْدُوْا خَيْرًا اَوْ

PART VI

148. (لا يحب . . . عليما) Allah does not approve of the uttering of harsh words,[1] except by one who has been wronged;[2] and Allah is ever Hearing,[3] Knowing.[4]

149. (ان . . . قديرا) Whether you disclose a good or conceal it, or pardon an evil,[5] surely Allah is ever Pardoning,[6] Potent.[7]

150 (ان . . . سبيلا) Verily those who disbelieve in Allah and His messengers[8] and would differentiate between Allah and His messengers[9] and say: some we believe in and others we deny, and who would take a way in-between this and that.[10]

151. (اولئک . . . مهينا) They are the disbelievers in very truth,[11] and We have prepared for the disbelievers a torment ignominious.

152. (والذين . . . رحيما) And as to those who believe in Allah and His messengers and do not differentiate[12] between any of them, soon We shall give them their wages; and Allah is ever Forgiving,[13] Merciful.[14]

---

1. (respecting any one). This bans all forms of calumny and slander, and interdicts the utterance or dissemination of all statements likely to defame others—apart from their truth or falsity—unless it be for some justifiable reasons.

2. (and he is seeking public redress).

3. (who readily attends to the cry of the oppressed).

4. (who is well aware of the oppressor's guilt).

5. (instead of seeking revenge).

6. So the covering of an evil with pardon by the aggrieved party is highly meritorious.

7. i. e., Able to inflict any punishment He chooses.

8. (by separating Him from His apostles).

9. (by professing to believe in Him in the abstract, but rejecting His Law as propounded by His prophets and apostles).

10. (accepting certain prophets as true and rejecting the others).

11. Their profession of faith in some of the Divine messengers to the exclusion of others would be of no avail; and no system of eclecticism in religion would ever do. Note the emphasis of the Holy Qur'ān on the universality of Revelation.

12. (so far as the fact of their messengership is concerned).

13. (so He will forgive the misdeeds of the new converts, which they committed prior to their acceptance of Islam).

14. (so He will amplify and multiply His rewards).

SECTION 22

153. (يسئلك . . . مبينا) The people of the Book[15] ask thee[16] to bring down a Book[17] to them from the heaven. But surely they asked Mūsā[18] a thing even greater than that; they said: 'show us God openly'. Thereupon thunderbolt overtook them for their ungodliness.[19] Then[20] they took a calf[21] after there had come to them the evidences.[22] Even so We pardoned that, and We invested Mūsā with manifest authority.[23]

154. (ورفعنا . . . غليظا) We raised the Tūr over them for this bond.[24] And We said to them: enter the gate[25] prostrating yourselves: And We said to them: do not violate the Sabt,[26] and We took from them a firm bond.[27]

155. (فبما . . . قليلا) Accursed are they then for their breach of the bond and their rejection of the commandments of Allah[28] and their putting of the prophets[29] to death without justification, and their saying: our hearts are sealed.[30] Aye! Allah[31] has set a seal upon them for their disbelief,[32] so they believe not but a little.[33]

156. (وبكفرهم . . . عظيما) And for their blasphemy[34] and for the uttering against Maryam[35] a grievous calumny.[36]

15. i. e., the Jews.

25. i. e., the outer gate of a certain city. See P. I, n. 239. All these events refer to the well-known incidents and episodes in Jewish history.

26. See P. I, n. 291.

28. (in the long course of their history). See P. I, nn. 267.

29. (of their own race) See P. I, nn. 268, 269.

30. See P. I, n. 381.

31. (as the Ultimate Cause of all causes).

32. (and defiance). Note that the setting of seal on their hearts is a necessary consequence of their own initial action—their deliberate and persistent flouting of the Divine truths.

33. (and that 'little' belief is of no avail).

34. This particular blasphemy of the Jews consisted in their rejection of Jesus (on him be peace !).

35. The saintly mother of Jesus (peace be on both of them !)

36. i. e., going to any length in accusing her of immorality. In the ancient Jewish 'Life of Jesus' (the Toldoth Jeshu) occurs the following :—'Now over against the door of her house there dwelt a man of fair appearance (a warrior), Joseph the son of Pandera ; he cast his eyes upon her. [Seven verses are here omitted which relate the seduction of Mary by Joseph, she being under the impression that he was her betrothed, until he came in later, and the mistake was discovered]. ('According to the Hebrews,' p. 35) The outrageous slander is supported by the Talmud.

عِيسَى ابْنَ مَرْيَمَ رَسُولَ اللّٰهِ وَمَا قَتَلُوهُ وَمَا صَلَبُوهُ وَلٰكِنْ شُبِّهَ لَهُمْ وَإِنَّ الَّذِينَ اخْتَلَفُوا فِيهِ

157. (وقولهم . . . يقينا) And for their saying:[37] we put to death the Messiah 'Isā,[38] son of Maryam, a messenger of Allah.[39] Yet they killed him not,[40] nor did they send him to the cross,[41] but it was made dubious to them.[42] And surely those who differ therein[43] are in doubt about it;[44] they have no true knowledge thereof; they but follow a conjecture;[45] of a surety they killed him not.

158. (بل . . . حكيما) But Allah raised him[46] unto Himself,[47] and Allah is ever Mighty,[48] Wise.[49]

159. (وان . . . شهيدا) And there is none among the people of the Book[50] but shall surely believe in him[51] before his death,[52] and on the Day of Judgement he shall be a witness against them.[53]

160. (فبظلم . . . كثيرا) So because of the wrong-doing[54] on the part of those who are Judaised We forbade to them[55] the good things that had been allowed to them and also because of their keeping away from Allah's way.[56]

161. (واخذهم . . . اليما) And also because of their taking the usury that they were prohibited,[57] and also because of their consuming the riches of men unlawfully.[58] And for the infidels among them We have prepared a torment afflictive.[59]

37. (with great boasting and bragging, as if the deed was creditable).

38. It were not only the Christians who made the Jews accountable for the 'death' of Jesus, but the Jews themselves spoke with pride and delight of their achievement. '. . . . Then all the men of Jerusalem being well-armed and mailed, captured Jesus And when his disciples saw that he was captive in their hands, and that it was in vain to fight, they took to their legs, and lifted up their voices and wept bitterly. And the men of Jerusalem waxed stronger and conquered the bastard, the son of a woman in her separation, with his multitude, slaying many of them, while the rest fled to the mountains.' (According to the Hebrews, p. 46, f.n.).

39. The epithet is appended to emphasise the true rank and status of Jesus, which is in-between the two blasphemous extremes of Judaism and Christianity.

40. So that the boast of the Jews was false in addition to its being blasphemous.

41. Crucifixion is the act of putting to death by nailing to a cross. It was in use, though generally restricted to slaves and rebels, amongst the Romans, under whose government Jesus and his prosecutors, the Jews, lived.

42. It was not Jesus who was executed but another, who was miraculously substituted (how and in what way is another question, and is not touched upon in the Qur'ān) for him. This true doctrine regarding Jesus is shared by an early Christian sect. The Basilidians maintained that Jesus 'changed form with Simon of Cyrene who actually suffered in his place.' (EBr. 11th Edi. III. p. 176). 'Irenaeus says that Basilides' account of the crucifixion was that Simon of Cyrene was crucified by mistake, and Jesus himself took the form of Simon, and stood by and laughed at them.' (ERE. IV, p. 833).

43. i. e., the Jews and the various Christian sects disputing among themselves respecting Jesus and his fate.

44. i. e., are groping in the dark ; have no true, historical knowledge.

45. i. e., are reduced to most slender and precarious speculations. That there exists a mass of legends, full of discrepancies, regarding Jesus and very little of historical, authentic material about him is also the verdict of the best modern Biblical scholars. 'By their resemblances and differences, arguments and disarguments,' says a competent authority, referring to the traditional accounts of Jesus, 'they raise many questions as to origin, relative dates and literary criticisms, which have called forth a multitude of conflicting hypotheses and a most extensive critical literature . . . . All that one may do with propriety is to indicate what he regards as the most plausible opinion.' (EBi, c. 2435).

46. (bodily). See P. III, n. 470.

47. i. e., His place of glory ; the Higher Region. The Islamic conception of Jesus as the Messiah, writes a Christian observer, 'agreed with that recorded in the 80th Psalm and in Daniel's vision, where the Son of man is described as raised from earth to heaven, not as come down from heaven to earth. It is the crown of Islam that its author associated himself with original, not with Paulinic, Christianity.' (De Bunsen, Islam, or True Christianity, p. 154).

48. i. e., Able to enforce His will in any circumstance.

49. (so He defeated and completely frustrated the plans of the rebels).

50. i. e., the Jews.

51. i. e., the Prophet Jesus.

52. Every Jew, as he is face to face with the angel of death, shall perforce believe in Jesus as a true prophet of God, though of course his faith at that moment will not be of any avail.

53. (as to their rejection of his claims and his persecution at their hands).

54. i. e., the long and unbroken record of wrong-doing.

55. (by way of penalty).

56. Not content with their own infidelity and impiety, the Arab Jews dissuaded many pagans also from joining Islam.

57. 'If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as a usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.' (Ex. 22 : 25). 'But fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee. Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.' (Le. 25 : 36, 37).

58. i. e., by methods forbidden in the Mosaic Law.

59. (in the Hereafter over and above their punishment in this world).

إِلَيْكَ وَمَا أُنزِلَ مِن قَبْلِكَ وَالْمُقِيمِينَ الصَّلَوٰةَ وَالْمُؤْتُونَ الزَّكَوٰةَ وَالْمُؤْمِنُونَ بِاللَّهِ وَالْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ

162. (لكن . . . عظيما) But of them the well-grounded in the knowledge[60] and believers[61] believe in what has been sent down to thee[62] and what has been sent down before thee and the establishers of prayer and the givers of the poor-rate and the believers in Allah and the Last Day——it is those to whom We shall soon give a mighty wage.

SECTION 23

163. (انا . . . زبورا) Surely We have revealed to thee,[63] even as We revealed to Nūh[63A] and the the prophets after him,[64] and as We revealed to Ibrāhīm[64A] and Ismā'īl[64B] and Is'hāq[64C] and Y'aqūb[64D] and the tribes,[65] and 'Isā[65A] and Ayūb[65B] and Yūnus[65C] and Hārūn[65D] and Sulaimān;[65E] and to Dāūd[65F] We gave a Scripture.[66]

164. (ورسلا . . . تكليما) And We revealed to messengers of some of whom We have narrated to thee before[67] and of others of whom We have not narrated to thee;[68] and to Mūsā Allah spoke directly.[69]

165. (رسلا . . . حكيما) We sent all these messengers as bearers of glad tidings[70] and warners[71] in order that there be no plea for mankind against Allah[72] after the messengers; and Allah is ever Mighty,[73] Wise.[74]

60. (of faith; and therefore well-disposed to Islam)

61. i. e., such of the Jews as have already embraced Islam.

62. (O Prophet!).

63. (O Prophet!).

63-A. Noah of the Bible; the progenitor of all Prophets.

64. The similarity consists in the essence and origin of all Revelation being Divine, and not in its scope.

64-A. Abraham of the Bible (2160-1985 B.C.)

64-B. Ishmael of the Bible (2070-1933 B.C.)

64-C. Isaac of the Bible (2060-1880 B.C.)

64-D. Jacob of the Bible (2000-1850 B.C.)

65. i. e., minor prophets in the twelve tribes of the Children of Israel.

65-A. Jesus of the Bible (6 B.C.-29 C.E.)

65-B. Job of the Bible.

65-C. Jonah of the Bible (782-740 B.C.)

65-D. Aaron of the Bible; Elder brother of the Prophet Moses.

65-E. Solomon of the Bible (d. 932 B.C.)

65-F. David of the Bible (d. 962 B.C.)

66. زبر signifies 'Any writing or book, on any divine book with which it is difficult to become acquainted.' (LL) It may also mean the Book of Psalms.

67. (through the Qur'ān).

68. Several of the prophets are mentioned by name in the Qur'ān while others are not.

69. This emphasizes the special character of Mosaic revelation.

70. (of eternal bliss of the believers).

71. (to the infidels).

72. i. e., lest men should have an excuse before God that they had not been sufficiently forewarned.

73. i. e., Absolute Master; justified in dealing with his creatures in any way He likes.

74. (so that He does not leave the slightest excuse for the infidels).

166. (لكن . . . شهيدا) But[75] Allah bears witness[76] by what He has sent down to thee.[77] He sent it down with His own knowledge[78] and the angels also bear witness;[79] and suffices Allah as a Witness.

167. (إن . . . بعيدا) Surely those who disbelieve[80] and keep others from the way of Allah, have strayed far away.[81]

168. (إن . . . طريقا) Surely those who have disbelieved and done wrong,[82] Allah is not one to forgive them nor to guide them to any way.[83]

169. (إلا . . . يسيرا) Except the way to Hell as abiders therein for ever;[84] and this is ever easy with Allah.[85]

170. (يايها . . . حكيما) O mankind! assuredly there has come to you the Messenger with the truth[86] from your Lord; so believe[87] in Him that it may be well for your.[88] And if you disbelieve, then surely Allah's is whatever is in the heavens and the earth;[89] and Allah is ever Knowing,[90] Wise.[91]

---

75. The verse proceeds to establish the truth of the holy Prophets's messengership.

76. (to thy apostleship) i. e., He establishes it in the eyes of mankind.

77. i. e., a Book so unique that its uniqueness alone is enough to substantiate its claim of being the Word of God,

78. i. e., perfected by His knowledge.

79. (to the truth of the Prophet's mission).

80. i. e., continue in their unbelief in spite of powerful arguments to the contrary.

81. (from the truth). This is their position in this world—wandering, lost souls.

82. (to others by keeping them away from Islam).

83. Cf. the OT:—'So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels.' (Ps. 81 : 12).

And the NT:—'Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonour their own bodies between themselves.' (Ro. 1; 24)

84. This shall be their plight in the Hereafter.

85. i. e., causing Him no exertion or difficulty.

86. i. e., with rightful claims and with perfect arguments. Mark once again the universality of the Prophet's mission. The address is to mankind in general, not to the Arab nation.

87. (in him and his mission).

88. (both in this world and the Next). Notice for the hunderedth time that Islam is all for our own good, both material and spiritual.

89. (so it is you who shall suffer, and He could not be harmed in any way by your denial and unbelief).

90. (so He knows the guilty at this very moment).

91. (so he defers their punishment in consonance with His universal plan, to the Hereafter).

وَرُسُلِهٖ ۚ وَلَا تَقُولُوا ثَلٰثَةٌ ۚ اِنْتَهُوْا خَيْرًا لَّكُمْ ۚ اِنَّمَا اللّٰهُ اِلٰهٌ وَّاحِدٌ ۚ سُبْحٰنَهٗٓ اَنْ يَّكُوْنَ لَهٗ وَلَدٌ ۘ لَهٗ مَا فِى السَّمٰوٰتِ

171. (يااهل . . . وكيلا) O people of the Book![92] do not exceed the bounds in your religion,[93] and do not say of Allah save what is the truth.[94] The Messiah 'Isā, son of Maryam, is but a messenger of Allah[95] and His word[96] —— He cast it upon Maryam[97]——and a spirit[98] from Him. Believe therefore in Allah[99] and His messengers,[100] and do not say:[101] three.[102] Desist[103] that it may be well for you. Allah is but the One God;[104] hallowed be He that there should be upto Him a son![105] His is whatever is in the heavens and the earth[106] and suffices Allah as a Trustee![107]

SECTION 24

172. (لن . . . جميعا) The Messiah[108] does not disdain that he should be a Servant of Allah,[109] nor do the angels brought near[110] to him. And he who disdains serving Him and is stiff-necked, soon[111] He shall gather them all unto Him.[112]

173. (فاما . . . نصيرا) Then as to those who have believed and worked righteous works He will give them their wages in full and will give an increase[113] out of His grace. And as to those who disdained and were stiff-necked, He will torment them with a torment afflictive. And they shall not find for themselves, against Allah, a protector or a friend.

174. (ياايها . . . مبينا) O mankind! there surely has come to you an argument[114] from your Lord and We have sent down to you a manifest light.[115]

92. Here it is the Christians who are meant.

93. (by ascribing Godhead to Jesus). Referring to the 'offensive zeal of Eutychian and Jacobite partisanship' in regard to 'the sacred dogma of Trinity' in the Syrian Christianity of the Prophet's time, and to 'the worship of Mary exhibited in so gross a form as to leave the impression . . . . . that she was held to be a goddess,' laments a Christian student of Islam:—'Lamentable, indeed, is the reflection that so small a portion of the fair form of Christianity was disclosed by the ecclesiastics and monks of Syria to the earnest inquirer; and that little, how altered and distorted! . . . . We may well mourn that the misnamed Catholicism of the Empire thus grievously misled the master mind of the age, and through him eventually so great a part of the eastern world.' (Muir, op. cit. pp. 21-22). The Hellenization, the Romanization, in a word, the paganisation of the Christ's religion was complete by the time of the revelation of the Holy Qur'ān.

94. (and the first truth regarding God is that He is One without a second).

95. (and not His son or incarnation, as you assert in your blasphemy). 'According to the doctrine of the apostles at Jerusalem,' or original Christianity. 'Jesus was the Christ as the anointed man, not as the incarnate Angel-Messiah born by a virgin, nor as the man united with the celestial Christ by the Holy Spirit . . . . These conceptions of an Angel-Messiah, or a double Messiah, were not recognized by the Massora, by Jesus, by the twelve apostles, or by Mahomed.' (De Bunsen op. cit., P. 14). See n. 39 above.

96. i. e., born out of His word, without the ordinary instrumentality of a father. See P. III, nn. 388, 414.

97. i. e., He transmitted it to Mary by an angel.

98. i. e., a being possessing soul from God direct.

99. The One without a second; the Eternal.

100. (according to their true teachings).

101. When speaking and predicating of God.

102. Trinity denotes the central doctrine of the Christian religion. It means that God 'is three really distinct Persons,—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Each of these Persons is truly the same God, and has all His infinite perfections, yet He is really distinct from each of the other Persons . . . . These Persons are co-equal, co-eternal and consubstantial, and deserve co-equal glory and adoration, which the Church expresses in the oft-repeated prayer: "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost." (CD. p. 973). The Book of Islam 'found in the dogma of Trinity what every emancipated thinker finds on impartial reflection—an absurd legend, which is neither reconcilable with the first principles of reason nor of any value whatever for our religious advancement. In the Brahmanic religion the Trimurti is also conceived as a "divine unity" made up of three persons—Brahma (the Creator), Vishnu (the Sustainer), and Shiva (the Destroyer).' Haeckel, Riddle of the Universe, pp. 226, 233. "They divided the Divine Trinity into three persons, each one of them being God and Lord; and thence a sort of frenzy has gone fourth into the whole of theology, and thus into the Church. . . . . It is a frenzy, because the minds of men have been driven by it into such a delirium, that they do not know whether there is one God, or whether there are three: there is one in the speech of lips, but three in the thought of the mind." (Swedenborg, The True Christian Religion, p. 5). 'The Nicene Creed really 'teaches three Divine Persons and denies three Gods, and leaves us to guess what else is a Divine Person but a God or a God but a Divine Person.' (Newman, Phases of Faith, p. 33).

103. (from holding a doctrine so flagrantly blasphemous and preposterous).

104. (with no second or third Person to share His substance and attributes)

105. i. e., to impute fatherhood to Him is most derogatory to Him. The expression 'son of God,' even if used by Jesus, 'meant no more than a man who subordinates himself and his own will to God, as a human son does to his human father, and may in consequence feel assured that he has God's love, in the way in which Jesus himself has expressed it : Love your enemies and pray for them that persecute you, that ye may be sons of your Father which is in heaven.' (Schmiedel, Jesus in Modern Criticism, p. 40).

106. That is the true relationship that exists between all the creatures and their Maker and not that of sonship and fatherhood.

107. i. e., He is the sole Arbiter, the Disposer of all affairs, needing no Redeemer or Mediator.

108. (himself).

109. i. e., a true worshipper and obedient servant of God. Cf. Christ's own words as recorded in the Christian Gospels; 'My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work' (Jn. 4 : 34). 'If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love,' (15 : 10). And Peter, an apostle, has in the course of a long address used the following words : 'Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you . . . . ' (Ac, 2 : 22). These words, according to the best Biblical scholars, describe Jesus as he was known and regarded by his contemporaries. 'He was "found in fashion as a man," that is, in all particulars which presented themselves to outward observation. He appeared and behaved as one of the human race. He "was made man." The Gospels leave no room for doubt as to the completeness with which these statements are to be accepted . . . . He not only made no claim to omniscience : He distinctly waived it . . . . There is still less reason to predicate omnipotence of Jesus. There is no indication that he ever acted independently of God, or as an independent God. Rather does he acknowledge dependence upon God, by his habit of prayer and in such words as "this kind goeth not forth save by prayer." He even repudiates the ascription to himself of goodness in the absolute sense in which it belongs to God alone.' (EBr. 11th Edi. XIII, p. 24).

110. This knocks the bottom out of the Christian angelolatry. In the Catholic Catechism one comes across the following daily prayer addressed to 'Our Angel Guardian :' 'O Angel of God, to whose care I am committed ! enlighten and direct me, defend and govern me this day, and during my whole life ! Amen.' This adoration of the angels 'can be traced to the earliest ages of the Church. We venerate their excellence and petition their ministrations. The month of October is specially dedicated to them and the feast of all the angels is celebrated in common with that of Michael, on 29th Sept.' (CD. p. 44). Also see P. III, n. 586.

111. i. e., on the Day of Judgment.

112. (to answer for their misdeeds).

113. (superabundantly; over and above what is their due).

APPENDIX ON POLYGAMY

(See Sūrat-ul-Nisā', v. 3, P. IV, n. 498)

So this is polygamy! And this is the much-maligned Holy Text, with necessary explanations in the parentheses. It recognizes monogamy as the ideal, but also allows polygyny as a safeguard against much greater social evils. The verse limits the number of wives to four, and permits no more. The injunction of course holds good for all times, but it was first promulgated at a time when polygyny, with no limit or restriction, was the law rather than the exception.* The word 'polygamy' which every Christian mouth has been taught to pronounce with scorn, has in effect become, in the English language a synonym for almost unbridled gratification of sexual desire, and is now altogether tinged with disreputable associations. The institution, we are told in terms of pious horror, disorganises society, and strikes at the root of public morals, and that it is pre-eminently this evil that has more than counterbalanced any benefits that Islam may have conferred on humanity.

Is the indictment, even in an appreciable degree, just? The question may well be resolved into three sub-heads :—

(i) Is polygyny unnatural?
(ii) Is it immoral?
(iii) Is it irrational?

1. To answer the first question first. Is polygyny opposed to man's natural instinct? Is man, by nature or even by long-established habit, monogamous? Let the European anthropologists and sociologists of repute, themselves favouring and advocating monogamy, answer. 'In general a gregarious life,' says the French savant, M. Letourneau, 'a life in association, favours polygamy.' Now man is surely the most sociable of animals, therefore he is much more inclined to polygamy' (Evolution of Marriage, p. 122). And further :—'The most civilized nations must have begun with polygamy, and, in reality, it has been thus everywhere and always. In the various civilized societies, living or dead, marriage has commenced by being polygamous. It is a law which has few exceptions.' (ib. p. 134). Monogamy far from being defended on the score of its 'naturalness' no anthropologist of note has even maintained that monogamic marriage was natural to male human being. The evidence is all the other way, and we learn on the best of authorities that 'as an institution polygyny exists in all parts of the world,' (EBr. XIV, p. 949) and that

*'Polygamy was the rule among the Eastern peoples before Muhammad's time.' (Roberts, op. cit., p. 8)

It has flourished among the Hebrews, the Slavs, the Teutons, the Irish and the Indians; none of the Hindu law-givers ever restricting 'the number of wives a man is allowed to marry.' (ib., XVIII, p. 186). One may choose to dub polygamous communities barbarians or savages, yet there is no denying the fact that a very large proportion of mankind has practised polygamy in the past, and is practising in the present, without any qualms of conscience, and the myth of monogamy being the normal marriage relationship has been continually exploded by the actual fact of man in all ages and in many places taking unto himself several wives. 'Man', says G. R. Scott, 'is essentially polygamous, and the development of civilization extends this innate polygamy.' (History of Prostitution, p. 21).

Even that acute observer, Professor Westermarck, has been led to remark :—'Among pastoral peoples I have found none that can be regarded as strictly monogamous.' (op. cit., p. 230). He adds that polygamy existed 'among most of the Indo-European peoples, and among the ancient Slavs.' (ib., p. 234).

M'Lennan, the famous author of Primitive Marriage, asks a question as plain as possible: 'What ancient nation can be named that was originally monogamous ?' (quoted in Darwin's Descent of Man, p. 222). That man is in this respect, as in many other respects, essentially different from woman, has been well noted by the students of biology. 'Woman is,' says Dr. Mercier, 'by nature a monogamist; man has in him the element of a polygamist.' (Conduct and its Disorders Biologically Considered, pp. 292-293). And N. W. Ingalls, Associate Professor of Anatomy in one of the American Universities, has gone so far as to suggest a biological reason for polygyny :—'Has man always been essentially monogamous or has he come up from a state often designated as promiscuity ? The available evidence points to the latter. As an animal, in his sexual make-up, and in his beginnings as far as we can reconstruct them, he is anything but monogamous; and one would have great difficulty in explaining, biologically, such a sudden change of heart, the transition from the harem to a single wife.' (Wile, Sex Life of the Unmarried Adult, p. 88).

2. So far with regard to the charge of 'unnaturalness'. Next, is the institution inherently immoral ? Is it revolting to the innate moral sense of humanity ? Was it unknown to, or repudiated by Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Jesus and other prophets and recognised founders of religion in the East ? The answer, which is neither dubius nor contestable, is that 'polygamy seems to have been a well-established institution, dating from the most ancient times and extending to comparatively modern days. The law indeed regulated and limited this usage.' (JE. X, p. 120). 'In 'Biblical as in Talmudical times polygamy was a recognised institution.' (III, p. 210). The Mosaic law, far from interdicting polygamy, encouraged it. 'Polygamy was the rule in Biblical days among the ancient Jews, and was permitted and even enjoined in certain cases by the Mosaic law . . . It is nowhere forbidden, except to "bishops" in the New Testament (EBr. XXII, p. 24). The renowned Patriarchs practised it; and so did the Judges, the Kings and the more spiritually-minded amongst the Jews. According to the EBi, a common Jew could take as many as four wives, and a king up to eighteen. 'When the first wife proved childless, polygamy, to this extent at least, was regarded a necessity.' (EBi. c. 2946). In ancient India, in the age of great sages a plurality of wives was not only allowed in theory but also practised. 'The practice of polygamy among the Vedic Indians is abundantly proved by direct references in the Rig Veda and other texts, though in the main monogamy is recognized as normal. In the case of the king four wives are expressly mentioned . . . The heroes and Brahmans of the epic are frequently represented as having several wives.' (ERE. VIII, p. 452).

Again, is the practice repellent even to the entire modern conscience? Is Christendom unanimous in condemning it? What, then, about the Anabaptists and the Mormons who not only permit but advocate 'polygyny with much religious fervour. (EBr. XVIII, p. 187). And what about the sixteenth-century German 'reformers' sanctioning second and third marriage in certain cases, and Schopenhauer (d. 1860) commending the Mormons for 'throwing off the unnatural bondage of monogamy' and Edward Hartmann (d. 1906) laying down the proposition that 'the natural instinct of man is in favour of polygamy, and that of woman is in favour of monogamy?' (Roberts, op. cit., p. 9). In the admirable and succinct summing up of Professor Westermarck 'polygyny has been found even in Christian Europe . . . In the middle of the 6th century Diarmait, king of Ireland, had two queens and two concubines. Polgyny was frequently practised by the Merovingian kings. Charlemagne had two wives and many concubines; and one of his laws seems to imply that polygyny was not unknown even among priests. In later times Philip of Hesse and Frederick William II of Prussia contracted bigamous marriages with the sanction of the Lutheran clergy.' (EBr. XVIII, p. 186).

Then, again, does polygyny necessarily connote a low status of womanhood and invariably assigns to the wives a position of inferiority and degradation? And are co-wives always unhappy? The hypothesis is, on the face of it, untenable. Apart from the cases of thousands of the Muslim families spread all over the world, where co-wives live in perfect peace and contentment, under other simple cultures also where a patriarchal system is the order of the day, 'plural marriage is more often a matter of prestige or economics than of sex; and while there is a distinction of function as between man and woman . . . the woman will herself often urge her husband to take another wife, to increase the prestige of the family and to ease her own labour in supplying him with food.' (EMK, V, p. 2340).

3. Lastly, is the institution of polygyny utterly 'irrational'—so clearly opposed to sound reason and commonsense that under no possible scheme of things it shall be feasible? Let the answer, once more, come not from the Muslim East but from the Christian West.

What about the problem of 'surplus women'? What solution other than 'part-time marriage' has yet the ingenuity of the European mind evolved? 'In our own century,' says Sir George Scott referring to England, 'there have been not a few who, noting the preponderance of marriageable women over men since the Great War, have considered the feasibility of introducing some sort of secondary marriages for men, with minor wives.' (ib V, p. 2572). What else could the wise men of the West suggest, when in 1650 at the termination of the Thirty Years' War the population was greatly reduced and there was a considerable surplus of females, but to pass a resolution that 'thenceforth every man should be allowed to marry two women?' (EBr. XVIII, p. 107).

Apart from the conditions of war even taking England in the normal state as a concrete case this is what an English writer has to say. Summarising the census figures of 1921, he gives the total number of unmarried women (i. e., the single, the widowed and the divorced) without visible means of existence as 3,665,668; and asks, 'to what use does the nation put this unmarried and unemployed three and half a million ?' (Macfarlane, The Case for Polygamy, p. 19). He proceeds:—'The fact that polygamy has been practised is in itself a proof that the sexes do not exist in the uniform proportion; and I am yet to learn that any widespread scarcity of women has been experienced in the past as a result of such a practice. Even if there were an eqnal number of men and women in the world the enforcement of monogamous marriage would involve as its logical corollary the compelling of every one to marry ... On this point alone, without the aid of any other argument, monogamy as a universal system, stands condemned.' (p. 79). And then controverting the fatuous doctrine that polyandry is on the same footing as polygamy, he observes:—'It is mischievously and foolishly thought, and implied in our social practice that the sexual needs of men and women are identical. Nothing is further from the truth. A woman's urgent need of man has, as its ultimate instinctive motive the bearing of the children; when that it achieved the desire for a man becomes quite a secondary matter. On the other hand, a man needs women for himself ... Both desires are complementary and fulfil each other; they are not identical.' (p. 86).

Universal monogamy far from being the final and ultimate form of sex relationship is foredoomed, according to some of the modern European thinkers, even to lose that hold which it now possesses. Dr. Gustave Le Bon of France, for instance, envisages a condition of society in the West when European laws will have to legalise polygamy while for the preservation of the pure Aryan stock, Professor V. Ehrenfels regards the adoption of polygyny as a necessity. (Westermarck's op. cit., p. 249).

Last but not least comes the considered dictum of a German Professor, Earnst Bergman of Leipzig, delivered in the course of an essay on 'Knowledge and the Spirit of Motherhood' in the year 1939:—'Lifelong monogamy is perverse, and would prove harmful to any race. Were this institution ever really enforced—and fortunately this is almost never the case in reality—the race must decay ... There are plenty of willing and qualified youths ready to unite with girls and women on hand, Fortunately one boy of good race suffices for twenty girls. And the girls for their part would gladly fulfil the demand for children were it not for the nonsensical so-called civilized idea of the monogamous permanent marriage, an idea in complete contradiction to all natural facts.' (Quoted in the Hindu, Madras, dated the 5th of November, 1939).

135. (consequent on your belief; arising out of your faith). عقد literally is a contract, a compact, a covenant, or an engagement. Thus the word عقود here may mean, 'contracts, etc., or obligatory statutes, or ordinances of God; or the covenant imposed by God, and those imposed mutually by men agreeably with the requirements of the religion.' (LL). These 'compacts' comprehend all duties towards God and man.

136. i. e., four-footed animals such as goats, sheep, oxen and camel, and those resembling them, such as antelopes, wild cows, etc.

2. (يا يها . . . العقاب) O you who believe! do not profane the landmarks of Allah[141] nor any sacred month,[142] nor the offering[143] nor the victims with the garlands,[144] nor those repairing to the Sacred House seeking the grace and good-will[145] of their Lord. And when you have put off the state of sanctity,[146] you may chase,[147]. And let not the detestation for a people, because they[148] kept you[149] from the Sacred Mosque,[150] incite you to trespass.[151] Co-operate with each other in virtue and piety, and do not co-operate in sin and trangression.[152] Fear Allah,[153] verily Allah is Severe in chastising.[154]

150. The reference is to the Quraish having prevented the holy Prophet, who with 1400 of the faithful, was on his way to Makka on a purely religious and peaceful visit, from entering the Holy City. A truce for 10 years had been concluded at Hudaibiya.

151. (the proper bounds, by taking revenge on them in the Sacred months or in any other way violating the sanctity of شعائر الله, natural though your provocation may be).

152. i. e., co-operate in righteousness; non-cooperate in impiety. As universal maxims of justice the two commandments are of exquisite beauty.

153. (so that all difficulties will be removed, and practice of virtue will be facilitated).

154. (those who violate His ordinances).

155. (it is the rigid observance of this command that, according to a Christian scholar, 'has emphasized the separate character of the Muslim community' and has put an obstacle 'in the way of social intercourse between them and the Christians.' (Arnold, Islamic Faith, p. 14) See V. II nn. 140, 145.

156. See P. II, n. 146.

157. Cf. the NT: 'Ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled.' (Ac. 15 : 29) 'They keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled.' (Ac. 21 : 25)

162. (by slaughtering it in the proper, lawful way, while yet there is life in it). By this ritual slaughter, even if it is done at the last moment, the animal is saved from becoming maita, and can be eaten.

163. (or, 'sacred stones'; stones dedicated to gods). In pagan Arabia, 'sacred stones' served the purpose of an altar. نصب signifies 'an idol; or a stone which the pagan Arabs set up, to sacrifice, or slay animals, before it, or by it, and which became red with the blood.' (LL)

164. (of the meat).

165. زلم is 'An arrow without a head and without feathers: plural ازلام: which was applied to those divining arrows by means of which the Arabs in the time of Ignorance sought to know what was allotted to them; . . . . and they put them in a receptacle, and when any of them desired to make a journey, or to accomplish a want, or when he desired to perform some affair, he put his hand into that receptacle, and took forth an arrow; and if the arrow upon which was "Command" came forth, he went to accomplish his purpose, but if that upon which was "Prohibition" came forth, he refrained; and if the blank came forth, they shuffled them a second time.' (LL) 'It was the custom to draw lots for joints of a camel with arrows some feathered and others unfeathered, kept for this purpose in the temple of Mecca.' (Rodwell).

166. i. e., now. The verse was revealed on Friday, the 9th of Zul-Hijja at 'Arafāt, in itself a festive occasion in the 10th year of the Hijrah when the holy Prophet performed his valedictory Hajj, triumpant at the head of 1,20,000 devoted and faithful followers. Memorable indeed was the address he delivered on this memorable occasion. The following abridged version is by Lane-Poole (corrected at one place) :—

> 'Ye people! Hearken to my words; for I know not whether after this year I shall ever be amongst you, here again.
> 'Your lives and your property are sacred and inviolable amongst one another until the end of time.
>
> 'The Lord hath ordained to every man the share of his inheritance: a testament is not lawful to the prejudice of heirs.
> 'The child belongeth to the parent; and the violator of wedlock shall get stoned.
>
> 'Ye people! Ye have rights demandable of your wives, and they have rights demandable of you. Treat your women well.
> 'And your slaves, see that you feed them with such food as ye eat yourselves, and clothe them with the stuff ye wear. And if they commit a fault which ye are not willing to forgive, then sell them, for they are the servants of the Lord, and are not to be tormented.
> 'Ye people! Hearken unto my speech and comprehend it. Know that every Muslim is the brother of every other Muslim. All of you are on the same equality: ye are one brotherhood.'
> Then, looking up to heaven, he cried 'O Lord! I have delivered my message and fulfilled my mission.' And all the multitude answered, 'Yea, verily hast thou.' 'O Lord! I beseech Thee, bear Thou witness to it'! and, like Moses, he lifted up his hands and blessed the people.' (LSK. Intro. pp. LXVIII-LXIX).

167. i. e., have given up their fond hope that Islam could ever be vanquished. By then the triumph of Islam was complete, and the solidarity of the Muslim community had become marvellous—nothing short of miraculous.

The world, says an European convert to Islām, 'has not been able to produce a better system of ethics than that expressed in Islām; it has not been able to put the idea of human brotherhood on a practical footing as Islam did in its supernational conception of "Ummat"; it has not been able to create a social structure in which the conflicts and conflictions between the members are as efficiently reduced to minimum as in the social plan of Islam; it has not been able to enhance the dignity of man; his feeling of security; his spiritual hope; and last, but surely not least, his happiness. In all these things the present achievements of the human race fall considerably short of the Islamic programme. Where, then, is the justification for saying that Islam is "out of date?" 191. Notice the distinction Islam makes between a marriage with a Jewess or a Christian woman and a marriage with a pagan woman. Notice again that the Jew an Christian wives are not asked to renounce their religion forthwith.

192. Notice the emphasis on the purity of the motive and the procedure. The object, in any case, must be permanent partnership in life, not the fleeting pleasure of passion.

193. See P. V. n. 26.

6. (يا يها . . . تشكرون) O you who believe! when you stand up for prayer wash your faces and your hands up to the elbows,[196] and wipe your heads[197] and wash your feet up to the ankles;[198] and if you are polluted,[199] purify yourselves.[200] And if you are ailing[201] or on a journey[202] or one of you comes from the privy[203] or you have touched women,[204] and you do not find water,[205] betake yourselves to clean earth and wipe your faces and hands with it.[206] Allah does not mean to lay upon you a hardship,[207] but means to purify you and to complete His favour upon you that perhaps you may return thanks.[208]

7. (واذكروا . . . الصدور) And remember Allah's favour on you[209] and His bond with which He bound you firmly when you said: we hear and we obey.[210] And fear Allah;[211] surely Allah is Knower of what is in your breasts.[212]

8. (يا يها . . . تعملون) O you who believe! be maintainers of your pact with Allah[213] and witnesses in equity,[214] and let not the detestation for a people[215] incite you not to act fairly;[216] act fairly; that is nigh unto piety. And fear Allah; surely Allah is Aware of what you work.[217]

---

196. الى here has the significance of مع, and الى المرافق means, 'with the elbows', and not 'as far as the elbows'. The elbow is meant to be included among the parts to be washed, not to be excluded therefrom.

197. (with water). 'There is an ellipsis in the phrase; the meaning being امسحوا رؤسكم بالماء 'wipe ye your heads with water.' (LL)

198. ارجلكم is grammatically coupled with وجوهكم and ايديكم, and not with رؤسكم. Referring to these careful preparatory ablutions observes a Christian writer:—'The scrupulous cleanliness of the Mohammadan, which contrasts so favourably with the unsavoury state of Easterns of other creeds, is an excellent feature in the practical influence of Islam.' (LSK, Intro. p. LXVIII).

199. (by sexual acts). The emission of seed, whether in waking or in sleep, makes bathing obligatory.

200. (by bathing). Contrast this emphasis on physical cleanliness with the Christian view obtaining in the early Christian centuries. 'The cleanliness of the body was regarded as a pollution of the soul, and the saints who were most admired had become one hideous mass of clotted filth. St. Athanasius relates with enthusiasm how St. Anthony, the patriarch of monachism, had never, to extreme old age, been guilty of washing his feet . . . St. Euphraxia joined a convent of one hundred and thirty nuns, who never washed their feet, and who shuddered at the mention of a bath.' (Lecky, op. cit., II, p. 47) A pious pilgrim, in the 4th century, 'boasted that she had not washed her face for 18 years for fear of removing the baptismal chrism.' (EBr. I, p. 49). See P. II, n. 478; XI, n. 67.

201. (and the use of water is likely to aggravate or prolong disease).

202. (and water is not obtainable nearby).

203. (in which case, a fresh wudhu or ablution of face is obligatory for praying purpose).

204. i. e., have had intercourse with them, which makes bathing obligatory.

206. See P. V. n. 129.

207. —on the contrary, He provides you with every facility—

208. (and the best way of returning thanks is to obey His commandments).

210. This is the pledge implied in the very act of the acceptance of Islam.

211. (by implicitly following His commands).

212. (so be sincere in every act of devotion and duty).

213. (by implicitly following His commands).

214. (in the affairs of men when called upon to give evidence).

215. (however justifiable in itself).

216. (in their affairs whatever the provocation). The meaning is: be always fair in your dealings with men and let no indignation, howsoever righteous, against any person make your depart from the path of truth, justice and equity.

217. (so that none of your acts can go undetected).

12. (و لقد . . . السبيل) Assuredly Allah took a bond from the Children of Isrā'īl[223] and We raised from amongst them twelve leaders.[224] And Allah said: surely I am[225] with you;[226] if you establish prayer and pay poor-rate and believe in My messengers and support them and lend to Allah a goodly loan,[227] I will expiate for you your misdeeds and will admit you to Gardens beneath which rivers flow,[228] then he of you who disvelieves thereafter has surely strayed from the level way.

13. (فبما . . . المحسنين) Thus for[229] their breach of their bond We accursed them[230] and We made their hearts hard.[231] They pervert the words[232] from their meanings[233] and have abandoned[234] a good portion of that with which they were exhorted.[235] And thou[236] wilt not cease to light upon defrauding[237] on their part,[238] save a few of them,[239] yet pardon thou them[240] and overlook them,[241] surely Allah loves the well-doers.[242]

14. (ومن . . . يصنعون) And of them who say: we are Nazarenes,[243] We took a bond from them,[244] but they have abandoned a good portion of that with which they were exhorted;[245] so[246] We have caused enmity and hatred among them[247] till the Day of Judgment,[248] and soon[249] will Allah declare to them what they have been performing[250] all along.

15. (يآهل . . . مبين) O people of the Book! surely there has come to you Our messenger[251] expounding to you much in the Book that you were wont to hide[252] and much he passes over.[253] To be sure, there has come to you from Allah a light and a Book luminous.[254]

223. (that they would receive His successive messengers with due respect).

224. (or 'captains', to supervise that they acquit their charge faithfully). Cf. the OT: 'And with you there shall be a man of every tribe; every one head of the house of his father.' (Nu. 1 : 4). And these tribes were twelve. 'And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Send thou men, that they may search the land of Canaan, which I give unto the Children of Israel: of every tribe of their fathers shall ye send a man, every one a ruler among them.' (Nu. 13:2, 3). This time again their number was twelve.

225. (and shall be).

226. (to watch your conduct).

227. (by contributing to the poor and needy and by financing the holy cause).

228. Note that all these rewards are contingent on Israel's observance of the bond to follow and obey the fresh prophets as they arise.

229. i. e., as a reprisal to.

230. i. e., estranged them from Our mercy and grace. For a series of curses upon the disobedient among Israel. See Le. 26: 14-39; Dt. 31: 16-18; Josh. 23: 12-16.

231. Cf. the OT: 'They have refused to receive correction, they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return.' (Je. 5: 3). 'Yea! they have made their hearts as an adamant stone, lest they should hear the law.' (Ze. 7: 12).

232. (of Torah). The reference is to the religious leaders of the Jews. See P. I, n. 323; P. V. n. 143.

233. Look at the Jews' own estimate of the correctness and accuracy of their Bible:—'We may infer with certainly that the ancient copies of the Torah contained no vowels or accents, and that these have come down to us by oral tradition. For the multiplication of copies, human copyists had to be employed. It is by no means contrary to our faith in the Bible to assume that, as far as the human work of these copyists is concerned, it must have been subject to the fate of all human work, to error and imperfection. And, in fact, there are many copies of the Bible that abound in mistakes; there are passages in Scripture that vary in the different manuscripts; hence numerous variae lectiones met with in the critical editions of the Bible.' (Friedlander, The Jewish Religion, p. 53) See P. I, n. 325, ff. P. V. n. 143.

234. The proper significance of نسی is to dismiss something from one's mind either wilfully or involuntarily. In the context the word connotes the sense of deliberate abandonment.

235. (in their Scripture) i. e., they are bereft, to a very large extent, of the benefits of the Torah.

236. (O Prophet!).

237. i. e., deceitful practices; literary forgeries.

238. i. e., they are still busy in tampering with their holy texts, retaining what suits their purpose and suppressing what does not.

239. (and these few have already embraced Islam).

240. i. e., bear thou patiently with them.

241. i. e., refrain from exposing publicly their frauds and forgeries.

242. The phrase implies the high merit of forgiveness and tolerance.

243. i. e., we are the people of Jesus of Nazareth.

244. (to the effect that they would believe in the Final Prophet). Witness numerous references to him, the well-known and well-recognized "that Prophet" or "the Prophet" found even in the garbled text of the modern Gospels:—'And this is the record of John, when the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou ? . . . . Art thou that prophet! And he answered, No. . . . . And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elijah, neither that Prophet.' (Jn. 1 : 19,21, 25). 'Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink . . . . Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is the Prophet.' (Jn. 7 : 37, 40). 'If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever.' (Jn. 14 : 15, 16) 'It is expedient for you that I go away : for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you ; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment.' (Jn. 16 : 7, 8).

245. And the most serious loss they have incurred is their abandonment of monotheism, and its substitution by trinitarianism—a flagrant variety of polytheism. According to an impartial observer, a famous biologist of Germany, 'Christian monotheism shared the fate of its mother, Mosaism ; it was generally only monotheistic in theory while it degenerated practically into evey kind of polytheism.' Haeckel, op. cit., p. 232) See also n. 235 above.

246. —as their punishment in this world—

247. i. e., among the Christian sects and sub-sects. The reference here is to the permanent and perennial 'war of creeds within the Church' and not the political antagonism between the European states which happen to be Christian—some of them only in name. The Catholics are, from the Protestant stand-point, no better than 'Popish persons, who . . . . desire still to keep the people in ignorance and darkness.' (See dedication of the AV to King James). In a similar vein the Catholics point their finger to the amount of 'immorality and corruption prevalent among Luther's followers.' (CD. p. 815). And the wordy acrimony has frequently given place to severe religious persecutions, and even massacres. In Dean Milman's admirable summing up of the Church history, 'Bloodshed, murder, treachery, assassination, even during the public worship of God—these are the frightful means by which each party strives to maintain its opinions and to defeat its adversary (quoted by Lecky, History of European Morals, II, p. 82 n.) 'After having been persecuted by the pagans, the Christians persecuted each other over nonsensical follies. They killed, imprisoned or exiled each other over the word homooesiss or the sense of the word pheysis, nature, which the Nestorian school of Antioch understood differently from the Monophysite school of Alexandria. (Dermingham, Life of Mohammed, p. 117).

248. 'A prophecy which thirteen centuries have not falsified.' (ERE. X, p. 544) 'There is an Abyssianian proverb which says that the Christians never agree except on one point, the birth of Christ. (Dermingham, op. cit., p. 117)

249. i. e., in the Hereafter.

250. (and punish accordingly).

251. (as the Final Prophet).

252. (without himself being learned in your Scriptures at all). i. e., guided and aided as he is by Divine knowledge, himself being illiterate, he brings to light, whenever required in the interests of religion, many of the things in your Scriptures which ye seek to conceal.

253. (out of his modesty). This refers to that portion of the Gospel the exposition of which is not immediately imperative.

254. مبين implies that the Holy Book is not only in itself imbued with shining light, but it also makes other things clear and bright.

مَنِ اتَّبَعَ رِضْوَانَهُ سُبُلَ السَّلٰمِ وَيُخْرِجُهُمْ مِّنَ الظُّلُمٰتِ إِلَى النُّورِ بِإِذْنِهِ وَيَهْدِيهِمْ إِلٰى صِرَاطٍ مُّسْتَقِيمٍ ۞ لَقَدْ

16. (يهدي . . . مستقيم) With it Allah guides those who follow His goodwill[255] to the ways of safety,[256] and He brings them forth out of darkness[257] into the light[258] by His command,[259] and guides them on to the right path.

17. (لقد . . . قدير) Certainty they are disbelievers who assert;[260] Massih, son of Maryam,[261] is the very God himself. Say thou:[262] who can avail in aught against Allah, if He meant to destroy Christ,[263] son of Maryam,[264] and his mother[265] and those on the earth altogether?[266] And Allah's is the kingdom of the heavens and the earth and what is in-between.[267] He creates whatever He will, and Allah is Potent over everything.

---

255. Note once again that they alone can profit by the Qur'ān who are willing to be helped by it, although the 'ways of safety' it shows are open to one and all.

256. (both in this world and the Hereafter).

257. (of sin and infidelity).

258. (of belief and piety).

259. (and grace).

260. (and believe). 'Those who asserted that their God was a man, and that a crucified man was their God, laid themselves open to the accusation that they were idolaters and blasphemers.' (Denison, op. cit., p. 286).

261. The reference here is mainly to certain less well-known varieties of Christianity, such as Docetism, Monarchianism and Sabellianism, which rest on some such propositions are the following :—'That one and the same God is the Creator and Father of all things; and that when it pleased Him, He appeared.' 'When the Father had not been born, He yet was justly styled Father; and when it pleased Him to undergo generation, having been begotten, He himself became His own Son, not another's.' 'Father and Son, so called, are one and the same substance, not an individual produced from a different one, but Himself for Himself.' (ERE. VIII, p. 779) 'Modalistic monarchianism conceiving that the whole fullness of the Godhead, dwelt in Christ . . . . maintained that the names Father and Son were only different designations of the same subject, the one God.' (EBr. XV, p. 686). But hardly distinguishable from these 'heresies' and equally bewildering to the Muslim mind is the accepted central doctrine of the orthodox Christianity: 'Jesus is very God of very God, who for us men and for our salvation came down from heaven and was made Man.' His nature is 'consubstantial' with God. 'He is not inferior to the Father, nor posterior, nor merely like unto Him, but identical in substance and in essence with Him. He is truly God, God of very God, consubstantial with the Father, as the Nicene Creed has it, having, or rather, being, the Godhead no less than the Father.' (CD. p. 252). In short, for all practical purposes the terms God and Christ are interchangeable. 'As early as twenty years after the Ascension the doctrine of Christ's Deity was already finally established in the Church. It is not argued about or proved, but assumed as one of those fundamental ideas about which Christians are agreed. Thus it is stated that He existed before He was born into the world, and indeed before all creation, in a status of equality with God; that He created the world as the Father's agent: . . . . that He is . . . . actually God, and therefore, to be worshipped with divine honours by angels and men (Dummelow, op. cit., p. cviii). Two references in the N. T. itself are quite explicit, 'Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever' (Ro. 9:5) 'looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.' (Ti. 2, 13). See also p. XXII, n. 307.

262. (to these Christolators, O Prophet!)

263. (a mere mortal, by death).

264. i. e., son of a frail mortal woman.

265. (who also is adored and worshipped as a Divinity by a very large number of the Christians). 'In the most widely distributed form of Christianity the "virgin" mother of Christ plays an important part as a fourth deity; in many Catholic countries she is practically taken to be much more powerful and influential than the three male persons of the celestial administration.' (Haeckel, op. cit., p. 232). Even as early as the 3rd century, the titles of Mary as the 'Mother of God' and as the 'Queen of Heaven', 'were demanded by the more fanatical Christians who claimed Divine honours for the ideal and prototype of virginity. (DB. III, p. 289). 'Mariolatry is probably now more prevalent in the Church of Rome than at any former time.' (p. 291). In the Orient there existed, in the early centuries, certain (Christian) sects who worshipped Mary. The Collyridians, says St. Epiphany, offered little cakes (collyris) as sacrifices to the Virgin like those offered to Ceres by the pagans.' (Dermingham, op. cit., p. 111). The title of Thotokos, or 'Mother of God' was enforced on the Virgin Mary by the Oecumenical Council of Ephesus in 431. According to the Roman Catholic Church God, without ceasing to be God, in the characteristic phrase of St. Paul "implied Himself" and was born in human form of Mary's womb and she became Virgin

Mother, the Virgin Mother of God.' (Ptoserpie, The Council of Ephesus and the Divine Motherhood, p. 4) To Catholics the Council of Ephesus is above all, the Council of "Thotokos," Mother of God: From it dates the rise of that intimate and personal devotion to Our Blessed Lady which ever since has found one of the most beautiful and distinguishing features of the Catholic Church. Mother of God! It is the form and centre and explanation of the worship we pay to her (p. 23). See also P. VII, n. 199.

266. (with whom Jesus is on a par in the attribute of powerlessness).

267. i. e., He is the sole Creator, the sole Author, the sole Ruler of the universe, undivided into several 'persons'.

18. (وقالت . . . المصير) And the Jews[268] and the Nazarenes[269] say: we[270] are the children of God and His loved ones.[271] Say thou:[272] why then does He perish you for your sins?[273] Aye! you are but men part of His creation.[274] He forgives whom He will,[275] and chastises whom He will.[276] And Allah's is the kingdom of the heavens and the earth and what is in-between, and to Him[277] is the return.

19. (يا هل . . . قدير) O people of the Book! there has come to you Our messenger, after a cessation of the messengers,[278] expounding[279] to you lest you may say:[280] there came not to us any bearer of glad tidings or warner.[281] So now there has surely come to you[282] a bearer of glad tidings and a warner; and Allah is Potent over everything.[283]

SECTION 4

20. (و اذ قال . . . العلمين) And re-call when Mūsā said to his people:[284] O my people! remember the favour of Allah on you when He made amongst you messengers[285] and made you[286] princes,[287] and gave to you[288] what He did not give to any people[289] in the world.[290]

21. (يقوم . . . خسرين) O my people! enter the holy land which Allah has ordained for you,[291] and do not turn back,[292] for then you will become losers.[293]

22. (قالوا . . . دخلون) They said: O Mūsā! verily therein are a people high-handed[294] and we shall never march to it so long as they do not depart; if they depart, we shall certainly march to it.[295]

268. 'Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my son, even my first-born.' (Ex. 4 : 22) 'Ye are the children of the Lord your God,' (Dt. 14 : 1) 'When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called my son, out of Egypt.' (Ho. 11 : 1). 'The Israelites are addressed as "the children of the Lord your God." When Israel was young, he was called from Egypt to be God's son. 'The Israelites are designated also the "children of the living God."' (JE. VI. p. 15).

269. 'As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name' (Jn. 1 : 12). As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God' (Ro. 8 : 14). 'Children of God' is a title of the faithful in virtue of special adoption by God.' (CD. p. 204). 'Jesus teaches that this relation of sonship to God is connected with his own person, and to be enjoyed through him.' (DB. II. p. 217).

270. (as a race or community). The plural pronoun is here used in the collective, not in the distributive sense. It refers to the Jewish people and the Christian community, not to individuals.

271. i. e., His chosen people or community. 'I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn. Hear the word of the Lord, O Ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.' (Je. 31 : 9-10) 'Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy.' (Le. 19 : 2) 'Ye are the children of the Lord your God . . . . . For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God, and the Lord hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth.' (Dt. 14 : 1-2). And the Jewish rabbis have said: 'Beloved one Israel, for they are called "Sons of the Highest" . . . . Even if they are foolish, even if they transgress, even if they are full of blemishes, they are still called "Sons" (quoted in Klausner's Jesus of Nazareth, p. 377). So far with regard to the Jewish claims. Then as to the Christian:—This sonship conferred on men depended not on human descent from Abraham, nor upon the sexual relations of their parents, nor could it be had for willing or wishing it, i. e., human effort. It was a free and supernatural gift from God, inward and spiritual, implanted by the Holy Ghost, and dependent for its maintenance on union with Christ.' (Dummelow, Commentary on the Holy Bible, p. 775). 'The specific condition of the "new man", in contrast to the "old", is that of sonship and installation into sonship after the likeness of Christ's . . . . . God himself is the veritable Father of the Christian believer, the kindred fontal source of his new life . . . . Baptism is to him [St. John] the normal condition under which believers came to rank as "Children of God", in virtue of a manifest sealing by Holy Spirit power.' (DB. IV, pp. 218-219).

272. (O Prophet! to the Jews and Christians).

273. (as you yourselves admit).

274. i. e., ordinary mortals like the rest of mankind.

275. (and His will to forgiveness is occasioned by right belief of which you are destitute).

276. (and His will to chastisement is occasioned by unbelief which you possess in plenty).

277. (and not to Christ or anyone else).

278. (when old dispensations have ceased to exit anywhere in their purity).

فترة is 'a cessation of the mission of apostles, and a state of effacement of the signs of their religion." (LL) or an interval of time between the disappearance of a prophet and the appearance of another. The conception is not altogether unfamiliar to the readers of the Bible. 'Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord.' (Am. 8 : 11).

279. (the eternal verieties).

280. (in the Hereafter, by way of excuse).

281. (and so we could not find guidance).

282. (in the Person of the Holy Prophet).

283. (so He deferred the raising of a prophet so long as He willed, and has now raised a Final Prophet).

284. (after their deliverance from the Egyptian bondage, to induce in them readiness for holy war). This must have happened sometime between 1440 and 1400 B. C. According to the OT, Moses delivered this sermon on this side of Jordan, in the land of Moab.' (Dt. 1 : 5).

285. (as in no other people). 'A succession of men so absorbed in the living God . . . . cannot be found in antiquity elsewhere than in Israel.' (EBi, c. 3854) 'The term has received its popular acceptation from Israel alone, because, taken as a class, the Hebrew prophets have been without parallel in human history in their work and influence; (JE. X. p. 213).

286. i. e., the people of Israel as a whole. The pronoun كم is here used in the collective sense.

287. i. e., masters of your own selves. A ملك is not necessarily a king. He may be anybody possessing dominion, authority, or even independence. The allusion may also be to the past history of Israelites, when in the time of Joseph, they were really a ruling nation.

288. (as a race).

289. (of the other races and nations).

290. The 'Unity of God' is the first lesson the Israelites were taught when God revealed Himself to them on Mount Sinai . . . . The Jews were the first nation of monotheists. From them monotheism has spread among other peoples, who, however, did not always receive or preserve it in its original purity (Friedlander, op. cit., pp. 38, 39). For Israelite preference see P. I. nn. 198, 199.

291. i. e., the land of Canaan; vaguely referred to in old commentaries as Syria. 'Behold, I have set the land before you: go in and possess the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob to give unto them and to their seed after them.' (Dt. 1 : 8). 'And Moses called unto Joshua, and said unto him in the sight of all Israel, Be strong and of a good courage; for thou must go with this people unto the land which the Lord hath sworn unto their fathers to give them; and thou shalt cause them to inherit it.' (31 : 7). Its eastern limit was at Beth Shemesh. It included possibly 2,000 square miles of land, most of it remarkably fertile.' (DB. III p. 844). 'A rich soil, well-worked, and nearly all capable of cultivation, (EBi. c. 3741).

292. 'Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them: for the Lord thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee' (Dt. 31 : 6).

293. 'Losers' both in a spiritual and a temporal sense. Spiritually, because of disobeying the command of the Prophet for the holy war; temporally, because of being deprived of a land so fair and so vast.

294. (as also warlike and of gigantic stature). 'They were distinguished specially for military prowess.' (DB. III, p. 845). The Amalekites were . . . . excessively warlike, well-armed, and fairly disciplined, having been long accustomed to hold their own against the surrounding nations, with whom they had frequent collisions.' (Rawlinson, Moses: His Life and Times, p. 139). It was 'a country defended by a multitude of cities, small, it is true, but with very formidable defences and warlike inhabitants.' (Marston, The Bible is True, p. 183). The people were also given to superstition and lewdness. 'To understand the Hebrew prophets and their fierce indignation against Canaanite worship we must have in mind that with such worship was associated the religious immorality which disgraces Southern Indian temples at the present day.. They were fired by a moral indignation against cruelty and lust.' (Drinkwater, Outline of Literature, 1, pp. 74, 75).

295. 'We be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we . . . . The land . . . . is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we saw in it are men of a great stature. And there we saw the giants; the sons of Anak, which come of the giants; and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight.' (Nu. 13 : 31-33). It was full summer, probably about the end of July or the beginning of August. Palestine might at once have been occupied, or its conquest at any rate commenced, if the people had had faith. But, on the near approach of danger, their hearts failed them (Rowlinson, Moses: His Life and Times, p. 177).

23. (قال ... مؤمنين) Thereupon spoke a couple of men[296] who feared[297] God and whom Allah had favoured:[298] enter the gate[299] against them, then as you enter it you will overcome,[300] and put your trust in God, if you are indeed believers.[301]

24. (قالوا ... قعدون) Yet the people said: O Mūsā! certainly we shall never march to it so long as they remain there, go forth thou and thy Lord, and fight you twain,[302] we remain here sitting.[303]

25. (قال ... الفسقين) Mūsā said: my Lord! I have no control over any but myself and brother[304] so decide Thou between us and this wicked people.[305]

26. (قال ... الفسقين) Allah said: verily then it[306] is forbidden to them for forty years,[306A] while they shall wander about in the land,[307] so lament not thou over the fate of this wicked people.[308]

SECTION 5

27. (واتل ... المتقين) And recite thou to them[309] with truth[310] the tale of the two sons of Adam,[311] when the twain offered an offering, and it was accepted from one of them,[312] and was not accepted from the other.[313] He said:[314] I will surely kill thee. The other said: Allah accepts only from the God-fearing.[315]

---

296. i. e., Caleb and Joshua: two of the twelve 'spies' deputed by Moses to search out the land and bring word concerning it and its people.

297. (to disobey God and His apostle). They were among the chiefs whom Moses had deputed to discover the circumstances of the country and its people. The Israelites in their nervousness had proposed to their leader and lawgiver to send men to bring a report on the condition of the country and the people before they ventured an invasion ; and Moses had acceded to this request.

298. (inasmuch as they had remained faithful to their Lord and His apostle).

299. (of the city).

300. (and they shall vanquish, because they are bodies without hearts) 'And Caleb stilled the people before Moses, and said, Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are able to overcome it.' (Nu. 13 : 30) Also JE. III, p. 498.

301. 'And Joshua . . . . and Caleb . . . . rent their clothes: And they spake unto all the company of the children of Israel, saying, ... Only rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land; for they are bread for us: their defence is departed from them, and the Lord is with us: fear them not. But all the congregation bade stone them with stones.' (Nu. 14 : 6-10).

302. This answer of the Israelites has a tinge of polytheism about it, for among the polytheistic people gods also were supposed to participate in war.

303. 'And all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried: and the people wept that night. And all the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron.' (Nu. 14 : 1, 2).

304. The main army of Israel, like that of all primitive nations, consisted of the whole able-bodied adult male population, (EBi, c. 312).

305. i. e., decree Thou against each of us according to his deserts. The Israelites were not only insubordinate, but they openly slandered and reviled Moses. (JE. IX, p. 51).

306. i. e., the promised holy land.

306A. The wandering lasted according to Sir Charles Marston's computation, from 1440 BC. to 1400 BC.

307. i. e., in the wilderness of Sinai. 'Surely they shall not see the land which I sware unto their fathers, neither shall any of them that provoked me see it.' (Nu. 14 : 23). 'Your carcases shall fall in this wilderness; and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old upward, which have murmured against me, ... And your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, and bear your whoredoms, until your carcases be wasted in the wilderness.' (Nu. 14 : 29-33). 'After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know my breach of promise.' (Nu. 14 : 34).

308. (O Moses!) Moses, true prophet of God as he was, pitied his rebellious people, and was moved at their miseries. 'All the injuries and slanders heaped upon Moses by the people did not lessen his love for them.' (JE. IX, p. 51).

309. i. e., unto the people of the Book, O Prophet!

310. 'With truth' is added to distinguish the story as related here from its corrupted form occurring in the OT.

311. i. e., Cain (Qābil) and Abel (Hābīl).

312. (because of his sincerity and the purity of his motives).

313. (since it proceeded from an impure heart).

314. (in rage and chagrin). The reference is to Cain the elder brother.

315. Compare and contrast with the Quranic narrative, replete with moral lessons, the insipid and uninspiring version of the Bible (Ge. 4 : 2-5, 8).

لِتَقْتُلَنِي مَآ أَنَا۠ بِبَاسِطٍ يَدِيَ إِلَيْكَ لِأَقْتُلَكَ ۖ إِنِّيٓ أَخَافُ ٱللَّهَ رَبَّ ٱلْعَٰلَمِينَ ۝ إِنِّيٓ أُرِيدُ أَن تَبُوٓأَ بِإِثْمِي وَ

وَمَنْ أَحْيَاهَا فَكَأَنَّمَآ أَحْيَا

28. (لئن . . . العلمين) If thou stretchest forth thy hand agains tme to kill me, I shall not be stretching forth my hand against thee to kill thee, verily I fear Allah, the Lord of the worlds.[316]

29. (انى . . . الظلمين) I would rather that thou bear my sin[317] and thine own[318] sin, and then thou become of the inmates of the Fire: that is the recompense of the wicked.

30. (فطوعت . . . الخسرين) Then his mind made the killing of his brother pleasant to him, so he killed him and became of the losers.

31. (فبعث . . . الندمين) Then Allah sent a reven scratching in the earth[319] to show how he might cover the corpse of his brother.[320] He said: woe unto me! I am incapable of being even like this reven so that I might cover the corpse of my brother. And he was of the remorseful.[321]

---

316. (and this fear of the Lord impels me to forego even the right of self-defence).

317. i. e., any sin or sins that I may have committed before, I being the victim of thy unjust wrath.

318. (in slaying me).

319. (with its bill and talons to bury a dead raven).

320. As this was the first murder, in fact the first human death upon the face of the earth, the murderer did not know what to do with the corpse and stood puzzled.

321. i. e., sorry for his ignorance and folly, and not repentant over his guilt. A sinful act may be followed by either of two painful feelings. One is called remorse, but in that there is no merit. The other is known as repentance, which alone is capable of wiping out the guilt.

الناس جميعا ولقد جاءتهم رسلنا بالبينات ثم إن كثيرا منهم بعد ذلك في الأرض لمسرفون ۝ إنما جزاء الذين

أو ينفوا من الأرض ذلك لهم خزي في الدنيا ولهم في الآخرة عذاب عظيم ۝ إلا الذين تابوا من قبل
أن تقدروا عليهم فاعلموا أن الله غفور رحيم ۝ يا أيها الذين آمنوا اتقوا الله وابتغوا إليه الوسيلة وجاهدوا في
سبيله لعلكم تفلحون ۝ إن الذين كفروا لو أن لهم ما في الأرض جميعا

32. (من . . . لمسرفون) Because of that[322] We prescribed to the Children of Israel:[323] whoso kills a person, except for[324] a person, or for corruption in the land,[325] it shall be as if he had killed all mankind,[326] and whoso brings life to one[327] it shall be as if he had brought life to all mankind. And assuredly there came to them[328] Our messengers with evidences,[329] yet even after that[330] many of them are acting in the land extravagantly.[331]

33. (انما . . . عظيم) The recompense of those who wage war against Allah and His messenger,[332] and go about in the land making mischief[333] is only that they shall be slain[334] or crucified[335] or their hands and their feet be cut off[336] on the opposite sides,[337] or be banished from the land.[338] Such shall be their humiliation in this world,[339] and in the Hereafter theirs shall be a torment mighty—

34. (الا الذين . . . رحيم) Save those who repent before you overpower them:[340] for know that Allah is Forgiving,[341] Merciful.[342]

SECTION 6

35. (يا يها . . . تفلحون) O you who believe; fear Allah[343] and seek approach to Him,[344] and strive hard in His way,[345] that haply you may thrive.[346]

---

322. (which Cain did).

323. 'Whosoever sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man.' (Ge. 9:6) And the following rabbinical dictum has been quoted by Rodwell: 'To him who kills a single individual of Israel it shall be reckoned as if he had slain the whole race.'

324. i. e., in retaliation for.

325. i. e., for creating disorder and bloodshed.

326. As the doctrine implies in Islamic jurisprudence the murder of an individual is a crime against the whole community, or rather humanity, and therefore, it is the duty of the community to see to it that lawful vengeance through the direct and lawful avenger has its course.

327. i. e., saves a life from unjust murder. أحياه is here synonymous with إبقاء, and signifies the making one to continue in life and the preserving him alive. (LL)

328. i. e., the children of Israel.

329. (of their apostleship).

330. i. e., after We had impressed upon them the gravity of the sin of unjustifiable murder even so much.

331. (some of them even going to the length of murdering the prophets of God or plotting their murder).

332. (by violating the security granted by the Divine law).

333. i. e., committing robbery and bloodshed.

334. (if they are guilty of murder only).

335. (if they are guilty of murder and robbery both).

336. (if they are guilty of robbery only).

337. i. e., right hands and left feet.

338. (if they have not yet committed murder or robbery, but are on the point of doing so). Such criminals may also be segregated from society by being placed in prisons.

339. Lest some of these penalties may appear 'barbarous' to some hypersensitive Western reader, let him cast a glance on 'drawing and quartering,' a penalty of the English Criminal Code maintained as late as the 18th century, 'inflicted on those found guilty of high treason touching the king's person or government. The person committed was usually drawn on a sledge to the place of execution; there he was hung by the neck from a scaffold, being cut down and disembowelled, while still alive; his head then was cut from his body and his corpse divided into four quarters.' Many were the Catholics of England and Ireland—since the profession of their faith was declared high treason by law—who suffered this death. 'In the reign of Henry III and Edward I there is abundant evidence that death was the common punishment for felony; and this continued to be the law of the land as to treason and as to all felonies, except petty larceny, down to the year 1826.' (Stephen's History of the Criminal Law of England, I p. 458). In contemporary English law, robbery is larceny with violence; and the guilty is liable to penal servitude for life, and, in addition, if a male, to be once privately whipped . . . . The elements of the offence are essentially the same under American law. (EBr. XIX, p. 346).

340. i. e., before they are arrested. So far as the rights of God are concerned, the guilt of these penitents will be condoned.

341. (so He will forgive so far as their sin of God is concerned).

342. (so He will show mercy by accepting their repentance).

343. (and renounce sin). A negative precept to acquire merit.

344. (through acts of duty and devotion). A positive precept to acquire merit, وسيلة, is a means of access to a thing; a means of attainment or accomplishment.

345. (with might and main). This 'striving hard' includes fighting for religion.

346. (and win the goodwill and pleasure of God—the highest goal conceivable).

36. (ان . . . اليم) Surely those who have disbelieved, if they[347] possessed all that is in the earth and with it as much again to ransom themselves thereby from the torment on the Day of Judgement, it shall not be accepted of them, and theirs shall be a torment afflictive.

37. (يريدون . . . مقيم) They will long[348] to escape from the Fire, but they shall not be able to escape from it, and theirs shall be a torment lasting.[349]

38. (السارق . . . حكيم) As for the man-thief and the woman-thief, cut off their hands[350] as a recompense for what they have earned[351] a deterrent punishment from Allah;[352] and Allah is Mighty,[353] Wise.[354]

39. (فمن . . . رحيم) Then whoso repents after his wickedness[355] and makes amends[356] Allah shall certainly relent towards him.[357] Allah is Forgiving,[358] Merciful.[359]

40. (الم . . . قدير) Dost thou not know[360] that Allah's is the kingdom of the heavens and the earth?[361] He chastises whom He will,[362] and He forgives whom He will;[363] and Allah is Potent over everything.[364]

347. i. e., every one of them. The plural pronoun is used in its distributive sense.

348. (with all the intensity at their command).

349. (i. e., never to be relaxed or lightened).

350. (from the wrist-joint, O men of authority). According to the Hanafi school of Islamic law, the penalty for the first offence is the amputation of the right hand at the wrist; for a second, that of the left foot at the ankle. But for a third offence, no more amputation, but a long term of imprisonment—until the culprit shall presumably reform (Hidāya).

351. (provided—
- (i) the value of the thing stolen be not less than one dinar or 10 dirhams; and
- (ii) two male witnesses of good character give their testimony against the accused, or he himself confesses his guilt).

In addition, there are provisions in the Hanafi law to the effect that 'a thief's hands shall not be cut off for the theft of what cannot be guarded, or is not worth guarding, being found in the land in great quantity, such as dry wood, hay, grass, reeds, game, fish, lime, etc., also such articles of food as are quickly perishable, as milk, meat, fresh fruit, etc. . . . Finally, a thief's hand shall not be cut off if the thing stolen hath no conventional value, even though it be otherwise regarded as of great worth.' (Roberts, op., cit., p. 93). Cf. the laws of the OT:—'If a thief be found breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall no blood be shed for him.' (Ex. 22 : 2) 'If a man be found stealing any of his brethren of the children of Israel, and maketh merchandise of him, or selleth him; then that thief shall die.' (Dt. 24 : 7). Similarly in the Hammurabi, the Athenian, and the Roman codes, theft is, in certain cases, punishable with death. And in the common law of England, till a comparatively recent date, grand larceny, or theft of goods above the value of one shilling in the house of the owner, was a capital crime. (EBr. XIII, p. 721).

352. This emphasizes that the penalty prescribed is a Divine statute, and is not to be taken lightly. Next to high moral education and deep religious upbringing it is fear of consequences as world-wide human experience proves, that keeps in check the very natural tendency, almost inherent in human nature, to stealing and thieving.

353. (who has power and authority to issue any commands or decrees He will).

354. (Who issues only such commands as befit His infinite Wisdom).

355. (in the way approved by the law) i. e., restitutes the property stolen to the owner, or is forgiven by him.

356. (his life for the future).

357. i. e., shall forgive him his sin; shall not punish him in the Hereafter.

358. (so He shall forgive him his past).

359. (so He shall keep him guided in the future).

360. (O reader!)

361. i. e., He is their absolute Master.

362. (in accordance with the demands of justice).

363. (in exercise of His wisdom and mercy). This refutes the doctrine of Karma as promulgated in some of the Indian religions, that there is no remission of sins, and that God Himself is powerless to forego and forgive!

364. i. e., He has a will of His own—Supreme Will; and He can and does exercise His judgment in every individual case. He is not a mute, inert, First Cause, enchained by inexorable laws, and powerless to use His will.

41. (يايها . . . عظيم) O messenger! let not those[365] grieve thee who hasten toward infidelity from among those who say with mouths: we believe, yet their hearts do not believe, and from among those who are Judaised: listeners to falsehoods,[366] listeners[367] to another people[368] who do not come to thee;[369] they distort the words from their places,[370] saying:[371] If what you are given[372] is this,[373] accept it,[374] and if that is not given you, be on your guard.[375] And thou shalt not avail[376] against Allah[377] in aught anyone whom Allah wishes to try.[378] These it is whose hearts He would not purify;[379] to them is humiliation in this world,[380] and to them in the Hereafter there shall be a torment mighty.

42. (سمعون . . . المقسطين) Listeners are they to falsehood and devourers of the forbidden.[381] So if they come to thee[382] either judge between them[383] or turn away from them.[384] And if thou turnest away from them, they shall not be able to harm thee in aught;[385] and if thou judgest, judge between them with equity; verily Allah loves the equitable.[386]

365. (of the hypocrites, whether from among the pagans or from the people of the Book).

366. (from their own chiefs and leaders).

367. (of thy discourses).

368. (only in their interest) i. e., as their spies; as tale-bearers.

369. (out of pride and conceit).

370. Or, 'from their meanings.' See P. V. n. 143.

371. (to those whom they send as their secret emissaries to the holy Prophet).

372. (by the Prophet).

373. i. e., what we tell you. The Jews are here pointing towards their perverted texts.

374. The ringleaders used to say to their followers who, guised as believers, joined the holy Prophet's company: if what you got there as Revelation agrees with what we tell you, accept it.

375. i. e., reject that teaching.

376. (O reader!).

377. i. e., against His natural laws of cause and effect.

378. (in consequence of his own will to go astray).

379. (since they themselves do not will to be cleansed).

380. Witness the frequent public exposure of the hypocrites, and the extirpation of the Jews in Arabia.

381. i. e., greedy devourers of illegal gifts and presents against accepting which the Jews had special prohibitions. 'Thou shalt not wrest judgment; thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift: for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous.' (Dt. 16:19). Yet in the face of such strict injunctions there have not been wanting Jewish teachers who have openly proclaimed and preached: 'When an Israelite and a Gentile are the parties to a suit, if it is possible to give the former the judgment according to the Jewish code of law, do so and tell him that such is our law; if he can be given judgment according to the gentile code of law, do so and tell the non-Jew that such is his law. If neither code is of avail, use a subterfuge.' (ET. p. 221).

382. (for judgment, O Prophet!)

383. (making use of thy discretion). The choice whether to act or not as an arbitrator in the suits and disputes of the Jews entirely lay with the Prophet.

384. (declining to intervene in their affairs even when requested). The Madinese Jews, true to their traditions of mischief, sometimes submitted their disputes to the holy Prophet for decision. The text refers to such occasions. The Prophet is here empowered both to accede to their requests and to reject them.

385. (so have no fear on that account).

386. مقسطين literally means 'those who judge and decide with equity.' Here the reference is to those who judge according to the Islamic code of law (Th).

يحكمونك وعندهم التورىة فيها حكم الله ثم يتولون من بعد ذلك وما أولئك بالمؤمنين ﴿٤٣﴾ إنا

43. (وكيف . . . بالمؤمنين) And how will they ask thee for judgment,[387] while they have the Tawrāt,[388] in which is Allah's judgement? And they turn away thereafter![389] They are no believers at all.

SECTION 7

44. (انا . . . الكفرون) It is We who have sent down the Tawrāt in which was a guidance[390] and a light.[391] By it[392] the prophets who submitted themselves[393] judged those who were Judaised, and so did the divines and the rabbis: they judged by what was committed to their keeping[394] of the Book of Allah,[395] and to which they were witnesses.[396] So fear not mankind,[397] but fear Me,[398] and sell not My revelations for a paltry price.[399] And he who does not judge by what Allah has sent down,—it is they who are the infidels.[400]

387. i. e., surely they do not approach thee as bona fide seekers of justice and with any honest motives at all.

388. (their own Scripture which they seek to follow).

389. (from thy decision also even after they had of their own accord sought thy decision). The Jews declined to abide by the decision of the holy Prophet whenever it went against them.

390. (to right belief).

391. (for right conduct).

392. i. e., in accordance with its standard.

393. (to God, though themselves receiving the homage of the multitude).

394. (through the prophets).

395. i. e., the Torah or any other Scripture of their age and time.

396. i. e., had accepted that duty gladly; had cheerfully subjected themselves 'to the yoke of Torah,' 'Far from being considered a bondage, it was looked upon as a privilege and a mark of favour from God, to be appreciated with love and gratitude,' (ET. p. 158).

397. (in acting upon the precepts of the Torah, which includes belief in the mission of the Final Prophet).

398. (as I alone have power to punish). The address is to Jewish divines and priests. See P. I, n. 182.

399. (which you get in the form of money or honour from mankind) i.e., do not suppress truth for fear of losing your hold upon the people. See P. I, n. 181.

400. Cf. the OT :—'If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.' (Is. 8 : 20). 'Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them.' (Dt. 27 : 26).

وَمَن لَّمْ يَحْكُم بِمَآ أَنزَلَ ٱللَّهُ فَأُو۟لَٰٓئِكَ هُمُ ٱلظَّٰلِمُونَ ۝ وَقَفَّيْنَا عَلَىٰٓ ءَاثَٰرِهِم بِعِيسَى ٱبْنِ مَرْيَمَ

45. (وكتبنا . . . الظلمون) And We enjoined for them in it: life for life, eye for eye, nose for nose, ear for ear, tooth for tooth, and injuries in reprisal.[401] And whoso forgoes it,[402] this[403] shall be for him an expiation.[404] And he who does not judge according to what Allah has sent down,—it is they who are the wrong-doers.

46. (وقفينا . . . المتقين) And in their[405] footsteps We caused 'Isā, son of Maryam, to follow, confirming what went afore him, the Tawrāt,[406] and We gave him Injīl,[407] in which was guidance[408] and light,[409] confirming that preceded it, the Tawrāt,[410] and a guidance and an admonition to the God-fearing.

47. (وليحكم . . . الفسقون) And let the people of the Injīl judge by what Allah has sent down in it, and he who does not judge according to what Allah has sent down,—it is they who are the ungodly.[411]

401. 'And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.' (Ex. 21 : 23-25).

402. i. e., the retaliation.

403. i. e., this relinquishment of one's due.

404. (for his sins, and an act of merit on his part).

405. i. e., the Israelite prophet.

406. Cf. the NT:—'Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.' (Mt. 5 : 17-18).

407. See P. III, n. 453.

408. (to right beliefs).

409. (for right conduct).

410. Cf. the NT:—'And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail' (Lk. 16 ; 17).

411. Cf. the NT:—'Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven.' (Mt. 5 : 19).

48. (و انزلنا . . . تختلفون) And We have sent down the Book to thee with truth[412] and confirming what has preceded it of the Book,[413] and as a guardian over it.[414] So judge thou between them[415] according to what Allah has sent down, and do not follow their desires[416] away from what has come to thee of the truth. To every one of you[417] We have ordained[418] a law[419] and a way,[420] and had Allah so willed,[421] He would have made you all a single community,[422] but He willed it not,[423] in order that He may try you[424] by what He has given you.[425] Hasten therefore to virtues;[426] to Allah is the return of you all; then He shall declare to you regarding what you have been disputing.[427]

49. (وان . . . لفسقون) And judge thou between them[428] according to what Allah has sent down,[429] and do not follow their desires,[430] and be on thy guard lest they tempt thee away from any part of what Allah has sent down to thee.[431] Then if they turn away,[432] know thou that Allah wishes to afflict them for some of their sins.[433] And verily many of the mankind are transgressors.

50. (افحكم . . . يوقنون) Do they then seek[434] the judgment of paganism?[435] And who is better in judgment than Allah for a people who have firm faith?[436]

---

412. i. e., this, the latest and final Book is true in itself.

413. i. e., confirming the truth of the previous Revelations.

414. Or 'its protector.' That is one of the outstanding merits of the Holy Qur'ān. Not only it embodies within itself all the truths of the old Scriptures, but it also stands to preserve them from corruption, and serves as a text whereby their perversions, interpolations and inaccuracies can be known and corrected. And as to the very falliable nature of the Bible,—well, it is self-confessed. The infallibility of the Bible, says one of its best modern apologists, 'consists of no absolute immunity from errors . . . . Even the Gospels defy the harmonist in some details, misquote at least one passage from the OT, and misattribute another passage. The OT, in its cosmogony and in its history, fails again and again to satisfy an exact standard of accuracy and to consist with modern knowledge, while its statistics are not seldom inconsistent in detail. Many of its lapses are covered up by the kindly offices of textual tradition and translation, though every scholar knows them familiarly. Others have been smoothed over by the indulgent resources of an ingenious interpretation. It is now a commonplace of Biblical learning that God has been at no pains to prevent errors of history and knowledge and defects in the text and its transmission from finding an entrance into the scared pages of His Written Word.' (ERE. VII, pp. 262-263).

415. i. e., the people of the Book, when they approach thee as contending parties, O Prophet!

416. (in the future, as thou hast not followed in the past).

417. (O mankind!) i. e., for every people and community.

418. (through Our Prophets prior to the universal message of the Qur'ān).

419. (of life).

420. (to eternal bliss).

421. (in conformity with His universal Plan). The will of God, which is the course of His physical law, is not to be confused with the goodwill or pleasure of God, which is the course of His moral law. 'What is' is always very distant from, and at times quite opposed to, 'what ought to be.'

422. (by forcing on you the religion of Islam; by leaving you no option but to tread the path of Truth and Faith).

423. (this enforced uniformity).

424. (in each case).

425. i. e., as to who is obedient to Him by the exercise of His choice and who is not.

426. (by the right use of your limited free-will, O mankind!).

427. (without any justification whatever).

428. i. e., the people of the Book when they come to thee as contending parties, O Prophet!

429. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

430. (in the future, as thou hast not followed in the past).

431. To be ever vigilant, to be constantly on one's guard against the designs of the enemies of Islam, is in itself an act of positive merit.

432. (from abiding by the decision, or from willing to be judged by the Qur'ān).

433. (now and here). The principal sin referred to here is that of flouting the authority of the holy Prophet after seeking his intervention.

434. i. e., the Jews, who were the parties concerned occasioning the revelations of the whole passage.

435. i. e., do they, with all their high-sounding talk of the Scripture learning, stoop to be judged according to the canons of paganism? For الجاهلية see P. IV, n. 264.

436. i. e., the appreciation of so plain a truth is possible only to those who are men of pure faith and perfect conviction.

SECTION 8

51. (يايها . . . الظلمين) O you who believe! do not take the Jews and the Nazarenes for friends;[437] friends they are to each other[438] and if any of you befriends them, verily then he is one of them.[439] Surely Allah does not guide a transgressing people.[440]

52. (فترى . . . ندمين) So thou seest those in whose hearts is a disease[441] hasten toward them saying:[442] we fear lest some misfortune may befall us.[443] But may be Allah may bring a victory[444] or some other affair from Himself,[445] then[446] they shall find themselves regretful for what they have been keeping secret in their minds.[447]

53. (ويقول . . . خسرين) And those who believe will say:[448] are they the same who affirmed by solemn oath of Allah that they were with you?[449] Their works came to naught and they found themselves losers.[450]

---

437. (nor look up to them for help and advice). Of course there can be no very great community of interests between believers and non-believers.

438. i. e., the Jews and Christians have much in common, and can, and do, readily form a combination against Islam. As the most recent instance of their animosity against Islam, witness the Christian Britain's zealous sponsoring of 'Zionism' and 'Jewish home in Palestine.'

439. i. e., he must have some point or points of identity with them.

440. (to the comprehension of this very plain truth). Wrong-doing here consisted in the mixing with the infidels.

441. (of hypocrisy and half-heartedness, O reader!)

442. (excusing themselves).

443. (as a reprisal for the victory at Badr). Their execuse is: we are not really inclined towards the pagans in our hearts, but it is not wise or prudent to lose old friends,—who knows the next move of the wheel of fortune?—so to be on the safe side we have to keep appearances.' دائرة literally is 'a turn of fortune'.

444. (to Muslims over infidels). The allusion here is to the banishment and extirpation of the Jews. عسى is literally 'may-be', 'may-hap', 'perhaps' or 'belike'' but when used in reference to an act of God it signifies surety of the happening.

445. Such as detection and exposure of the hypocrites; so called because it was purely an act of Divine intervention, independent of any exertion on the part of the Muslims.

446. i. e., on the accomplishment of the two events here promised.

447. i. e., their hypocrisy; their friendship with the enemies of Islam.

448. (among themselves when each and every hypocrite is known and stands self-condemned).

449. An expression of astonishment on the part of the believers at the audacity of the hypocrites.

450. i. e., to no profit came their friendship with the Jews; and distrusted by the Jews and the Muslims alike, the hypocrites stood discredited altogether.

يَشَآءُ وَاللّٰهُ وَاسِعٌ عَلِيْمٌ ۞ اِنَّمَا وَلِيُّكُمُ اللّٰهُ وَرَسُوْلُهٗ وَالَّذِيْنَ اٰمَنُوا الَّذِيْنَ يُقِيْمُوْنَ الصَّلٰوةَ وَيُؤْتُوْنَ
الزَّكٰوةَ وَهُمْ رٰكِعُوْنَ ۞ وَمَنْ يَّتَوَلَّ اللّٰهَ وَرَسُوْلَهٗ وَالَّذِيْنَ اٰمَنُوْا فَاِنَّ حِزْبَ اللّٰهِ هُمُ الْغٰلِبُوْنَ ۞ يٰۤاَيُّهَا

الْكُفَّارَ اَوْلِيَآءَ وَاتَّقُوا اللّٰهَ اِنْ كُنْتُمْ مُّؤْمِنِيْنَ ۞ وَاِذَا نَادَيْتُمْ اِلَى الصَّلٰوةِ اتَّخَذُوْهَا هُزُوًا وَّلَعِبًا
ذٰلِكَ بِاَنَّهُمْ قَوْمٌ لَّا يَعْقِلُوْنَ ۞ قُلْ يٰۤاَهْلَ الْكِتٰبِ هَلْ تَنْقِمُوْنَ مِنَّاۤ اِلَّاۤ اَنْ اٰمَنَّا بِاللّٰهِ وَمَاۤ اُنْزِلَ اِلَيْنَا
وَمَاۤ اُنْزِلَ

54. (يايها . . . عليم) O you who believe![451] whoever of you apostates from his religion, then Allah shall soon bring a people[452] whom He shall love and who shall love Him,[453] gentle towards the believers, stern towards the infidels, striving hard in the way of Allah, and unheeding the reproof of any reprover.[454] This[455] is the grace of Allah: He bestows it on whomso He will. And Allah is Bountiful,[456] Knowing.[457]

55. (انما . . . راكعون) Your friend[458] is but Allah and His messenger and those who have believed—those who establish the prayer[459] and pay the poor-rate,[460] while they bow down.[461]

56. (ومن . . . الغلبون) And whoever befriends Allah and His messenger and those who have believed, then the party of Allah!——it is they who will be triumphant.[462]

SECTION 9

57. (يايها . . . مؤمنين) O you who believe! do not take as friends those who make a mockery and fun of your religion from among those who have been given the Book before you and other infidels.[463] And fear Allah,[464] if you are believers.

58. (و اذا . . . يعقلون) And when you call for the prayer[465] they[466] make a mockery and fun of it.[467] This,[468] because they are a people who have no understanding.[469]

---

451. The address is to them who were Muslims at the time this passage was revealed.

452. (to replace Him).

453. Love of God is, in Islam, the standing motive of all moral and religious life.

454. (in the matter of faith, unlike the hypocrites who were always afraid of the pagans).

455. (strength of conviction and sincerity of purpose).

456. i. e., able to endow everyone with excellent attributes.

457. i. e., who bestows His grace only on those who are, in His knowledge, fitted to receive it.

458. i. e., one to whom you should look up for help, comfort and guidance.

459. Symbolic of all bodily devotions.

460. Symbolic of all monetary obligations.

461. (and are meek in spirit). This sums up the chief characteristics of a Muslim. He holds right and sincere belief; he is steadfast in his prayers and other devotions; he is regular in the payment of the poor-rate and other obligations; and he is meek in spirit.

462. i. e., they shall triumph in the end.

463. The rejection of the true Faith is the common ground between the scoffing people of the Book and the pagans.

464. i. e., be on your guard against mixing freely with the rejecters of the faith after this prohibition.

465. The formula of the public call to prayers اذان runs thus:—

God is Most Great. (repeated four times).

I testify that there is no god but God, (repeated twice)

I testify that Muhammad is the apostle of God, (repeated twice).

Come to the prayer. (repeated twice).

Come to the bliss. (repeated twice).

Prayer is better than sleep. (repeated twice but added only in the morning prayer).

God is Most Great. (repeated twice). There is no god but God.

This call (or azān) the crier (muezzin) repeats five times a day at appointed hours standing on some platform or tower in a mosque with his face toword Ka'ba. The crier (muezzin) must not be one unclean or drunk and the recital must be listened to with respect.

466. i. e., the scoffers, whether they be from the pagans or from the people of the Book.

467. Now, is there anything in the formula quoted above to laugh at or to make fun of? Here is what an English writer has to say, "The beauty of the Mohammadan Call to prayer", writes Hadland Davis in the Blue Peter "is unforgettable. Five times, within twenty-four hours, wherever Islam holds sway that sacred summons is sounded with sonorous, far-reaching voice. It comes, not from the gateway of a mosque, nor from a house-top, nor from the market-place, but from a lovely minaret that looks like a white, long-stemmed flower rising clear, strong and comely above the traffic of men. Whether it is heard at dawn or sunset, or when the purple bright sky is ablaze with stars, that call moves the infidel as well as the devotee . . . Someone has happily said that "the Moslem Call is eternally beginning and never terminating," a prayer "that may indeed be suspended yet never finished . . . . . an adoration that may pause but never end".

468. (misplaced and blasphemous hilarity).

469. (a thing so simple and so evident). Thus describes an English Muslim lady the effects of this wonderful call to prayer:—'As the beautiful cadences are elaborated to rise and fall as the Muezzin moves round the minaret to call the four corners of the world beneath, I wonder, how anyone can listen to that call unmoved. Surely does the Koranic Arabic hold a spell—even as the reading of the Sacred Book thrills its hearers.' (Lady Cobbold, op. cit., p. 9).

59. (قل . . . فسقون) Say thou:[470] O people of the Book ! what is that for which you persecute us save that we believe in Allah and in what has been sent down to us and what has been sent down before? And most of you are ungodly.[471]

60. (قل . . . السبيل) Say thou:[472] O people of the Book ! shall I declare to you something worse as a way with Allah than that?[473] it is they whom Allah has accursed and with whom He is angered and whom some He has changed into apes and swine[474] and worshippers of false gods[475]—those are worse in abode[476] and furthest astray from the level way.[477]

61. (واذا . . . يكتمون) And when they[478] come to you[479] they say : we believe; yet infidels they came[480] and infidels they departed. And Allah is Knower of what they have been concealing.

62. (وترى . . . يعملون) And thou wilt see many of them[481] hastening towards sin and wickedness[482] and devouring of the unlawful.[483] Vile indeed is what they have been doing!

63. (لولا . . . يصنعون) Why then do their divines and priests forbid not them [484] from blasphemy and from devouring of the unlawful?[485] Vile indeed is what they have been performing!

---

470. (on behalf of the Muslims, O Prophet !).

471. (rejecting your own Scripture as well as ours).

472. (O Prophet !).

473. (way of ours which you still reject and denounce).

474. The transformation may not have been necessarily physical. It may have been only mental, as suggested by Rāghib and others.

475. عبدة and عباد both are the plurals of عبد , the distintion being that the former is used of the polytheists هم عبدة الطاغوت while the latter is used of the Muslims هم عباد الله (LL).

476. i. e., the final abode which shall be Hell.

477. (even in this world).

478. i. e., the hypocrite Jews.

479. i. e., the Muslims.

480. (to your company).

481. i. e., of the Jews, O Prophet!

482. Compare the denunciation in their own Scriptures. 'Their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood.' (Pr. 1 : 16). 'Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you . . . Your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity; your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness. None calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth: they trust in vanity, and speak lies; they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity . . . . Their feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood; their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and destruction are in their paths.' (Is. 59 : 2-7).

483. compare the OT:—'They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity. The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire.' (Mi. 3 : 10-11). 'Thy princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves: every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards: they judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them.' (Is. 1 : 23). 'Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough.' (Is. 56 : 11).

484. i. e., the Jewish masses. As with the people so it was with the priests.

485. Compare the OT:—'From the least of them even unto the greatest of them every one is given to convetousness.'

غُلَّتْ أَيْدِيهِمْ وَلُعِنُوا بِمَا قَالُوا بَلْ يَدَاهُ مَبْسُوطَتَانِ يُنفِقُ كَيْفَ يَشَاءُ ۚ وَلَيَزِيدَنَّ كَثِيرًا مِّنْهُم مَّا

64. (وقالت . . . المفسدين) And the Jews say,[486] the hand of Allah is fettered.[487] Fettered be their own hands,[488] and cursed be they for what they have uttered![489] Aye! His both hands are wide open;[490] He expends howsoever He will.[491] And surely what has been sent down to thee[492] from thy Lord increases many[493] of them in exorbitance and infidility. And We have cast among them[494] enmity and spite till the Day of Judgment; whenever they kindle the fire of war,[495] Allah puts is out,[496] and they strive[497] after corruption in the land;[498] and Allah approves not the corrupters.

65. (ولو . . . النعيم) And had the people of the Book believed[499] and feared,[500] We would surely have expiated from them their misdeeds and would surely have admitted them in the Garden of Delight.

66. (ولو . . . يعملون) And had they established the Tawrāt[501] and the Injīl[502] and what has now been sent down to them from their Lord,[503] they would have received abundance[504] from above and from beneath.[505] Among them is a community right-doing;[506] but many of them—vile is what they do!

---

486. (who were at the time impoverished by a dearth sent upon them as a judgment for their rejecting the holy Prophet).

487. i. e., He has become niggardly and close-fisted.

488. i. e., niggardly are they themselves.

489. i. e., for uttering a thing so blasphemous.

490. (as ever) i. e., He, the Mighty One, is as generous as ever.

491. (according to His infinite Wisdom and universal Plan).

492. (O Prophet!).

493. (but not all). Some of the Jews did eventually embrace Islam.

494. The pronoun refers to the people of the Book in general, and not to the Jews alone, as is evident from the next verse.

495. (against the Muslims).

496. (either by raising feuds and quarrels among themselves, or by granting victory to the Muslims).

497. (when baulked in their attempts to kindle the fire of war openly).

498. (secretly and stealthily, by making all sorts of attack, often very cunningly veiled, on the faith of Islam).

499. (in all the tenets of the faith).

500. (God, and refrained from vice and sin, as commanded in the code of Islamic law).

501. i. e., the original Taurat, and not the so-called OT.

502. i. e., the original Injil, and not the so-called NT.

503. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

504. (of good things).

505. i. e., 'their means of subsistence should be made ample ; by the forcing of the blessings of the heaven and the earth upon them.' (LL)

506. (as they ultimately became converts to Islam).

SECTION 10

67. (يايها . . . الكفرين) O messenger![507] preach thou whatever has been sent down to thee from thy Lord;[508] and if thou dost it not, then thou hast not preached His message.[509] Allah shall protect thou from men.[510] Allah does not guide a disbeliving people.[511]

68. (قل . . . الكفرين) Say thou: O people of the Book! you rest not on aught unless you establish[512] the Tawrāt and Injīl and what has now been sent down to you from your Lord.[513] And what has been sent down to thee will surely increase many of them in exorbitance and infidelity; so mourn thou not over a disbelieving people.

69. (ان . . . يحزنون) Surely those who believe and those who are Judaised and the Sabians and the Nazarence—any of who believes in Allah and the Last Day and works rightously no fear shall come on them, nor shall they grieve.[514]

---

507. This from of address emphasizes the fact that Muhammad (on him be peace!) was essentially a missionary Prophet whose foremost sacred duty was to preach and to proclaim.

508. (without any fear whatsoever). 'The missionary spirit of Islam is no after-thought in its history; it interpenetrates the religion from its very commencement.' (Arnold, Preaching of Islam, p. 11).

509. (at all). To deliver that Great Message incompletely or only in parts is not to deliver it at all.

510. 'More than once his life was in danger, but a higher power protected God's envoy; the sword fell from a hostile leader who waved it above his head.' (HHW, VIII, p. 123).

511. 'to reach thee with intent to slay thee.' (Th). On his receiving this assurance of the Divine protection, the holy Prophet dismissed the men who had volunteered to act as his guard.

512. i. e., act up to.

513. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

514. (in the Hereafter). See P. I, nn. 280, ff. 'It was on the banks of the lower Euphrates that the Sabians or Christians of St. John the Baptist had settled, whom the Arabs called Mughtasila, Ablutionists', because they were always washing in the river ; not only were they still living there in the time of Muhammad, but they are there to this day, under the name of Sabian'. (Huart, Ancient Persia and Iranian Civilization, p. 179).

70. (لقد . . . يقتلون) Assuredly did We take a bond from the Children of Israel[515] and We sent messengers to them. Whenever there came to them a messenger with what their souls did not like,[516] a party of them they belied and a party they put to death.[517]

71. (وحسبوا . . . يعملون) And they imagined that no harm would come to them;[518] so they blinded and deafened themselves.[519] Thereafter[520] Allah relented towards them,[521] then they again blinded and deafened themselves.[522] And Allah is Beholder of what they work.[523]

72. (لقد . . . انصار) Assuredly they have disbelieved who say:[524] Masih son of Maryam is the very God; whereas the Masih[525] had said: O Children of Israel: worship Allah, my Lord and your Lord:[526] he who joins aught with Allah,[527] Allah shall surely forbid the Garden to him, and his resort is the Fire; and the ungodly shall have no helpers.

73. (لقد . . . اليم) Assuredly those have disbelieved who say: 'God is the third of the three,[528] whereas there is no god except the One God.[529] And if they do not desist from what they say,[530] there shall surely befall those of them who have disbelived a torment afflictive.

515. (that they would obey all Our messengers).

516. i. e., with a message that was not to their liking.

517. Compare the NT :—'Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city, (Mt. 23 : 34).

518. i. e., no punishment for their offence. Compare the OT :—'They slay the widow and the stranger, and murder the fatherless. Yet they say, The Lord shall not see.' (Ps. 94 : 6, 7).

519. i. e., they shut their eyes and ears against all argument and remonstrance.

520. i. e., after some time.

521. (and out of His mercy sent another apostle).

522. This attitude of blind denial and defiance the Jews maintained up to the time of the holy Prophet.

523. Compare the OT :—'He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? He that formed the eye, shall he not see.' (Ps. 94 : 9).

524. (and believe). To the orthodox Christian 'Jesus is without qualification God, and the greater the contradiction to the mind, the more the heart responds to the wonder of the mystery.' (HJ. Oct. 1934, p. 6). See nn. 260, 261 above.

525. (himself).

526. 'Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.' (Mt. 4 : 10 : Lk. 4 : 8). 'And Jesus said unto him, why callest thou me good? none is good save one, that is, God.' (Lk. 18 : 19). 'Jesus never refers to Himself as the "Son of God", and the title when bestowed upon Him by others probably involves no more than the acknowledgement that He was the Messiah.' (EBr. XIII, p. 23). 'That the trinitarian baptismal formula does not go back to Jesus himself is evident and recognized by all independent critics' (EBi. c. 4689). 'A critical study of the synoptic material leads inevitably to the conclusion that Jesus never called himself the "son of God" and never was addressed by that title.' (EBi. c. 4701). See also P. III, nn. 453.

527. (either in His Person or His Attributes, as the Christians do). That the Christians are proud of their Christolatry is a a fact self-evident. It is noted in their books with self-adulation that the Church in the course of its long history has never ceased to offer prayer to Christ with the Father.' (ERE. I, p. 104).

528. 'There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy : and these three are one.' (I Jn. 5 : 7). The Athanasian Creed runs :—'There is one person of the Father, another of the Son and another of the Holy Ghost ; the Father is God and Lord ; the Son is God and Lord ; and the Holy Ghost is God and Lord.' 'These words of the Creed,' says Swedenborg, 'make it as clear as water in a crystal cup, that there are three persons, each of whom is God and Lord.' (The True Christian Religion, p. 224). This central doctrine of the Christian religion can only mean that God 'is three really distinct Persons, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.... Three persons are co-equal, co-eternal, and consubstantial, and deserve co-equal glory and adoration.' (CD. p. 973). 'The dogma of the "Trinity", which still comprises three of the chief articles of faith in the creed of Christian peoples, culminates in the notion that the one God of Christianity is really made up of three different persons : (1) God the Father; . . . (2) Jesus Christ ; and (3) Holy Ghost, a mystical being, over whose incomprehensible relation to the Father and the Son millions of Christian theologians have racked their brains in vain for the last 1900 years.' (Haeckel, op. cit. p. 227).

529. (with no divisibility of Person). And thus the Christians are as much steeped in polytheism as are the pagans. The Christians 'acknowledged one God indeed with the lips, but in three persons, each of whom simply or by himself was God.' (Swedenborg, op. cit., p. 817).

530. i. e., from ascribing 'trinity' to God.

74. (الا . . . رحيم) Why do they[531] not turn towards Allah and ask His forgiveness?[532] And Allah is Forgiving,[533] Merciful.[534]

75. (ما المسيح . . . يوفكون) The Masīh,[535] son of Maryam, was naught but a messenger,[536] surely there passed away messengers before him,[537] and his mother was a saintly woman;[538] they both[539] ate earthly food.[540] See how We explain to them Our evidences.[541] Then see whither they are deviating![542]

76. (قل . . . العليم) Say thou, do you worship,[543] beside Allah, what does not avail you in harm or good,[544] whereas it is Allah who is the Hearing,[545] the Knowing.[546]

77. (قل . . . السبيل) Say thou, O people of the Book![547] do not exceed the just bounds in your religion,[548] except with truth, and do not follow the fancies of a people who strayed before and have led many astray and have strayed from the level way.[549]

531. i. e., the so-called Christians; the trinitarians.

532. (after the hollowness of their beliefs has been so thoroughly exposed and made manifest to them).

533. (to those who implore His forgiveness).

534. (to those who turn to Him).

535. (himself a mortal and born of a frail mortal woman).

536. (and neither God, nor His Son, nor His Incarnation). See nn. 39, 95 above. Some of the most ancient Christians were not slow to perceive the humanity of Christ, as contradistinguished from his divinity. One class of the Ebionites regarded him 'as an ordinary man though superior to other men.' (ERE, I, p. 103). Paul of Samosata held that 'Christ was a human person, who possessed the Logos as an attribute . . . . Finally he became God; i. e., he was united to God in the only way in which unity between persons is possible, by absolute harmony of will . . . . His miracles manifested the harmony of his will with the will of God.' (ERE, XI, p. 171). And Justin has remarked. 'There are of our number some who admit that he is Christ, but declare that he was a man born of man.' (EBi, c. 2963). Similarly the inquiries of the most modern of the Christian inquirers are once again approximating the Islamic view. 'The picture of Jesus' as Loisy sees him, 'is purely human . . . Jesus did not offer himself' to his contemporaries as a sage or a moralist, or as a prophet pure and simple, but 'as one sent from God who claims, in relation to the kingdom, the position of Grand Ambassador.' (HJ. Oct. 1934, p. 30). On purely historical grounds all that can be affirmed of Jesus Christ is that he was a man in a certain environment. The Christ of the Gospels is the product of faith.' (HJ. April, 1935, p. 374).

537. (now surely no apostle however great and eminent and however superior to his fellow-beings can, in any sense, be God or part of God, or one of the 'Triad'). 'The familiar companions of Jesus of Nazareth conversed with their friend and countryman, who, in all the actions of rational and animal life, appeared of the same species with themselves. His progress from infancy to youth and manhood was marked by a regular increase in stature and wisdom.' (GRE.V p. 97).

538 'This refutes the outrageous calumny of the Jews who held her guilty of misconduct and reinstates her in her pure, saintly character. See P. III, n. 403 ff. For the meaning of صديق see P. XVI, n. 151. 'The feminine as used in the Koran means superlative in الصدق and التصديق.' (LL).

539. —mere mortals and mere human beings as they were—

540. (and needed it). i.e., obliged to support their lives by the same means, and subject to the same necessities and infirmities as the rest of mankind, they could be no gods or godlings.

541. (to expose the hollowness of the so-called Christians' position). That the Holy Qur'ān did, to some extent, exert modifying influence on certain Chritian sects is now an admitted truth. 'The opposition of Islam also partly determined the form of men's views on the doctrine of Christ's person' (EBr. I, p. 177).

542. (from the truth; and how they cling to error and falsehood!).

543. (O Christians!)

544. Christianity gradually 'assumed a form that was quite as polytheistic and quite as idolatrous as the ancient paganism.' (Lecky. op. cit., II, p. 97). 'The polytheist peoples of the world with a variety of gods and goddesses, which enter into its machinery more or less independently . . . . It reaches its highest stage in Hellenic polytheism . . . . At a much lower stage we have Catholic polytheism, in which innumerable "saints" (many of them of very equivocal repute) are venerated as subordinate divinities, and prayed to exert thir mediation with the supreme divinity.' (Haeckel, op. cit., p. 236).

545. i. e., Cognizant of all that you say.

546. i. e., Cognizant of all that you have in your heart.

547. The address is mainly to the Christians.

548. (by attributing Godhead to Jeasus and divinity to Mary) i. e., be loyal to your own Faith as vouchsafed by God, and do not make any man-made creed the test of your discipleship. It is a standing marvel indeed that the 'Christian religion' as it is called, contains so very few doctrines taught by Jesus himself, but is almost entirely made up of doctrines about him propagated by others. See n. 93 above.

549. Now who exactly are these erring peoples—the prototype of the Christian error? The allusion may well be to the 'highly cultured' yet polytheistic and idolatrous nations of Greece and Rome—many of whose superstitions and blasphemies the early church, inspired by Paul of Tarsus, was only too prone to imbibe. St. Paul, the founder of the later-day Christianity, 'owed much to the Greek philosophy and thought, gained partly in formal education at Tarsus, partly by assimilation of the knowledge which floated on the surface of a more or less educated society and became insensibly the property of all its members.' (DB. V, p. 150). The Roman church owes something of the elaboration of its ceremonial, and its care for the little things of life, to the old Roman religion, and the many local and functional saints of present-day Italy are in effect the successors of the ancient spirits.' (UHW. III, p. 1753). 'And the later-day Greek also through the popularity of the cult of Asklepios 'was becoming habituated to the concept of Man God, who suffered, and was glorified after death.' (EMK. IIp. 1414) Greece 'supplied the philosophy of the Christian religion, which, after Plotnus and Prophyry, had a more vigorous life within the Christian church than in the schools of Athens.' (UHW. IV, p. 2083). 'The contact of the Church with the Hellenic world led very early to the attempt to interpret the mysteries of the Christian faith in the terms of Greek philosophy. There are traces of this even in the epistles of St. Paul. The process, however, so far as the books of the New Testament are concerned, is most conspicuous in the fourth Gospel. The writer of this life of Chirts, whoever he may have been, was clearly influenced by Platonism.' (UHW. IV. p. 2330).

SECTION 11

78. (لعن . . . يعتدون) Cursed were those who disbelieved from among the Children of Israel[550] by the tongue of Dāūd[551] and ʿIsā, son of Maryam.[552] This, because they disobeyed and were ever transgressing.[553]

79. (كانوا . . . يفعلون) They were wont not to desist from the evil they committed.[554] Vile is what they have been doing!

80. (ترى . . . خالدون) Thou wilt see many of them[555] befriending those who disbelieve.[556] Vile surely is what their souls have sent forth for them,[557] so that Allah became incensed against them; and[558] in torment they shall abide.

81. (ولو . . . فسقون) And had they[559] believed in Allah and the Prophet[560] and what has been sent down to him,[561] they would not have taken them[562] for friends;[563] but many of them are transgressors.[564]

82. (لتجدن . . . يستكبرون) Surely thou wilt find the Jews[565] and polytheists[566] the bitterest of mankind in enmity towards those who believe.[567] And surely thou wilt find the nearest in affection to the believer[568] those who say:[569] we are Nazarenes.[570] This,[571] because among them[572] are priests[573] and monks[574] and because they are not stiffnecked.[575]

550. i. e., those who rejected the faith propounded by the prophets of their time: such as those who violated the Sabbath in the reign of David, or those who rejected the ministry of Jesus.

551. 'And anger also came up against Israel, because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation,' (Ps. 78: 21, 22).

552. 'Fill ye up then the measure of your father. Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell ?' (Mt. 23: 32, 33).

553. The Jewish history, as recorded in the Bible, is full of Israel's sins and delinquencies. Let one passage, only by way of instance, suffice :—

'They would not hear, but hardened their necks, like to the neck of their father, that did not believe in the Lord their God. And they rejected his statutes, and his covenant that he made with their fathers, and his testimonies which he testified against them, and they followed vanity, and became vain, and went after the heathen that were round about them . . . . And they left all the commandments of the Lord their God, and made them molten images, even two calves, and made a grove, and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served Ba'al.' (2 Ki, 17 : 14-16). See P. I, nn. 271, 272.

554. i. e., far from repenting and feeling sorry, they persisted in their acts of infidelity and impiety.

555. i. e., the Jews, O Prophet!

556. (and are idolaters) The Jews formed pacts with the pagans for the destruction of Islam.

557. i. e., their acts of treachery and perfidy against Islam, and their alliance with the pagans.

558. (as the inevitable sequel).

559. i. e., the Jews.

560. i. e., their own prophet, Moses, (Th).

561. i. e., Torah, (Th).

562. i. e., the pagan enemies of Islam.

563. (and have made common causes with them for the extirpation of Islam). The Madinese Jews 'showed themselves more and more hostile to the new religion. They found a protector in Abdullah ben Obayyah, the chief of the Khazraj, who, jealous of Mohammed's growing power amongst his followers, toiled against the Prophet.' (HHW. VIII, p. 123).

564. (and no true believers in their own faith, and so their behaviour is not unnatural).

565. (O Prophet)! Compare an observation of Hitler :—'It is impossible to exaggerate the formidable quality of the Jew as an enemy.'

566. (those who associate aught with God) i. e., the idolaters.

567. Witness the perfidious and treacherous conduct of the Madinese Jews and the uniformly hostile attitude of the Makkan pagans towards the Prophet.

568. Note the word 'Nazarenes.' Nazarenes not Christians. Note further that the friendship of even these for the Muslims is only relative, not absolute. Only as compared with the inveterate hostility of the idolaters and the Jews their attitude is rather friendly.

569. Note the words 'who say.' The import is that they avow their faith and are not ashamed of calling themselves believers in Christ. And they were not trinitarians. To some early Christians 'the doctrine of the Trinity appeared inconsistent with the unity of God which is emphasized in the Scriptures. They therefore denied it, and accepted Jesus Christ, not as incarnate God but as God's highest creature by Whom all else was created, or as the perfect man who taught the true doctrine of God.' (EBr. V, p. 634). Some of the Ebionites, for instance, while they accepted Christ, only accepted him as a revived Moses.' (ERE. V, p. 139). It is only these monotheistic Christians who are commended in the Qur'ān. The verse has no bearing whatever on the attitude to Islam of the modern, materialistic European States, priding on their secularism and religious neutrality.

570. Even according to the orthodox Christianity 'we have to consider Muslims as very near to ourselves in point of theology.' (Macdonald, Aspects of Islam, p. 2). But really the reference in the Qur'ān is to certain Ebionite sects. 'Epiphanius describes the notions of the Ebionites of Nabathaean, Moabitis, and Basanitis with regard to Adam and Jesus, almost in the very words of Sura III, 52, He tells us that they observed circumcision, were opposed to celibacy, forbade turning to the sunrise, but enjoined Jerusalem as their Kebla, ... that they prescribed washings, very similar to those enjoined in the Koran . . . ' (Rodwell, The Koran, Preface, p. XVIII). It must have been the points of contract, like these, with Islam that have won the approval of the Holy Qur'ān.

571. i. e., their comparative proximity to Islam and the Muslims.

572. i. e., the Christian community of the Prophet's time.

573. i. e., custodians of religion; those well versed in religious learning.

574. i. e., esoteric heads of religion. 'There were Christian monks as early as the 3rd century . . . . The monks and nuns were looked upon as the most consistent Christians, and were honoured accordingly.' (EBr. V, p. 676).

575. (and being meek and humble they do not disdain to listen to the voice of Truth). The description fits the 'heretics of the early centuries—the Ebionites and Nazarenes—rather than the later-day orthodox Churchmen.

وَإِذَا سَمِعُوا مَا أُنْزِلَ إِلَى الرَّسُولِ تَرَىٰ أَعْيُنَهُمْ تَفِيضُ مِنَ الدَّمْعِ مِمَّا عَرَفُوا مِنَ الْحَقِّ يَقُولُونَ رَبَّنَا

83. (واذا . . . الشهدين) And when they[1] hear[2] what has been sent down to the messenger thou seest[3] their eyes overflow with tears[4] because of the truth they have recognised.[5] They say: our Lord! we believe;[6] so write us down with the witnesses.[7]

84. (ومالنا . . . الصلحين) And why should we not believe in Allah[8] and in what has come down to us of the truth? And we long that our Lord will enter us[9] with the righteous people.

85. (فاثابهم . . . المحسنين) Therefore Allah will reward them, for what they said, with Gardens beneath which rivers flow as abiders therein. Such is the recompense of the well-doers.

86. (والذين . . . الجحيم) And those who disbelieved and belied Our signs, they shall be the inmates of the Flaming Fire.

SECTION 12

87. (يايها . . . المعتدين) O you who believe! forbid not[10] to yourselves the good things[11] Allah has allowed to you,[12] and trespass not;[13] verily Allah does not love the trespassers.[14]

---

1. The reference is to the good-natured Christians of the Prophet's time, who eventually became converts to Islam.

2. (as it is read out to them).

3. (O Prophet!).

4. (generated by the tenderness of their emotion). That the physical side of the tender emotion specially involves the lachrymal organs is a commonplace with the students of psychology. 'The lachrymal organs—gland and sac—are specifically affected under the tender feeling.' (Bain, Mental Science, p. 241). 'The circulation is accelerated by joy and tenderness, as is proved by the shining of the eyes. The appearance of tears . . . . would be the natural consequence.' (Ribot, Psychology of Emotions, p. 236).

5. (in this new Dispensation). Cf. the OT. 'For all the people wept' when they heard the words of the law.' (Ne. 8 : 9).

6. And thenceforth they were Muslims.

7. (to the truth of the holy Prophet and the Holy Qur'ān).

8. (as that belief is taught in the Qur'ān).

9. (in the Paradise).

10. (unto yourselves by taking vows).

11. (whether they be articles of food, or of clothing, or any other lawful pleasures).

12. Some well-meaning Muslims, imitating certain self-denying Christians, had vowed not to partake of delicious foods and to abstain from going in to their wives. This the holy Prophet strongly disapproved, declaring that he would have no monks and ascetics in Islam. The Quranic verse is also directed at such persons.

13. (the bounds of the Divine Law, by either forbidding the lawful or allowing the forbidden).

14. There is no sense and no merit in self-imposed vows of penance and abstinence unless they be in strict accordance with the rules set up by the Revelation.

وَاتَّقُوا اللّٰهَ الَّذِيْٓ اَنْتُمْ بِهٖ مُؤْمِنُوْنَ ﴿٨٨﴾ لَا يُؤَاخِذُكُمُ اللّٰهُ بِاللَّغْوِ فِيْٓ اَيْمَانِكُمْ وَلٰكِنْ يُّؤَاخِذُكُمْ بِمَا عَقَّدْتُّمُ

88. (وكلوا . . . مؤمنون) And eat of that with which Allah has provided you as lawful and good;[15] and fear Allah,[16] in whom you are believers.

89. (لا يؤاخذكم . . . تشكرون) Allah shall not take you to task[17] for[18] the vain in your oaths;[19] but He shall take you to task for what your oaths make binding.[20] Its atonement[21] is the feeding of ten poor men with the middle sort[22] of that with which you feed your household, or the clothing of them or the freeing of a slave;[23] but he who cannot afford,[24] for him is a fasting of three days.[25] That is the atonement of your oaths when you have sworn,[26] and bear in mind your oaths.[27] Thus[28] does Allah expound to you His commandments,[29] that haply you may return thanks.[30]

90. (يايها . . . تفلحون) O you who believe! wine[31] and gambling[32] and stone altars[33] and divining arrows[34] are only an abomination, a handiwork of Satan; so shun it, that haply you may thrive.

---

15. (and do not forbid them to you as an act of merit).

16. (who alone has a right to allow this and to forbid that).

17. (in this world; and so He has not instituted any expiation).

18. i. e., for the violation of.

19. لغو applied to speech is 'nought; of no account'. Vain oaths are those that are rash, unpremeditated and without design. See P. II, 490.

20. i. e., oaths of a promissory character, which are a sort of pledge referring to the future عقد in عقدت ايمانكم signifies 'ratification'.

21. i. e., of these deliberate oaths.

22. i. e., with the average; with what is neither prodigal nor niggardly.

23. i. e., freeing of a believer from slavery. رقبة is 'by a synecdoche, a slave, male and female; and a captive . . . . . And فك رقبة released a slave or a captive.' (LL).

24. (access to these alternatives).

25 (in succession).

26. (but are not going to fulfil them).

27. 'so that no unfulfilled oath may go unexpiated.' (Th).

28. i. e., in this wise way.

29. i. e., all other commandments. آيات is here obviously statutes, ordinances or commandments, not signs or tokens.

30. i. e., (to Him for these acts of Grace and Wisdom).

31. خمر includes all inebriating liquors. Wine is considered a sacred drink among the Jews. Far from being forbidden it is an integral part of their religious festivities. As 'wine gladdens the heart of men' and forms an important element in a festive meal, it has been ordered that 'our meal on the eve of Sabbath and Festival should begin with a cup of wine in honour of the day, and that mention should be made of the holiness of the day before partaking of the wine. The Kidduah consists of two blessings: one over the wine, and one that refers to the holiness of the day.' (Friedlander, The Jewish Religion, p. 341). 'The Bible condemns it not as such but only its abuse, and goes as far as to say that 'it cheereth God and man.' (Judg. 9: 13) Drunkenness had been, and is, the bane of many civilizations, ancient and modern, not excluding the religious classes. The evidence, in fact, shows that the vice 'was never absent from the Church nor from its clergy, and that it attained enormous proportions among the latter in our own islands, and in the 8th and 9th centuries on the continent also.' (DCA. I, p. 585). The place that wine occupied amidst the staple articles of food in the NT times is well shown by the fact that, in the case of a fire on the Sabbath day, only three necessaries of life were to be rescued, viz., a basket of loaves, a cake of dried figs and a jar of wine.' (EBi. c. 1569) See also P. II, nn. 438, 440.

32. 'A passion confined to no race or country, to no rank of society, to no plane of civilisation.' (ERE. VI, p. 170). ميسر includes all games of chance. By these two total prohibitions, the holy Prophet of Islam 'did much to abolish, once and for all, over the vast regions that own his sway, two of the worst and mos irremediable evils of European society—evils to the intensity of which the Christian governments of the nineteenth century are hardly yet beginning to awake.' (Bosworth Smith, op. cit. 258.) See also P. II, nn. 439, 440.

33. 91. (انما . . . منتهون) Satan only seeks to breed enmity[35] and spite[36] among you[37] by means of wine[38] and gambling[39] and would keep you from the remembrance of Allah and from prayer;[40] will you not then desist?[41]

92 (واطيعوا . . . المبين) Obey Allah and obey the messenger,[42] and beware;[43] and if you turn away, then know that upon Our messenger rests only the plain preaching.[44]

93. (ليس . . . المحسنين) No sin is on those who believe and work righteous works for what they have eaten[45] so long as they abstained[46] and believed and worked righteous works,[47] and shall again abstain[48] and believe,[49] and shall again abstain[50] and do well; and Allah loves the well-doers.

SECTION 13

94. (يايها . . . اليم) O you who believe! Allah shall surely test you[51] with aught of the chase[52] which your hands and your lances may reach,[53] in order that Allah may know[54] whoever fears Him unseen;[55] but he who will trespass[56] thereafter,[57] for him is a torment afflictive.

35. (in your behaviour).

36. (in your breasts).

37. (and thus subvert your solidarity).

38. 'The close relationship of alcoholism and crime is well known; 'and the statistics of Baer, Kurella, Gallavandis, and Sichart, show that from 25 to 85 per cent of all malefactors are drunkards.' (JE. I, p. 333). 'There is universal testimony as to the close relationship between excessive drinking and breaches of the moral law and the laws of the State. This is a direct consequence of the paralysis of the higher faculties, intellectual and moral, and the resulting free play given to the lower inclinations.' (ERE, I, p. 301). 'Alchohol belongs to a family of poisonous chemicals. Its theoretic food-value is of no use in practical dietetics. It is never a stimulant. It has a sedative drug-action in moderate doses, and a narcotic poison-action in excess .... Its use as a beverage is physiologically unsound, economically disastrous, socially disruptive, and materially poisonous!' (Dastur, op. cit., pp. 108-109).

39. The devastating results of the gambling on a large scale are too patent to be dwelt on at length. And as to the ethics, even according to the European moralists, gambling is nothing short of robbery by mutual agreement. (See ERE. VI, p. 166). Gambling houses are almost everywhere notorious centres of crime and prostitution. 'Sexual activity,' as observed by a German writer, 'is often combined with gambling, as is anything which will induce a state of high nervous excitement'. And gambling, remarks another observer, generally 'leads to other excesses—little good comes from easily got money; one is in the mood for pleasure, and he who loses seeks to drown his care—and so takes refuge in both wine and woman.' Says an English chronicler speaking of the 11th century England:—'Suicide was a thing that happened very often during this extraordinary period as the result of heavy betting; and wild extravagance was not confined to the young men, for the old gamblers were the most inveterate and the most reckless of the time. Staid statesmen lost as heavily and as madly as the raw striplings; and the insidious disease spread to the women . . . . Among the women gamblers the greatest tragedy was that many of them paid the debts which they could not meet in cash by the sacrifice of their honour.' (EMK. V, p. 2386). And who has not heard of the ancient Indian king Yudhisthira playing away all his wealth and kingdom, and finally his brothers, himself and his wife Drupidi, in a game of dice?

40. (which is the highest form of the remembrance of God).

41. (from such pernicious practices when their abominable nature has become apparent).

42. (in all their commandments). See P. V, n. 203.

43. (of infringing their statutes).

44. (of Our message; and that duty he has performed to the full).

45. (of things lawful in their days). The verse refers to the case of those Muslims who were dead before wine and gambling were declared forbidden, and who naturally had not abstained from them, altogether.

46. i. e., far from being sinners, they were wont to abstain from things forbidden in their days.

47. This presupposes their fear of God and their faith in Him.

48. (from a thing now forbidden but hitherto declared lawful).

49. (in all the Divine commandments, great or small).

50. (from it, if once more a thing now lawful is declared forbidden).

51. (in the near future).

52. i. e., by offering you plenty of it, while you are in pilgrims' garb and thus barred from the chase.

53. i. e., game at close quarters; within reach of your hands and your lances.

54. (demonstrably).

55. (and does not succumb to the temptation of hunting birds and beasts when closely surrounded by them).

56. (the bounds of law in this respect).

57. i. e., after the gaming is declared forbidden.

95. (يايها . . . انتقام) O you who believe! do not kill chase while you are in a state of sanctity,[58] and he among you who kills it wittingly, his compensation is the like[59] of what he has killed, in domestic flocks,[60] which two equitable persons[61] among you will judge: an offering brought to the K'aba;[62] or as an expiation the feeding[63] of the needy, or its equivalent in fasts[64] that he may taste the enormity of his deed.[65] Allah has pardoned what is past,[66] but he who returns,[67] Allah shall take retribution from him;[68] verily Allah is Mighty, Lord of Retribution.[68-A]

96. (احل . . . تحشرون) Allowed to you[69] is the game of the sea and its eating: a provision for you and for the caravan.[69-A] And forbidden to you is the game of the land[70] while you are in a state of sanctity. And fear Allah to Whom you shall be gathered.

97. (جعل . . . عليم) Allah has made the K'aba,[71] the Sacred House,[72] a maintenance[73] for mankind, and so also[74] the Sacred Month,[75] and the offering and the victim garlanded.[76] That is in order that you may know[77] that Allah knows all that is in the heavens and all that is in the earth, and that Allah is knower of everything.[78]

98. (اعلموا . . . رحيم) Know that Allah is Severe in chastising[79] and that Allah is Forgiving,[80] Merciful.[81]

58. See P. VI, n. 139.

59. i. e., equivalent in value.

60. See P. VI, n. 136.

61. i. e., persons of integrity, honour and experience.

62. الكعبة, as a proper noun, with the definite article, signifies the Sacred House; the square, or cubic, building in the centre of the Sacred Mosque in Makka; said to be so called because of its square or cubic form, or because of its height and its square form. (LL) See P. I, nn. 563, 578.

63. (for the value of that animal).

64. One fast computed as equivalent to the feeding of one pauper.

65. The purport of the entire passage is that the offender, by way of compensation, shall bring an offering to the Sanctuary of Makka, to be slain there and distributed among the poor, of some domestic or tame animal, equal in value to the wild animal he has killed; such as a sheep in lieu of an antelope. And this value is to be adjudged by two prudent and competent persons. Or the offender shall give a quantity of food to the poor equal in value to the animal-offering. Or else, he shall fast a proportionate number of days. (Bdh).

66. i. e., previous either to this particular revelation or to the prohibition of hunting while in the state of sanctity.

67. (to the offence after this express injunction).

68. (for his persistent disobedience).

68-A. See P. III, n. 220.

69. (while yet you are in the state of sanctity).

69-A. Notably the seafarers.

70. i. e., the catching of it, which does not necessarily imply the eating of it.

71. A massive stone building, oblong in size, 55 ft. in length, 45 in breadth, and with height a little above the length, standing in the middle of an open parallelogram of about 500 ft. by 530 ft. known as the Sacred Mosque, and having a door 7 ft. from the ground. See n. 62 above.

72. (to which due reverence is to be paid). See P. I, nn. 563, 566

73. i. e., a source of maintenance; an asylum of security.

74. i. e., of like sanctity.

75. (of Zul-Hijja in the second week of which the ceremonies of the Pilgrimage are performed).

76. (to mark them as offerings to God).

77. (by reflecting on the perfections of these Divine teachings).

78. i. e., His knowledge of everything, big or small, is perfect. Incidentally this repudiates the foolish doctrine of certain Greek philosophers that God has knowledge of 'universals' only, and not of particulars.

79. i. e., strict in enforcing respect for His commandments and in chastising those who violate what He has sanctified.

80. (so hasten to ask His forgiveness).

81. (so turn to Him in repentance and beseech His mercy).

99. (ماعلى . . . تكتمون) Naught rests on the messenger save the preaching,[82] and Allah knows what you disclose[83] and what you hide.[84]

100. (قل . . . تفلحون) Say thou:[85] equal are not the foul[86] and the pure[87] even though the abundance of the foul may please thee.[88] So fear Allah,[89] O men of understanding! that haply you may thrive.

SECTION 14

101. (يايها . . . حليم) O you who believe! ask not of things which if disclosed to you, may annoy you, and if you ask of them while the Qur'an is yet being revealed, they may be disclosed to you.[90] Allah has pardoned that,[91] and Allah is Forgiving,[92] Forbearing.[93]

102. (قد . . . كفرين) Surely people have asked questions[94] before you, and were then found disbelieving therein.[95]

103. (ما جعل . . . يعقلون) It is not Allah who appointed[96] aught of the bahīra[97] or the sā'iba[98] or the wasīla[99] or the hām;[100] but it is the disbelievers who have fabricated a lie against Allah,[101] and most of them do not reflect.

82. (of Our message; and that duty He has performed to the full).

83. (by words and deeds).

84. (in your hearts) i. e., your secret thoughts and inner feelings.

85. (O Prophet!).

86. i. e., that which is disapproved of and condemned by God.

87. i. e., that which wins His approval.

88. (seeing that it is displeasing to God and yet so abundant O reader!) اعجاب is inducing or exciting one to wonder and astonishment mixed with admiration.

89. (and seek His goodwill).

90. This anathematizes frivolous questioning on the part of the ignorant Arabs, sometimes merely to abate their idle curiosity, sometimes arising out of a false sense of piety.

91. i. e., He has overlooked much questioning so far, so be now mindful of the future.

92. (so He has forgiven your past misdeeds in this respect).

93. (so be not deceived, if He, even in the future, does not award immediate punishment in this world).

94. (of their prophets).

95. (by paying not the slightest heed to the answers returned by the prophets). Cf. the NT :—'Art thou the Christ ? tell us. And he said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe.' (Lk. 22 : 67).

96. (as imagined by the pagans).

97. i. e., mother-camel whose milk was dedicated by the pagan Arabs to their gods. 'Bahīra was the name given to a camel which had had ten young ones, her ear was then slit and she was turned loose to feed. When she died her flesh was eaten by the men only, the women being forbidden to touch it.' (Palmer).

98. i. e., a camel, turned loose, as a consecrated animal, to feed and exempted from common services. 'Sāiba signifies merely a camel turned loose, her being so turned out was generally in fulfilment of a vow.' (Palmer).

99. 'Wasīla was a term applied to any cattle, including sheep and goats, and generally meant a beast who had brought forth a male and female at the seventh parturition.' (Palmer).

100. i. e., the dedicated stallion. 'Hām was stallion camel which after begetting ten young ones was turned loose.' (Palmer).

101. (that He would be pleased with these superstitions) i. e., these superstitious rites are no ordinances of God, but the inventions of foolish pagans.

104. (وإذا . . . يهتدون) And when it is said to them: come to what Allah has sent down and to the messenger, they say:[102] enough for us is what we found our fathers on.[103] What: even though their fathers knew not aught[104] nor were guided.[105]

105. (يايها . . . تعملون) O you who believe! on you rests the case of yourselves;[106] it cannot harm you as to whoso strays so long as you keep yourselves guided.[107] To Allah is the return of you all;[108] then He will declare to you what you were wont to work.[109]

106. (يايها . . . الآثمين) O you who believe! the testimony among you,[110] when you are face to face with death, at the making of a bequest[111] shall be that of two equitable persons[112] from among you, or two others from among those not of you,[113] if you be journeying in the land and death afflicts you.[114] You should detain the twain[115] after the prayer,[116] if you[117] be in doubt,[118] and they should swear by Allah affirming: we shall not barter[119] it for a price,[120] even though he[121] be a kinsman,[122] and we shall not hide the testimony of Allah,[123] lest we should be of the sinners.[124]

102. (in sheer self-complacency).

103. To most of the polytheistic peoples, like the Arab pagans, religion is not a matter of sound reason and Divine Revelation, but a mere usage—a set of rites and dogmas handed down from the fathers to the sons.

104. i. e., never based their faith on sound reason.

105. (by Divine Revelation).

106. (primarily and in the first place). The first and foremost duty of every individual is to save his own soul, and not to be unduly worried over others. Cf. the NT:—'Let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another. For every man shall bear his own burden.' (Ga. 6: 4, 5).

107. i. e., so long as you keep to the path of right and virtue, and do your duty to others by persuading them to follow the course of rectitude, it matters little to you if they persist in their course of wickedness and wilful disobedience.

108. 'So do not lose patience if the culprits do not immediately get their deserts.' (Th).

109. (and shall judge each accordingly).

110. (in the matter of bequests).

111. The injunction to appoint executors is only advisory or recommendatory, not obligatory.

112. i. e., men of honour and integrity.

113. i. e., other than the Muslims.

114. (and no Muslim executors are available).

115. (in order to prevent any influence being brought to bear upon them.)

116. Preferably after the afternoon ('asr) prayer, but the hour of any other prayer would serve equally well if there is a sufficient gathering. The address is to the men of authority among the Muslims.

117. (O heirs of the deceased!).

118. (as to the truth of the executors' statements).

119. i. e., our evidence.

120. i. e., for a bribe.

121. i. e., the beneficiary.

122. (of ours, and his interests may be served by our evidence).

123. i. e., the true evidence, as enjoined by God.

124. The object of all this is obviously to eliminate the chances of false evidence in the matter.

107. (فان . . . الظلمين) If then it lits upon you that the twain had been guilty of a sin,[125] two others[126] should take their[127] place[128] from amongst those who were sinned against,[129] the two nearest of kin,[130] and they should swear by Allah affirming:[131] our testimony is worthier of credit than their testimony and we have not trespassed,[132] for then we would have been among the wrong-doers.

108. (ذلك . . . الفسقين) That should make it more likely that their testimony would be according to the fact thereof,[133] or they shall fear that other oaths[134] would be admitted after their oaths.[135] And fear Allah[136] and hearken[137] and Allah does not guide a wicked people.[138]

SECTION 15

109. (يوم . . . الغيوب) Beware of the Day when Allah will gather the messengers and say to them:[139] how were you answered?[140] They will say: no knowledge have we;[141] verily Thou, only Thou, art the Great Knower of things hidden.[142]

125. (of perjury).

126. (from among the heirs, after the executors have been called upon to produce their witnesses).

127. i. e., the executors, who are defendants now.

128. (as plaintiffs).

129. i. e., from among the heirs against whose interests the executors are now known to have committed sin.

130. (to the deceased testator in claims of inheritance).

131. 'The procedure was followed in an actual case in Apostle's life-time. A man from Medina died abroad, having made over his goods to two friends, to be delivered to his designated heirs in Medina. They, however, kept back a valuable silver cup. When this was found out, oaths were taken from those who knew, and justice was done.' (AYA).

132. (the bounds of truth).

133. i. e., true to the language and intention of the testator.

134. i. e., oaths, by the heirs contradicting and rebutting the executors' oaths.

135. (which fear would deter the executors from uttering falsehoods).

136. (O believers, one and all! by sticking to the truth and not having recourse to prevarication of any sort whatever).

137. (to his laws and commandments).

138. i. e., a people given to violating His laws and commandments in this world.

139. (in the presence of their rebellious peoples).

140. (by your people when you preached to them).

141. (of what was in their minds while we were alive, nor of what and how they were going to believe and act after our death).

142. (so also of how they perverted and mutilated our Message after us).

110. (اذ . . . مبين) Call to mind when Allah will say: O 'Isā, son of Maryam, remember My favour upon thee and thy mother[143] when I aided thee with the holy spirit,[144] so that thou spoke to mankind in the cradle[145] and in maturity,[146] and when I taught thee[147] the Book[148] and wisdom and Taurāt and the Injīl,[149] and when[150] thou formedest out of clay as though the likeness of a bird[151] by My command[152] and thou breathedest into it and it became a bird[153] by My command,[154] and thou healedest the born blind[155] and the leper[156] by My command;[157] and when thou causedest the dead to come forth[158] by My command[159]; and when I restrained the Children of Israel from thee[160] when thou camest to them[161] with evidences,[162] and those of them who disbelieved said: this[163] is but magic manifest.[164]

111. (واذ . . . مسلمون) Re-call when I revealed to the disciples:[165] believe in Me and My messenger, they said:[166] we have believed,[167] and bear thou witness that verily we are Muslims.[168]

112. (اذ . . . مؤمنين) Re-call when the disciples said: O 'Isā, son of Maryam,[169] can thy Lord send down[170] to us some food[171] from the heaven? He said: fear Allah,[172] if you are indeed believers.

113. (قالوا . . . الشهدين) They said:[173] we mean that we may eat of it[174] and we may set our hearts at rest[175] and we get assured[176] that thou hast spoken the truth to us[177] and we should be[178] its witnesses.[179]

143. Notice that it is God who as the Creator and Ruler is conferring His favours, and Jesus and Mary as creatures are honoured recipients of them.

144. (in a special way). For holy spirit see P. III, n. 7.

145. i. e., while yet an infant. 'Only one Evangelist, St. Luke, makes any mention in his Gospel of the years between the great events that signalised Christ's birth at Bethlehem and the day, some thirty years later, when He began His public ministry. And even St. Luke only tells us of one happening during that time, the encounter with the doctors in the Temple when he was twelve years old.

All the act of his childhood and boyhood is dismissed in two short sentences.' (The Catholic Times, London, 14-1-46). See P. III, n. 423.

146. See P. III, n. 424.

147. So Jesus (peace be on him !) was taught of God, even as our own holy Prophet was.

148. i. e., the revealed Books in general. The word is used in the generic sense.

149. (in particular). And so in all these matters the man Jesus stood in need of tutelage of God.

150. (to generate conviction in the minds of thy audience).

151. i. e., the form of a bird ; the counterfeit bird. 'He also made figures of birds which could fly, and of animals which could walk.' (Budge, op. cit., Intro. p. XXIX). See P. III, nn. 437 ; 438.

152. i. e., by the Divine will, and not by Jesus' own will.

153. i. e., a real live bird. 'On another occasion Jesus was said to have been playing with some boys on the Sabbath, modelling birds, oxen, camels out of clay. A Pharisee happened to pass by and after rebuking them for profaning the Sabbath proceeded, to their great grief, to destroy their handiwork with his foot. When Jesus saw this He clapped His hands over the sparrow He had made and cried, "Go ! Fly through all the world and live." Immediately the clay sparrow became alive and to the astonishment of the bystanders spread her wings and soared up into the sky.' (The Catholic Times, London, 14-12-45).

154. So all those miracles were caused for Jesus, and not by him.

155. Cf. Mt. 9 : 27-30 ; Mk. 8 : 22-25 ; Jn. 9 : 1-7.

156. Cf. Mt. 8 : 3 ; LK, 17 : 14, See P. III, n. 441.

157. i. e., by the sole will of the Creator, and not by that of His apostle or messenger.

158. 'The earlier rationalism strove to extrude from the story of Jesus all the miracles . . . . The later rationalism draws a distinction between the miracles of healing for which analogies can be found elsewhere, and the "nature miracles"—such as multiplying the loaves, raising the dead, walking on the sea, etc. The former, or some of them, are retained as well-attested and historical ; the latter are rejected. The dilemma is a peculiar one. For, on the one hand, the same records preserve both classes of works with the same simplicity, directness, and relevance ; on the other hand, the supposed distinction is not grounded on objective science, but has been created for the express purpose of dealing with the gospel story. Science has not yet drawn any such line as this imaginary one.' (ERE. VII, pp. 513-14). 'More than one legend tells us how Jesus, out of His great love and pity for mankind, recalled the dead to life. One day, as He was at play, Jesus heard the sound of bitter wailing and on enquiring was told that it was a poor mother weeping over her dead son. He thereupon hurried to the house, and touching the dead child on the breast said, "I say to thee, live and give joy to thy mother." 'The dead boy opened his eyes, looked up and smiled.' (The Catholic Times, London, 14-12-45). See P. III, n. 442.

159. Notice the constant refrain: 'by My command,' emphasizing the humanity of Jesus and deliberately combating the Christian idea of his divinity.

160. (Several times in thy life, when they attempted to do violence to thee). Cf. Jn. 8 : 59 ; 10 : 39.

161. 'Jesus did make his appeal steadily and unweariedly to Israel as the people of God . . . . When he sent out disciples to preach in his name (alike the twelve and the seventy), He commanded them to address "the lost sheep of the house of Israel." ' (ERE, VII, p. 520). See also p. III, n. 450.

162. (of thy messengership). The word includes both arguments and miracles.

163. (working of wonders and miracles).

164. According to the Jewish sources, 'Jesus learned magic in Egypt and performed his miracles by means of it . . . . The accusation of magic is frequently brought against Jesus,' (JE. VII, p. 171). 'The nearest approach to a defined opinion about Him in the Talmud is the statement that "he practised magic and deceived and led astray Israel," ' (ERE. VII p. 551). 'Now when the wise men saw that all were believing in him, straightway they bound him fast and led him before Helene, the queen, under whose hand was the land of Israel. They said unto her, This man is a sorcerer, and he deceiveth the world.' (Schoufield, According to the Hebrews, p. 41).

165. (through you, O Jesus!) For حواری see P. III, n. 458.

166. (to thee in reply).

167. (in thy Message and messengership).

168. Or 'we have surrendered (to the behests of God).'

169. This form of address is to indicate that not even the closest associates of Jesus regarded him as anything but a human being born of a woman. 'Apart from the Birth stories at the opening of Matthew and Luke (the exact significance of which in this respect is ambiguous) there is nothing in these three Gospels to suggest that their writers thought of Jesus as other than human.' (EBr. XIII, p. 16).

170. 'Can thy Lord send down—' on the tongue of the believing disciples only amounts to this: may there not be something in the Divine Plan to present the occurrence of such and such a miracle ?

171. مائدہ is not only 'a table with food upon it,' but also 'food itself even without a table' (LL). In the context, clearly it has no reference to 'a table' at all. It was only a miracle of 'cooked heavenly food' that the believing disciples asked for.

172. (and be not too free with asking signs and wonders frivolously).

173. (repudiating the implication of fun and frivolity).

174. (and to be blessed thereby). This was their first objective.

175. (by having this additional evidence). This is their second reason.

176. (all the more).

177. (as an apostle of God). The greater the evidence, the firmer the conviction.

178. (before others; and thus shall be better able to proselytize them). This is the third reason.

179. i. e., of thy miracle.

114. (قال . . . الرازقين) 'Isā, son of Maryam,[180] said: Allah, our Lord![181] send down to us some food[182] from the heaven, that it[183] may become an occasion of joy[184] to us—the first of us[185] and the last of us[186]—and sign from Thee;[187] provide us Thou,[188] and Thou art the Best of Providers.[189]

115 (قال . . . العالمين) Allah said: surely I am going to send it down to you.[190] but whoever of you[191] disbelieves[192] afterwards, I shall torment him with a torment which I shall not do to any of My creatures[193] of the worlds.

SECTION 16

116. (واذ . . . الغيوب) Re-call[194] when Allah will say:[195] O 'Isā, son of Maryam! was it thou who said[196] to the people:[197] take me and my mother as two gods[198] beside Allah? 'Isā[199] will say: hallowed be Thou:[200] it was not for me[201] to say[202] that to which I had no right;[203] had I said it, Thou wast sure to know it.[204] Thou knowest what is in my mind,[205] and I[206] do not know what is in Thy mind.[207] Verily Thou, only Thou art the Great Knower of things hidden.

117. (ماقلت . . . شهيد) I said not to them aught save what thou badest me:[208] worship Allah, Lord of me and Lord of you.[209] I was a witness over them[210] so long as I abode among them;[211] then when Thou tookest me[212] up, Thou hast been the Watcher,[213] and Thou[214] art a witness over everything.

180. (now satisfied that there was nothing disrespectful or arrogant about the prayer of the disciples).

181. Very noticeable is the fact that in the first and second Gospels the word 'Lord' is never used to describe Christ, though frequently used of God. (EBr. XIII, p. 16).

182. (cooked, not raw).

183. i. e., this cooked food descending from heaven.

184. (and pride), عيد is not necessarily 'a festival' or 'a periodical festival' as generally mistranslated. It is 'an occurrence that befalls, or besides, one of that happens to one,' or 'the time of return of joy and of grief.' There is no allusion here to the 'Last Supper' or any other Christian legend.

185. i. e., those of the present generation, who are naturally rejoiced and feel themselves honoured at this special mark of Divine grace.

186. i. e., those who shall come after us, who shall be happy in the thought that their fathers were the recipients of so distinguished an honour.

187. (of my prophetic office and Thy favour, strengthening the faith of the believers).

188. (with the food we are praying for).

189. i. e., the sole fountain-head of all our sustenance.

190. i. e., the disciples on whose behalf Jesus had prayed.

191. i. e., of the people of Jesus.

192. Or 'disacknowledgeth.' كفر (he behaved ungratefully) is literally the antithesis of شكر (he behaved gratefully). The warning is conveyed to those who would fall short of their duty to a sign of God so clear and unambiguous.

193. i. e., any other people of the time. The meaning is that the penalty of such an offender shall be worse than that of others.

194. (O reader !).

195. (on the Day of Judgment).

196. (whilst thou wast living on the earth).

197. i. e., those who call themselves thy people ; the Christians.

198. i. e., as objects of worship and adoration. The reference obviously is to the cult of Mary or Madonna—Mariolatry—common to most Christians. Compare the Angelical Salutation of the Roman Catholics :—

> 'Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now, and at the hour of our death. Amen.'

And their Angeleo Domini :—

> 'Pray for us, O Holy Mother of God.'

And the prayer of St. Bernard :—

> 'O most pious Virgin Mary ! . . . I cast myself at thy sacred feet, humbly deploring my sins, and beseeching thee to adopt me for thy child, and to take upon thee the care of my eternal salvation.'

And this Litany of the Blessed Virgin :—

> 'We fly to thy patronage, O Holy Mother of God ! despise not our petitions in our necessities, but deliver us from all dangers.'

And their Salve Regina :—

> 'Hail ! holy Queen, Mother of Mercy, our life, our sweetness and our hope. To thee do we cry, poor banished sons of Eve ; to thee do we send up our sighs, mourning and weeping in this valley of tears.'

'Of the growth of the Marian cultus,' the existence of which is undisputed, writes a modern Christian scholar 'alike in the East and in the West, after the decision at Ephesus it would be impossible to trace the history, ... Popular devotion gradually developed the entire system of doctrine and practice which Protestant controversialists are accustomed to call by the name of Mariolatry.' (EBr. XIV, p. 1000).

The Anatolian aspiration, according to another distinguished scholar, was to look for the divine nature in a feminine personality, 'and this was found at last in the idea of the "Mother of God." It was at Ephesus, the city of the goddess, that the earliest proof is found of an established cult of the Virgin Mary as the Mother of God; and in the Council held at Ephesus in A. D. 431 this cult was definitely established as a feature of the Orthodox ritual.' (ERE. IX, p. 908). See also P. VI, n. 265.

199. (greatly hurt with the blasphemous attitude of his so-called adherents). 'There is a great difference .... between the Christian religion and Christ's religion; between the structure of dogma erected by Greek philosophy on a Jewish soil, and the faith held by Christ himself;—the simple faith which every man can hold in common with him.' (Baily Saunders, in the Introductory Note to Harnack's Christianity and History, p. 15).

200. (from all these horrible blasphemies), i. e., the very idea of my partnership with Thee is repugnant to me.

201. (as one who could have no possible doubt as to Thy uniqueness).

202. (and preach).

203. (either in reason or in revelation), i. e., a thing so palpably false and so absurd in my mouth.

204. (and as there is no such thing in Thy all-comprehensive knowledge, it is clear that I could not have uttered any such blasphemy).

205. (and lies there unuttered; much more dost Thou know what I have uttered).

206. —a mere mortal; a created being like others—

207. (unless told by Thyself). This positively refutes and repudiates the Christian doctrine that the knowledge of Christ is coextensive with that of God. 'Our Lord as God is omniscient, since this is a property of the Divine nature. This is infinite knowledge.' (CD. p. 532)

208. —as befitted an humble servant and trusted messenger of Thee—

209. 'Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only thou shalt serve.' (Mt. 4: 10; Lk. 4: 8). See also P. VI, n. 526.

210. i. e. I could be aware of their words and deeds.

211. (as a living human being). And in the life-time of Jesus there was no dogma either of Trinity or of Sonship.

212. (unto Thyself, whether alive, as at first, or dead, as the time of my death). See also P. III, n. 469.

213. (and I can have no knowledge at all as to how and why they strayed from the path of Truth).

214. (and Thou alone).

أَنتَ الْعَزِيزُ الْحَكِيمُ ﴿١١٨﴾ قَالَ اللَّهُ هَٰذَا يَوْمُ يَنفَعُ الصَّادِقِينَ صِدْقُهُمْ لَهُمْ جَنَّاتٌ تَجْرِي مِن تَحْتِهَا الْأَنْهَارُ خَالِدِينَ فِيهَا
أَبَدًا رَّضِيَ اللَّهُ عَنْهُمْ وَرَضُوا عَنْهُ ذَٰلِكَ الْفَوْزُ الْعَظِيمُ ﴿١١٩﴾ لِلَّهِ مُلْكُ السَّمَاوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضِ وَمَا فِيهِنَّ وَهُوَ عَلَىٰ كُلِّ شَيْءٍ قَدِيرٌ ﴿١٢٠﴾ ع

118. (ان . . . الحكيم) Shouldst Thou torment them,[215] then verily they are Thy creatures[216] and shouldst Thou forgive them,[217] then verily Thou, only Thou, art the Mighty,[218] the Wise.[219]

119. (قال . . . العظيم) Allah will say,[220] this is a Day when their truthfulness[221] will benefit the truthful. Theirs shall be Gardens beneath which rivers flow; they shall abide there for ever. Well-pleased is Allah with them,[222] and well-pleased are they with Allah;[223] this is an achievement supreme.[224]

120. (لله . . . قدير) Allah's is the kingdom or the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is therein and He is Potent over everything.

---

215. (for their infamous blasphemies).

216. (and Thou as their Creator, Master and Owner hast every right to deal with them as Thou pleasest). The English word 'creature' is, at such places, more expressive of the Arabic عبد than its usual rendering 'servant' or 'bondman.'

217. All this is in repudiation of the Christian dogmas of atonement and judgment. It is God alone who shall be the Judge and Arbiter on the Last Day, and not any of His saints, prophets or apostles, nor Christ. Contrast this with the polytheistic doctrine of the Church :—'For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them: even so the Son quickeneth when He will. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son.' (Jn. 5 : 22). 'Our Lord, while affirming His filial subordination to the Father . . . . yet declares that He exercises the Father's whole power and authority :—the power to quicken those dead in sin, the power to raise men from literal death at the Last Day, and the power to judge the world.' (Dummelow, Commentary on the Holy Bible, p. 783-84).

218. i. e., Able to forgive one and all.

219. i. e., only forgiving those who in accordance with Thy infinite wisdom and universal Plan have borne witness to Thy unity.

220. (after this discourse is over).

221. i. e., their conformity to the true doctrines.

222. Which is the key to the highest and lasting bliss.

223. As a corollary to this, one may say that the true believer accepts the life of the universe also with passionate happiness rather than in the drab, discoloured way of stoic resignation.

224. i. e., achievement incomparable to any success in the world below.

سورة الأنعام مكية

Sūrat-ul-An'ām

The Cattle. VI

(Makkan, 20 Sections and 166 Verses)
In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION 1

1. (الحمد . . . يعدلون) All praise to Allah,[225] who created the heavens and the earth[226] and made the darkness and the light,[227] yet those who disbelieve equalize others with their Lord.[228]

2. (هو الذي . . . تمترون) He it is who created you of clay,[229] and then decreed a term[230] a term determined[331] is with Him[232]—and yet you waver.[233]

3. (وهو . . . تكسبون) He is Allah in the heavens and the earth.[334] He knows your secret[235] and your publishment[236] and He knows[237] what you earn.[238]

4. (وما . . . معرضين) And not a sign comes to them[239] of the signs of their Lord, but that they have been backsliding therefrom.

225. See P. I, n. 11.

226. (as also all other substances). He is the sole Creator, with no intermediate agencies or sub-deities as supposed by certain Greek philosophers. This also completely repudiates the Hindu conception of the universe, in which both Heaven and Earth are regarded as gods, and as the parents of gods, even though they are said to have been generated by gods. Sometimes one god,—Indra, or Agni, or Rudra, or Soma—sometimes all the gods together, are said to have generated or created heaven and earth, the whole world; and the act of creating is metaphorically expressed as building, sacrificing, or weaving.' (ERE. IV, p. 156). See also P. II, n. 111, 113; XV, n. 117.

227. (as also all other properties). Both are created beings and God is the source and Creator of both. This strikes at the root of dualism, and repudiates the position of those religions which hold light and darkness as uncreated beings existing from the beginning, and that light is the creation of good gods while darkness is associated with evil spirits. Cf. the OT:—'I form the light and create darkness.' (Is. 45:7).

228. (as objects of worship, attributing a co-partner or co-partners to Him), i. e., they are addicted to creature-worship ranging from fetishism—populating the universe with a variety of gods and goddesses—to Christolatry or Mariolatry.

229. (through Adam, the first man, O mankind!)

230. (of life for you).

231. (i. e., the time of Resurrection).

232. (alone). That time is known to Him only.

233. (Concerning Resurrection).

234. i. e., no other God or co-God exists anywhere in any form; there are no separate 'Heaven-gods' and 'Earth-gods.'

235. i. e., what you seek to conceal.

236. i. e., what you openly profess.

237. (by your deeds).

238. i. e., the rejectors of faith.

239. i. e., of the portents of His glory; of the arguments supporting the truth of His messengers.

5. (فقد . . . يستهزءون) Assuredly they belied the truth when it came to them, so now there is coming to them the tidings of what they have been mocking at.[240]

6. (الم . . . اخرين) Have they[241] not observed how many a generation before them We have destroyed[242] whom We had established on the earth as We have not established you,[243] and upon whom We had poured[244] rains from heaven, and beneath whom We had made the rivers flow[245]; yet We destroyed them for their sins,[246] and We produced after them a generation of others.

9. (ولو . . . يلبسون) And had We made him[254] an angel,[255] We would still have made him a man,[256] and We[257] would have confounded for them what they have now been confounding.[258]

10. (ولقد . . . يستهزءون) And assuredly mocked were the messengers before thee;[259] then at[260] what they scoffed beset those who had been mocking.[261]

240. i. e., they shall soon come to realize the terrible punishment which they are making a jest of.

241. i. e., the infidels of the Prophet's time.

242. (by way of punishment). The argument is from the history of the past nations, great, strong and wealthy, but now completely vanquished.

243. i. e., We had endowed them with far greater power and prosperity than We have endowed you with.

244. i. e., very copious showers of rain which fertilized their soils abundantly.

245. (in their cornfields and gardens). Or 'fertile streams.'

246. (in general, and the sin of polytheism in particular).

247. (O Prophet!) قرطاس literally is 'what one writes upon.' It was parchment that was commonly used as writing material in the Prophet's time.

248. (in sheer pugnacity).

249. i. e., the Arab pagans.

250. (whom we could see and talk to).

251. i. e., the holy Prophet.

252. (forthwith). i. e., their doom would have been sealed. So it was an act of mercy on the part of God that their demands were not complied with.

253. (to turn in repentance to God).

254. i. e., Our messenger.

255. —who is by nature invisible to human eye—

256. (in form and appearance, as men cannot bear the sight of an angel in his original form).

257. (as the ultimate cause of all causes).

258. i. e., even then they would have been confronted with the same difficulty which, according to them, is confronting them now.

259. (so the thing is not new in the history of the prophets and need not be taken too seriously, O Prophet!) Cf. the OT:—'They laughed them to scorn and mocked them.' (2 Ch. 30 : 10). 'They laughed us to scorn and despised us, and said, What is this thing that ye do?' (Ne. 2 : 19).

260. i. e., the judgment of God.

261. Cf. the OT:—'But they mocked the messengers of God and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy.' (2 Ch. 36 : 16).

SECTION 2

11. (قل . . . المكذبين) Say thou:[262] go about in the land and see how has been the end of the beliers.[263]

12. (قل . . . يؤمنون) Say thou: whose is all that is in the heavens and the earth?[264] Say thou; Allah's. He has prescribed mercy for Himself.[265] Surely He shall gather you together on the Day of Judgement, of which there is no doubt[266] Those who have lost their souls[267] shall not come to believe.[268]

13. (وله . . . العليم) His is whatsoever dwells in the night and the day;[269] and He is the Hearer,[270] the Knower.[271]

14. (قل . . . المشركين) Say thou:[272] shall I take for patron any other than Allah, the Maker[273] of the heavens and the earth.[274] He feeds,[275] and is not fed.[276] Say thou: I am commanded that I be the first[277] who surrenders himself,[278] and that: be thou not of the polytheists.

15. (قل . . . عظيم) Say thou:[279] verily I fear,[280] if I disobey my Lord, the torment[281] of a Mighty Day.

16. (من . . . المبين) From whom it is averted[282] on that Day, upon him indeed He has had mercy; that[283] is a supreme achievement.

---

262. (to these blasphemers, O Prophet!)

263. i. e., look at the ruins of the disobedient nations with great and glorious past.

264. i. e., all that exists in Space.

265. (in dealing with those who repent; so come to believe in His Unity and to profit by His mercy).

266. (and shall deal with each according to his deserts).

267. i. e., those who have destroyed their souls by refusing to give their ear to the Prophet, and thus wasting their innate propensities to good.

268. i. e., they do not exercise their will to believe, however earnest may be thy preaching to them.

269. i. e., all that exists in Time. So He is the Owner of whatever is in Time as well as of whatever is in Space. See n. 264 above.

270. (of what you utter by mouth).

271. (of what you have in heart).

272. (to the polytheists, after this fresh enunciation of the doctrine of monotheism, O Prophet!)

273. i. e., Creator out of nothing, by His mere all-powerful Will.

274. The two most common objects of worship. 'Of all the phenomena of nature the most universal is perhaps the sky .... No wonder that a phenomenon so universal and so impressive should at an early date have mystified men with wonder and awe and found a place in their religion.' (FWN. I, p. 19). And naturally in the polytheistic mythology the earth is the counterpart of the sky. 'In mythology the Earth, regarded as a person, is often conceived of as the wife of the Sky-god. We have seen that among the ancient Aryans of India the Sky and Earth were thus personified as Husband and Wife under the names of Dyaus and Prithivi, the father and mother of all living creatures.' (p. 316). Frazer, in his voluminous work, gives minute and accurate details of 'Sky-worship' in Vedic India, Iran, Greece, Rome, Babylonia, Egypt, China, Korea, Annam, Western Africa, Congo, Southern Africa, and Eastern Africa, and of 'Earth-worship' in Vedic India, Greece, Rome, Babylonia, Assyria, China, modern India, and in various parts of Africa and America.

275. (all His creatures).

276. (by any, because He is Independent of all needs). According to the crudities of the polytheistics peoples, the gods actually consume the food and drinks that are offered to them. The Babylonion gods, for instance, 'conceived of in such human wise, knew thirst and hunger as did men, and had to be propitiated by drink and food.' (Woolley, Abraham, p. 157). Also ERE. VI, p. 63; PC. II, p. 375. Christian nations have gone one better. Leaving the stage of feeding one's gods far behind, they unabashedly proceed to eat their god! What else is their well-known festival of Eucharist? 'The Catholic Church teaches that in the Eucharist, the Body and Blood of the God-man are really, truly, substantially, and abidingly present together with His Soul and divinity for the nourishment of souls, by reason of the Transubstantiation of the bread and wine into the Body and Blood of Christ, which takes place in the unbloody sacrifice of the New Testament, i. e., the Mass.' (CD. p. 345). And this is what is openly taught in the approved and authorised Catholic Catechism:—

Q. What is the Eucharist?

A. The sacrament of the body and blood, soul and divinity, of Jesus Christ, under the appearance of bread and wine.

Q. Are both the body and blood of Christ under the appearance of bread and under the appearance of wine?

A. Yes; Christ is whole and entire, true God and true man, under the appearance of each?

Q. Are we to believe that the God of all Glory is under the appearance of our corporal food?

A. Yes; as we must also believe that the same God of all Glory suffered death under the appearance of a criminal on the cross?

Q. How can the bread and wine become the body and blood of Christ?

A. By the goodness and power of God, with whom no work shall be impossible.'

277. (among my nation).

278. (to God entirely) i. e., I am commanded to be the first and foremost Muslim of my time.

279. (O Prophet! i. e., publish it to the world).

280. —even I, the infallible Prophet of God—

281. (prepared and meant for the rebellious).

282. —as it shall be from every believing and dutiful person—

283. i. e., this deliverance from torment and being the object of Divine mercy.

17. (وان . . . قدير) If Allah touches them with harm,[284] there is none to reverse it but He, and if He touch thee with good[285] then He is Potent over everything.[286]

18. (وهو . . . الخبير) He[287] is the Supreme above His creatures, and He[288] is the Wise, the Aware.

19. (قل . . . تشركون) Say thou:[289] what thing is the greatest in testimony?[290] Say thou: Allah is Witness between me and you,[291] and this Qur'ān[292] has been Revealed to me that I may thereby warn you and whomsoever it may reach.[293] Would you indeed testify that there is another god along with Allah?[294] Say thou:[295] I[296] do not testify.[297] Say thou:[298] verily He is the One God, and I am quit of what you join with Him.[299]

20. (الذين . . . يؤمنون) Those to whom We have given the Book[300] recognize him[301] as they recognize their own children;[302] yet those who have lost their souls will not believe.[303]

SECTION 3

21. (ومن . . . الظلمون) And who is a greater wrong-doer than he who fabricates a lie against Allah[304] or belies His signs?[305] Verily the wrong-doers shall not thrive.[306]

284. (either in this world or the Next, O man!).

285. (either in this world or the Next).

286. (and everyone else is powerless; so no false god can be of any avail to thee).

287. (in His infinite power).

288. (in His infinite knowledge and wisdom).

289. (O Prophet!) i.e., ask these infidels.

290. i.e., whose evidence can be the strongest in deciding a case.

291. (in the matters of dispute between us).

292. (the incomparability of whose excellences in itself constitutes Divine evidence).

293. (of the punishment to be meted out to the rebellious).

294. (either as His co-equal or sub-deity or incarnation, O infidels!)

295. (now that further argumentation with men of this perverse mentality would be futile).

296. (for my part).

297. (to a proposition so palpably absurd).

298. (O Prophet! i. e., publish it to the world).

299. (either as a Person or in His attributes).

300. The reference is to the Jews.

301. (as the true Prophet of God by his description in their books). There is little doubt, says a Christian biographer of the holy Prophet, that some at least among the Jews assured him that he might be, 'or even affirmed that he was that Prophet whom the Lord their God should raise up unto them of their brethren' (Muir, op. cit., p. 98). Some preferred to watch and wait, but 'some going further bore a direct and unequivocal testimony to his mission' (p. 99).

302. i. e., the prophets of their own race. The plural pronoun م in ابناءهم is used collectively, that is, not for individual Jews and their offspring, but for the race of Israel.

303. See nn. 267, 268 above.

304. (affirming what he ought to deny, such as the existence of gods and godlings).

305. (denying what he ought to affirm such as the description of the holy Prophet in the old Scriptures).

306. Cf. the OT: 'Their sorrows shall be multiplied that run after another god.' (Ps. 16: 4).

22. (ويوم . . . تزعمون) And let them beware the Day when We shall gather them all[307] together, then We shall say to those who associated: where are your associate-gods whom you have been asserting?[308]

23. (ثم . . . مشركين) Then they will have no excuse but to say:[309] by God our Lord, we have not been associaters.[310]

24. (انظر . . . يفترون) See! how they lied against themselves![311] and then these failed them what they had been fabricating.[312]

25. (ومنهم . . . الاولين) And of them[313] are some who hearken to thee,[314] and We have set veils[315] over their hearts so that they understand it not,[316] and in their ears heaviness, and any sign[317] though they may see, they will not believe in it;[318] inasmuch as when they come to thee, they dispute with thee.[319] Then those who disbelieve say: this[320] is naught but the fables of the ancients.[321]

26. (وهم . . . يشعرون) And[322] they prohibit others from it,[323] and they[324] themselves withdraw from it, and they destroy not[325] but their own souls, yet they perceive not.

27. (ولو . . . المؤمنين) And couldst thou see when they shall be held over the Fire;[326] and then they will say:[327] would that we were sent back[328] to the world and this time we shall not belie the signs of our Lord and we shall be of the believers.

---

307. i. e., the whole of mankind.

308. (as Our peers or equals).

309. i. e., exclaim, by way of protest, in utter bewilderment.

310. On the very first manifestation of God's might and glory the infidels will turn round on their most cherished beliefs.

311. This shows the weakness of their position subjectively or in point of their own conviction.

312. This shows the weakness of their position objectively or in point of fact and reality.

313. i. e., of these infidels of the Prophet's time.

314. (when thou art reciting the Qur'ān, O Prophet!).

315. (because they are not seekers of truth at all, and they never mean to profit by the Qur'ān).

316. See P. I, n. 47 ff.; P. XV, n. 122.

317. A more idiomatic rendering would be, 'every one of the signs.'

318 So pertinacious are they in their refusal to accept the truth!

319. (O Prophet!) i. e., whenever they come to thee, instead of giving thee a patient hearing, they come but to dispute and wrangle with thee. Such is the measure of their aversion to Islam.

320. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

321. 'اساطير . . . . signifies, lies; or falsehoods; or fictions; or stories having no foundation, or no right tendency or tenor لا نظام لها: such as we commonly term legends: or wonderful stories of the ancients.' A similar charge of 'borrowing from the ancient Scriptures', based on a list of 'parallel passages' is still hurled at the Holy Writ by a number of 'learned' Jews and Christians of the modern age—as if that could be any proof at all of the falsity of the Qur'ān! But it is something to note that by now some of their own scholars have come to recognize the utter hollowness of this charge. 'Is a religion less true because it recognizes itself in other garbs, because it incorporates in itself all that is best in the system which it expands or supplants? What if we found the whole Sermon on the Mount dispersed about in the writings of the Jewish Rabbis, as we unquestionably find some part of it.' (Bosworth Smith, op. cit., p. 13).

322. —to mark their utter aversion to the Qur'ān.

323. i. e., from believing in the Qur'ān.

324. (in their folly).

325. (thereby).

326. (to be flung therein, O Prophet!).

327. i. e., cry in extreme anguish.

328. (into the world).

إِنَّهُمْ لَكٰذِبُونَ ۝ وَقَالُوٓا إِنْ هِيَ إِلَّا حَيَاتُنَا الدُّنْيَا وَمَا نَحْنُ بِمَبْعُوثِينَ ۝ وَلَوْ تَرٰىٓ إِذْ وُقِفُوا عَلٰى رَبِّهِمْ

28. (بل . . . لكذبون) Yea! manifest has become to them[329] what they had been hiding.[330] And were they sent back[331] they would surely revert to what was prohibited to them;[332] and surely they are perfect liars.[333]

29. (وقالوا . . . بمبعوثين) And they[334] say: there is naught but the life of this world, nor are we to be raised [335]

30. (ولو . . . تكفرون) And couldst thou see when they shall be held before their Lord![336] He will say: is this[337] not real[338]? They will say:[339] aye! by our Lord! He will say: taste you then the torment,[340] for you have been disbelieving.

SECTION 4

31. (قد . . . يزرون) Lost surely are those who belie their meeting with Allah until when the Hour[341] comes on them on a sudden, and they will exclaim, Woe betide us, that we neglected it![342] while they will be bearing their burdens[343] on their backs. Lo! vile is what they will bear.

32. (وما . . . تعقلون) And naught is the life of this world[344] but a play[345] and a sports:[346] and surely the abode of the Hereafter[347] is better[348] for those who fear.[349] Do you not then reflect?[350]

33. (قد . . . يجحدون) We know well that surely what they say[351] grieves thee, but it is not thee[352] they belie;[353] it is the signs of Allah the ungodly gainsay.[354]

---

329. (contrary to what they expected).

330. i. e., the vileness of their actions.

331. (into the world according to their desire).

332. So that their contrition even before the seat of Judgment is not sincere, and signifies no change of heart on their part.

333. ل used as corroborative 'is sometimes difficult to express in English except by emphasis on pronunciation; as in اما انه لرجل كريم verily, or now surely, he is a generous man.' (LL) Here the sense is sought to be conveyed by adding 'perfect'.

334. i. e., the Arab pagans.

335. Pagan Arabia was no less materialistic than superstitious. And perhaps the greatest stumbling-block in its acceptance of Islam was this doctrine of Resurrection. 'All that Muhammed's opponents denied was the moral, and to their minds absurd doctrine of the resurrection and the other world.' (ERE. I, p. 672). 'The other world occupied a very small space in Semitic thought. Religion confined itself to this life; after death, it was held, even religion came to an end.' (Menzies, History of Religion, p. 161)

336. (for Judgment, O Prophet!).

337. i. e., life after death.

338. (and has in truth come to pass).

339. (and perforce admit).

340. (due to you).

341. (of death) ساعة is not only 'the resurrection' but also 'the death of any man.'

342. (in our lifetime).

343. (of sins and blasphemies).

344. (which alone the infidels consider as real).

345. (in being as unreal and unsubstantial).

346. (in being as transitory and ephemeral).

347. (which the infidels deny).

348. (as being higher and more lasting).

349. (their Lord).

350. Cf. the OT: 'And mine age is as nothing before thee; verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity. Surely every man walketh in a vain show.' (Ps. 39 : 5, 6). 'Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie: to be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter than vanity.' (Ps. 62 : 9)

351. (by way of unbelief and blasphemy).

352. (as a person, O Prophet!).

353. (The allusion is to a saying of Abū Jahl). He is reported to have said: 'Muhammad is certainly truthful; he has never uttered a falsehood. We do not impugn his honesty. What we stoutly deny is the message he claims to have received from High above.'

Curiously enough, one finds about exactly the same sentiments regarding the holy Prophet echoed and re-echoed by some of the modern and most finished European scholars. Dr. Roberts, for example, while admiring his many noble qualities, and above all 'his uprightness,' 'his simplicity' and 'his unselfishness', finds it difficult to defend him from being labelled 'an impious impostor' because of his 'fictious revelations.' (Roberts, op. cit., p. 1)

354. (so do not grieve overmuch, O Prophet! it is We who shall deal our affairs with them).

34. (ولقد . . . المرسلين) And messengers have assuredly been belied before thee,[355] but they patiently bore of which they were belied,[356] and they were persecuted, till Our succour reached them.[357] And none can alter the decisions of Allah;[358] and surely there has reached thee[359] some tidings of the sent ones.[360]

35. (وان . . . الجهلين) And if their aversion is hard upon thee,[361] then seek out, if thou canst, an opening[362] into the earth or a ladder to the heaven so that thou mayest bring to them a sign.[363] And had Allah willed,[364] He would have assembled them[365] one and all into the guidance,[366] so be not then thou of the ignorant.[367]

36. (انما . . . يرجعون) It is only those who hearken[368] that respond.[369] And as to the dead, Allah will raise them and thereafter to Him they will be returned.[370]

37. (وقالوا . . . يعلمون) And they say: why[371] is not a sign[372] sent down upon him from his Lord?[373] Say thou: verily Allah is able to send down a sign;[374] yet most of them know not.[375]

38. (وما . . . يحشرون) And there is not an animal on the earth[376] or a fowl[377] with its two wings but are communities like you.[378] And We have not been remiss in respect of aught in the Book;[379] then unto their Lord they[380] shall be gathered.

---

355. (so this opposition by thy people is nothing novel).

356. (so the plain course for thee also is to remain patient).

357. (at long last, which made them victorious and vanquished their enemies).

358. i. e., His decrees and promises.

359. (through the Qur'ān).

360. (and of the Divine aid they received). The passage means: thou hast been already acquainted with the stories of the former prophets: what persecutions they underwent at the hands of their own people, and lastly how God punished their enemies, according to His unalterable promise.

361. (on account of thy excessive solicitude for them).

362. (whereby thou mayest penetrate into the inward parts of the earth).

363. (such as they desire from bowels of the earth or from above the skies). The holy Prophet in his irrepressible eagerness for the conversion and salvation of his worst persecutors, sometimes longed for particular miracles and wonders, named and specified by the pagans, to be performed. The reply of the Qur'ān in effect is: if so many signs and evidences had failed to carry conviction to these malcontents, where was the good of effecting specific miracles and wonders?

364. (in His infinite wisdom and in conformity with His universal Plan).

365. (on the right path).

366. (but His Plan is that only those shall find guidance who would seek it).

367. (now that the Divine Scheme is revealed).

368. (to the call of the Messenger with an open heart and with fairness of mind). That is the cardinal Divine law of guidance.

369. (to the call of the truth).

370. (for retribution). So the infidels are sure to be visited by the judgment in the Hereafter, and none should be lulled into the comforting thought that they have escaped punishment in this world.

371. لو لا is 'wherefore', not 'unless' as generally mistranslated. لو لا فعلت كذا means, Wherefore didst not do thou such a thing? and لو لا تفعل كذا means, Wherefore wilt not thou do such a thing?' (LL)

372. (such as we desire).

373. (by way of giving a visible demonstration to his apostleship). Cf. the NT: 'A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the prophet Jonah.' (Mt. 16:4). 'And he sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation. And he left them. (Mk. 8:12)

374. 'A sign' signifies 'any sign', 'any wonder'.

375. (the consequence of what they ask) viz.. if miracles were to be performed to order, and the infidels still refused to believe, immediate death and destruction would be their doom.

376. (and on the sea).

377. طائر is anything flying, whether bird or insect.

378. (in this respect, that they also would be raised after their death and made to stand before God).

379. (of Our eternal decree) i. e., everything is registered in our Tablet of Knowledge).

380. i. e., men and animals all.

39. (والذين . . . مستقيم) And those who belie Our signs are deaf[381] and dumb,[382] in darkness.[383] Allah sends astray[384] whom He will,[385] and He puts on the right path whom He will.[386]

40. (قل . . . صدقين) Say thou; look you now: were Allah's torment to come upon you,[387] or the Hour come upon you, would you then cry to other than Allah,[388] if you are truthful?[389]

41. (بل . . . تشركون) Aye! to Him alone you would cry,[390] and if He willed, He would remove that for which you cried to Him,[391] and you would forget at that time what you now join with Him.

SECTION 5

42. (ولقد . . . يتضرعون) And assuredly We sent Messengers unto communities before thee,[392] then[393] We seized them with adversity[394] and distress,[395] that haply they may humble themselves.[396]

43. (فلولا . . . يعملون) Wherefore did they not, when the affliction upon them came from Us, humble themselves?[397] But their hearts became hardened[398] and Satan made fair-seeming to them what they were wont to do.[399]

44. (فلما . . . مبلسون) Then when they forgot that of which they were reminded,[400] We opened upon them the doors of everything,[401] until when they boasted of what they were given,[402] We seized them on a sudden, and lo! they were dumbfounded.

45. (فقطع . . . العلمين) Then the people who committed wrong[403] were cut off completely. And all praise is to Allah, the Lord of the worlds.[404]

381. (to the call of truth).
382. (in declaring truth).
383. (profound and manifold).
384. (in consequence of his own misuse of his discretion).
385. (in conformity with His Universal Plan).

386. (out of His grace and mercy).

387. (as it came upon generations of old).

388. (for help and deliverance).

389. (in respect of your belief in other deities) i. e., if consistent and honest in your profession you must call upon those other deities and not upon God in moments of extreme danger and affliction.

390. (as is evidenced every day when you are confronted with serious difficulties).

391. (to deliver you from).

392. (O Prophet!).

393. (when those peoples rejected them).

394. (such as famine and scarcity). بأساء has special reference to poverty.

395. (such as diseases and mortality). ضرآء has special reference to sickness.

396. i. e., that their hearts may be softened by these calamities. Cf. the OT: 'And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee' (Dt. 8 : 2). 'It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes.' (Ps. 119 : 71).

397. (and become penitent, so that they would have been forgiven).

398. (and they deserved their doom). 'He, that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.' (Pr. 29 : 1).

399. (and confirmed them in their career of crime and guilt).

400. (constantly by their prophets).

401. (Good and pleasant), i. e., We gave them all manner of plenty, and their prosperity became a snare to them.

402. (and became steeped in denial and defiance).

403. (and persisted in their course of irreligion and impiety).

404. (who in His beneficience utterly destroyed this rebellious element).

47. (قل . . . الظلمون) Say thou:[412] look you now, were Allah's chastisement to come upon you suddenly and openly,[413] would there be destroyed any but the wrong-doers?[414]

48. (وما . . . يحزنون) We do not send the sent ones except as bearers of glad tidings[415] and warners.[416] Then whoever believes and amends[417] on such shall come no fear nor they shall grieve.

49. (والذين . . . يفسقون) And then who belie Our signs—torment shall overtake them[418] for they have been transgressors.

50. (قل . . . تتفكرون) Say thou: I do not say that with me[419] are the treasures of Allah,[420] nor I know the Unseen;[421] nor I say to you that I am an angel.[422] I but follow what has been Revealed to me.[423] Say thou: are the blind[424] and the seeing[425] equal? Will you not then ponder?

---

405. (to these infidels, O Prophet!).
406. (so that you could hear nothing).
407. (so that you could see nothing).
408. (so that you could know and comprehend nothing).
409. i. e., has any of your false deities any such power?
410. (and arguments of Our true religion).
411. (from pondering on the conclusions that their accepted premises lead to).
412. (to these infidels, O Prophet!).
413. (and preceded by some sign or warning).
414. (by that Divine visitation).
415. (to the believers and the godly).

416. (to the rejectors and the ungodly). In neither case it is the business of a prophet to work wonders at the bidding of the scoffers. The proper role of a messenger is only to deliver the Divine message.

417. (his life and conduct according to the teachings of the Prophet).

418. (either in this world or the Next).

419. i. e., in my power.

420. i. e., the illimitable treasures of His omnipotence and omniscience.

421. (except that portion of it which has been taught to me by God).

422. (but am a mere human being).

423. Contrast with this sublime doctrine of prophethood in Islam the role of Christ in Christianity: 'The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hands.' (Jn. 3 : 35). 'I and my Father are one.' (Jn. 10 : 30). 'All things that the Father hath are mine.' (Jn. 16 : 15). Surely the polytheists of the grossest variety could hardly go further!

424. i. e., the believer in polytheism.

425. i. e., the believer in monotheism.

52. (ولا . . . الظلمين) And do not drive away[428] from before thee those[429] who call upon their Lord morning and evening seeking His grace[430]. Not on thee is their reckoning,[431] nor on them aught of thy reckoning,[432] so that thou mayest drive them away[433] and thus become of the wrong-doers.[434]

53. (وكذالك . . . با لشكرين) And thus[435] We have tried some of them[436] by means of others, that they[437] might say:[438] are those they whom Allah has favoured among us?[439] Is not Allah the Best Knower of the thankful?[440]

54. (واذا . . . رحيم) And when those who believe in Our signs come to thee,[441] say thou: peace be on you, your Lord has prescribed mercy on Himself;[442] so that any of you who does an evil through ignorance[443] then repents and amends,[444] then verily He is Forgiving,[445] Merciful.[446]

426. i. e., with the Holy Qur'ān, O Prophet!

427. (and mend their ways by thy warning).

428. (from thy company, O Prophet!).

429. (of the humble and lowly Muslims).

430. Or 'goodwill'. وجه, besides 'face or countenance', also signifies 'pleasure'. Some of the conceited Quraish had suggested to the holy Prophet to send away the humble Muslims from his presence so that the Quraish notables might come and join his company.

431. i. e., decision as to their inner motives and intentions.

432. i. e., decision as to thy inner motives and thoughts.

433. (on that account) i. e., on the ground of their hidden insincerity.

434. i. e., a doer of that which is not meet or proper.

435. i. e., in this wise; by making the Muslims poor and lowly and the infidels rich and influential.

436. By 'some of them' are meant the infidels. It is they who are put on trial.

437. i. e., the rich and proud pagans.

438. (of the humble Muslims).

439. 'Are they the elect of God ?' Could these persons with empty purses and with no position be said to be the favourites of God?' Thus spoke the 'leaders' of the Quraish in derision and scorn.

440. i. e., God alone knows best who performs his duty by Him and who does not, and He guides each according to his desert. This moral capacity has nothing to do with poverty and riches.

441. (O Prophet !).

442. (in dealing with you).

443. (clouding his judgment).

444. (his conduct for the future).

445. (so He will not take him to task).

446. Mercy is the positive counterpart of the attribute of forgiveness.

SECTION 7

56. (قل . . . المهتدين) Say thou: verily I am forbidden to worship those whom you call upon beside Allah. Say thou: I shall not follow your vain desires,[448] for then I shall be gone astray, and shall not remain of the guided.

57. (قل . . . الفصلين) Say thou: I stand upon an evidence from my Lord, and you belie it;[449] not with me[450] is what you would hasten on.[451] Then decision is but of Allah.[452] He recounts the truth, and He is the Best of Deciders.[453]

58. (قل . . . بالظلمين) Say thou: if what you fain would hasten on[454] is with me, the affair would have been decided between me and you,[455] and Allah is the Best Knower of the ungodly.[456]

59. (وعنده . . . مبين) And with Him are the keys of the Unseen; none knows them but He.[457] And He knows whoever is in the land and in the sea. Not a leaf falls but He knows it, nor a seed-grain grows in the darkness of the earth, nor aught of fresh[458] and dry[459] but is in a luminous Book.[460]

447. (and the path of light may become entirely distinct from the path of darkness).

451. i. e., some miraculous punishment from high above instantaneously killing the defiant infidels.

453. (whose decisions are invariably based on Wisdom and Discernment).

454. i. e., your destruction by some miraculous punishment.

455. (by now) i. e., out of my solicitude for your guidance I would have performed any miracle that you demanded, and you as incorrigible offenders would have rejected them as well, and this would have brought on you immediate destruction.

456. (and of how to deal with them).

457. i. e., far from possessing them, none has even a knowledge of them. He alone is Omniscient, Omnipotent.

459. Or 'withered'.

460. Already recorded in God's Register of Decrees.

يَعْلَمُ مَا جَرَحْتُمْ بِالنَّهَارِ ثُمَّ يَبْعَثُكُمْ فِيهِ لِيُقْضَىٰ أَجَلٌ مُسَمًّى ثُمَّ إِلَيْهِ مَرْجِعُكُمْ ثُمَّ يُنَبِّئُكُمْ بِمَا كُنْتُمْ تَعْمَلُونَ ﴿٦٠﴾

60. (و هو . . . تعملون) And He it is who takes your souls by night[461] and knows what you earn by day. Then He raises you[462] therein[463] that there may be fulfilled[464] the term allotted.[465] Thereafter to Him shall be your return; and then He shall declare to you what you have been working.[466]

SECTION 8

61. (و هو . . . يفرطون) And He is the Supreme[467] over His creatures[468] and He sends guardians over you[469] until when death comes to one of you Our messengers[470] take his soul, and they do not fail.[471]

62. (ثم . . . الحسبين) Then they all shall be taken back to Allah, their true Master.[472] Lo! His shall be the decision,[473] and He is the Most Swift of Reckoners.

63. (قل . . . الشكرين) Say thou:[474] who delivers you from the darkness[475] of the land and the sea, when you cry unto Him[476] in humility and secretly;[477] if He delivers us from this, we will surely be of the thankful.[478]

64. (قل . . . تشركون) Say thou:[479] Allah delivers you from this and from every pain, yet you join thereafter[480] others with Him.[481]

461. (in sleep). A sleeping person may truly be said to be non-existing. Cf. Hume, the British philosopher: 'When my perceptions are removed for any time, as by sound sleep, so long am I not sensible of myself, and may be truly said not to exist.'

462. i. e., He restores to you your souls.

463. i. e., in the day time.

465. i. e., the term of life for every individual.

466. (and shall deal with each accordingly).

467. القاهر as an epithet applied to God means, 'The Subduer of His creatures by His sovereign authority and power, and the Disposer of them as He pleaseth, with and against their will.' Or 'the Overcomer, or Subduer, of all created beings.' (LL)

468. (by His majesty).

469. i. e., angles to act as your guardians and to register your deeds.

470. i. e., angels; the angel of death and his assistants.

471. (in their duty) i. e., they take the soul when and where commanded.

472. (that He may judge them). Literally مولى is a lord or chief.

473. (and no other's). This is specially to combat the Christian doctrine representing Christ as Judge. 'The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works, (Mt. 16:27). 'When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: and he shall set the sheep on his right hand but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father.' (Mt. 25:31-34). 'That there will be a General Judgment is an article of faith. The judge will be Christ.' (CD. p. 523). 'In the Gospels, while the Father is spoken of as Judge, Christ's influence at the Judgment is also spoken of and more generelly He Himself is Judge, and exercises this function on all men.' (ERE. V, p. 325)

474. (unto mankind, O Prophet!).

475. i. e., terrors.

524. Abraham of the Bible. (2160-1985 B. C.). See P. I, nn. 556, 559, 618 ff.

525. 'Terah' of the Bible; variously spelt as Zarah and Therach in the Talmud and Athar by Eusebius. 'The chief officer of King Nimrod, and a great favourite with his royal master; (Polano, op. cit., p. 30). 'The apocryphal books of the Old Testament such as the Book, Jasher, represent Terah to have been a great soldier and commander of the armies of the king of Babylon.' (Marston, The Bible is True, p. 108). That he was an idolater is also affirmed by the Bible. 'Your fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood in old time, even Terah, the Father of Abraham, and the father of Nachor: and they served other gods' (Josh. 24 : 2). 'According to Midrash, Terah, in addition to being an idolater himself, made and sold idols.' (JE. XII, p. 107). According to Muslim traditions he was a carver of idols.

526. 'Idolatry and image-worship form a very striking feature of the Babylonian religious system, and already meet us in an advanced stage of development in the earliest cultural period of which material 'remains have been preserved.' (ERE. VII, p. 117). 'Even Therach, who still remained chief officer to the king, became a worshipper of idols. In his house he had twelve large images of wood and stone, a separate god for each month in the year, and to these he prayed and made obeisance (Polano, op. cit, p. 34). See also n. 525 above.

527. i. e., steeped in gross polytheism. The Babylonian religion was an admixture of animism, image-cult, and nature-worship. 'The religion of Babylonia in the earliest form known to us may be defined as a combination of local cults with animistic conceptions of the power of nature, with which man was either brought into immediate contact, or which affected his aims and his welfare. Each centre had its special patron deity—in most cases conceived as masculine—who was brought into association with some natural phenomenon. The two powers most commonly chosen were the sun and the moon, and by the side of these we find streams and stones personified as gods.' (DB. V, pp. 536-37).

528. i. e., We gave him a right apprehension of the government of the world and the heavenly bodies.

529. (this We did).

530. i. e., may grow firmer in his faith. Cf. the Talmud. 'From his earliest childhood Abraham was a lover of the Lord. God had granted him a wise heart ready to comprehend and understand the majesty of the Eternal, and able to despise the vanity of idolatry. (Polano, op. cit., p. 33).

531. (once upon a time).

532. This may be either Jupiter (Marduk), the chief god or Venus (Ishtar)

the chief goddess, of Babylonia.

533. (to his people, by way of chiding them).

534. (and yours, as you assert). The star-worship of the Babylonians is almost proverbial. It formed an important and integral part of their religion.

535. i. e., uttered publicly.

536. (as Lords) i. e., the bodies that suffer change at the hands of some one else are not fit to be assumed as gods. Obviously, this reasoning of Abraham is not to convert himself, but to convince the polytheists all around him.

537. – after this argument had no effect on the polytheists—

538. (and shined forth in splendour and impressed the onlookers). 'Then the moon rose and when Abram saw it shining in the heavens surrounded by its myriads of stars, he said, "Perhaps these are the gods who have created all things," and he uttered prayers to them. But when the morning dawned and the stars paled, and the moon faded into silvery whiteness, Abram knew God, and said, "There is a higher power, a Supreme Being, and these luminaries are but His servants, the work of His hands." From that day even until the day of his death, Abram knew the Lord and walked in His ways.' (Polano, op. cit., p. 34).

539. (by such signs and arguments). When quite a child, beholding the brilliant splendour of the noonday sun and the reflected glory which is cast upon all objects around, he said, "Surely this brilliant light must be a god, to him will I render worship." (Polano, op. cit., p. 33). According to Josephus, the monotheism of Abraham 'was derived from the irregular phenomena that were visible both on land and sea as well as those that happen to the sun, and moon, and all the heavenly bodies.' ("Ant", I. 7 : 1).

540. i. e., of the moon-worshippers. 'Temples to the moon-god are found in all the large cities of Babylonia and Assyria. (EBr. XX, p. 703). Ur, the Chaldean capital, 'was an ancient seat of lunar worship.' (JE. XII, p. 380). 'The great temple of the Third Dynasty at Ur was dedicated to the Moon Goddess. The temple was the abode of the patron deity, and the city was its appanage; the chief priest as the representative of the deity was the ruler of the city and state.' (Gregory, op. cit., p. 13).

541. —after even this argument had had no effect on his people—

542. (and shine forth in splendour).

543. (and the highest, as the same appears to the naked eye). 'In ancient Babylonia the Sun was worshipped from immemorial antiquity. The ideogram of the Sun, like that of the moon, in the Babylonian language is always preceded by a determinative which implies divinity . . . . There was no deity of the pantheon whose worship enjoyed an equally continued popularity from the earliest to the latest time both in Babylonia and Assyria.' (FWN. I, pp. 529-530).

544. (i. e. idols and heavenly bodies). 'As the twilight deepened the youth ceased his supplications, saying, "No, this cannot be a god. Where then can I find the Creator, He who made the heavens and the earth?" 'He looked towards the west, the south, the north, and to the east.' (Polano op. cit., p. 33).

565. (Noah of the Bible: an ancestor of Abraham).

566. The antecedent of this pronoun is Abraham who is the principal person spoken of in the passage.

566-A. David of the Bible (D. 962 B. C.)

566-B. Solomon of the Bible. (D. 932 B.C.)

567-B. John the Baptist. (D. 30 C.E.)

567-C. Jesus of the NT. (B.C. 29 C.E.)

568. For the identity of Ilyās see P. XXIII, n. 226.

569. Elisha of the Bible, the successor of Elijah. See 1 Ki. 19 : 16, 19 etc. 'Of no biblical personage are so many miracles recounted as of him.' (VJE. p. 202).

570. (by his apostleship).

571. —even they, the chosen ones, the favoured ones—

572. with Him.

573. This entirely negatives and refutes the charge of heinous offences and idolatrous practices brought against these high and holy personages by the compilers of the Bible.

574. (and yet they were denied by their peoples).

575. i. e., the present-day infidels.

576. i. e., in thy prophethood!

577. i. e., belief in thy prophethood, O prophet!

578. (so be consoled and grieve not, O Prophet!). The reference is to the Refugees (muhājirīn) and the Helpers (anṣār) of the holy Prophet's time.

579. i. e., the prophets named in the preceding verses.

580. in the ways of patience and perseverance.

581. (in this respect, and be not downcast or dejected, O Prophet!).

582. (which I should covet, and the loss of which I should fear).

583. i. e., for this preaching and publishing of the Holy Qur'ān. I have no purpose of my own to serve by this vocation.

584. (for their own benefit). Note the universality of the Qur'ānic message. It addresses itself not to the Arabs, but to the world at large. The Holy Book, even according to the testimony of the non-Muslim observers, 'has exercised a great control over the destinies of mankind, and still serves as a rule of life to a very large portion of our race'. (Draper, Intellectual Development of Europe, I, p. 340). And to them it is a matter of wonder . . . , 'how deeply to this book Asia and Africa are indebted for daily guidance, how deeply Europe and America for the light of science.' (p. 345). According to one of the most recent European scholars 'though the youngest of the epoch-making books, the Koran is the most widely read book ever written.' (Hitti, op. cit., p. 126).

SECTION 11

91. (وما . . . يلعبون) They[585] did not estimate Allah with an estimation due to Him, when they said;[586] on no human being has God sent down anything at all.[587] Say thou: who sent down the Books with which Mūsā came, a light and guidance to mankind, which you have made into separate parchments.[588] Some of it you disclose and much of it you conceal.[589] And you were taught what you know not,[590] neither you[591] nor your fathers. Say thou: Allah.[592] And leave them alone sporting[593] in their vain discourse.

92. (وهذا . . . يحافظون) And this is a Book[594] We have sent down,[595] blessed[596] and confirming what has been before it.[597] And it is sent that thou mayest warn with it the mother of towns[598] and those around it.[599] And those who believe in the Hereafter believe in it[600] and they guard the prayer.

---

585. i. e., the infidels in general; the Jews in particular.

586. (going so far in their perversity as to deny the gift of Revelation altogether).

587. (by way of verbal and literal Revelation).

588. Or, the separate 'Books' of the Old Testament! O Jews!

589. (as it may suit your purpose).

590. (before receiving that Book).

591. (of the present generation of Israel).

592. i. e., it is He Who sent down that Book.

593. (and cavilling).

594. (similar to the Torah).

595. (to thee, O Prophet!).

596. i. e., abounding in good. 'Blessed' not only in the sense that it has received God's blessings, but also in the sense that it brings blessings, both temporal and spiritual, to others. 'A book which has . . . . been the consolation and the support of millions in many ages.' (Lecky, op. cit., II, p. 106).

597. (of other Scriptures).

598. (Primarily and in the first instance ام القرٰے is the mother of the towns; the metropolis particularly Makka; because asserted to be in the middle of the earth; or because it is the Kiblah of all men, and thither they repair; or because it is the greatest of towns in dignity.' (LL) See also P. XXV. n. 30.

599. (in general). i. e., the whole of mankind.

600. i. e., in this Book.

93. (ومن . . . تستكبرون) And who is a greater wrong-doer than one who fabricates a lie against Allah or says: a Revelation has come to me whereas no Revelation has come to him in aught, and one who says[601] I shall send down the like of what Allah has sent down. Would that thou seest when the wrong-doers are in the pangs of death while the angels[602] are stretching forth their hands[603] saying: yield up your souls; to-day you will be awarded a torment of ignominy for what you have been saying of Allah other than the truth, and against His signs you were wont to be stiff-necked.[604]

94. (ولقد . . . تزعمون) And now[605] ye are come to Us singly[606] even as We created you for the first time,[607] and you have left behind your backs what We had granted to you;[608] and We do not see along with you your intercessors[609] whom you fancied were Our associaties in respect of you[610] as you asserted. Now[611] are the ties between you[612] severed, and strayed from you is what you were wont to assert.

SECTION 12

95. (ان . . . تؤفكون) Allah is the Cleaver of seed-grain and the date-stone.[613] He brings forth the living from the lifeless[614] and He is the Bringer-forth of the lifeless from the living.[615] Such is Allah;[616] whither away are you then deviating?

96. (فالق . . . العليم) Cleaver of the dawn.[617] He has appointed the night as a repose[618] and appointed the sun and the moon[619] according to a reckoning.[620] That[621] is the disposition of the Mighty,[622] the Knowing.[623]

97. (وهو الذى . . . يعلمون) It is He who has made for you[624] the stars that you may be guided[625] with them in the darkness[626] of the land and the sea.[627] Surely We have expounded the signs[628] for a people who know.

601. in a jeering mood.

602. (of death). The plural form of the word denotes the class of angels.

603. (to snatch the souls of these ungodly people). The phrase may also mean: 'The angels being made to have dominion over them by absolute force and power.' (LL)

604. All this will have the effect of striking further terror in their hearts.

605. i. e., on the Day of Judgment. Thus would God address the culprits.

606. i. e., alone, and separated from all your allies of whose support you were so confident in your lifetime.

607. i. e., naked and helpless; bereft of all your possessions.

608. (of property, and of which you used to be so proud).

609. i. e., your saviours on whose intercession you presumed so much.

610. (and your affairs).

611. (when face to face with full reality).

612. i. e., between you and your 'saviours'.

613. (so that He produces from them green leaves and fruits).

614. (as a bird from an egg).

615. (as an egg from a bird).

616. The matchless, the Unequalled, the One without a second.

617. (from the dark). In this instance, the 'Cleaver' has the same sense as the 'Creator.' (LL)

618. (and tranquillity).

619. (and their movements).

620. i. e., subjected them to a definite Plan.

621. i. e., this ordinance of the regular movements of the astronomical universe.

622. i. e., Able to order whatever He will.

623. i. e., well Aware of the capacities, potentialities and needs of His creatures.

624. (to serve as beacons).

625. How foolish then of mankind to worship as gods the heavenly bodies that are themselves subservient to the affairs of men.

626. i. e., while journeying in dark night.

627. Stars are of equal service to the travellers of the desert and to the mariners.

628. (of Our might, favour and uniqueness). They demonstrate that these heavenly bodies are as much subject to His will and control as any of the humblest objects in the universe.

98. (وهوالذی . . . يفقهون) It is He who has produced you from one person,[629] and provided for you an abode[630] and a depository.[631] Surely We have expounded the signs[632] for a people who understand.

99. (وهوالذی . . . يؤمنون) It is He who has sent down water from the heaven[633] and We have thereby brought forth growth[634] of every kind,[635] and out of it We have brought forth green stalks from which We produce[636] close-growing seed-grain. And from the date-stone: from the spathe thereof come forth clusters of dates low-hanging; and gardens of grapes, and the olive, and the pomegranate, like unto one another and[637] unlike. Look at the fruit thereof when it fruits[638] and the reforming thereof.[639] Verily in them[640] are signs[641] for a people who believe.[642]

100. (وجعلوا . . . يصفون) And they[643] have set up genii[644] as associates of Allah,[645] whereas He has created them,[646] and they[647] impute to Him falsely[648] without knowledge, sons and daughters.[649] Hallowed be He and far Above what they ascribe!

SECTION 13

101. (بديع . . . عليم) Originator of the heavens and the earth![650] How should He have a son when there is for Him no spouse?[651] He has created everything[652] and He is the Knower of everything.[653]

102. (ذلكم . . . وكيل) Such is Allah, your Lord![654] There is no God but He,[655] the Creator of everything: so worship Him.[656] And He is of everything a Guardian.

629. (O mankind!) i. e., from one single person, Adam. This clearly enunciates the unity of the human race. Races of men, however diverse they may be and however divergent in their characteristics, have nevertheless a common origin and have sprung from the same ancestry. See P. IV, n. 477; IX, n. 346; XXIII, n. 481.

630. (in the wombs of your mothers).

631. (in the loins of your fathers).

632. (of Our right, power and uniqueness).

633. 'From heaven' means 'from the direction of heaven.' (Bdh.)

634. نبات is anything that vegetates or germinates in the earth.

635. i. e., of diverse qualities, although the source—rain—is single.

636. (at the harvest time).

637. (some others).

638. i. e., when it is beginning to fruit and is yet raw and unfit for use.

639. i. e., when it has grown to maturity and is perfectly fit for use.

640. i. e., in all these processes and changes.

641. (of Our might and majesty).

642. Or 'a people who are minded to believe.' (Th.)

643. i. e., the pagans.

644. Jinn are a definite order of conscious beings, intelligent, corporeal and usually invisible, made of smokeless flame, as men are of clay, created before Adam. They eat and drink, and propagate their species, and are subject to death, much in the same way as human beings are, though as a rule invisible to the human eye. They manifest themselves to men at will, mostly under animal form.

645. (and these the Arab pagans were wont to placate by offering sacrifices and to conjure by magical formulae). 'In the belief of the heathen Arabs', says Robertson Smith, 'nature is full of living beings of superhuman kind, the Jinn or demons,' ('Religion of the Semites', p. 119). 'The Jinn like "demons" and their kind, 'explains an annotator, Dr. S. A. Cook' 'serve conveniently to explain whatever is not due to "natural" causes, or that has a supernatural origin, and cannot be associated with any of the known gods or spirits . . . . The jinn is rather a class-god or species.' (pp. 538, 539). 'The Bedouin peopled the desert with living things of beastly nature called jinn or demons. These jinn differ from the gods not so much in their nature as in their relation to man. The gods are on the whole friendly; the jinn, hostile . . . . To the gods belong the regions frequented by men; to the jinn belong the unknown and untrodden parts of the wilderness' (Hitti, op. cit., p. 98).

646. (much in the same way as he has created humankind. So how can a mere creature be, in any sense, a partner or an equal to his Creator ?)

647. i. e., another class of infidels.

648. A variant of the verb is خرّقوا, which intensifies the sense of false imputation.

649. The allusion is both to the Christian and pagan blasphemies.

650. (and of all else by a simple act of His all-powerful will, out of nothing). See P. I, nn. 525, 527.

651. This refutes the polytheism of several peoples like the Hindus, the Babylonians, and the Egyptians, which maintained that each god had a female companion or consort. Indian polytheism went still further. 'Even God', according to the Upanishads, 'had a desire for progeny and wanted a wife unto Himself for propagation.' (Indra, Status of Women in Ancient India, pp. 129-133). See P. V, n. 513.

652. (big or small, out of nothing).

653. He is Omniscient as He is Omnipotent.

654. i. e., The Being with all these attributes of Perfection.

655. This is not monolatry, but the highest, the purest and the most uncompromising monotheism ever found in the religious literature of the world. See P. II, n. 108.

656. (to the exclusion of all other worships).

103. (لاتدركه . . . الخبير) Sights comprehend Him not,[657] He comprehends all sights;[658] and He is the Subtle,[659] the Aware.[660]

104. (قد جاءكم . . . بحفيظ) Surely there has come to you enlightenment[661] from your Lord. Whatsoever then will see will do so for his own soul,[662] and whosoever blinds himself, will do so to his own hurt. And say thou: I am not over you an overseer.[663]

105. (وكذلك . . . يعلمون) And thus We variously propound the revelation,[664] and this is in order that[665] they[666] may say:[667] thou hast studied;[668] and that We may expound it[669] to a people who know

106. (اتبع . . . المشركين) Follow thou[670] what has been revealed to thee by thy Lord; no god is there but He, and turn thou away from the polytheists.[671]

107. (ولوشاء . . . بوكيل) Had Allah willed,[672] they would not have joined others with Him;[673] and We have not made thee a watcher over them, nor art thou an overseer unto them.

108. (ولا . . . يعملون) Revile not[674] those whom they[675] invoke[676] besides Allah, lest they may revile Allah spitefully without knowledge. Thus fair-seeming to every community We have made their work;[677] then to their Lord is their return, and then He will declare to them what they were wont to work.[678]

109. (واقسموا . . . لايؤمنون) And they[679] swore by God with thee their solemn oaths if there came to them a sign[680] they would surely believe therein. Say thou: signs are but with Allah,[681] and what will make you perceive[682] that even if it[683] came they will not believe.

110. (ونقلب . . . يعمهون) And We shall turn aside[684] their hearts[685] and their eye-sights,[686] even as they disbelieved therein[687] for the first time, and We shall let them wander in their exorbitance perplexed.[688]

657. i. e., the Incomprehensible; the Illimitable.

658. (by His knowledge as well as His power).

659. i. e., the Invisible to the eye; the Imperceptible to the senses.

660. i. e., the All-Knowing.

661. i. e., clear evidences for the unity of God and the messengership of His Prophet.

662. i. e., the advantage thereof will redound to his own soul.

663. i. e., my duties end with the preaching.

664. (that thou mayest preach them to all).

665. i. e., a consequence of thy preaching will be that.

666. i. e., the arch-infidels.

667. (in the frenzy of their denial and defiance).

668. (deep and well at the Jewish and Christian sources, and thou retailest to us what thou hast learnt of them). A charge repeated and reiterated with amazing uniformity by the modern lights of Judaism and Christianity.

669. i. e., the subject-matter of the Holy Qur'ān.

670. (as thou hast hitherto followed, O Prophet!).

671. (taking no notice of their denial; ignoring them).

672. (in His universal Plan).

673. (and everyone, irrespective of his 'will to believe', would have automatically followed the right course).

674. (while arguing with the infidels, O believers!).

675. i. e., the infidels.

676. (as gods).

677. (in this world, and do not inflict punishment on them immediately). This world of phenomena is a world of trial and temptation, and not of requital and retribution.

678. (and will judge accordingly).

679. i. e., some of the infidels.

680. (of their choice), i. e., a miracle such as they desired and demanded.

681. Here is one of the most important teachings of Islam. Miracles, signs, wonders, portents, or whatever they might be called, in no case occur by any action of the messenger of God, but by the power of God Himself. No miracle, however clear its evidentiary value, is ever an act of a mortal. The prophet or apostle has no hand in its causation; he only uses it, by the command of God, as an evidence of the varacity of his claim. A miracle is nothing but an invasion of the order of nature, as known to us in common experience, by the command of the Creator of nature, to exhibit the veracity of the claims of His messenger. See P. I, nn. 534, 537 and

n. 538 and also P. XIII, n. 223.

682. (O believers!). Some of the Muslims fondly imagined that the infidels might yet be won over if a miracle of their choice did really occur.

683. i. e., a sign or portent of their choice.

684. (as a consequence to their wilful and deliberate rejection of the truth).

685. (from willing to believe).

686. (from perceiving the truth of Islam).

687. i. e., in the Holy Qur'ān, itself the greatest of miracles.

688. (and distracted, as hitherto).

PART VIII

SECTION 14

111. (ولو اننا . . . يجهلون) And even though We had sent down angels to them,[1] and the dead had spoken to them,[2] and We had gathered together about them everything[3] face to face,[4] they were not such as could believe,[5] unless Allah willed;[6] but most of them speak ignorantly.[7]

112. (وكذلك . . . يفترون) In this wise[8] We have appointed to every prophet[9] an enemy—devils[10] among men and jinn—inspiring to each other gilded speech[11] as a delusion. And had thy Lord willed,[12] they could not have done so. So leave them alone[13] to their fabrication.

113. (ولتصغى . . . مقترفون) And this is[14] in order that[15] the hearts of those who do not believe in the Hereafter may incline to it,[16] and[17] that they may remain pleased with it,[18] and[19] that they may do what they are doing.[20]

---

1. i. e., to these cavilling and carping infidels, who had demanded that the Prophet should raise their dead ancestors in their sight, or prevail on God and angels to appear before them bodily.
2. In order to satisfy their insensate love of the miraculous.
3. —even the hidden ones—
4. (so that they would have seen those things with their own eyes).
5. So perverse are they!
6. (and had transformed their hearts completely).
7. i. e., without seriously intending at all what they say.
8. i. e., as these Makkan pagans bear enmity against the Prophet.
9. (of old).
10. i. e., the evil ones. See P. I, n. 63.
11. i. e., fair-seeming untruths and falsehoods.
12. (in His universal Plan, that the crooked ones should have no power of evil suggestions).

13. (O Prophet !).

14. i. e., this machination of the crooked ones.

15. (in the first place).

16. i. e., towards that gilded world of lie and deceit. Inclination of heart towards ungodliness in the first step to infidelity.

17. (as the next stage).

18. i. e., they might approve of the acts of infidelity.

19. (finally).

20. The final step is the stage of action. The misguided and the beguiled ones now not only think corruptly and wish wickedly, but also act viciously. Their fall by now is complete.

مِنَ الْمُمْتَرِينَ ﴿١١٤﴾ وَتَمَّتْ كَلِمَتُ رَبِّكَ صِدْقًا وَعَدْلًا ۚ لَا مُبَدِّلَ لِكَلِمَاتِهِ ۚ وَهُوَ السَّمِيعُ الْعَلِيمُ ﴿١١٥﴾
وَإِنْ تُطِعْ أَكْثَرَ مَنْ فِي الْأَرْضِ يُضِلُّوكَ عَنْ سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ ۚ إِنْ يَتَّبِعُونَ إِلَّا الظَّنَّ وَإِنْ هُمْ إِلَّا يَخْرُصُونَ ﴿١١٦﴾
إِنَّ رَبَّكَ هُوَ أَعْلَمُ مَنْ يَضِلُّ عَنْ سَبِيلِهِ ۖ وَهُوَ أَعْلَمُ بِالْمُهْتَدِينَ ﴿١١٧﴾ فَكُلُوا مِمَّا ذُكِرَ اسْمُ اللَّهِ عَلَيْهِ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ
بِآيَاتِهِ مُؤْمِنِينَ ﴿١١٨﴾ وَمَا لَكُمْ أَلَّا تَأْكُلُوا مِمَّا ذُكِرَ اسْمُ اللَّهِ عَلَيْهِ وَقَدْ فَصَّلَ لَكُمْ مَا حَرَّمَ عَلَيْكُمْ إِلَّا
مَا اضْطُرِرْتُمْ إِلَيْهِ ۗ وَإِنَّ كَثِيرًا لَيُضِلُّونَ بِأَهْوَائِهِمْ بِغَيْرِ عِلْمٍ ۗ إِنَّ رَبَّكَ هُوَ أَعْلَمُ بِالْمُعْتَدِينَ ﴿١١٩﴾
وَذَرُوا ظَاهِرَ الْإِثْمِ وَبَاطِنَهُ ۚ إِنَّ الَّذِينَ يَكْسِبُونَ

114. (افغير . . . الممترين) Say thou:[21] shall I then[22] seek as judge[23] other than Allah, when it is He who has sent down toward you[24] the Book[25] detailed ?[26] And those[27] whom We have vouchsafed the Book[28] know[29] that it[30] has been sent down by thy Lord in truth; so be not thou of the doubters.[31]

115. (وتمت . . . العليم) Perfected is the word of thy Lord[32] in veracity[33] and justice;[34] and none can change His words.[35] And He is the Hearer,[36] the Knower.[37]

116. (وان . . . يخرصون) If thou obeyest most of them on earth, they would lead you away from the way of Allah,[38] they follow only their fancy and they but conjecture.[39]

117. (ان . . . بالمهتدين) Surely thy Lord! He knows best who strays and He knows best the guided ones.

118. (فكلوا . . . مؤمنين) Eat[40] of that[41] flesh[42] over which the name of Allah has been pronounced,[43] if you are believers in His revelations.

119. (ومالكم . . . بالمعتدين) And why should you not eat that flesh over which the name of Allah has been pronounced, while He has surely detailed for you what He has forbidden you,[44] unless you are driven thereto ?[45] Surely many[46] lead others astray by their desires without knowledge. Surely thy Lord! He knows best the transgressors.

---

21. (O Prophet !).

22. i. e., after God has endowed me, with plain proofs and strong evidences of my apostleship.

23. (to decide between me and you).

24. انزل اليكم is not quite the same thing as انزل عليكم. Hence the rendering of the former phrase as 'sent down toward you.'

25. Unique in the whole class of religious scriptures, and miraculous in its excellences both literary and spiritual.

26. (in all its injunctions).

27. (of old).
28. The word is here used in generic sense.
29. (by its description in their Books).
30. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.
31. (O reader!).
32. (as it has found expression in the Qur'ān).
33. (as regards the tenets and doctrines it inculcates).
34. (as regards the laws and practices it formulates).
35. Here is the boldest challenge affirming the purity, for all time, of the Holy Text.
36. (of the words uttered by the infidels).
37. (of the designs concealed by the infidels).
38. As the majority of them are wrong-headed.
39. i. e., their guess-work is absolutely divorced from true and certain knowledge.
40. —now that the evil of following the lead of the infidels has been amply demonstrated.
41. (O Muslims!).
42. (lawful meat).
43. (at the time of slaughter, unassociated with any other name).
44. So that every other meat, not so specified, is perfectly lawful.
45. (by sheer necessity, which makes even forbidden animals lawful.
46. (of the infidels).

الاثم سيجزون بما كانوا يقترفون ۝ ولا تاكلوا مما لم يذكر اسم الله عليه وانه لفسق ۗ وان الشيطين
ليوحون الى اوليائهم ليجادلوكم ۚ وان اطعتموهم انكم لمشركون ۝ اومن كان ميتا فاحيينه وجعلنا له

يشعرون ۝ واذا جاءتهم اية قالوا لن نؤمن حتى نؤتى مثل ما اوتي رسل الله ۘ الله اعلم حيث
يجعل رسالته ۗ سيصيب الذين اجرموا صغار عند الله وعذاب

120. (وذروا . . . يقترفون) Leave the outside sin and its inside.[47] Surely those who earn sin shall be requited for what they have earned.

121. (ولا . . . لمشركون) And do not eat of that over which the name of Allah has not been pronounced;[48] that is sinful.[49] Surely the devils are ever inspiring their friends to wrangle with you. If you[50] obey them[51] then you will become associators indeed[52].

SECTION 15

122. (اومن . . . يعملون) Is he who was dead[53] and We quickened him,[54] and appointed for him a light with which he walks among mankind,[55] like him[56] who is in darkness[57] from which he can not emerge?[58] Even so is made fair-seeing to the infidels what they are wont to do.[59]

123. (وكذلك . . . يشعرون) And even so We set up in every town great ones as sinners[60] that they may plot therein;[61] and[62] they plot not save against themselves[63] and they do not perceive.

---

47. i. e., sins both open and secret.

48. (when striking a lawful animal for slaughter).

49. (from rectitude). فسق literally is 'a going forth or a departure'; in religious speech it means 'a departure from that which is right.'

50. (O Muslims!).

51. (by either forbidding a lawful animal or allowing a forbidden one).

52. For this means the joining of others with God as the Supreme Authority.

53. (in spirit).

54. (to the life of faith).

55. (and is safe from all risks and dangers).

56. (in regard to his fate).

57. (of impiety and unbelief).

58. The meaning is that the difference between a believer and an infidel is infinite.

59. So that they persist in their career of sin and unbelief.

60. It is the influential leaders of a city who start violent opposition to the messengers of God.

61. (against God's religion).

62. i. e., whereas in fact.

63. i. e., they cause their own undoing.

شَدِيدٌ بِمَا كَانُوا يَمْكُرُونَ ﴿١٢٤﴾ فَمَن يُرِدِ اللَّهُ أَن يَهْدِيَهُ يَشْرَحْ صَدْرَهُ لِلْإِسْلَامِ ۖ وَمَن يُرِدْ أَن يُضِلَّهُ
يَجْعَلْ صَدْرَهُ ضَيِّقًا حَرَجًا كَأَنَّمَا يَصَّعَّدُ فِي السَّمَاءِ ۚ كَذَٰلِكَ يَجْعَلُ اللَّهُ الرِّجْسَ عَلَى الَّذِينَ لَا يُؤْمِنُونَ ﴿١٢٥﴾
وَهَٰذَا صِرَاطُ رَبِّكَ مُسْتَقِيمًا ۗ قَدْ فَصَّلْنَا الْآيَاتِ لِقَوْمٍ يَذَّكَّرُونَ ﴿١٢٦﴾ لَهُمْ دَارُ السَّلَامِ عِندَ رَبِّهِمْ ۖ وَهُوَ وَلِيُّهُم
بِمَا كَانُوا يَعْمَلُونَ ﴿١٢٧﴾ وَيَوْمَ يَحْشُرُهُمْ جَمِيعًا يَا مَعْشَرَ الْجِنِّ قَدِ اسْتَكْثَرْتُم مِّنَ الْإِنسِ ۖ وَقَالَ أَوْلِيَاؤُهُم مِّنَ
الْإِنسِ رَبَّنَا اسْتَمْتَعَ بَعْضُنَا بِبَعْضٍ وَبَلَغْنَا أَجَلَنَا الَّذِي أَجَّلْتَ لَنَا ۚ قَالَ النَّارُ مَثْوَاكُمْ خَالِدِينَ فِيهَا إِلَّا مَا شَاءَ
اللَّهُ ۗ إِنَّ رَبَّكَ حَكِيمٌ عَلِيمٌ ﴿١٢٨﴾ وَكَذَٰلِكَ

124. (واذا . . . يمكرون) And when there comes to them a sign,[64] they say: we shall not believe until we[65] are vouchsafed the like of what is vouchsafed to the messengers of Allah.[66] Allah knows best[67] where to place His messengership.[68] Surely[69] vileness before Allah[70] and severe chastisement[71] shall befall those who have sinned for what they were wont to plot.

125. (فمن . . . يؤمنون) So whom Allah wills that He shall guide,[72] He expands his breast for Islam;[73] and whom He wills that He shall send astray,[74] He makes his breast strait, narrow,[75] as if he was mounting up to the heaven.[76] Thus Allah lays the abomination on those who believe not.[77]

126. (وهذا . . . يذكرون) And this[78] is the path of thy Lord, straight. Certainly We have explained the revelation to a people who would be admonished.

127. (لهم . . . يعملون) Theirs is an abode of peace[79] with their Lord;[80] and He shall be their Patron for what they have been doing.

128. (ويوم . . . عليم) On the day when He will gather them all together:[81] O company of jinn! you have made much of mankind.[82] And their friends among mankind will say:[83] Our Lord! much use some of us made of others,[84] and now we have reached the appointed term which Thou appointedest for us.[85] He will say:[86] the Fire shall be your abode where you shall be as abiders,[87] save as Allah may will. Surely thy Lord is Wise,[88] Knowing.[89]

---

64. (confirming the truth of Our message and messenger).
65. (ourselves).
66. Such as the gift of prophecy, the sight of angels, etc.
67. يعلم is here suppressed being implied by اعلم.
68. He alone, in His infinite wisdom and knowledge, knows who is fit to carry out His commission and to receive His highest gifts.
69. i. e., in the Hereafter.
70. (as a meed for their inordinate vanity and conceit).

71. (as a meed for their careers of sin and rebellion).

72. (to the true faith).

73. (so that he becomes eager to receive the truth).

74. (as a consequence to his career of persistent defiance and arrogance).

75. (so that the acceptace of Islam seems to him the hardest of tasks).

76. (panting and gasping).

77. i. e., those who wilfully reject the truth of Islam.

78. (religion of Islam).

79. (and everlasting security).

80. (in the Hereafter). 'دارالسلام is an appellation of Paradise, as being the abode of everlasting safety, or security.' (LL)

81. (He will address the wicked genii thus).

82. (by way of tempting and seducing them to sin and infidelity).

83. (by way of confession).

84. 'Some of us' refers to men, and 'others' to genii. Sinners among men will confess that they greatly profited by the company of the evil spirits.

85. (The advent of which we always denied and ridiculed).

86. (to the infidels, both from among men and genii).

87. (for ever).

88. Whose punishment is always just, reasonable and duly proportioned.

89. Who is well aware of the amount of guilt of everyone.

نولي بعض الظلمين بعضا بما كانوا يكسبون ۝ يمعشر الجن والانس الم يأتكم رسل منكم يقصون

129. (وكذلك . . . يكسبون) And thus We shall keep some of the wrong-doers close to others[90] for what they were wont to earn.

SECTION 16

130. (يمعشر . . . كفرين) Company of jinn and mankind! Did not there come to you messengers from amongst you recounting to you My signs and warning you of your meeting of this Day? They shall say: we witness against ourselves.[91] Indeed the life of the world has deluded them,[92] and they shall bear witness against themselves that they had been infidels.

131. (ذلك . . . غفلون) This[93] is because thy Lord is not one to destroy townships[94] arbitrarily for its wrong-doing while their people are unaware.[95]

132. (ولكل . . . يعملون) For all[96] there will be degrees[97] in accordance with what they did, and thy Lord is not unware of what they do.

133. (وربك . . . آخرين) And thy Lord is Self-sufficient,[98] the Owner of Mercy.[99] If He wills, he can take you[100] away,[101] and make those succeed you, after you, whom He pleases, even as He raised you from the seed of another people.[102]

134. (ان . . . بمعجزين) Certainly what you are promised[103] is sure to arrive,[104] and you cannot escape.

---

90. (bound as they were to each other in the world).
91. (and we have no defence to offer).
92. (here and now).
93. i. e., God's sending of apostles and messengers.
94. (even in this world). God invariably sends a messenger to every people to warn and to instruct them in His way.
95. (and have not been fully warned).
96. i. e., for each one of the responsible sentient beings.
97. (of recompense).

98. (and Independent, standing in no need of our prayer or service). غَنِيّ is one who is free from wants, the quality of غِنًى denoting the absence or non-existence of wants. الغَنِيّ (with the definite article) is applicable to none but God.

99. So it is out of His unbounded mercy and for their own good that He sends His messengers to His creatures.

100. (all). The address is to the men of the Prophet's generation.

101. (from the world, immediately and abruptly).

102. i. e., from your ancestors who are no more.

103. (through Our messengers).

104. The reference is to the Day of Judgment.

عَامِلٌ فَسَوْفَ تَعْلَمُونَ مَن تَكُونُ لَهُ عَاقِبَةُ الدَّارِ إِنَّهُ لَا يُفْلِحُ الظَّالِمُونَ ۝ وَجَعَلُوا لِلَّهِ مِمَّا ذَرَأَ

يَصِلُ إِلَى اللَّهِ وَمَا كَانَ لِلَّهِ فَهُوَ يَصِلُ إِلَىٰ شُرَكَائِهِمْ سَاءَ مَا يَحْكُمُونَ ۝ وَكَذَٰلِكَ زَيَّنَ لِكَثِيرٍ

فَذَرْهُمْ وَمَا يَفْتَرُونَ ۝ وَقَالُوا هَٰذِهِ أَنْعَامٌ وَحَرْثٌ حِجْرٌ لَّا يَطْعَمُهَا إِلَّا مَن نَّشَاءُ بِزَعْمِهِمْ وَأَنْعَامٌ
حُرِّمَتْ ظُهُورُهَا وَأَنْعَامٌ لَّا يَذْكُرُونَ اسْمَ اللَّهِ عَلَيْهَا افْتِرَاءً عَلَيْهِ سَيَجْزِيهِم بِمَا

135. (قل . . . الظلمون) Say thou:[105] O my people![106] go on acting in your way;[107] indeed I am going to act in my way;[108] presently[109] you shall know what[110] will be the happy end of the abode; and surely the wrong-doers shall not fare well.

136. (وجعلوا . . . يحكمون) And they[111] set aside for Allah[112] a portion[113] of the tilth and cattle He[114] has produced, and they say according to their fancy:[115] this is for Allah,[116] and: this is for our associate-gods. Then what is for their associate-gods[117] does not reach Allah,[118] while what is for Allah reaches their associate-gods;[119] vile is the way they judge![120]

137. (وكذلك . . . يفترون) And even so their associate-gods[121] have made fair-seeing to many of the idolaters[122] the killing of their offspring,[123] so that they may cause them[124] to perish[125] and that they may confuse them in their faith.[126] And had Allah so willed[127] they would have not done it. Therefore thou[128] leave them alone and what they fabricate.[129]

---

105. (O Prophet!).

106. The address is to those who were bent on rejecting the Prophet.

107. (rebelling against the authority of God and His messenger).

108. (patiently bearing your persecution and proclaiming the message of God as usual).

109. i. e., in the Hereafter.

110. (among us).

111. i. e., the Makkan pagans.

112. (as also for their associate-gods).

113. 'The settled Arabs paid to the god a regular tribute from their fields apparently by marking off as his a certain portion of the irrigated and cultivated ground.' (Robertson Smith, Religion of the Semites, p. 110). Though Allah was not worshipped as He deserved, the cult of Allah was not entirely neglected. A species of tithing, or offering of the first fruits of grain and cattle, was offered to Allah as well as to the other gods.' (Andre, op. cit., p. 30)

114. —and not any of the so-called deities—

115. The Makkan pagans were in the habit of dividing the produce of their fields and flocks into two parts, one for God, and one for associate-gods or inferior deities.

116. Which share was chiefly employed in relieving the poor and the wayfarer.

117. which share was employed in paying the priests.

118. Who—thus the pagans argued—wanted nothing, stood in no need of presents and sacrifices from His worshippers and was well able to take care of His own interests.

119. 'When they planted fruit trees or sowed a field, they divided it by a line into two parts, setting one apart for their idols, and the other for God; if any of the fruits happened to fall from the idol's part into God's, they made restitution; but if from God's part into idol's they made no restitution . . . . In the same manner if the offering designed for God happened to be better than that for the idol, they made an exchange, but not otherwise.' (SPD. pp. 36-37)

120. To consider their godlings as standing in need of presents and sacrifices from men, and yet to continue worshipping them was indeed the acme of stupidity.

121. i. e., the devils.

122. i. e., the sight of many pagan nations.

123. This may possibly refer to the ancient Semitic practice of child-sacrifice, which had been very general. (vide ERE. I, pp. 390-391). Infanticide with a religious motive has also been wide-spread. In India, for example, 'children were thrown into the sacred river Ganges, and adoration paid to the alligators who fed on them.' (EBr. XIV, p. 516, 11th Ed.). The allusion may also be to the modern craze for 'contraception'—a subtle form of infanticide.

124. (thereby; by this foul practice).

125. (both in a material and a spiritual sense).

126. 'Their faith' means the true religion of Abraham and Ismā'īl, which they ought to have followed.

127. (in His universal Plan).

128. (O Prophet!).

129. (and grieve not over their fate).

138. (وقالوا . . . يفترون) And they[130] say according to their fancy: such cattle and tilth are taboo;[131] none shall eat of them save whom we allow.[132] And there are camels whose backs are forbidden,[133] and cattle over which they do not pronounce the name of Allah;[134] a fabrication against Him.[135] Accordingly He shall requite them for what they were wont to fabricate.

139. (وقالوا . . . عليم) And they[136] say: what is in the bellies of such cattle is for our males alone,[137] and is forbidden to our wives, and if it[138] be born dead, then they all[139] are partakers of it. Surely He shall requite them for their attribution;[140] He is Wise,[141] Knowing.[142]

140. (قد . . . مهتدين) Assuredly lost are they who slay their offspring[143] foolishly and without knowledge;[144] and have forbidden what Allah had provided for them:[145] a fabrication against Allah:[146] surely they have strayed and have not become the guided ones.

SECTION 17

141. (وهو . . . المسرفين) And it is He[147] who has produced gardens, trellised and untrellised, and the date-palm and the corn of varied produce, and the olives and the pomegranates alike[148] and unlike. Eat of the fruits when they ripen and give[149] what is due of them[150] on the day of harvesting; and waste not; He does not approve the wasters.[151]

130. i. e., the Makkan pagans.

131. (and dedicated to our gods).

132. They, in the pagan code, must be those who serve the idols and must belong to the male sex.

133. (to be rode on, or to be laden with burdens).

134. (at any time either when milching them or riding them or slaughtering them).

135. The pagans took all these superstitious customs as acts of devotion and service to Him.

136. i. e., the Makkan pagans.

137. (i. e. reserved as food).

138. i. e. the foetus.

139. i. e., men and women both.

140. (to Him of these superstitions).

141. Awarding retribution at its proper time.

142. Allowing none of the culprits to escape.

143. The practice of infanticide has been almost universal, neither Greece nor Rome being immune. So the reform effected by Islam was a world-reform. 'In sharp contrast to the modern anxiety to lessen child mortality' is the extent in the ancient civilizations 'of the practice of infanticide or of putting new-born infants to death or of allowing them to die' (EBr. XII, p. 322). The reference may also be to the practice of coitus interruption and other methods of birth control.

144. i. e., on the flimsiest and the most superstitious of grounds; with no support in reason or Revelation.

145. (to themselves as food or as offspring).

146. i. e., against His laws, natural or revealed.

147. —not any god of agriculture or any other cosmic being, as imagined by the pagans—. 'Polytheism acknowledges, beside great fetish-deities like Heaven and Earth, Sun and Moon, another class of great gods whose importance lies not in visible presence, but in the performance of certain great offices in the course of Nature and the life of Man . . . The deity of Agriculture may be a cosmic being affecting the weather and the soil, or a mythic giver of plants and teacher of their cultivation and use' (PC. II, pp. 304-5).

148. i. e., resembling each other in shape, figure, colour, and other qualities.

149. (to the poor).

150. i. e., the alms thereof.

151. i. e., the extravagant; those who are too profuse in spending.

وَلَا تَتَّبِعُوا خُطُوٰتِ الشَّيْطٰنِ ۚ اِنَّهٗ لَكُمْ عَدُوٌّ مُّبِيْنٌ ۙ ثَمٰنِيَةَ اَزْوَاجٍ ۚ مِنَ الضَّاْنِ اثْنَيْنِ وَمِنَ الْمَعْزِ اثْنَيْنِ ؕ

142. (ومن . . . مبين) And of the cattle He has created[152] beasts of burden and small ones.[153] Eat of what Allah has provided for you and follow not the footsteps of Satan,[154] for he is a manifest foe to you.

143. (ثمنية . . . صدقين) Allah has created[155] eight pairs;[156] of the sheep a twain,[157] of the goats a twain.[158] Say thou:[159] is it the two males[160] He has forbidden or the two females, or what the wombs of the females contain?[161] Declare to me with knowledge if you are truth-tellers.[162]

144. (ومن . . . الظلمين) Of the camels He has created[163] a twain[164] and of the oxen a twain.[165] Say thou: is it the two males He has forbidden or the two females, or what the wombs of the females contain? Were you[166] present[167] when Allah enjoined this[168] on you? Who then does greater wrong[169] than he who fabricates a lie against Allah that he may lead people astray;[170] surely Allah does not guide a wrong-doing people.

---

152. In the text the whole of this meaning is conveyed by the grammatical case of the words.

153. Such as are fit for human consumption—goats, sheep, etc.

154. (by forbiding the lawful foods, or by imitating the practices of the pagans).

155. See n. 152 above.

156. (of males and females). Reference is to the four classes of the animals of general domestic use, viz., sheep, goats, camels and oxen. 'Next to the camel in economic value for the Arab nomads are their sheep and goats. Although many Bedouin tribes possess a greater or less number of goats and sheep to in addition to their camels, they are more abundant on the Syrian borderland and in such other regions of Arabia as are better watered.' (Inayatullah, Geographical Factors in Arabian Life and History, p. 69). Even the kine, though of far lesser importance, 'are found in many villages and settled habitations . . . . They are also found in Yaman . . .' Mr. Bertram Thomas has reported the presence of 'rich herds of cows in the forested parts of the Qara mountains' (Central South Arabia, p. 71).

157. i. e., male and female.

158. i. e., male and female.

159. (O Prophet! to the pagans).

160. (of sheeps and goats).

161. i. e., the unborn young of the two.

162. (and when you have no solid ground, then these prohibitions must be due to your superstitious folly).

163. See n. 152 above.

164. i. e., male and female.

165. i. e., male and female.

166. (yourselves)

167. —as many of you are no believers in the agency of angels and apostles at all—

168. (prohibition, as you fancy).

169. (to his own soul).

170. The person particularly intended here was one 'Omar bin Luhai, the arch introducer of idolatry and superstition in Arabia.

رِجْسٌ أَوْ فِسْقًا أُهِلَّ لِغَيْرِ اللَّهِ بِهِ ۚ فَمَنِ اضْطُرَّ غَيْرَ بَاغٍ وَلَا عَادٍ فَإِنَّ رَبَّكَ غَفُورٌ رَّحِيمٌ ۝ وَعَلَى الَّذِينَ

SECTION 18

145. (قل . . . رحيم) Say thou:[171] I do not find in what has been revealed to me aught[172] forbidden to an eater who eats thereof except it be carcase, running blood or swine-flesh,[173] for that[174] indeed is foul,[175] or an abomination[176] over which is invoked[177] the name of other than that of Allah.[178] Then whosoever is driven[179] thereto[180] neither lusting[181] nor transgressing,[182] thy Lord is indeed Forgiving, Merciful.

146. (وعلى . . . لصدقون) And to them who are Judaised We forbade every animal with cloven hoof;[183] and of the bullock and the goats We forbade to them the fat thereof, save what is borne on their backs or entrails or what sticks to the bones. Thus We requited them for their rebellion[184] and We are the Truthful.[185]

147. (فان . . . المجرمين) Now if they belie thee,[186] say thou:[187] your Lord is Owner of extensive mercy,[188] and His wrath shall not be turned aside[189] from the guilty people.[190]

148. (سيقول . . . تخرصون) Soon will those who associate[191] say:[192] had Allah willed we would not have associated, nor our fathers,[193] neither could we[194] have forbidden aught Likewise[195] belied those before them, until they tasted Our wrath. Say thou:[196] is there with you any authority[197] that you may bring it forth to us?[198] You are following only your fancy and only conjecturing.

---

171. (O Prophet!)
172. (of the meats which you prohibit and declare unlawful).
173. For carrion and swine flesh see P. II, nn. 144, 145. VI, n. 155.
174. i. e., the swine.
175. (and therefore it is forbidden in its entirety).
176. i. e., what is an abomination.
177. (by way of adoration).
178. See P. II, nn. 146, 147.
179. (by extreme and uncontrollable hunger).

180. i. e., to a prohibited food.

181. (for its taste).

182. (the limits of bare necessity).

183. Cf. Le. 11 : 4; Dt. 14 : 7. ظفر to every ruminant is synonymous with ظلف i. e., a cloven hoof; and كل ذي ظفر in the text comprises the camels and ostriches.

184. So this prohibition was in the nature of punishment.

185. So if there is anything contradicting this in the present collection of the OT books, it is certainly false.

186. (after this true narration of facts).

187. (O Prophet !)

188. (and is not hasty in His judgment).

189. (at its proper and appointed time).

190. Though long-suffering and extremely slow to anger, His judgment cannot be averted indefinitely and none has power to withstand it, Cf. the OT :—'The Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire' (Is. 66 : 15). And the NT :—'The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power' (2 Th. 1 : 7, 8, 9).

191. (others with God).

192. (by way of apology).

193. The pagans used the word 'willed' in the sense of 'pleased' or 'approved'—they confused the former with the latter—and therein lay the fallacy. Their meaning was: if God really approved of the faith of Islam and disapproved of idolatry, He would not let us go on with our worship of the false gods. Thus they confused the power and ability bestowed by God on everyone to do whatever he chose with the approval of every course of action. Surely it is God the Creator who has brought into being the deadliest of poisons; does it follow that He approves of the business of the professional poisoners ?

194. (of ourselves).

195. i. e., like the denial and defiance of the present generations of the infidels.

196. (O Prophet !).

197. (for this assertion of yours that Divine will implies Divine approval). علم in the context is 'authority' and not 'knowledge.'

198. No, you have none whatever.

قُلْ فَلِلّٰهِ الْحُجَّةُ الْبَالِغَةُ فَلَوْ شَاءَ لَهَدٰىكُمْ اَجْمَعِيْنَ ۝ قُلْ هَلُمَّ شُهَدَاءَكُمُ الَّذِيْنَ يَشْهَدُوْنَ اَنَّ اللّٰهَ حَرَّمَ هٰذَا
فَاِنْ شَهِدُوْا فَلَا تَشْهَدْ مَعَهُمْ وَلَا تَتَّبِعْ اَهْوَاءَ الَّذِيْنَ كَذَّبُوْا بِاٰيٰتِنَا وَالَّذِيْنَ لَا يُؤْمِنُوْنَ بِالْاٰخِرَةِ وَهُمْ بِرَبِّهِمْ
يَعْدِلُوْنَ ۝ قُلْ تَعَالَوْا اَتْلُ مَا حَرَّمَ رَبُّكُمْ عَلَيْكُمْ اَلَّا تُشْرِكُوْا بِهٖ شَيْئًا وَّبِالْوَالِدَيْنِ اِحْسَانًا وَلَا تَقْتُلُوْا اَوْلَادَكُمْ ع
مِّنْ اِمْلَاقٍ نَحْنُ نَرْزُقُكُمْ وَاِيَّاهُمْ وَلَا تَقْرَبُوا الْفَوَاحِشَ مَا ظَهَرَ مِنْهَا وَمَا بَطَنَ وَلَا تَقْتُلُوا النَّفْسَ الَّتِيْ
حَرَّمَ اللّٰهُ اِلَّا بِالْحَقِّ ذٰلِكُمْ وَصّٰىكُمْ بِهٖ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَعْقِلُوْنَ ۝ وَلَا تَقْرَبُوْا مَالَ الْيَتِيْمِ اِلَّا بِالَّتِيْ هِيَ اَحْسَنُ
حَتّٰى يَبْلُغَ اَشُدَّهٗ وَاَوْفُوا

149. (قل . . . اجمعين) Say thou:[199] with Allah rests the argument evident.[200] Therefore[201] had He so willed,[202] He would have guided you all.[203]

150. (قل . . . يعدلون) Say thou:[204] here with your witnesses[205] those who will testify that He has forbidden all this. Then even if they testify, testify thou not[206] with them.[207] And follow thou not[208] caprices of those who belie our signs[209] and those who believe not in the Hereafter while they ascribe equals to their Lord.

SECTION 19

151. (قل . . . تعقلون) Say thou:[210] come, I shall recite what your Lord has forbidden to you:[211] associate not aught with Him and show kindness to the parents, and kill not your offspring[212] for fear of want—We it is who shall provide for you and them[213]—and approach not indecencies, whether openly or in secret,[214] and slay not anyone whom Allah has forbidden,[215] except for a just cause.[216] In this wise He exhorts you that perhaps you may reflect.[217]

---

199. (O Prophet! to the pagans, after the exposure of their untenable position).

200. i. e., the most sound and convincing argument. الحجة البالغة is the argument 'that reaches home', or penetrates the heart.

201. i. e., now when instead of bowing to the logic of Islam you choose to remain out of it.

202. (in His universal Plan, and had He so constituted the world).

203. But instead of making you automata, He has endowed you, one and all, with personal responsibility—with power to deliberate and to choose.

204. (O Prophet!).

205. —now that you have been worsted in argument and your reasoning has proved worthless—

206. (O Prophet!).

207. (as that testimony must necessarily be false and must be treated as trash).

208. (O reader!).

209. (and therefore are not disposed to make an honest and diligent search for the true religion).

210. (O Prophet!).

211. (really) as opposed to the imaginary taboos and superstitious prohibitions of the pagans.

212. 'The real motive for the act was doubtless that which is assigned in the Qurān, namely poverty. It is well-known that the same cause has led to infanticide in other countries' (ERE. I, p. 669). 'The chief motive to infanticide', says a modern authority on pagan Arabia, 'was the scarcity of food which must always have been felt in the desert.' (Robertson Smith, Kinship and Marriage in Early Arabia, p. 130). The prohibition may well be extended to the modern craze for 'birth-control', or the use of contraceptives to limit the number of offspring or to prevent pregnancy altogether. Now the whole of neo-Malthusianism—as is called this application of the theory of restricting the population—is based on the assumption that the reproductive powers of man exceed his power of increasing his food supply. But experience has demonstrated absolute untenability of this very assumption, and the means of subsistence, not only in one country but in the world at large, have, since the time of Malthus, the first modern promulgator of the doctrine, more than kept pace with the growth of population.

213. It is in consonance with this Divine guarantee that, contrary to what Malthus and his disciples calculated, population has not outrun the means of subsistence, and the truth of the old economic adage has been completely vindicated that 'while every addition to the population means another mouth to feed, it also implies another pair of hands'.

214. Note that it is not only open adultery that is condemned but all the more subtle forms and lesser stages of the same.

215. (to be slain).

216. i.e., except with justification, as, for instance, in retaliation of a murder.

217. (and act accordingly).

152. (ولا . . . تذكرون) And do not approach[218] the substance of an orphan save with what is best[219] until he reaches the maturity,[220] and fill up the measure and balance with equity. We burthen not a soul except according to its capacity.[221] And when you speak,[222] be fair,[223] even though it[224] be against a kinsman; and fulfil the covenant of Allah.[225] In this wise He enjoins you that perhaps you may be admonished.

153. (وان . . . تتقون) And also that: this[226] is My path,[227] straight; follow it then,[228] and do not follow other ways; that will deviate you from His way.[229] In this wise He enjoins you that perhaps you fear Allah.

154. (ثم . . . يؤمنون) To[230] Mūsā[231] We gave the Book,[232] perfect for him who would do good and detailing everything[233] and a guidance and a blessing, that perhaps in the meeting of their Lord they[234] would believe.

SECTION 20

155. (وهذا . . . ترحمون) And this is a Book We have sent down, blest,[235] follow it then and fear Allah, that you may be shown mercy.

156. (ان . . . لغافلين) Lest you[236] should say,[237] the Book was only sent down to the two sects[238] before us, and we were in fact unaware of their readings.[239]

218. i. e., meddle not with—

219. i. e., save with the sole object of improving that estate; save in the interest of orphans themselves.

220. (and comes of age). See P. IV, n. 518; V, nn. 542-47.

221. So these ordinances are not at all hard to be observed, and none of the duties imposed by the law of Islam is too irksome.

222. (something by way of judgment, or as a piece of evidence).

223. (and truthful in your pronouncement).

224. i. e., your pronouncement.

225. i. e., be truthful in your oaths, pledges, etc.

226. i. e., the religion of Islam with all its doctrines and commandments.

227. (which I, as His messenger, publicly preach).

228. (to the exclusion of other ways).

229. This entirely reproves and repudiates the specious and complacent doctrine held by the Romans, and in fact by many polytheistic nations, that 'different paths adapted to different notions and grades of knowledge converge to the same Divinity, and that the most erroneus religion is good if it forms good dispositions and inspires virtuous actions.' (Lecky, op. cit., I, p. 70).

230. There is no 'abruptness' here as misconceived by Rodwell and Wherry. The word ثم introduces the subject of prophethood after the doctrine of the Oneness of God has been dwelt upon at some length.

231. The Arab pagans also were well-acquainted with the renowned apostleship of Moses.

232. (so why should you be so surprised at the apostleship of the Prophet Muhammad?

233. i. e., detailed rules of everyday conduct, and not only general principles and maxims.

234. i. e., the Children of Israel for whom the Book of Moses was meant.

235. See P. VII, n. 596.

236. (O Arab pagans!).

237. (On the Day of Judgment).

238. (i. e., the Jews and Christians).

239. Thus the silencing of the Arab pagans is also one of the purposes of the Holy Qurān being revealed to the Arabs in their own language.

أَنَّآ أُنزِلَ عَلَيْنَا الْكِتٰبُ لَكُنَّآ أَهْدٰى مِنْهُمْ ۚ فَقَدْ جَآءَكُم بَيِّنَةٌ مِّن رَّبِّكُمْ وَهُدًى وَرَحْمَةٌ ۚ فَمَنْ
أَظْلَمُ مِمَّن كَذَّبَ بِـَٔايٰتِ اللّٰهِ وَصَدَفَ عَنْهَا ۗ سَنَجْزِى الَّذِينَ يَصْدِفُونَ عَنْ ءَايٰتِنَا سُوٓءَ الْعَذَابِ بِمَا
كَانُوا يَصْدِفُونَ ﴿١٥٧﴾ هَلْ يَنظُرُونَ إِلَّآ أَن تَأْتِيَهُمُ الْمَلٰٓئِكَةُ أَوْ يَأْتِىَ رَبُّكَ أَوْ يَأْتِىَ بَعْضُ ءَايٰتِ رَبِّكَ ۗ
يَوْمَ يَأْتِى بَعْضُ ءَايٰتِ رَبِّكَ لَا يَنفَعُ نَفْسًا إِيمٰنُهَا لَمْ تَكُنْ ءَامَنَتْ مِن قَبْلُ أَوْ كَسَبَتْ فِىٓ إِيمٰنِهَا
خَيْرًا ۗ قُلِ انتَظِرُوٓا إِنَّا مُنتَظِرُونَ ﴿١٥٨﴾ إِنَّ الَّذِينَ فَرَّقُوا دِينَهُمْ وَكَانُوا شِيَعًا لَّسْتَ مِنْهُمْ فِى شَىْءٍ ۚ إِنَّمَآ
أَمْرُهُمْ إِلَى اللّٰهِ ثُمَّ يُنَبِّئُهُم بِمَا كَانُوا يَفْعَلُونَ ﴿١٥٩﴾ مَن جَآءَ بِالْحَسَنَةِ

157. (او تقولوا . . . يصدفون) Or lest you[240] should say;[241] if only the Book had been sent down to us, we[242] should surely have been better guided than they. So now surely there has come to you an evidence from your Lord and a guidance and a mercy.[243] Who then[244] does a greater wrong than he who belies the signs of Allah and shuns them? Soon We will requite those who shun Our signs with an evil chastisement inasmuch as they were wont to shun them.[245]

158. (هل . . . منتظرون) They await indeed that the angels should come to them[246] or that thy Lord[247] should come, or that certain of the signs[248] of thy Lord should come. On the Day when certain of the signs of thy Lord will come,[249] belief will not avail any person who had not believed before or had not earned any good by his belief. Say thou;[250] well, wait and we also are waiting.[251]

159. (ان . . . يفعلون) Assuredly, those who have split[252] their religion[253] and become sects,[254] thou[255] art not amongst them in aught;[256] their affair is only with Allah.[257] Then[258] He will declare to them what they had been wont to do.[259]

240. (O Arab pagans!).

241. (on the Day of Judgment).

242. —superior as we are in brightness of intellect—

243. (and now therefore you can offer no such excuse).

244. —now that the Holy Qurān is in existence—

245. —so it seems from their attitude—

246. But angels would come only to them to part their souls from their bodies.

247. (Himself).

248. i. e., big signs or portents.

249. (as they will come on the Last Day).

250. (O Prophet! on behalf of the Muslims).

251. (for that Day, when each one would be recompensed according to his deserts).

252. (by believing in part and disbelieving in part).

253. i. e., the true, original religion of theirs.

254. i. e., have formed schisms. The allusion seems to be in particular to the interminable schisms and endless squabbles, divisions and subdivisions of the Church, as it existed in the time of the Holy Prophet. The Church, at this time, writes an American Christian, 'through the ambition and wickedness of its clergy, had been brought into a condition of anarchy. In the East, ... the Church had been torn in pieces by contentions and schisms. Among a countless host of disputants may be mentioned Arians, Basilidians, Carpocratians, Collyridians, Eutychians, Gnostics, Jacobites, Marcionites, Marionites Nestorians, Sabellians, Valentinians. Of these, the Marionites regarded the Trinity as consisting of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Virgin Mary; the Collyridians worshipped the Virgin as a divinity, offering her sacrifices of cakes.' (Draper, History of the Conflict between Religion and Science, pp. 78-79).

255. (O Prophet!).

256. i. e., thou hast nothing to do with them; they alone are responsible for their irreligion and impiety.

257. Who is watching them all along.

258. (on the Day of Judgment).

259. (and shall requite them accordingly).

فَلَهٗ عَشْرُ اَمْثَالِهَا ۚ وَمَنْ جَآءَ بِالسَّيِّئَةِ فَلَا يُجْزٰٓى اِلَّا مِثْلَهَا وَهُمْ لَا يُظْلَمُوْنَ ۝ قُلْ اِنَّنِىْ هَدٰىنِىْ

160. (من . . . يظلمون) Whoso will come[260] with a virtue, for him there shall be ten like thereof,[261] and whoever will come with vice shall not be requited save with the like thereof,[262] and they shall not be wronged.[263]

161. (قل . . . المشركين) Say thou:[264] as for me, my Lord has guided me[265] to a straight path, a right religion, the faith of Ibrāhīm, the upright, and he was not of the polytheists.[266]

162. (قل . . . العلمين) Say thou:[267] surely my prayer and my rites and my life and my death are all for Allah, Lord of the worlds.[268]

163. (لاشريك . . . المسلمين) No associate has He.[269] To this I am bidden, and I am the first of the Muslims.[270]

164. (قل . . . تختلفون) Say thou:[271] shall I[272] seek a Lord, other than Allah,[273] while He is the Lord of everything? And no person earns anything[274] save against himself,[275] and no bearer of burthen shall bear another's burthen.[276] Thereafter,[277] to your Lord shall be your return and He shall declare to you that concerning which you have been disputing.[278]

165. (وهو . . . رحيم) And He it is Who has made you[279] vicegerents[280] in the earth, and has raised some of you over others in degrees,[281] that He might try you in what He has bestowed on you.[282] Surely Swift is thy Lord in retribution,[283] and surely He is Forgiving,[284] Merciful.[285]

---

260. (in the Hereafter).

261. i. e., he shall receive a tenfold recompense. So generous is God!

262. (and no more). So just is God!

263. (in any way; neither through an act of omission nor through an act of commission). Compare a saying of the holy Prophet:—'If man embraceth Islam and is sincere in it, God will forgive him every evil deed he had (previously) committed. And after that, the requital shall be: for a good deed, ten times to seven hundred times; and for an evil deed, one time—unless God forgiveth it.' (ASB. II) 31 : 41).

264. (O Prophet!).

265. (through direct Revelation).

266. See P. I, nn. 618, 619.

267. (O Prophet! to further elucidate the Message).

268. This entire consecration of self to the true God is the gist of Islam, and this absolute, unqualified, monotheism is the cardinal, central doctrine of the Qur'ān.

269. (in any form of existence). In this abhorence of everything savouring of polytheism Islam stands alone among the religions of the world.

270. (among my nation). 'The first of the Muslims! Mohammad is absolutely justified in so designating himself. He is the first representative of a new and independent religious type. Even to-day, after a period of development of thirteen centuries, one may clearly discern in genuine Islamic piety the uniqueness which is ultimately derived from its founder's personal experience of God,' (Andre, op. cit., pp. 11-12).

271. (O Prophet!).

272. —after all these emphatic denunciations of idolatry—

273. (in order to win your approval).

274. (of demerit).

375. i. e., everyone shall have the meed of his misdeeds on himself only.

276. (as you suppose) i. e., no sinner shall bear the sin of another. 'This is said in answer to the idolaters who offered to take the guilt upon themselves if the Prophet would only conform to their ways of worship.' (Bdh). This also completely contradicts the Christian doctrine of atonement.

277. i. e., after this life is over.

278. (and deal with each accordingly).

279. (O men of the present generation!).

280. (to the generations past).

281. (of worldly advantages).

282. (of His gifts).

283. (to the confirmed offenders).

284. (to the repentant).

285. (to the believers).

The Heights. VII

(Makkan, 24 Sections and 206 Verses)

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION I

1. (المص) Alif Lam, Mim, Suad.[286]

2. (كتب . . . للمؤمنين) This is a Book sent down to thee:[287] so let there be no straitness in thy breast therefor:[288] that thou mayest warn, and this is an admonition to the faithful.

3. (اتبعوا . . . تذكرون) Follow[289] what has been brought down to you[290] from your Lord, and do not follow any patrons beside Him; yet little are you[291] admonished.

4. (وكم . . . قائلون) And many a town[292] We have destroyed;[293] upon them Our scourge came at night[294] or while they were taking their midday rest.[295]

5. (فما . . . ظلمين) Then naught was their cry[296] when Our scourge[297] came upon them save that they said: indeed we have been the wrong-doers.[298]

6. (فلنسئلن . . . المرسلين) Then We wil surely question those to whom were Our messengers[299] sent, and We will surely question the sent ones.[300]

---

286. See P. I, n. 28.
287. (O Prophet !).
288. (if thou art rejected and spurned).
289. (O mankind !).
290. (through the Prophet).
291. i. e., most of you.
292. i. e., the inhabitants thereof.

293. (by some sudden catastrophe).

294. The usual time of sleep.

295. In warm climates the importance of the midday rest cannot be overrated.

296. دعوى in addition to its other meanings is 'A call, a cry; and particularly, calling, or crying, for aid or succour.' (LL)

297. (in the form of some deadly catastrophe).

298. (hoping thereby to secure deliverance, but forgetting that the time of repentance had passed and that it was too late to profit by confession).

299. (who will bear witness to the integrity and faithfulness of the messengers).

300. (themselves, who will testify against their peoples).

7. (فلنقصن . . . غائبين) Then We will[301] surely recount to them[302] with knowledge,[303] and We have not been absent.[304]

8. (والوزن . . . المفلحون) And the weighing[305] on that Day is certain;[306] then those whose scales will be heavy,[307] shall fare well.

9. (ومن . . . يظلمون) And those whose scales will be light[308]— —they are those who lost themselves in respect of Our signs.

10. (ولقد . . . تشكرون) And assuredly We established you[309] in the earth and appointed for your livelihood[310] therein: yet little thanks do you return.[311]

SECTION 2

11. (ولقد . . . الساجدين) And assuredly We created[312] you,[313] then We fashioned you,[314] and thereafter[315] We said to the angels; make obeisance to Adam;[316] then they made obeisance;[317] not so Iblīs: he was not of those who made obeisance.[318]

12. (قال . . . طين) Allah said: what prevented thee,[319] that thou shouldest not make obeisance, when I commanded thee? Iblīs said:[320] I am better than he;[321] me Thou hast created of fire[322] and him Thou hast created of clay.[323]

13. (قال . . . الصاغرين) Allah said: then[324] get thee down from hence, not for thee is to be stiff-necked herein;[325] so go thou forth; surely thou art of the abject ones.[326]

14. (قال . . . يبعثون) Iblīs said: respite me till the Day they will be raised up.

301. (the All-Knowing).

302. (their deeds).

303. Even a truth so plain as the all-encompassing and all-pervading character of Divine knowledge required some emphasis in view of the grotesque notions of polytheistic peoples and some of the pagan philosophers.

304. (from them at any place of time).

305. (of man's actions and beliefs to a nicety).

306. 'The old Jewish writers make mention as well of the books to be produced at the last day, wherein men's actions are registered, as of the balance wherein they shall be weighed; and the Scripture itself seems to have given the first notion of both.' (SPD. p. 145).

307. (with faith).

308. i. e., void of faith.

309. (O mankind!).

310. The term معايش is very comprehensive, and includes all the material things that are necessary for life on the earth.

311. (and do not become believers).

312. i. e., brought in the first stage of being.

313. i. e., (through your first progenitor, Adam).

314. i. e., gave you definite shape and figure.

315. i. e., after the creation and formation of Adam.

316. See P. I, n. 150.

317. See P. I, n. 151.

318. See P. I, nn. 152, 153.

319. (O Iblīs!).

320. (by way of explaining his conduct).

321. (and a superior should never bow down to an inferior). This premise in the devil's reasoning is glaringly false. Superiors on many occasions have to bow down to an inferior, for very good reasons.

322. Note that the devil was made of fire, and not, like the angels, of light.

323. (while fire is decidedly superior to clay). Another false assumption in the devil's reasoning. Fire and clay are both created inert substances, and neither of them can be held to be decidedly and in every particular superior to the other.

324. i. e., when thou hast proclaimed thy rebellion.

325. i. e., in the heavens where everyone has to be meek and lowly.

326. (and the heavens are only meant for the honourable ones). Satan in Islam is the most contemptible being conceivable, and has nothing in common with the Miltonic phantasmagory of wars in heaven and the great revenge by the expelled arch-angel.

المنظرين ۝ قال فبما أغويتني لأقعدن لهم صراطك المستقيم ۝ ثم لآتينهم من بين أيديهم ومن

وقال ما نهاكما ربكما عن هذه الشجرة إلا أن تكونا ملكين أو تكونا من الخالدين ۝ وقاسمهما
إني لكما لمن

15. (قال . . المنظرين) Allah said: surely thou art of the respited.

16. (قال . . . المستقيم) Iblīs said: because Thou hast seduced me[327] I will beset for them[328] Thy straight path.[329]

17. (ثم . . . شكرين) Then surely I will come upon before them and from behind them and from their right and from their left,[330] and Thou shalt not find most of them thankful.[331]

18. (قال . . . اجمعين) Allah said: go thou forth from hence, scorned, driven away; whoever of them[332] follows thee, then of a surety I will fill Hell with you all.[333]

19. (ويادم . . . الظلمين) And:[334] O Adam! dwell thou and thy spouse in the Garden, and eat you twain thereof what[335] you will, and also not approach yonder tree,[336] lest you twain become of the wrong-doers.[337]

20. (فوسوس . . . الخلدين) Then Satan whispered to the twain[338] in order that he might discover to them what lay hidden from them of their shame,[339] and said:[340] your Lord did not forbid you yonder tree but lest[341] you should become angels[342] or become of the immortals.[343]

---

327. (by inviting me to do a thing whereby I have erred). Another instance of the devil's habitual lying. It was not God who misled him. It was his own conduct that degraded him.

328. i. e., the progeny of Adam; mankind.

329. (to decoy them into the paths of evil).

330. i. e., I shall attack and assail them on every side that I shall be able to.

331. (to Thee for all Thy favours and benefits).

332. i. e., of God's creatures.

333. 'You all' means Satan and all his followers.

334. (We said).

335. (and whatsoever).

336. Note that the tree remains nameless in the Qur'ān.

337. (and sinners) i. e., those who wrong their own souls.

338. (out of spite and malice). Note that it is Satan who inspired sin unto Adam, which makes it plain that sin is not inherent in man but is suggested from without.

339. سوءة literally is the external portion of the organs of generation of a man, and of a woman. This completely negatives the Biblical version :—'And they were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not ashamed.' (Ge. 2 : 25).

340. This is the evil suggestion whispered by Satan.

341. i. e., for no other reason than that—

342. (by eating the fruit thereof).

343. Satan's evil inspiration amounted to this : The effect of eating the fruits of that particular tree is to transform human mortals into immortal angels, and as this was not suited to you in your early years your Lord God forbade you an approach to that tree, but in the present stage of your development that reason for prohibition holds good no longer, so now there is absolutely no harm in approaching the tree.

وَنَادٰىهُمَا رَبُّهُمَآ اَلَمْ اَنْهَكُمَا عَنْ تِلْكُمَا الشَّجَرَةِ وَاَقُلْ لَّكُمَآ اِنَّ الشَّيْطٰنَ لَكُمَا عَدُوٌّ مُّبِيْنٌ ۝ قَالَا رَبَّنَا

يَذَّكَّرُوْنَ ۝ يٰبَنِىْٓ اٰدَمَ لَا يَفْتِنَنَّكُمُ الشَّيْطٰنُ

21. (وقاسمهما . . . الناصحين) And[344] he swore to them both;[345] I am of your good counsellors.[346]

22. (فدلهما . . . مبين) In this wise with guile he caused the twain to fall.[347] Then when they tasted of the tree, their shame[348] was discovered to them,[349] and they began to cover themselves with leaves from the Garden. And their Lord called out to them: did I not forbid you yonder tree, and did I not tell you Satan is to you a manifest foe?[350]

23. (قالا . . . الخسرين) The twain said:[351] our Lord! we have wronged our souls,[352] and if Thou does not forgive us, we shall of a surety be of the losers.

24. (قال . . . حين) Allah said: get you[353] down,[354] one of you an enemy to another; and for you there shall be on the earth a dwelling and provision for a time.[355]

25. (قال . . . تخرجون) Allah said: on it you shall live and on it you shall die, and from it you shall be raised up.[356]

SECTION 3

26. (يبني . . . يذكرون) O Children of Adam! surely We have sent down to you[357] a garment[358] covering your shame[359] and as an adornment;[360] and the garment of piety[361]—that is the best.[362] This[363] is of the signs of Allah,[364] that perhaps they[365] may be admonished.

344. (to impress them all the more, and to profess yet more his friendship for them).

345. And neither Adam nor his consort could in their innocence imagine that anybody would have the audacity to perjure himself.

346. (desiring your own good).

347. Thus the Qur'ān exonerates completely and in a language that is unmistakable and unequivocal Adam and his consort of all deliberate sin. دلى denotes a fall both physical and spiritual. (Th).

348. i. e., their private parts which were hitherto enrobed in the light garments of Paradise.

349. (as the immediate consequence of their action).

350. (and My injunctions were quite clear).

351. (by way of penitence immediately on the discovery of their mistake).

352. (by not pondering over Thy injunctions). The word ظلم does not necessarily imply a wilful sin. Primarily it signifies نقص as meaning the making to suffer loss or detriment. (LL). And it is here used to convey the sense of 'detriment.'

353. (all). The number is plural, not dual, and covers the progeny of Adam as well as of Satan, yet unborn.

354. (to the earth).

355. i. e., till the expiry of your term of life. Existence on the earth would not be eternal, but only of a short duration.

356. (at the Resurrection).

357. (as Our special gift).

358. i. e., not only its materials but also ingenuity of mind and dexterity of hand to make use of them.

359. This condemns, by implication, the cult of the nude revived in modern times under various names.

360. Dress, according to the Western investigators, 'owes its origin, at least in great many cases, to the desire of men and women to make themselves mutually attractive.' (Westermarck, quoted in EBr. VIII. p. 649).

361. i. e., besides these outer physical apparels there is also an inner, moral garment.

362. i. e., that is the main thing.

363. (gift of garments and costumes).

364. i. e., of the signs of His grace and favour.

365. i. e., the recipients of such gifts and favours.

27. (يبنى . . . يؤمنون) O Children of Adam! let not Satan tempt you,[366] as he has driven forth your parents from the Garden, divesting the twain of the garment, that he might discover to the twain their shame.[367] Surely he beholds you, he and his tribe, in a way that you do not behold them.[368] Certainly We have made the satans patrons of those only who are not believers.[369]

28. (واذا . . . تعلمون) And when they[370] commit an indecency[371] they say:[372] we found our fathers on it and Allah has enjoined it on us.[373] Say thou:[374] certainly Allah does not enjoin an indecency,[375] you say falsely of Allah[376] what you do not know.

29. (قل . . . تعودون) Say thou:[377] my Lord has enjoined equity,[378] and that you[379] shall set your faces[380] aright[381] at every prostration,[382] and call on Him, making faith pure for Him.[383] Even as He has begun you,[384] you shall be brought back.[385]

30. (فريقا . . . مهتدون) A party[386] He has guided, and upon a party[387] straying has been justified.[388] Assuredly they have taken the satans as patrons instead of Allah and they fancy that they are guided ones.

366. (and turn you into infidels).

367. (so be on your guard against the machinations of your hereditary enemy).

368. This emphasizes the subtlety of Satan's attacks.

369. (and thus strong faith is the surest antidote to Satanic influences).

370. i. e., the Arab pagans.

371. Or 'a filthy action.' The Arab pagans used to encompass the K'aba in a state of nudity. The allusion here is to this particular indecency.

372. (to justify their immodesty).

373. 'Excessively conservative by nature, the people observed the customs of their fathers without troubling their minds about their original significance, offered sacrifices to the gods (rude stone fetishes for the most part), and marched in procession round their sancturies.' (HHW. VIII, p. 9).

374. (to them, O Prophet!).

375. (such indecencies being indeed contrary to the pure nature of God).

376. قال عليه is 'He lied, or said what was false, against him'. (LL).

377. (O Prophet!)

378. (and other forms of righteousness).

379. (O mankind!).

380. Or 'your hearts.'

381. (towards Him).

382. i. e., prayer.

383. i. e., with devotion exclusive to Him.

384. (by His mere will).

385. (and called to account in the Hereafter).

386, 387. (of mankind).

388. i. e., upon those who voluntarily chose the devils as their friends and associates.

31. (يبني . . . المسرفين) O Children of Adam! take your adornment[389] at every worship:[390] and eat[391] and drink,[392] and be not extravagant; surely He does not approve of the extravagants.

SECTION 4

32. (قل . . . يعلمون) Say thou:[393] who has forbidden the adornment[394] that Allah has produced for His servants and the clean things of food?[395] Say thou: on the Day of Resurrection these[396] shall belong to them alone who in the life of this world were believers.[397] Thus We expound the signs[398] to a people who know.

33. (قل . . . تعلمون) Say thou: my Lord has forbidden the indecencies, the open thereof[399] and the hidden thereof,[400] and sin[401] and high-handedness without justice[402] and that you associate aught with Allah that for which He has sent down no warranty and that you speak of Allah what you know not.

34. (ولكل . . . يستقدمون) For every community[403] there is a doom;[404] then when its doom is come, not an hour will they stay behind nor go in advance.[405]

389. (and be not in a state of nakedness). See n. 371, 373 above. زينة here signifies decent clothing.

390. (for which you enter a mosque). 'Worship' here is to be taken in its widest application, which includes prayer, circumambulation of K'aba and other forms of devotion. Compare the teachings of Judaism. 'The pious of ancient times occupied an hour in preparation for prayer. Ezra's ordinance required scrupulous washing of the body immediately before prayer. One must be properly attired. Raba b. Huna put on red gaiters, another rabbi placed a mantle over his shoulders and reverently crossed his hands,' like a servant in the presence of his master. (JE. X, p. 168).

391. (freely of clean, lawful foods).

392. (freely of clean, law beverages).

393. (O Prophet!).

394. i. e., goodly apparel.

395. There are, in the code of Islam, certain meats which are unclean and therefore forbidden, and the rest are lawful. This definite division of meats into clean and unclean repudiates the Christian doctrine that 'there is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him.' (Mk. 7: 15).

396. (gifts of God).

397. (and therefore made right and proper use of these gifts, and not for those who abused them). The meaning is that the believers alone can truly enjoy these gifts of God in this world with no aftermath of pain and penalty to fear in the Hereafter.

398. (and commandments).

399. i. e., indecencies practised openly, such as the circuiting of K'aba in nakedness.

400. i. e., indecencies practised secretly, such as fornication.

401. (of every variety).

402. i. e., without a just cause.

403. i. e., for each individual member of the community.

404. (in the Divine Plan).

405. (but shall meet with requital exactly at the arrival of the appointed hour).

35. (يبنى . . . يحزنون) O Children of Adam![406] if there came to you messengers from among you recounting My signs to you, then whoever shall fear Allah and act right,[407] on them shall come no fear, nor shall they grieve.

36. (والذين . . . خلدون) And those who belie Our signs and are stiff-necked, against them—they shall be fellows of the Fire and therein they shall be abiders.

37. (فمن . . . كفرين) Who does greater wrong than he who fabricates a lie against Allah[408] or belies His signs?[409] These! their full portion[410] from the Book[411] shall reach them[412] until when Our messengers[413] come to them[414] causing them to die, and say: where is that which you were wont to call upon beside Allah? These[415] will say: they have strayed from us. And they will testify against themselves that they have been infidels.[416]

406. This was said to men while yet they were in the world of spirits. (Th).

407. (i. e. on this way).

408. (and accepts as His words which are not His).

409. (and refuses to accept as His words which are His).

410. (of worldly happiness).

411. (of Divine decrees) i. e., what is written for them in the Book of eternal decrees.

412. (in this world).

413. i. e., angels of death and punishment.

414. (at the expiry of their term of life).

415. i. e., the infidels.

416. (while in this world). Obviously such confession at the time of death or on the Day of Judgment would be of no avail whatever.

38. (قال . . . تعلمون) Allah will say:[417] enter the Fire[418] among the communities[419] of those who have passed before you, of jinn and mankind. So oft as a community enters it, it shall curse its sister,[420] until, when all have arrived one after another therein, the last of them[421] will say of the first of them:[422] our Lord: these led us astray; so mete out to them a double torment of the Fire. Allah will say: to each,[423] double;[424] but you know not.[425]

39. (وقالت . . . تكسبون) The first of them[426] will say[427] to the last of them:[428] you have then no preference over us.[429] Taste then you all the torment[430] for what you were wont to earn.

SECTION 5

40. (ان . . . المجرمين) Assuredly those who belie Our signs and are stiff-necked against them, for them[431] will not be opened the portals of heaven[432] nor will they enter the Garden until a camel passes through the eye of a needle.[433] Thus do We requite the culprits.

41. (لهم . . . الظلمين) Theirs will be a bed[434] in Hell, and over them coverings.[435] Thus do We requite the wrong-doers.

42. (والذين . . . خلدون) And those who believed and worked righteous works—We burthen not a soul except according to its capacity[436]—they are the fellows of the Garden; therein they shall be abiders.

---

417. (on the Day of Judgment).
418. (O infidels!).
419. (of infidels).
420. (community) i. e., like her in point of fidelity.
421. i. e., the rank and file of the infidels.
422. i. e., the chiefs and ringleaders of infidels.
423. (of the two classes, the leaders and followers alike).
424. (will be the torment). Of the ringleaders, because they set the example and occasioned the transgression of others; of the common folk, because of their own infidelity and their imitating an evil example. (Bdh).

425. (just now; at the commencement of the torment). The torment of every one will grow in volume and intensity every moment.

426. i. e., the leaders of unbelief and impiety.

427. (after they have heard the reply from God).

428. i. e., to the rank and file of the infidels.

429. (in the matter of the lightness of punishment).

430. (doubled and multiplied to you and us alike).

431. i. e., for their souls after their death.

432. (when trying to ascend to heaven).

433. The phrase is symbolic of an impossibility. Compare for a somewhat similar passage, the NT:—'It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.' (Mt. 19: 24). Such proverbs and comparisons occur in many languages.

434, 435. (of fire).

436. So good works are never very difficult to perform. The phrase is parenthetical.

43. (ونزعنا ... تعملون) And We shall recover[437] whatever of rancour[438] may be in their breasts,[439] rivers flowing beneath them, and they will say:[440] all measure of praise be to Allah who has guided us on to this, we were not such as to find guidance[441] were it not that Allah had guided us; the messengers of our Lord came with truth.[442] And this shall be cried out to them:[443] this is the Garden; it you inherit for what you have been working.[444]

44. (ونادى ... الظلمين) And the fellows of the Garden shall cry out to the fellows of the Fire: surely we have found true what our Lord had promised us,[445] have you found true what your Lord had promised you?[446] They shall say: yea![447] Then a crier[448] in-between them shall cry;[449] the curse of Allah be upon the wrong-doers—

45. (الذين ... كفرون) Those who turned away from the way of Allah and would seek to render it crooked and in the Hereafter they were disbelievers.

46. (وبينهما ... يطمعون) And between the twain[450] there will be a veil,[451] and on the heights[452] will be men recognising them all by their marks;[453] and they will cry to the fellows of the Garden: peace be on you![454] They will not have yet entered it while they will be longing.[455]

---

437. (and cause to be forgotten).

438. (that they might have felt against each other in their lifetime).

439. (and shall replace it with sincere love and amity). This will sharply contrast the dwellers of Heaven with the inmates of Hell whose breasts will rankle with envy, hatred and rancour.

440. (in true humility, and overpowered with gratitude).

441. (ourselves; single-handed).

442. (of which we are now convinced by ocular demonstration).

443. The crier will be some angel.

444. (in your lifetime). Good works in this world are the immediate, proximate cause of man's felicity in the Next while the real, ultimate cause is the grace of God.

445. (that sound belief and good works would lead to Paradise).

446. (that unbelief and infidelity would lead to Hell).

447. (all these promises have come true to the very letter).

448. Who would be some angel.

449. (to aggravate further the misery of the damned).

450. i. e., between the blessed and the damned.

451. i. e., a dividing wall.

452. (thereof). اعراف literally is an elevated place or an elevated portion of the earth or ground; and الاعراف is applied to a wall between Paradise and Hell, or its upper parts (LL).

453. i. e., by their very looks; by their facial expression.

454. This, with a negligible grammatical modification, is the usual form of salutation among the Muslims.

455. (to enter it). They will be the people whose good and bad deeds are equal, and who, though eventually due to be received in Paradise are not immediately fit for admittance thereinto.

47. (و اذا . . . الظلمين) And when their eyes[456] will be turned to the fellows of the Fire, they will cry:[457] our Lord! place us not with these wrong-doing people.

SECTION 6

48. (و نادى . . . تستكبرون) The fellows of the heights[458] will cry to the men[459] whom they would recognise by their marks,[460] and say: your multitude[461] availed you naught nor that over which you were wont to be stiff-necked.[462]

49. (اهؤلاء . . . تحزنون) Are these[463] the men of whom you swore[464] that Allah would not reach them with His mercy?—Enter the Garden, on you shall come no fear nor shall you grieve.

50. (و نادى . . . الكفرين) And the fellows of the Fire[465] will cry to the fellows of the Garden: pour out on us some water or aught what Allah has provided you with.[466] They will say: surely Allah has forbidden[467] them both to the infidels—

51. (الذين . . . يجحدون) Who took their religion[468] as an idle sport and a play and whom the life of the world beguiled. So[469] Today We shall forget them[470] even as they neglected[471] the meeting of this Day of theirs and as they were ever gainsaying Our signs.

456. Literally 'sights'.
457. (horror-struck at the sight).
458. See nn. 452, 455 above.
459. (of Hell).
460. i. e., by their very looks; by their facial expression.
461. (on which you presumed so much).
462. i. e., your overweaning conceit and inordinate self-esteem.
463. i. e., the dwellers of Heaven.
464. (despisingly).
465. (overpowered with pangs of hunger and thirst).

466. (of refreshments).

467. 'Forbidden' not in the moral, legal, sense of the word, but physically. It would be physically impossible for the inmates of Hell to enjoy any of the comforts and the pleasures of Paradise. They would have no apparatus within them to receive those blessings.

468. 'Their religion' means the religion which it was incumbent upon them to accept.

469. —what can they expect to reap when they sowed nothing at all ?—

470. 'Forgetting them' is here clearly in the sense of ignoring them.

471. i. e., deliberately ignored.

52. (ولقد . . . يؤمنون) And surely We have brought to them[472] a Book[473] which We have detailed according to knowledge, a guidance[474] and a mercy to a people who believe.[475]

53. (هل . . . يفترون) They[476] await only[477] its fulfilment.[478] The Day whereon its fulfilment arrives those who had been negligent to it will say:[479] surely the messengers of our Lord brought the truth;[480] are there no intercessors for us that they might intercede for us or could we be sent back[481] that we might work otherwise than we were wont to work? Surely they have lost themselves, and there has strayed from them what they were wont to fabricate.

SECTION 7

54. (ان . . . العلمين) In truth your Lord is Allah who created[482] the heavens and the earth[483] in six days,[484] then established Himself on the Throne,[485] making the night cover the day, seeking it swiftly,[486] and created the sun and the moon and the stars subjected to His command.[487] Lo! His[488] is the creation[489] and the command.[490] Blessed[491] is Allah, the Lord of worlds.

55. (ادعوا . . . المعتدين) Call on[492] your Lord[493] in humility[494] and in secrecy;[495] surely He approves not the trespassers.[496]

472. i. e., the infidels of the Qur'ānic and the post-Qur'ānic period.

473. Notice once again that the Qur'ān speaks of itself as a Book, intended from the very first to be a complete volume. Perhaps it is the only Sacred Book that so clearly proclaims itself to be a Book. See also P. I, n. 30.

474. (to one and all).

475. i. e., only the believers profit by it and therefore are the fit objects of Divine mercy.

476. i. e., the infidels who remain unmoved by the Qur'ān.

477. —as it seems—

478. i. e., the actual fulfilment of the threats uttered in the Qur'ān.

479. i. e., shall cry in bewilderment.

480. (and fools we were to reject them).

481. (into the world).

482. (out of nothing).

483. Heavens and earth are all created like other beings, and there exist no such absurdities as a 'sky god' or an 'earth-goddess.'

484. These pre-creation 'days' are obviously not the 'days' of a few hours' duration such as we know them in our experience caused by the movements of the sun and the earth, both of which were till then non-existent. The Bible also assigns a period of six days to the creation of heavens and the earth. 'And God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day.' (Ge. 1: 31).

485. (of authority and majesty). عرش is literally 'a booth, or shed, or thing constructed for shade.' It also signifies 'might, or power; regal power; sovereignty; dominion.' العرش is applied to the عرش of God, which is not definable, and is immeasurable (LL). It is not as the vulgars hold, the seat or throne of God, 'for were it so it would be support to Him, not supported' (LL). The phrase means, 'He reigned as King' (LL).

486. i. e., each seeking the other in rapid succession.

487. So all these grand heavenly bodies, adored and worshipped by so many polytheistic nations and peoples, are mere helpless, inert, created beings; and it is the height of folly to offer homage to any of the 'nature-gods,' solar or lunar.

488. (alone, involving no co-partnership).

489. God is the sole Creator, the sole Originator, and the sole 'Creative Principle' with no minor gods to help and assist Him.

490. God is the Sole Ruler, the sole Sovereign, the sole Maintainer of the universe. It is not, as the Hindus believe, that He 'having performed his legitimate part in the mundance evolution by His original creation of the universe, has retired into the background' (EBr, XI, p. 577), leaving the governance of the world to minor local deities. Nor is His divine activity, as the deists imagine, confined 'to creation of the world and fixation of its primary collocation' (EBr, VII, p. 144), the world-process being determined by these alone.

491. (with every perfection).

492. (O mankind!).

493. (and on none other; in every need and on all occasions).

494. (and not in annoyance and vanity).

495. (and not in ostentation). Cf. the NT:—'But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking' (Mt. 6: 7).

496. i. e., those who go beyond the proper limits in prayer, and are either vain, vociferous or frivolous in their prayers. The Hindus believe that mantras, or magical formulae, if enchanted punctiliously by a Brahman, 'will constrain the gods to gratify the worshipper's wishes' (EBR. III, p. 1012). And 'prayer' in the Hindu sense of the term, 'denotes a compulsory, not a devotional attitude in the officiant.' Clearly Islam repudiates all this.

56. (ولا . . . المحسنين) Act not corruptly on the earth[497] after its good ordering,[498] and call on Him[499] fearing[500] and longing,[501] surely the mercy of Allah is nigh to the well-doers.

57. (وهو . . . تذكرون) He it is who sends forth heralding winds before His mercy,[502] until when they have gathered up heavy-laden cloud, We drive it on to a dead land[503] and send down rain thereby, bringing forth with it all manner of fruit. In this wise[504] We raise the dead; perchance you may take heed.[505]

58. (والبلد . . . يشكرون) A good soil! Its herbage comes forth[506] by the will of Lord, and that which is barren brings forth[507] scantily. In this wise We vary the signs[508] for a people who return thanks.

SECTION 8

59. (لقد . . . عظيم) Assuredly We sent Nūh[509] to his people,[510] and he said: O my people! worship Allah, no god you have other than He;[511] verily I fear for you the torment of a Mighty Day.[512]

497. (by means of your blasphemous conduct).

498. i. e., after God has sent His prophets and revealed His will for the good order and moral government of mankind.

499. (in all your devotions).

500. (and not presuming on your merits) Cf. the NT:—'Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling' (Ph. 2: 12).

501. (and not despairing of His grace).

502. i. e., rains. 'In northern Arabia, rain is brought by the prevailing winds from the Mediterranean across Palestine in the winter. It makes the desert blossom in the spring (Ar-Rabi); and ushers in two months of comparative peace and plenty for the Bedouins. All prosperity depends upon the rain, which the Arabs, consequently, call "God's mercy" (Rahmat Allah), the words "rain" and "beneficence" being synonymous is the Arabic language.' (Inayatullah, Geographical Factors in Arabian Life and History, p. 24).

503. i. e., land depending for its productive power upon the rain alone.

504. i. e., in a manner analogous.

505. (by these parables and similitudes).

506. (abundantly).

507. —if it comes forth at all—

508. —(and arguments demonstrating Our providence, power and unity).

509. (as a Prophet). He is Noah of the Bible, but unlike the Biblical character, he is a true apostle of God, an embodiment of piety and virtue, and has nothing about him of the shameless drunkenness so shamelessly imputed to him in the Bible: 'And he drank of the wine, and was drunken; and he was uncovered within his tent' (Ge. 9:21). Probable dates:—2948-1998 B.C.

510. A people of very great antiquity, who lived probably in Iraq or Mesopotamia.

511. (so renounce polytheism in all its forms).

512. (if you reject me and my message).

60. (قال . . . مبين) The chiefs[513] of his people said: surely we see you[514] in error manifest.[515]

61. (قال . . . العلمين) Nūh said: O my people! not with me is error, but I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds.

62. (ابلغكم . . . تعلمون) I preach to you the messages of my Lord and I counsel you good, and I know from Allah what you do not know.[516]

63. (او عجبتم . . . ترحمون) Do you marvel that an admonition from your Lord should come to you through[517] a man from amongst you, so that he may warn you, and that you may fear God, and that perchance you may be shown mercy.[518]

64. (فكذبوه . . . عمين) Then they disbelieved him:[519] thereupon We delivered him[520] and those with him in the ark,[521] and drowned those who disbelieved Our signs, certainly they were a people blind.[522]

SECTION 9

65. (والى . . . تتقون) And to 'Ād[523] We sent their brother,[524] Hūd[525] He said: O my people! worship Allah, no god you have other then He.[526] Do you not fear?[527]

513. ملأ is 'an assembly'; also 'nobles, chiefs, princes, principal persons, persons whose opinion is respected.'

514. (O Noah!)

515. (in thy denial of our pantheon).

516. (so do not feel amazed at my warnings).

517. i. e., by means of. Literally, 'upon.'

518. The idea of messengership is directly opposed by the theory of 'Incarnation.' To the polytheistic peoples it is always a matter of utmost amazement that a mere man should be divinely commissioned with the reform of his fellow-beings. It must be, according to their conception, the very God who should incarnate himself in human form to redeem humanity, and all mortals laying claim to apostleship are ipso facto so many impostors and must be condemned unheard.

519. (and persisted in their denial, and defiance in spite of all his endeavours).

520. (from drowning in the flood).

521. The believers had entered with him into the vessel.

522. (in their hatred of the prophet and in their aversion to God's truths).

523. An Arab people, flourishing in the south of the Arabian peninsula, with their dominion extended from the north of the Persian Gulf in the east to the southern end of the Red Sea in the west. Their story was well known to the Arabs of the Holy Prophet's time. 'The ancient poets knew 'Ād as an ancient nation that had perished, hence the expression "since the time of 'Ād." Their kings are mentioned in the Dīwān of the Hudhailites and their prudence in that of Nābighā' (EI. I, p. 121). They were zealous idolaters.

524. i. e., their countryman; belonging to the same tribe and town.

525. (as a prophet, to preach to and reclaim them). Hūd is identified by some with Heber.

526. (so renounce polytheism in all its forms).

66. (قال . . . الكذبين) The chiefs of those who disbelieved among his people said: in truth, we see thee in folly and in truth we deem thee to be of the liars.

67. (قال . . . العلمين) Hūd said: O my people! not with me is folly, but I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds.

68. (ابلغكم . . . امين) I preach to you the messages from my Lord; and I am to you a counsellor faithful.

69. (او عجبتم . . . تفلحون) Do you marvel that an admonition from your Lord should come to you upon a man from amongst you so that he may warn you?[528] Remember what time He made you successors after the people of Nūh[529] and increased you amply in stature[530]. Remember the bounties of Allah,[531] that perchance you may fare well.[532]

70. (قالوا . . . الصدقين) They said: art thou come to us that we should worship Allah alone and leave what our fathers were wont to worship?[533] Bring thou then upon us that[534] wherewith thou hast threatened us if thou sayest sooth.[535]

528. See n. 518 above.

529. The 'Ādites were separated only by a few generations from the people of Noah. 'The tribe of 'Ād, the son of Aws, the son of Aram, the son of Sem, the son of Noah, who after the confusion of tongues, settled in Al-Ahqaf, or the winding sands in the province of Haḍhramaut, where his posterity greatly multiplied (SPD. p. 20).

530. The 'Ādites 'became a renowned tribe, and made themselves masters of all eastern and southern Arabia; they built dwelling-houses, obtaining, besides, an ascendancy over all the other tribes. The men of this tribe were conspicuous among those of others, for their stalwart figures.' (Syed Ahmad Khan, Essays on the Life of Prophet Muhammad, I, pp. 17-18).

531. (and be grateful and obedient to Him).

532. (both in this world and the Next).

533. i. e., our 'tribal gods,' 'national goddesses' and other deities and subdeities.

534. (judgment).

535. Literally, 'if thou art of the truth-tellers.'

سَمَّيْتُمُوهَا أَنتُمْ وَآبَاؤُكُم مَّا نَزَّلَ اللَّهُ بِهَا مِن سُلْطَانٍ ۚ فَانتَظِرُوا إِنِّي مَعَكُم مِّنَ

71\. (قال . . . المنتظرين) Hūd said: surely there have befallen you wrath and indignation from your Lord.[536] Do you dispute with me over the names[537] you have named, you and your fathers, for which Allah has sent down no warranty?[538] Wait then;[539] I also will be of those who wait.

72\. (فانجينه . . . مؤمنين) Then We delivered him[540] and those with him by a mercy from Us, and We utterly cut off those who belied Our signs,[541] and would not be believers.

SECTION 10

73\. (وإلى . . . أليم) To Thamūd[542] We sent their brother Sālih.[543] He said: O my people! worship Allah; no god you have but He;[544] surely there has come to you an evidence from your Lord;[545] yonder is the she-camel of Allah,[546] a sign to you;[547] so leave her alone, pasturing on Allah's earth, and do not touch her with evil, lest there seize you a torment afflictive.

536\. The tense of the verb used in the sentence is prophetic past; the calamity to come is as good as already befallen.

537\. i. e., your false gods; mere names with no corresponding reality whatever.

538\. (whether in reason or Revelation).

539\. (the wrath of the Lord).

540\. The prophet Hūd afterwards returned into Haḍhramaut, and after his death was buried near Hasiq, where there is a small town known as Qabr Hūd. Doughty, whose hatred of everything Islamic is both deep and undisguised, speaks at two places of Hūd's sepulchre. (Travels in Arabia Deserta, I, p. 49; II, p. 51).

541\. (by sending upon them a hot and suffocating wind which blew for seven nights and eight days).

542\. Another ancient and powerful people of Arabia, closely related to the ʻĀdites and heirs to their civilizations and culture, with their seat in the north-west corner of Arabia, forming the southern boundary of Syria. 'Unlike the ʻĀdites, of whom we find no trace in historical times, the Thamudites are mentioned as still existing by Diodorus Siculus and Ptolemy; and they survived down to the fifth century A. D. in the corps of equites Thamudeni attached to the army of the Byzantine emperors.' (Nicholson Literary History of the Arabs, p. 3). See also P. XIV, n. 95. 'The recently excavated rocky city of Petra, near Ma'ān, may go back to Thamud.' (AYA)

543. 'the son of Obaid, the son of Asif, the son of Mashaj, the son of Abeed, the son of Jader, the son of Thamud' (Syed Ahmad Khan, op. cit., I, p. 22). There were two prophets of this name, apparently, in ancient Arabia. The more important of the two was Salih ibn 'Ubaid, whose assassination was responsible for the destruction of the Nabataean (Thamud) city of Madain Salih in the north.' (Philby, Sheba's Daughters, p. 301). It is probably his tomb which stands in a valley known after his name on the eastern border of Sinai. 'Who he was, when he lived, is entirely unknown. Possibly he may have been the founder of the tribe of that name which still exists in the Peninsula, possibly the ancient prophet mentioned in the Koran.' (Stanley, Sinai and Palestine, p. 56).

544. (so renounce polytheism in all its forms).

545. i. e., a miracle such as you desire.

546. i. e., a she-camel big with young came out of the rock in the rejecters' presence, and was immediately delivered of a young one ready weaned. 'Near the summit of Jebel Musa is a peculiar mark in the stone which has a strong resemblance to the imprint of a camel's foot. It is regarded by the Bedawin with great veneration, and the girls, when tending their flocks on the mountains, often milk their goats into it as a sure means of obtaining increase and prosperity. This is called Athār Nāqat en Nabi, "the footprint of the Prophet's she-camel" . . . . . . I should therefore conclude that the Nabi Saleh of the tomb in Wady es Sheikh, the prophet of the camel's footprint, and the Saleh of the Quran are identical, and that the "people of Thamud" are the Saracen inhabitants of Sinai, who preceded the Mohammedan invasion.' (Palmer, Desert of Exodus, p. 50).

547. In the phrase, 'the words ناقة الله are the predicate خبر of هذه and آية is a circumstantial accusative, 'this is the she-camel of God, (as) a sign unto you' (WGAL. II, p. 278).

اللهِ وَلَا تَعْثَوْا فِي الْأَرْضِ مُفْسِدِينَ ﴿٧٤﴾ قَالَ الْمَلَأُ الَّذِينَ اسْتَكْبَرُوا مِنْ قَوْمِهِ لِلَّذِينَ

75. (قال . . . مؤمنون) The chiefs of those who were stiff-necked amongst his people said to those who were counted weak[550]—to such of them as believed: do you know that Sāliḥ is a sent one of his Lord? They said: indeed we are believers in that with which he has been sent.

76. (قال . . . كفرون) Those who were stiff-necked said: surely we are disbelievers in what you believe.

77. (فعقروا . . . المرسلين) Then they hamstrung the she-camel and disdained the command of their Lord,[551] and said:[552] O Sāliḥ, bring upon us[553] that[554] with which thou hast threatened us, if thou art in sooth of the sent ones.

78. (فأخذتهم . . . جثمين) Thereupon an earthquake[555] seized them so that they lay prone[556] in their dwellings.[557]

79. (فتولى . . . النصحين) Then he turned from them,[558] and said:[559] O my people! assuredly I did deliver to you the messages of my Lord, and counselled you good,[560] but you do not approve the good counsellors.

---

548. This implies that they were a nation of engineers and architects, and that their civilisation was far advanced in the science of mechanics and the art of masonry.

549. This implies that the Thamūdites were highly iniquitous in their dealings and great oppressors.

550. (on account of their poverty, or owing to the smallness of their number).

551. (to renounce idolatry and to accept and receive His messenger).

552. —over-confident as they were of their strong dwellings hewn in the rocks—

553. (here and now).

554. (judgment).

555. (accompanied with terrible noise as violent earthquakes generally are). رجفة is 'violent commotion.'

556. (and dead).

557. In the territory of Hijr in the province of Hejaz, says Sale, 'their habitations cut out of the rocks, mentioned in the Qur'ān, are still to be seen, and also the crack of the rock whence the camel issued, which as an eye-witness hath declared, is sixty cubits wide.'

558. (after they had been annihilated).

559. (in soliloquy lamenting their end).

560. (but ye went on rejecting my warnings and admonitions).

SECTION 11

85. (و الى . . . مؤمنين) To Madyan[575] We sent their brother Shu'aib.[576] He said: O my people! worship Allah, no god you have but He.[577] Surely there has come to you an evidence[578] from your Lord; so give full weight and measure,[579] and do not defraud people of their things,[580] and do not act corruptly on the earth after its ordering;[581] that[582] is best for you if you be believers.[583]

561. Lot of the Bible. (Ge. 19:1-38) The story is biblical, 'but freed from some shameful features which are a blot on the biblical narrative' (AYA).

562. i. e., the people whom he was sent to reclaim, not his kindred. Hence the omission of the usual form, 'unto .... their brother Lut.' This people lived in the region of Kikkar in the Jordan valley, an extremely fertile land and full of exuberant vegetation.

563. Mark the implication of the word 'preceded.' Of course, there have been nations and nations since the time of Lot, not before it, revelling in sodomy, and calling it euphemistically 'homo-sexual practices.' That 'in Greek society of the fifth and fourth centuries homo-sexualism, was frankly recognized' (ESS. I, p. 25), that among the ancient Greeks 'it was idealized not merely in association with military virtues but with intellectual, aesthetic, and even ethical qualities'; (Ellis, Psychology of Sex, p. 219); that in the Middle Ages it 'flourished not only in camps but also in cloisters' (p. 220); and that it plays a conspicuous part in the modern civilised world are almost truisms.

564. They 'were wicked and sinners before the Lord exceedingly' (Ge. 13: 13), 'They were proverbial for wickedness.' (EBr. XXV, p. 342, 11th Ed.). 'The wickedness of the Sodomites appears to have been so heinous and debasing as to have become proverbial. The term "Sodomite" is used in Scripture to describe offences against the laws of nature which were frequently connected with idolatrous practices.' (DB. IV, p. 559). 'The Sodomites grew proud, on account of their riches and great wealth . . . and abused themselves with Sodomitical practices' ("Ant." I, 11:1).

565. i. e., given to transgression. The crime of the Sodomites was not due to any sporadic outburst of passion, but was the result of a confirmed habit-perversion almost congenital.

566. (to one another).

567. i. e., Lot and his followers.

568. (and consider us impure!) 'This one fellow came in to sojourn, and he will needs be a judge' (Ge. 19 : 9).

569. (from common destruction).

570. (who was an infidel).

571. 'But his wife looked back from behind him, and she became a pillar of salt' (Ge. 19: 26).

572. (of stones) probably in the year 2061 B.C. Thus writes Philo, a celebrated Alexandrian Jew born a few years before the Christian era :—'He (God) suddenly orders the air, overcast with clouds, to pour down an abundant rain not of water but of fire. The dense flame rains down with a continuous and unceasing rush. Burnt are the fields and the meadows and the bushy groves and the luxuriant marsh-lands and the deep cattle-runs. Burnt is the plainland and all its produce of corn and other seed-crops. Burnt is the forest land in the hillsides, the trunks of the trees being consumed to the very roots. Cattle-pens and houses and fortifications and whatever the dwellings contained of public or private utility are all burnt together. The populous cities in a single day become the tomb of their inhabitants, the furniture of wood and stone becomes ashes and fine dust.' Sir Charles Marston after quoting the above adds his own observation :—'It is remarkable how this fanciful description of what happened to Sodom and the other cities of the Plain, conveys a sense of reality to modern tourists standing on the Plain of Jordan, trying to locate, and to account for the cataclysm.' (The Bible is True, pp. 129-30).

573. (O reader!)

574. 'And he overthrew those cities, and all the plains, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground' (Ge. 19: 25). God

'condemned the Sodomites to universal destruction, ... and then cast a thunderbolt upon the city, and set it on fire, with its inhabitants; and laid waste the country with the like burning' ("Ant." I, 11: 4).

575. Now known as Maghair Shu'āib, the city was situated on the Red Sea coast of Arabia, south-east of Mount Sinai. 'Madyan was a station on the pilgrim route from Egypt to Mecca, the second beyond Aila (Elath). Here in the Middle Ages was shown the well from which Moses watered the flocks of Sho'aib (Jethro) and the place is still known as the 'caves of Sho'aib.' It has considerable ruins, which have been described by Sir R. Burton.' (EBr. XVIII, p. 419, 11th Ed.). 'It is bound on the north by Lat. 29° 29' and on the south by Lat. 27° 39'. In other words it extends from the head of the Gulf of Akaba, and down the eastern shore of the Red Sea for about two hundred miles in all' (Marston, The Bible is True, p. 43). 'Madian was the name of one of Abraham's sons by Katurah, and the land takes its name from him ... This Madyan lies inland about two-thirds of the way down the Gulf of Akaba' (ibid., pp. 185, 186). See also P. XVII, n. 392, P. XX, nn. 160, 162.

576. Identified by some, though on rather slender grounds, with Jethro of the Bible. In any case the personality of Shu'aib is not so mythical as some worthy Biblical scholars used to imagine till recently. 'Perhaps even the mysterious figure of Shu'aib may have been derived from genuine Midianite tradition.' (EBi. c. 3081).

577. (so renounce polytheism in all its forms).

578. (of my apostleship). The reference must be to some miracle, not specified in the Qur'ān.

579. These Midianites were a trading people addicted to commercial malpractices,

580. (as is your wont), i. e., deprive not people of their rightful dues.

581. (by Divine ordinance).

582. i. e., compliance with my teachings.

583. i. e., if you are going to believe in me.

تُوعِدُونَ وَتَصُدُّونَ عَنْ سَبِيلِ اللّٰهِ مَنْ اٰمَنَ بِهٖ وَتَبْغُوْنَهَا عِوَجًا ۚ وَاذْكُرُوْٓا اِذْ كُنْتُمْ

86. (ولا . . . المفسدين) And do not beset every highway menacing[584] and turning aside from the path of Allah those who believe in Him and seeking to render it crooked. And remember when you were small,[585] and He thereafter multiplied you;[586] and behold! what like was the end of the corrupters.[587]

87. (وان . . . الحكمين) And if there is a party of you who believe in that with which I am sent and a party who do not believe,[588] then have patience[589] until Allah judges between us[590] and He is the Best of Judges.

---

584. (the listeners of my call).

585. (in numbers or in resources).

586. The exhortation here is by persuasion.

587. The exhortation here is by warning.

588. (and you are deluded by the fact that both parties share the same fate to all appearances and the rebels are not visited with immediate punishment).

589. (and do not be misled into thinking that judgment delayed is judgment abolished).

590. (at its proper time, and executes His sentence on the guilty).

قَالَ الْمَلَأُ الَّذِينَ اسْتَكْبَرُوا مِن قَوْمِهِ لَنُخْرِجَنَّكَ

PART IX

88. (قال . . . كرهين) The chiefs of those who were stiff-necked[1] among his people said: surely we will drive thee forth, O Shu'aib and those who have believed with thee from our city, or else you[2] shall return to our faith.[3] He said: what! even though we abhor—

89. (قد . . . خير الفاتحين) We must have been fabricating a lie against Allah if we returned to your faith after Allah has delivered us from it.[4] And it is not for us[5] to return thereto except that Allah our Lord so willed;[6] everything our Lord comprehends in His knowledge,[7] in Allah we place our trust.[8] O our Lord! decide Thou between us and our people with truth;[9] Thou art the Best of the Deciders.

90. (وقال . . . لخسرون) And the chiefs of those who disbelieved among his people said:[10] should you follow Shu'aib, lo! verily you shall be the losers.

91. (فاخذتهم . . . جثمين) An earthquake thereupon[11] felled them; so that they lay prone[12] in their dwelling.

---

1. (in the pride of their power).
2. i. e., thou and they.
3. A reference to the old faith in the case of the Prophet Shu'aib can only mean that he, before he began to preach, was taken for an infidel by his countrymen, and not that he was really so; for a prophet according to the teachings of Islam can, at no period of his life, be an infidel. Besides, the verb عود does not always mean, coming back, or coming for a second time, but it also means to come to a state for the first time or originally. (LL)
4. This expresses abhorrence that a man of God must feel at all suggestions of impiety and infidelity.
5. (possible by any manner of means).

6. Such is the humility of the truly righteous. Always looking up to God they are never trustful of their own selves.

7. (so He knows who is to become what).

8. (so He shall never let us go astray).

9. (in a practical, demonstrable way).

10. (to their co-religionists, alarmed at the growing influence of the Prophet).

11. (at long last, after every persuasion and warning had failed).

12. (and dead).

كَأَن لَّمْ يَغْنَوْا فِيهَا ۚ الَّذِينَ كَذَّبُوا شُعَيْبًا كَانُوا هُمُ الْخَاسِرِينَ ﴿٩٢﴾ فَتَوَلَّىٰ عَنْهُمْ وَقَالَ يَا قَوْمِ لَقَدْ
أَبْلَغْتُكُمْ رِسَالَاتِ رَبِّي وَنَصَحْتُ لَكُمْ ۖ فَكَيْفَ آسَىٰ عَلَىٰ قَوْمٍ كَافِرِينَ ﴿٩٣﴾ وَمَا أَرْسَلْنَا فِي قَرْيَةٍ مِّن ع

عَفَوا وَّقَالُوا قَدْ مَسَّ آبَاءَنَا الضَّرَّاءُ وَالسَّرَّاءُ فَأَخَذْنَاهُم بَغْتَةً وَهُمْ لَا يَشْعُرُونَ ﴿٩٥﴾ وَلَوْ أَنَّ
أَهْلَ الْقُرَىٰ آمَنُوا وَاتَّقَوْا لَفَتَحْنَا عَلَيْهِم بَرَكَاتٍ مِّنَ السَّمَاءِ وَالْأَرْضِ وَلَٰكِن كَذَّبُوا فَأَخَذْنَاهُم بِمَا
كَانُوا يَكْسِبُونَ ﴿٩٦﴾ أَفَأَمِنَ أَهْلُ الْقُرَىٰ أَن يَأْتِيَهُم بَأْسُنَا بَيَاتًا وَهُمْ نَائِمُونَ ﴿٩٧﴾ أَوَأَمِنَ أَهْلُ الْقُرَىٰ

92. (الذين ... الخسرين) Those who had belied Shu'aib[13] became as though they had not dwelt therein;[14] those who had belied Shu'aib, it is they who were losers.

93. (فتولى ... كفرين) Then[15] he turned from them and said:[16] O my people! assuredly I delivered to you the messages of my Lord and cousellled you good;[17] how then should I lament over a disbelieving people?

SECTION 12

94. (وما ... يضرعون) We did not send a prophet to any town but We afflicted its people[18] with calamities and disasters that perchance they might humble themselves.

95. (ثم ... لا يشعرون) Thereafter We changed ease for adversity until they abounded[19] and said:[20] even thus did tribulation and prosperity touch our fathers.[21] Then We laid hold of them of a sudden while they perceived not.[22]

96. (ولو ... يكسبون) And had the people of those towns believed and feared Allah, We would of a surety have opened up to them blessings from the heavens[23] and the earth;[24] but they belied,[25] so We seized them for what they had been earning.

97. (افامن ... نائمون) Are the people of towns[26] then secure that Our wrath would not visit them[27] at night while they are slumbering?[28]

---

13. (and threatened to banish him and his followers).
14. i. e., utterly annihilated.
15. (after they were dead).
16. (in soliloquy, lamenting their end).
17. (but you persisted in your career of denial and defiance).
18. (who disregarded the warnings of the Prophet and flouted his authority).
19. i. e., grew and multiplied.

20. (in arrogance and conceit and in utter disregard of the expostulations of the Prophet).

21. (and so these vicissitudes have nothing to do with belief and unbelief, piety and impiety).

22. (that Our punishment was so near at hand).

23. Such as the rains in abundance.

24. Such as the produce of the earth in plenty.

25. (Our apostles).

26. The reference is to the citizens of the holy Prophet's time.

27. (although they are guilty of the same crime of denying their Prophet as their predecessors).

28. (as it came upon their predecessors).

أَن يَأْتِيَهُم بَأْسُنَا ضُحًى وَهُمْ يَلْعَبُونَ ۝ أَفَأَمِنُوا مَكْرَ اللَّهِ ۚ فَلَا يَأْمَنُ مَكْرَ اللَّهِ إِلَّا الْقَوْمُ الْخَاسِرُونَ ۝
أَوَلَمْ يَهْدِ لِلَّذِينَ يَرِثُونَ الْأَرْضَ مِن بَعْدِ أَهْلِهَا أَن لَّوْ نَشَاءُ أَصَبْنَاهُم بِذُنُوبِهِمْ ۚ وَنَطْبَعُ
عَلَىٰ قُلُوبِهِمْ فَهُمْ لَا يَسْمَعُونَ ۝ تِلْكَ الْقُرَىٰ نَقُصُّ عَلَيْكَ مِنْ أَنبَائِهَا ۚ وَلَقَدْ جَاءَتْهُمْ
رُسُلُهُم بِالْبَيِّنَاتِ فَمَا كَانُوا لِيُؤْمِنُوا بِمَا كَذَّبُوا مِن قَبْلُ ۚ كَذَٰلِكَ يَطْبَعُ اللَّهُ عَلَىٰ قُلُوبِ الْكَافِرِينَ ۝ وَمَا
وَجَدْنَا لِأَكْثَرِهِم مِّنْ عَهْدٍ ۖ وَإِن وَجَدْنَا أَكْثَرَهُمْ لَفَاسِقِينَ ۝ ثُمَّ بَعَثْنَا مِن بَعْدِهِم مُّوسَىٰ بِآيَاتِنَا إِلَىٰ
فِرْعَوْنَ وَمَلَئِهِ فَظَلَمُوا بِهَا ۖ فَانظُرْ كَيْفَ كَانَ عَاقِبَةُ الْمُفْسِدِينَ ۝ وَقَالَ مُوسَىٰ يَا فِرْعَوْنُ إِنِّي

98. (اوامن . . . يلعبون) Or, are the people of towns then secure that Our wrath would not visit them by daylight while they are disporting themselves?[28-A]

99. (افامنوا . . . الخسرون) Are they then secure against the contrivance of Allah?[29] None feels secure against Allah's contrivance except the people who are lost.[30]

SECTION 13

100. (اولم . . . يسمعون) Does it not guide the people who inherit the land after its people, that[31] had We willed, We would have afflicted them[32] for their sins?[33] And We have put a seal upon their hearts,[34] so that they are bereft of hearing.

101. (تلك . . . الكفرين) Those towns![35] We recount to thee[36] some of their tidings. Assuredly there came to them their messengers with evidences, but they were not such as to believe what they had first rejected.[37] Thus Allah put a seal upon the hearts of the infidels.

102. (وما . . . فسقين) We found no regard for covenant[38] in most of them; and most of them We found ungodly.

103. (ثم . . . المفسدين) Then We sent[39] after them Mūsā[40] with Our signs to Fir'awn[40-A] and his chiefs, but they wronged them.[41] Behold then what like was the end of the corrupters.

28-A. (as in the case of the destruction of Herculaneum and Pompeii). In the words of an ancient Roman historian, 'day was turned into night, and light into darkness; an inexpressible quality of dust and ashes was formed out, deluging land, sea and air, and burying two . . . . cities, Herculaneum and Pompeii, while the people were sitting in the theatre.'

29. (by respiting them). مكر الله signifies God's granting a man respite or delay, and enabling him to accomplish his worldly aims; . . . or His taking men little and little, so that they do not reckon upon it.' (LL)

30. i. e., those doomed to perish.

31. i. e., does it not open the eyes of the present generations after they have learnt well the fate of the arrogant nations in the past.

32. (with some calamity).

33. (and would have wiped them off like the rebellious nations of old).

34. (through their contumacy).

35. (destroyed for their wilful rejection of God's truth).

36. (O Prophet !).

37. (So blind and unreasoning was their opposition to the call of truth).

38. i. e., no observance of their covenant; no serious effort to fulfil their pledge of obedience.

39. Literally 'raised.'

40. 'The Moses of Qurān is a Muhammad in disguise' is the interesting comment of a Christian writer.

40-A. For Fir'awn and its Biblical equivalent Pharaoh see P. I, n. 205. It is to be observed that the holy Qurān never mentions the Egyptian king (or kings) by name. It only uses his general designation, viz., Pharaoh. Now the fact is, as 'it has long ago been noted by many Egyptologists that in the Egyptian literature it was customary to speak of the king as "Pharaoh" without mentioning his name. By a great number of examples from the Egyptian literature it can be found that it was precisely in the New Kingdom (1580-945 B. C.) that the proper name of the king was given only in solemn inscriptions or in purely historical records . . . . even in royal edicts, in judicial reports and in general records, the king is simply alluded to as "Pharaoh." A mere pursuit of Egyptian records, tales and narrations of that period makes this perfectly clear.' (Yahuda, 'Accuracy of the Bible,' p. 42).

41. i. e., they dealt with those signs and miracles in a most unjust manner.

رَسُولٌ مِّن رَّبِّ الْعٰلَمِينَ ﴿١٠٤﴾ حَقِيقٌ عَلٰٓى أَن لَّآ أَقُولَ عَلَى اللّٰهِ إِلَّا الْحَقَّ ۚ قَدْ جِئْتُكُم بِبَيِّنَةٍ مِّن رَّبِّكُمْ

104. (وقال . . . العلمين) And Mūsā said: O Fir'awn! I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds[42]—

105. (حقيق . . . اسرائيل) Incumbent it is upon me that I speak naught concerning Allah except the truth; surely I have brought to you[43] an evidence from your Lord:[44] so let the Children of Israil[45] depart with me.

106. (قال . . . الصدقين) Fir'awn said: if thou hast brought a sign,[46] forth with it if thou art of the truth-tellers.

107. (فالقى . . . مبين) Then he threw his rod, when, lo! it was a serpent manifest.[47]

108. (ونزع . . . للنظرين) And he drew forth his hand,[48] it was white[49] to the beholders.

SECTION 14

109. (قال . . . عليم) The chiefs of the people of Fir'awn[50] said: this[51] is indeed a magician knowing[52]—

110. (يريد . . . تامرون) he will banish you from land; so what is it that now you propose.[53]

111. (قالوا . . . حشرين) They said:[54] put him and his brother off,[55] and send callers[56] to the cities[57]——

112. (ياتوك . . . عليم) that they may bring to thee every magician knowing.

113. (وجاء . . . الغلبين) And the magicians came to Fir'awn.[58] They said: certainly there is a reward for us if we are the victors.

114. (قال . . . المقربين) Fir'awn said: yea! and you shall be of those brought nigh.[59]

42. (commissioned to call you to the worship of true God).

43. The address is to the people of Pharaoh in general.

44. Mark the words 'your Lord.' The Quranic God is the Universal God of Egyptians as well as of the Israelites, and not the Biblical God 'the Lord God of the Hebrews.'

45. (hitherto persecuted and oppressed by your government). Cf. the Bible :—'And afterward Moses and Aaron went in, and told Pharaoh. Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, let my people go.' (Ex. 5 : 1)

46. i. e., some extraordinary event confirmatory of thy claim.

47. 'It becomes a serpent—it lives and moves, and not only appears to be, but is, an actual living reptile' (Rawlinson, Moses : His Life and Times, p. 93). See also Ex. 4 : 2, 3 ; 7 : 9 10. Wrong and confused as usual, the Bible attributes this miracle, when performed before Pharaoh, not to Moses but to Aaron. The serpent has a special prominence in Egyptian mythology and symbolism. 'Of all the animals receiving the homage of the people none were so numerous or were so universally feared and venerated as the snakes. The serpent was adored where Amon was but a name, and where Ra was looked upon as belonging, like fine horses and clothes, to the rich and the mighty.' (Sayce, Religion of the Ancient Egypt, p. 208).

48. (from the folds of the garment on his bosom).

49. (and radiant with divine light). See Ex. 4 : 6, 8.

50. 'The priests and military men held the highest position in the country after the family of the King, and from them were chosen his ministers and confidential advisers, "the wise counsellors of Pharaoh." (HHW. I. p. 200)

51. (pretender to prophethood).

52. Egypt was then 'the true home of all kinds of magic.' (EBi. c., 1221)

53. Thus they discussed and deliberated among themselves.

54. (to Pharaoh as the result of their deliberation).

55. (by fair promises, for a while).

56. حاشر is 'one who congregates, or collects together people.'

57. (of the empire, replete with expert magicians).

58. 'Then Pharaoh also called the wise men and the sorcerers.' (Ex. 7 : 11) 'The Pharaoh is impressed to a certain extent ; but, before determining what weight he will attach to his credential, he will see what his own magicians can do.' (Rawlinson, Moses : His Life and Times, p. 93).

59. (to my person and throne) i. e., over and above big reward you will be raised in rank.

115. (قالوا ... الملقين) They said:[60] O Mūsā! either thou cast down,[61] or we shall be the ones to cast down.[62]

116. (قال ... عظيم) Mūsā said: cast down yours. Then when they cast down,[63] they enchanted the eyes of the people[64] and frightened them[65] and brought mighty magic[66] to bear.

117. (واوحينا ... يافكون) And We Revealed to Mūsā: cast thou rod. And lo! it[67] was swallowing up what they had feigned.[68]

118. (فوقع ... يعملون) Thus the truth prevailed, and what they had prepared vanished.

119. (فغلبوا ... صغرين) Thus were they[69] overcome and made to look abject.[70]

120. (والقى ... سجدين) And the magicians flung themselves prostrate.[71]

121. (قالوا ... العلمين) They said:[72] we believe in the Lord of the worlds——

122. (رب ... هرون) The Lord of Mūsā and Harūn.

123. (قال ... تعلمون) Fir'awn said:[73] did you[74] believe before I gave you leave? Assuredly this is a plot you[75] have plotted in the city that you drive forth its people.[76] So now you shall know.[77]

124. (لاقطعن ... اجمعين) Surely I will cut off your hands and feet on the opposite sides[78] and thereafter I will crucify you all.[79]

125. (قالوا ... منقلبون) They said:[80] verily to our Lord we are turning[81]——

60. (as the contest began).

61. (thy rod first).

62. (what we have with us).

63. (their cords and their rods).

64. According to the Bible, the Egyptian magicians cast down their rods 'and they became serpents.' (Ex. 7: 12). Note that the Holy Qur'ān lends no support to the view that the rods and cords of the magicians actually 'became serpents.' It only affirms that the magicians 'enchanted the eyes of the people.'

This is for the hundredth time that Qur'ān is correcting an inaccuracy of the Bible. The findings of the modern European scholars agree with the Qur'ān rather than with the Bible. 'It would be quite wrong,' says a modern authority, 'to ascribe the miracles performed by the Pharaoh's magicians to anything else than jugglery.' (EBi. c. 1221) 'What was done on this occasion was probably a clever piece of sleight of hand.' (Dummelow, op. cit., p. 55) 'Most modern critics are of opinion that the magicians bore in their hands real snakes, rendered torpid and stiffy, so as to look like rods, which, on being thrown to the ground, were disenchanted, and resumed their natural character. Another explanation is that they were mere clever jugglers, adepts in sleight of hand, and that the snakes were substituted for the rods, which were skilfully hidden away.' (Rawlinson, Moses: His Life and Times, p. 93).

65. (as the onlookers imagined that they saw serpents running about before them).

66. 'Mighty' because the number of rods and ropes thus changed into the appearance of serpents was very great. 'For they cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents.' (Ex. 7 : 12)

67. --now transformed into a huge snake—

68. i. e., the faked serpents of the magicians.

69. i. e., Pharaoh and his nobles.

70. (in the eyes of onlookers).

71. (recognising in Moses the true messenger of God).

72. (now converted to the true faith and confessing the One true God).

73. (in his extreme discomfiture). The triumph of Moses and Aaron was complete. The supreme magic of Egypt had been vanquished and humbled by the divine messengers, and yet Pharaoh cold-bloodedly hardened his heart and deliberately shut his eyes against the light.

74. (O magicians !).

75. (conspiring with Moses).

76. i. e., surely all this is due to your secret understanding with Moses to turn out the real inhabitants of the country and to establish the Israelites in their place.

77. (the punishment at my hands).

78. The right hand and the left foot, for example.

79. The punishment of crucification was known to, and widely employed by, many ancient nations and, among them, the Egyptians. (EBr. VII, p. 505, 11th Ed.). See also P. XIX n. 214.

80. (in the noble spirit of true martyrs).

81. i. e., it is to our loving and gracious Lord that we shall be thereby returning, and so we are to be no losers.

SECTION 15

127. (وقال . . . قهرون) And the chiefs of the people of Fir'awn said:[85] wilt thou[86] leave alone Mūsā and his people to act corruptly in the land[87] and to leave alone thee and thy gods?[88] Fir'awn said: soon we shall slay their sons and let live their women;[89] we are masters over them.[90]

128. (قال . . . المتقين) Mūsā said to his people:[91] seek help in Allah and perseverance;[92] verily the earth is Allah's; He makes whomsoever of His bondmen He wills inherit it; and the happy end is of the God-fearing.

129. (قالوا . . . تعملون) They said:[93] oppressed we have been before thou camest to us and since thou hast come to us.[94] He said: belike your Lord will destroy your foe and establish you[95] in their stead in the land,[96] that He may see how you act.

SECTION 16

130. (ولقد . . . يذكرون) Assuredly We afflicted the people of Fir'awn with lean years and lack of fruits, that they might take heed.[97]

82. (and abandoned the superstitious plurality of gods).
83. (so that not the severest ordeal may cause us to swerve or falter).
84. (only bowing to Thy will).
85. (now greatly alarmed and distressed).
86. (O Pharaoh!).
87. i. e., to preach freely the doctrine of the one Unseen God.
88. i. e., to defy thy religious and temporal authority. See also P. XXIV. n. 175.
89. (as we did before the birth of Moses).
90. (so we have no difficulty in reviving the old repressive laws. Cf. the Bible: "And Pharaoh said, Behold, the people of the land now are many, and ye make them rest from this burdens . . . . Let there more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein; and let them not regard vain words . . . . And the officers of the children of Israel, which Pharaoh's taskmasters had set over them, were beaten . . . ' (Ex. 5: 5, 9, 14).

91. (greatly alarmed at the news of this new oppression). 'It must indeed have a bitter moment. Having proclaimed himself a deliverer, ... he now stood before his nation convicted, so far, of absolute failure; not only no helper but an injurer, one who by his officious and clumsy interference had done them infinite harm. They had been in the "lowest deep" of calamity previously, but he had plunged them into a "lower deep." They had been scourged with whips; he had brought them a scouring with scorpions.' (Rawlinson, Moses: His Life and Times; p. 92).

92. (for it is faith that shall triumph).

93. (to Moses, in a spirit of truculence).

94. Cf. the Bible:—'And they met Moses and Aaron, who stood in the way, as they came forth from Pharaoh: And they said unto them, The Lord look upon you, and judge; because ye have made our savour to be abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of his servants, to put a sword in their hand to slay us.' (Ex. 5: 20, 21). According to Josephus the king commanded the chief taskmaster of the Hebrews 'to give them no relaxation from their labours, but to compel them to submit to greater oppressions than before.' ("Ant." II. 13: 4) 'Now when their labour was thus doubled upon them, they laid the blame upon Moses.' (ib.) "Not unnaturally, Moses and Aaron were assailed with bitter reproaches by the sufferers. What good had their interference done? Nay, what harm had it not done! The whole nation had been made to stink in the nostrils of Pharaoh—his anger had been aroused, his vengeance provoked. The oppression of the entire people had been made very much severer than before, and the head men were in actual peril of their lives, for men died under the bastinado,' (Rawlinson, Mose: His Life and Times, p. 91).

95. (as a free, independent nation).

96. i. e., in Palastine or elsewhere.

97. (and be warned).

131. (فاذا . . . يعلمون) So whenever good came their way, they would say: ours is this.[98] And if evil afflicted them, they would lay it to the ill augury of Mūsā and those with him. Lo! their ill augury was only with Allah;[99] but most of them knew not.[100]

132. (وقالوا . . . بمؤمنين) They said:[101] whatever the nature of a sign thou mayest bring to us with which to enchant us, in thee we are not going to be believers.[102]

133. (فارسلنا . . . مجرمين) Thereafter We sent upon them the flood,[103] and the locusts,[104] and the lice,[105] and the frogs,[106] and the blood:[107] signs detailed;[108] yet they remained stiff-necked and they were a people sinful.[109]

134. (ولما . . . اسرائيل) Whenever a plague fell on them they said: O Mūsā! supplicate thy Lord for us by what thy Lord has covenanted with thee;[110] if thou removest the plague from us we will believe in thee, and we will send with thee the Children of Israil.[111]

135. (فلما . . . ينكثون) Then whenever We removed the plague from them[112] till a term which they were to reach,[113] lo! they were breaking faith.[114]

---

98. i. e., this is our due; the result of our knowledge and industry.

99. i. e., the cause of their evil fortune lay with God.

100. (that the root of evil was within them).

101. (to Moses).

102. This gives a measure of their perversity and unreasoning obstinacy.

103. Or 'the plague.' The word though usually meaning 'an overpowering rain' or 'deluge' may also signify any other universal destruction or mortality. The word may allude to the plague of hail and fire as vividly described in the Bible. 'And the Lord sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground; and the Lord rained hail upon the land of Egypt. So there was hail, and fire mingled with the hail, very grievous, such as there was none like it in all the land of Egypt since it became a nation.' (Ex. 9 : 23, 24)

104. (which devoured everything of their corn and fruits). 'They covered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened; and they did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left: and there remained not any green thing in the trees, or in the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt.' (Ex. 10: 15) 'The Egyptians well knew what a pest the locust could be, what terrible devastation it could effect in a few days, or even in a few hours . . . . The locusts came in their myriads; they covered and hid the ground, which their brown forms "darkened"; they settled on every herb that the hail had left, . . . where the land was as the garden of Eden before them, behind them it was a desolate wilderness.' (Rawlinson, Moses: His Life and Times, pp. 111-12)

105. '. . . . And it became lice in man, and in beast; all the dust of the land became lice throughout all the land of Egypt.' (Ex. 8: 17) This particular plague was eminently fitted to work upon the Egyptian abhorrence of impurity and defilement. 'The Egyptians had an intense hatred of lice, and looked upon them as so impure that the priests were required to shave their entire bodies every other day in order that no louse or other impure creature might adhere to them.' (Rawlinson, Moses: His Life and Times, p. 100)

106. (which filled their houses and their food). '. . . . And the frogs came up, and covered the land of Egypt.' (Ex. 8: 6) 'One of the Egyptian divinities, Heka, has the head of a frog, and we may presume therefore that the frog was a sacred animal which it was not lawful to destroy . . . . . . How could those creatures be Divine which had aroused such hatred and loathing in the hearts of the entire people? How could they henceforth be looked upon without detestation? . . . The whole theory of sacred animals must have suffered a shock when Heka's sacred sign, the emblem of fecundity and productiveness, became an object of hatred and abhorrence.' (Rawlinson, Moses: His Life and Times, pp. 98-99)

107. (in their waters). 'And all the waters that were in the river were turned to blood. And the fish that was in the river died; and the river stank, and the Egyptians could not drink of the water of the river; and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt.' (Ex. 7: 20, 21) This plague coming out of the sacred river Nile must have caused a severe shock to the Nile-worshipping Egyptians. 'That sacred stream, so fondly worshipped as the giver of all good, was the generator of this great evil. Nile, wont to bestow nothing but blessings, brought forth this curse.' (Rawlinson, Moses: His Life and Times, p. 99)

108. (serving both as Divine judgments and as wonders accrediting Moses and Aaron as God's ambassadors).

109. 'And Moses and Aaron did all these wonders before Pharaoh: and the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart.' (Ex. 11: 10)

110. (that He would withdraw the punishment from us if we believed).

111. 'Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, and said, Entreat the Lord, that he may take away the frogs from me, and from my people; and I will let the people go, that they may do sacrifice unto the Lord.' (Ex. 8 : 8) See also Ex. 9 : 27 ; 10 : 16-17.

112. (in response to the intercession and prayer of Moses, and granted them respite).

113. (in God's foreknowledge).

114. 'When Pharaoh saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them; as the Lord had said.' (Ex. 8 : 15) نكث, literally, is to undo the threads of a garment, or to undo, or untwist a rope.

137. (واورثنا . . . يعرشون) And We caused the people who had been oppressed[116] to inherit[117] the land, the eastern[118] and western[119] parts of it, which We had blessed [120] And fulfilled was the good word of thy Lord to the Children of Israil[121] for they were long-suffering, and We annihilated what Fir'awn[122] and his people had built[123] and what they had raised.[124]

138. (وجوزنا . . . تجهلون) And We led the Children of Israil across the sea.[125] Then[126] they came upon a people cleaving to the idols they had.[127] They said: O Mūsā! make for us a god, even as they have gods.[127-A] He said: verily you are a people given to paganism.

139. (ان . . . يعملون) Verily those! vain is that in which they were engaged[128] and vain[129] became what they had been doing.

127. These people were either Amalekites or the tribe of Lakhm. Their idols, anyway, were images of oxen, which gave to the Israelites the impetus to the making of the golden calf. (Bdh) 'Every careful reader of the Bible,' observes a Christian commentator of that book, 'notices the number and variety of the forms of idolatry with which the Israelites came into contact. Nor was it a mere external contact. Idolatry and the pollutions attendant on it appealed with too much force to something in the people's character.' (Dummelow, op. cit., Intro. p. XXXVII)

127-A. 'All mankind was, at the period of the world's history, so prone to idolatry, and Israel was so deeply infected by the contagion of Egyptian superstition, that if God had appeared to them in any form, they would infallibly have seized upon that form, have reproduced it, imitated it, and made it an object of idolatrous veneration.' (وواعدنا . . . المفسدين) And We treated with Mūsā[132] thirty nights,[133] and We completed them with ten;[134] so the appointment of his Lord was completed by forty nights.[135] And Mūsā said to his brother Hārūn: act thou[136] in my place[137] among my people and rectify, and do not follow the way of the corrupters.

143. (ولما . . . المؤمنين) And when Mūsā came at Our appointment[138] his Lord spoke[139] to him,[140] he said:[141] Lord! show Thyself to me,[142] that I may look at Thee![143] Allah said: thou canst not see Me,[144] but[145] look at the yonder mount;[146] if it stands in its place, then thou wilt see Me.[147] Then when his Lord unveiled His glory to the mount, it[148] turned it[149] to dust,[150] and Mūsā fell down thunder struck.[151] Then when he recovered, he said: hallowed be Thou![152] I turn to Thee repentant,[153] and I am the first of the believers.[154]

146. (on which I am going to release a ray of My radiant glory, and which is far stronger and firmer than a human being).

147. i. e., thou wilt be able to see Me.

148. i. e., the radiance of Divine glory.

149. i. e., the mount Ṭūr.

150. i. e., levelled it with the ground and reduced it to powder. So powerful was the Ineffable glory of the Lord!

151. (dazzled by the splendour and radiance of Divine glory).

152. (and Thou art far above the grasp of our physical senses).

153. (for the prayer that I had made in the intensity of my fondness for Thee).

154. (in the impossibility of seeing Thee with the eyes of the flesh in this world).

144. (قال . . . الشكرين) Allah said: O Mūsā! I have chosen thee indeed above mankind by My messages and by My speaking; so hold fast what I have given thee,[155] and be of the grateful.[156]

145. (وكتبنا . . . الفسقين) And in the tablets[157] We wrote for him of everything[158] an exhortation, and a detail of everything.[159] So hold thou fast[160] with firmness, and bid thy people follow the best of it;[161] soon I shall show you[162] the abode of the ungodly people.[163]

146. (ساصرف . . . غفلين) I will turn away from My signs those who are big with pride on the earth[164] unjustly,[165] and even though they may see every sign, they will not believe; and if they see the path of rectitude they will take it as their path, and if they see the path of error they will take it as their path. This is because[166] they belied Our signs[167] and they were ever neglectful of them.[168]

147. (والذين . . . يعملون) Those who belie Our signs and the meeting of the Hereafter—vain shall be their works.[169] They shall be requited only for what they wrought.

155. i. e., apostleship and the Book.

156. (unlike thy ungrateful nation).

157. 'The tables were written on both their sides: on the one side, and on the other were they written. And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables.' (Ex. 32: 15) 'Archaeological evidence has now established the fact that alphabetical writing was actually in existence in Sinai at the very time when Moses led the tribes there after the Exodus from Egypt.' (Marston, The Bible is True, p. 22).

158. 159. (requisite for religion).

160. (these Divine precepts and injunctions, O Moses!). This was said to Moses by God.

161. i. e., the whole of the Law, as all precepts therein are 'the best.'

162. (O Irraelites!).

163. i. e., the dwelling-places of the ungodly Amalekites.

164. (in requital of their inordinate pride, and shall not open their hearts to receive the truth).

165. i. e., without any just cause or valid reason.

166. i. e., this repugnance to the call of truth has been caused in them because—

167. (out of sheer arrogance and conceit).

168. i. e., never paused to consider their significance.

169. (and this worthlessness of their works would become apparent to them on the Day of Judgment).

SECTION 18

148. (واتخذ . . . ظالمين) And the people of Mūsā, after him,[170] took[171] to them of their trinkets[172] a calf;[173] a body with a low.[174] Did they not see that it neither spake to them nor could it guide them to a way?[175] They took it[175-A] for their god, and they became evil-doers.[176]

149. (ولما . . . الخاسرين) And when they repented[177] and saw that they had strayed, they said:[178] if our Lord have not mercy on us and does not forgive us, we shall surely be of the losers.[179]

150. (ولما . . . الظالمين) When Mūsā returned[180] to his people indignant and sorrowing,[181] he said: ill is that which you have acted as my successor, in my absence! Did you outstrip[182] your Lord's commandments?[183] And he cast the tablets[184] and seized the head of his brother,[185] dragging him to himself.[186] Aaron said:[187] son of my mother:[188] the people held me weak,[189] and well-nigh slew me,[190] so do not cause the enemies rejoice over me and do not place me with the wrongdoing people.[191]

151. (قال . . . الراحمين) Mūsā said:[192] O Lord: forgive me[193] and my brother,[194] and cause us twain to enter into Thy mercy, and Thou art the most Merciful of the merciful.

---

170. i. e., in his absence; after he had departed for the mount.

171. (unto themselves for worship).

172. i. e., the ornaments borrowed by the Israelites on the eve of their departure from the Egyptians. 'They borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment: And the Lord gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them such things as they required.' (Ex. 12: 35, 36)

173. —of course lifeless—

174. The fact of the calf bellowing is mentioned in the Talmud, though not in the Bible.

175. (of this world or of the Next).

175-A. (for their good). Cf. the OT :—'And they said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.' (Ex. 32 : 4). 'They have made them a molten calf, and have worshipped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, These by thy gods, O Israel, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.' (Ex. 32 : 8)

176. (who did great wrong to their own souls).

177. The phrase in Arabic means : 'they struck their hands upon their hands, by reason of repentance : or repented greatly : because he who repents, and grieves, or regrets, bites his hand in sorrow, so that his hand is fallen upon by his teeth.' (LL)

178. (by way of penitence).

179. This verse is parenthetical. The sequence of events leads direct from verse 148 to verse 150.

180. (after 40 days from the mount, after being in the closest communion with the All-Holy, All-Supreme One).

181. i. e., shocked beyond measure at the going back of his people, not only in thought and word but also in act and deed, to the grossest form of materialism—calf worship—which was nothing short of apostasy.

182. اعجلتم is here synonymous with آسبقتم. (LL)

183. (and so did not think it meet to wait for my return from the mount). Moses, the emblem of piety and devotion, is naturally extremely indignant at the sight of sin, his burning indignation springing from his deep jealousy for the honour and sanctity of God's Unity.

184. (in the height of his righteous indignation). Cf. the OT :—'And Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount.' (Ex. 32 : 19) Note that there is no mention of Moses' 'breaking' the tablets in the Qur'ān. 'The action was not deliberate—it was momentary, instinctive ; it sprang from a fierce and fiery indignation at the unworthy conduct of his nation, who did not deserve the precious gift which he was bringing them, and whom he therefore deprived of the gift.' (Rawlinson, Moses : His Life and Times, p. 150)

185. (whom he had left in charge of the nation in his absence).

186. obviously all this heat was in the cause of God's religion, truly befitting a prophet of God.

187. (expostulating his innocence and helplessness in the matter).

188. (I did everying in my power to combat the outrageous blasphemy of my people, but—). The form of the address is meant to arouse love and affection in the heart of Moses who is for the moment filled with righteous indignation. The phrase also makes it clear that Aaron and Moses were brothers both on their father's and their mother's side and not half-brothers or step-brothers.

189. (and paid no heed to my admonitions).

190. (when I tried hard to put a stop to their blasphemy). According to the Jewish sources, when Hur stepped in to rebuke the Israelites for their blasphemy, 'he was at once put to death, and Aaron was threatened with the same fate.' (JE. III. p. 509)

191. Contrast this highly meritorious attitude of Aaron as depicted by the Qur'ān with the Biblical version which fathers the very responsibility of calf-worship on Aaron. See Ex. 32 : 2-6. According to biblical scholars a clue to the contradictory delineation of Aaron in the Old Testament is found in the documentary analysis which shows that the 'narrtive is the retult of combining to distinct accounts (J. and E.)'. (NSBD, pp. 15, 121).

192. (now deeply moved at the guiltlessness of Aaron).

193. (for my anger against Aaron).

194. (for his inability to nip the evil in the bud).

اتَّخَذُوا الْعِجْلَ سَيَنَالُهُمْ غَضَبٌ مِّنْ رَّبِّهِمْ وَذِلَّةٌ فِي الْحَيٰوةِ الدُّنْيَا ۚ وَكَذٰلِكَ نَجْزِي الْمُفْتَرِينَ ۝ وَ

152. (ان . . . المفترين) Those who took to themselves the calf,[195] presently will overtake them wrath from their Lord and abasement in the life of world.[196] Thus do We requite the forgers.

153. (و الذين . . . رحيم) And those who committed evils, and thereafter repented and believed,[197] verily thy Lord is thereafter[198] Forgiving, Merciful.[199]

154. (و لما . . . يرهبون) And when the anger of Mūsā was allayed and he took up the tablets,[200] and in the inscription thereon were guidance and mercy[201] unto those who have an awe of their Lord.

155. (و اختار . . . الغفرين) And Mūsā singled out of his people seventy men[202] for Our appointment;[203] then when the earthquake seized them,[204] he said:[205] Lord: hadst Thou willed,[206] Thou would have killed them afore[207] and me also. Wilt thou kill us[208] for what the fools among us have done?[209] It[210] is only Thy trial by which Thou sendest astray whom Thou wilt, and keepest guided whom Thou wilt. Thou art our Patron. So forgive us Thou and have mercy on us; and Thou art the Best of the forgivers.[211]

195. (for worship).

196. All this was said by God to Moses in respect of the calf-worshippers. Compare the Jewish view of the enormity of this sin. 'Next to the fall of man, the worship of the golden calf is, in rabbinical theology, regarded as the sin fraught with the direct consequences to the people of Israel. "There is not a misfortune that Israel has suffered which is not partly a retribution for the sin of the calf." (JE. III. pp. 508-509)

197. (renouncing and repudiating their previous infidelity and blasphemy).

198. i. e., after their repentance.

199. And not vindictive or revengeful.

200. 'Tablets', not their fragments, which implies that the tablets were whole, not broken into pieces.

201. i. e., commandments leading to full guidance and ultimately to God's mercy.

202. (who had not worshipped the calf).

203. (to go up with him to the mountain to witness Our discourse with him).

204. (as a punishment for their impertinence). See P. 1, nn. 226-29.

205. (fearing that they were dead and apprehending that he would be charged with their death by his own unruly people).

206. (in the course of Thy ordinary plan of the universe).

207. (i. e., before their coming to this place with me).

208. i. e., my chosen elders and myself. Moses meant: the death of these elders here on the mount means my certain death at the hands of my infuriated people on my return.

209. i. e., the atrocious offence of calf-worship.

210. i. e., this violent convulsion which has led to the apparent death of the seventy elders.

211. The prayer of Moses was granted and the elders revived.

156. (و اكتب . . . يؤمنون) And ordain for us good in the world and in the Hereafter; surely we have been guided to Thee.[212] Allah said: as to My chastisement, I afflict therewith whom I will,[213] and as to My mercy,[214] it comprehends everything.[215] I will therefore ordain it for those who fear God and pay poor-rate and those who believe in Our signs.

157. (الذين . . . المفلحون) Those who follow the messenger,[216] the unlettered prophet,[217] whom they find described[218] in the Taurāt[219] and Injīl[220] which are with them;[221] he bids them to the seemly[222] and forbids them the unseemly,[223] allows to them things clean,[224] and prohibits them things unclean, and relieves them of their burdens and the shackles[225] which have been upon them.[226] Then those who believe in him and side with him and succour him and follow the light[227] which has been sent down with him;[228] those: they are the prosperous.[229]

212. (in humility and sincerity).

213. (in consonance with My universal plan and in consequence of man's own persistent contumacy).

214. Or 'loving-kindness.'

215. So that His love is universal, all-embracing, while His retributive justice is restricted to particular and exceptional cases.

216. i. e., the holy Prophet of Islam.

217. Even according to the Christian writers not altogether blinded by their hatred of Islam:—'As to acquired learning, it is confessed he had none at all; having had no other education than what was customary in his tribe, who neglected, and perhaps despised, what we call literature.' (Sale) 'It is probable that he could neither read nor write, and it is almost certain that he could not have done so sufficiently.' (Palmer)

218. (by very full description).

219. Here are a few references with a running commentary:—

1. 'I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him.' (Dt. 18: 18)

'Their' referring to the Israelites, 'their brethren', must clearly be the Ismailites; and thus the promised Prophet must be an Ismailite. 'Like unto thee' obviously means 'like unto Moses' in having a Law of his own.

The description "will put my words . . . . . . shall command him" is alluded to in Jn. 16: 13 also. See n. 220-7.

2. 'The Lord came from Sinai, and rose up from Seir unto them; he shined forth from mount Paran, and he came with ten thousands of saints: from his right hand went a fiery law for them.' (Dt. 33: 2)

Coming after Moses ('from Sinai') and Jesus ('from Seir') the allusion in 'from mount Paran,' which is in Makka, is clearly to the Prophet born in Makka. It was he who entered that city as a victor at the head of 10,000 saintly companions and holding in his hand 'a fiery law.'

3. 'And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation.' (Ge. 17:20)

This promise of God to bless Ismail found its complete fulfilment in the person of Muhammad (on him be peace!)—an Ismailite being appointed the Prophet for the entire world.

4. 'The sceptre shall not be taken away from Judah, not a ruler from his thigh, till he come that is to be sent: and he shall be the expectation of nations.' (Ge 49: 10. DV)

It was at the advent of this Ismailite 'sent one' that prophecy in Israel ceased, and it was he under whom the nations of the world gathered.

5. 'I will make thy name to be remembered in all generations: therefore shall the people praise thee for ever and ever.' (Ps. 45: 17)

'Muhammad' is literally 'the praised one.' And it is his name coupled with that of his Creator, which is being proclaimed from the mosque minarets five times every day throughout the world.

6. 'Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my Spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles . . . . And the isles shall wait for his law.' (Is. 42: 1, 4)

It is precisely Muhammad, the 'servant of God' and His 'elect' (Mustafa) who brought judgment to the Gentiles, and whose law has been awaited by the distant 'isles.'

7. 'Yea, he is altogether lovely. This is my beloved, and this is my friend.' (So. 5: 16)

The word "lovely" used in the English Bible is a substitute for the Hebrew one, "Mohammdīn." As this name of our Prophet is noun adjective, the sacred poet uses it in a manner answering both the interpretation of a proper noun and an adjective.' (Syed Ahmad Khan, op. cit., X, p. 16)

As further references, may be cited the following :—Hab. 3 : 3 ; Hag. 2 : 7-9 ; Mal. 3 : 1.

220. Even in the manipulated and mutilated NT of the present-day the allusions are neither too scanty nor too enigmatical.

1. 'Did ye never read in the Scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner ; this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes? Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken ; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.' (Mt. 21 : 42-44)

   It was the progeny of Ismail that was so long rejected and looked down upon by the Jews (and also by the Christians). It was one of those very Ismailies who at long last was raised to the highest honour. The announcement that this prophet's opponents shall be smashed is even more clear.

2. 'Tarry in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high.' (Lk. 24 : 49)

   It was after the advent of the holy Prophet of Islam that the reverence paid to Jerusalem was transferred to Ka'ba.

3. 'Who art thou ? And he confessed, and denied not ; but confessed, I am not the Christ. And they asked him, what then ? Art Thou Elijah ? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that Prophet ? And he answered, No. . . . . And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not Christ, nor Elijah, neither that Prophet ? (Jn. 1 : 19-21, 25)

   The questions were put by the learned among the Jews to John the Baptist, which clearly indicate that besides Christ and Elijah (Elias in the Authorised King James' Version of 1611), they expected another prophet, who was so well known that instead of designating him by name, a mere pronoun, 'that Prophet' was deemed quite sufficient.

4. 'Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is the Prophet, Others said, This is the Christ,' (Jn. 7 : 40-41)

   Another very clear reference to the advent of the well-known prophet, 'the Prophet.'

5. 'And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter that he may abide with you for ever.' (Jn. 14 : 16)

6. 'But when the Comforter is come, whom I shall send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.' (Jn. 15 : 26)

7. 'And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment . . . . Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth : for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak : and he will shew you things to come.' (Jn. 16 : 8-13)

All this description of the Comforter exactly fits the holy Prophet. He it is who, as the Final Prophet, brought an abiding Message ('abiding with you for ever'), who testified to the truth of Jesus ('he shall testify of me'), and who 'reproved the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment.' And he, above all, was the Divine mouthpiece, reproducing the Words of God precisely as he received them ('he shall not speak of himself, but whosoever he shall hear, that shall he speak').

This much as regards the 'gospels' accepted as canonical by the Christian Church. When we come to the 'Gospel of St. Barnabas' we find the references as plain as they could possibly be—the Prophet is not only delineated in full detail but also prophesied by name. Vide pp. 33, 99, 101, 103, 105, 167, 169, 223, 301.

221. 'Them' refers to the people of the Book.

222. معروف is what is approved by reason and by the law.

223. منكر, contrary of معروف, is what is deemed abominable or unseemly.

224. (but hitherto forbidden).

225. i. e., difficult tasks and fatiguing works.

226. (his law superseding all previous laws involving hardship).

227. (which can illumine the life of everyone who cares to be guided by it).

(قل . . . تهتدون) Say thou:[230] O mankind![231] verily I am Allah's messenger to you all[232]—of Him whose is the dominion of the heavens and the earth.[233] No god is there but He; He gives life and causes death.[234] Believe then in Allah and His messenger, the unlettered prophet,[235] who believes in Allah and His words;[236] and follow him that haply you may be guided.

159. (ومن . . . يعدلون) And of the people of Mūsā there is a community[237] guiding others by the truth[238] and judging[239] thereby.[240]

160. (وقطعنهم . . . يظلمون) And We divided them into twelve tribes as nations.[241] And We revealed to Mūsā, when his people asked him for water:[241-A] smite the rock with thy rod. Then gushed forth from it twelve springs; each people already knew their drinking-place.[242] And We shaded them with thick clouds;[243] and We sent down upon them the manna and the quails,[244] saying: eat of the pure things with which We have provided you. And they wronged Us not, but themselves they were wont to wrong.[245]

230. (O Prophet !).

231. Mark once again the universal character of the holy Messenger. It aims to reclaim and uplift the whole of humanity, not any particular nation or people.

232. (as distinguished from the apostles of old who always addressed some particular people). Muhammad's people are thus the people of the world at large, and his religion is the most cosmopolitan of all religions.

(وسئلهم . . . يفسقون) And ask thou[248] them[249] about the town that stood by the sea when they[250] transgressed in the matter of the sabbath, when their fish came to them openly on the sabbath day, and did not come to them on the day they did not observe the sabbath.[251] Thus[252] We tested them for they were wont to transgress.

164. (وإذ . . . يتقون) And recall what time a community of them[253] said:[254] why do you exhort a people whom Allah is going to kill or chastise with a severe chastisement?[255] They[256] said: to justify us before your Lord,[257] and that haply you may fear God.

250. i. e., the inhabitants of that town. The reference is to the port of ancient Ailah (Elath) or modern 'Aqaba, in the north-east of the Red Sea.

251. The fish, to tempt the offending Jews, used to come in great numbers to the shore on the night of the sabbath and stay there all the sabbath ; but as the night spread they returned into the sea again. The Jews cut canals from the sea for the fish to enter, with sluices, which they shut on the sabbath, to prevent their return to the sea; and they dressed and ate them as soon as the sabbath had ended. This was tantamount to circumventing the sabbath and violating its sanctity.

169. (خلف . . . تعقلون) Then succeeded them a posterity;[269] they inherited the Book taking this near world's gear[270] and saying:[271] assuredly it will be forgiven us.[272] And if there comes to them another gear like it they shall take it.[272-A] Has there not lain upon them the bond of the Book that they shall say of God aught but truth?[273] And they have read what is in it,[274] and the abode of the Hereafter is better for those who fear. Do you not then understand?

170. (والذين . . . المصلحين) And those who stand fast by the Book[275] and establish prayer — verily We will not waste the wages of rectifiers.

171. (و اذ . . . تتقون) And recall when We shook the mountain over them as though it was a canopy and they imagined that it was going to fall upon them; and We said: hold firmly what We have given you and remember what is in that; haply you may fear.[276]

272-A. (again). The teaching of the OT itself on this point is plain enough:—'And thou shalt take no gift: for the gift blindeth the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous.' (Ex. 23 : 8)

273. Cf. the OT:—'Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it.' (Dt. 4 : 2) 'What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it.' (Dt. 12:32)

274. (so they cannot plead ignorance).

275. (and not do it mere lip-service). The reference is to the real, good Jews who felt themselves bound by their own Scriptures to accept Islam.

276. 'It was not a mere "storm of thunder and lightning, whereof Moses took advantage to pursuade the people that they had heard God's voice"—it was not "an earthquake with volcanic eruptions"—it was not even these two combined—it was a veritable theophany, in which, amid the phenomena of storm and tempest, and fire and smoke, and thick darkness, and hearings of the ground as by an earthquake shock, first the land blast seemingly of a trumpet sounded long, commanding attention, and then a clear, penetrating voice, like that of a man, made itself heard in distinctly articulated words, audible to the whole multitude, proceeding out of the midst of the fire, and recognized by the multitude as superhuman as "the voice of God." (Rawlinson, Moses: His Life and Times, pp. 145, 146). See also P. I, n. 284.

277. (in the world of spirits).

278. Lit. "took"

279. (after endowing them with sufficient intelligence and understanding).

280. (Thou art). Thus was the covenant of Monotheism inscribed, not like the covenant of Israel upon the tablets of stone but impressed upon the heart, the soul, of man. That this will to acknowledge and obey the One God forms part of man's rational nature has at long last been recognized by the anthropologists who have now come to believe that instead of monotheism being a development of primitive polytheism the latter itself is a degeneration of the former. 'The earliest conception of deity is really monotheistic.' (Marston, The Bible Comes Alive, p. 273) Evolutionary ethnologists and anthropologists of the nineteenth century presupposed the primeval human culture as utterly barbaric and bewilderingly polytheistic or animistic. Later ethnological researches have, however, completely reversed this conclusion. 'The startling reports of Andrew Lang on the original monotheism of these Pygmies and related tribes, belonging, like them, to Primeval culture, marked a new epoch in ethnological research. The Viennese ethnologist, Prof. Father W. Schmidt (now working at the Ethnographic Museum of the Vatican) collected all data and reports, referring to the subject. The result of this undertaking supported Andrew Lang's ideas on the broadest basis. Monotheism appears to be really at the very beginning of religious thought . . . . The point which mostly concerns us in these studies is the fact that monotheism is found to have been the original form of religion.' (Ehrenfels in The Islamic Culture, Hyderabad, Deccan, Oct. 1940; pp. 436-37). See also P. II, nn. 383, 384, XXV, n. 45.

293. (O Prophet!).
294. (that they may draw lessons thereby).
295. The story is preferably to be taken in a general sense, and not with reference to any particular individual. But many of the commentators think the person intended here is one Umayya ibn Abu Salt who read the old Scriptures and therefore knew that God could send a prophet about that time, but when the Promised one did arrive, he refused to acknowledge him. Some think the narrative relates to Balaam, of the Canaanite race, whose story occurs in the Bible (Nu. 22, 23, 24).

296. i. e., who was endowed with a knowledge of Divine commandments.

297. i. e., instead of profiting by them he slipped out of them and misused his excellent opportunities.

298. i. e., the devil seeing his opportunity caught the man up. Notice the force of 'so.' The initiative comes from the man himself—by his own choice of the wrong path.

299. i. e., of the confirmed sinners; of those given to perdition.

300. (in Our universal Plan).

301. i. e., by means of the Divine knowledge bestowed on him. The meaning is: had he lived up to his knowledge, We would surely have raised him, in conformity with Our will and law, to spiritual eminence.

302. i. e., instead of striving to rise to spiritual eminences he deliberately chose the path of error and guilt.

303. هوىٰ is not simple desire, but 'blameable or evil inclination.'

304. The comparison is in point of utter contemptibility and restiveness.

305. Dog is, with many nations and peoples, a term of abuse. In the Bible it is mentioned in many places, but almost 'always with contempt. The Eastern street dog is a type of all that is cowardly, lazy, filty, treacherous, and contemptible.' (DB. I, p. 616) The word is in English, synonymous, in a secondary and derived sense, with 'worthless, surly, or cowardly fellow.' Though admired and even worshipped by some, it has been execrated by most others. The Hindus denounced it as unclean. Certain other nations, on the other hand, have venerated and worshipped the dog. 'In ancient Egypt, dogs were commonly respected and mummified, in particular at Cynopolis. In ancient Persia the dog was held in the highest esteem, and most rigorous penalties were exacted for killing it' (ERE. I, p. 512). In ancient Syria, 'the dog was sacred among the Harranians. They offered sacrificial gifts to it, and in certain mysteries dogs were solemnly declared to be the brothers of the mystics.' (Smith, Religion of the Semites, p. 291).

306. (to drive him away).

307. Which is symbolic of base restiveness. The Jews still seem to see in the parable an allusion to Ka'ab, Jewish poet of Madina, who had travelled to Makka to incite the pagans against the Muslims. 'The points of simile are not only the alliteration of Ka'ab and "kalb" (dog) but also the putting forth of the tongue, which was regarded as a symbol of poetic satire.' (JE. II, p. 59)

308. (out of perversity).

312. (in consequence of his contumacy and wilful blindness). اضلال is 'the decreeing that one shall err or stray, because he has done so already.' Another meaning of God's اضلال of a man is His 'so constituting man that when he observes and pursues a certain course, or way, of acting or the like . . . he habituates himself to it.' (LL)

314. i. e., they do not exert their will to understand.

315. (in their listlessness).

316. The reason is plain. The listlessness of the cattle is involuntary, instinctive and unblamable, while that of the infidels is deliberate, acquired and culpable. Cf. the OT:—'The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider.' (Is. 1 ; 3)

317. (conveying His excellent attributes and functions). This repudiates the queer doctrine of the namelessness of God, characteristic of the Alexandrian schools of philosophy and also, to some extent, of Jewish thought. 'Philo taught that God was without qualities and incomprehensible in His essence. He was the Nameless Existing. So to Plotinus God as the One could be described only negatively.' (ERE, IX, p. 172)

318. (by applying those names to the gods of polytheism).

319. i. e., in accordance with the true religion.

320. (among themselves).

321. (to Hell).

322. The purport is : the destination of the wicked in Hell where they are being led stealthily but surely. And so their apparent prosperity in this world is not worth looking at.

323. i. e., I grant them a respite in this world, and do not inflict punishment immediately.

324. 'God's practising an artful device towards the unbelievers means His taking them unawares, so that they do not reckon upon it ; bestowing upon them enjoyments in which they delight, and on which they place their reliance, and with which they become familiar so as not to be mindful of death, and then taking them in their most heedless state.' (LL)

325. i. e., most effectual ; unfailing.

326. i. e., the infidels of the holy Prophet's time and country.

327. The Prophet's almost incredible achievements are still the wonder and admiration of an unbelieving world. 'The success of Mohammad as a law-giver, . . . and the stability of his institutions during a long series of generations, and in every condition of social polity, prove that this extraordinary man was formed by a rare combination of the qualities both of a Lycurgus and an Alexander.' (Finlay, op. cit., p. 446) 'Endowed with a refined mind and delicate taste, reserved and meditative, he lived much within himself. . . . The fair character and honourable bearing of the unobtrusive youth was the approbations of his fellow-citizens ; and he received the title, by common consent, of Al-Amin, the Faithful.' (Muir, op. cit., pp. 19-20). Savary, who, "as an enlightened Westerner," of course, refused 'to call Mohammed a prophet,' is 'nevertheless forced to recognize him as one of the greatest men who ever lived,' and finds himself bound to concede that 'his political and military ability and his capacity for governing men were extraordinary,' and to regard him 'as one of those unusual personalities occasionally appearing in history, who remake their environment and enlist men in their triumphant train.' (Andrae, op. cit., pp. 244, 245)

328. i. e., the holy Prophet ; their constant companion, who mixes with them freely and lives with them intimately, and whose sainty and sobriety of judgment they have every means to test. And yet he is "possessed one !"

185. (اولم . . . يؤمنون) Do they not[329] look at the governance of the heavens and the earth and whatever Allah has created of aught and at the fact[330] that their own term might be drawn nigh? In what discourse will then they believe thereafter?[331]

186. (من . . . يعمهون) Whoso Allah sends astray[332] no guide is then for him and He lets them wander perplexed in their exorbitance.[333]

187. (يسئلونك . . . يعلمون) They[334] ask thee[335] concerning the Hour and when it is to come? Say thou: its knowledge is with my Lord alone:[336] none can disclose its time but He; heavy it is in the heavens and the earth; it shall not come upon you except of a sudden.[337] They ask thee[338] as if thou wert familiar with it.[339] Say thou: knowledge of it is with Allah; but most of them know not.[340]

188. (قل . . . يؤمنون) Say thou: I possess no power[341] of benefit or hurt to myself save as Allah wills;[342] and had I knowledge of[343] Unseen I would have amassed ample good, and evil would not have touched me.[344] I am naught but a warner and bringer of good tidings to a people who believe.

329. (to be convinced of His Oneness as well as His power and glory).

330. (which reflection would make them think of this fate).

331. i. e., after, receiving a Message so plain and effective as the Qur'ān is.

332. (in consonance with His universal Plan, and in consequence of the offender's own contumacy).

333. (and He does not take away their liberty of action).

334. i. e., the Arab pagans who were disbelievers in Resurrection.

335. (O Prophet!).

336. (shared by none). Cf. the NT:—'Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only.' (Mt. 24: 36)

337. It has often been held that the NT 'contains indications of the signs of the approaching End, and from time to time enthusiasts have identified the approaching End, with their own time or that immediately ahead. Nevertheless the End has not arrived : and even if it did come, now it would not be a real fulfilment of what is written in the New Testament.' (EBr. III, p. 523)

338. —with a view to test thy knowledge of the Unseen, which they think is an implication of thy prophethood—

339. i. e., well acquinted with the detailed timings of this and other future events.

340. (that omniscience forms no part of the prophetic equipment).

341. (as an apostle and servant of God, beyond that of ordinary mortals).

342. Note the unparalleled monotheistic note ringing in the verse and the preceding verses. Every power, big or small, is God's ; and the greatest and holiest of the prophets is nothing before Him. Contrast this with the doctrines of Sonship, consubstantiation, Incarnation and coequality with God, common to so many religions

343. Mark the phrase لو كنت أعلم which means, 'if I kept knowing' and not 'if I knew.'

344. (which not being the case, it is clear that I am not endowed with

SECTION 24

189. (هوالذى . . . الشكرين) He it is Who created you[345] from a single soul,[346] and He created of him his mate[347] that he might find comfort in her.[348] Then when he covers her she bears a light burden and passes by with it;[349] then when she grows heavy the twain[350] call upon Allah their Lord: if Thou grantest us a goodly child[351] we shall surely be of the grateful.

190. (فلما . . . يشركون) But when He bestowed the twain a goodly child they set up to Him the associates in respect of what He has bestowed upon them.[352] Exalted be Allah far from what they associate!

191. (ايشركون . . . يخلقون) Do they associate those who cannot create aught, and are[353] created?——

192. (ولا . . . ينصرون) And who cannot succour them, nor can succour themselves.[354]

193. (وان . . . صامتون) And if you[355] call them[356] towards guidance they do not follow you. It is the same to you whether you call them or be silent.

194. (ان . . . صدقين) Verily those whom you[357] call upon besides Allah[358] are creatures like you; so call on them and let them answer you, if you say sooth.[359]

---

345. (O mankind!).

346. i. e., Adam. The implication of which fact is, that all men belong to one species, and that racial variations notwithstanding, there is no essential difference between man and man. If the modern world had only kept this elementary truth in mind, there would have been no occasion for it to lament that 'the progress of civilization is threatened by the serious danger of racial conflict and the still more serious evil, the demoralization caused by inter-racial and colour prejudice' (EBr. VI, p. 571). The time must come when it will seem absurd that French and Germans, Americans and Japanese, French and English, can even have been divided by imaginary barriers—no less absurd than the recollection that the people of Burgandy and Artoris, of Mecklanbourg and Hanover, of Wessex and Northumberland were once taught to believe themselves natural enemies.' (Fyfe, The Illusion of National Character. See also P. IV, n. 477 : p. XXIII, n. 481)

347. i. e. Eve, or Hawwah, the first woman.

348. The word 'repose' puts in a nutshell the various attitudes the two sexes can adopt towards each other—of love in youth, of companionship in middle age, and of care and attendance in infirmity. Contrast with this the status of woman in Christianity. 'Woman was represented as the door of hell, as the mother of all human ills . . . . Women were even forbidden by a provincial council, in the sixth century, on account of their impurity, to receive the Eucharist into their naked hands. Their essentially subordinate position was continually maintained,' (Lecky, op. cit., II, 1869 ed., pp. 357-58). See also P. XXI, n. 126.

349. i. e., with the child in her womb.

350. i. e., the parents in their anxiety.

351. i. e., sound in body, mind and spirit.

352. (by ascribing the sound birth of their child to agencies other than the favour of God).

353. (themselves).

354. So helpless and so insignificant are the gods of polytheism!

355. (O Muslims!).

356. i. e. those false deities.

357. (O infidels!).

358. Such as sun-deity, moon-deity, and star-deities.

359. Cf. the OT :—'And they took the bullock, which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, hear us. But there was no voice, nor any that answered.' (1 Ki. 18 : 26)

195 (الم . . . تنظرون) Have they feet with which they walk? Have they hands with which they grip? Have they eyes with which they see? Have they ears with which they hear?[360] Say thou:[361] call upon your associate-gods and then plot against me and give no respite.[362]

196. (ان . . . الصلحين) My protector surely is Allah who has revealed the Book,[363] and who protects the righteous.[364]

197. (والذين . . . ينصرون) And those whom you call upon beside Allah cannot succour you nor themselves can they succour.[365]

198. (وان . . . يبصرون) And if you[366] call them[367] towards guidance they will not hear, and thou wilt behold them looking[368] at thee, yet they do not see.[369]

199. (خذ . . . الجهلين) Show forgiveness[370] and enjoin what is honorable[371] and turn away from the ignorant.[372]

200. (واما . . . عليم) And if there come to thee[373] a prompting[374] from Satan,[375] seek then refuge in Allah;[376] verily He is Hearing,[377] Knowing.[378]

201. (ان . . . مبصرون) Verily those who fear God when an instigation from Satan[379] touches them, they[380] call to mind,[381] and lo! they are enlightened.[382]

---

360. Cf. the OT:—'Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands. They have mouths, but they speak not: eyes have they, but they see not: They have ears, but they hear not: noses have they, but they smell not: They have hands, but they handle not: feet have they, but they walk not: neither speak they through their throat.' (Ps. 115: 4-7)

361. (O Prophet! by way of challenge).

362. The point is that the idols are as impotent in harming their opponents as in protecting their friends.

363. And this is a special reason for God's protection of His Prophet.

364. And this is a general reason for God's protection of the most righteous of the righteous.

365. See n. 354 above.

366. (O Muslims!).

367. i. e., the idols.

368. i. e., as though they were looking.

369. Cf. the OT :—'They have mouths, but they speak not ; eyes have they, but they see not.' (Ps. 135 : 16)

370. (O Prophet !) i. e., be not too critical of the doings of the infidels, but accept of them what is apparently good in the purity of their sincerity and other atttending circumstances.

371. (upon thy people when they deviate even from what is ostensibly good and proper).

372. (when in spite of all thy remonstrances they persist in their ways of sin and evil).

373. (consequent on the defiant provocation by the devil).

374. (of impatience or retaliation).

375. —as all evil suggestions have their rise in the prompting of the devil—

376. (and slacken not in thy mission of preaching).

377. i. e., Hearer of thy words.

378. i. e., Knower of purity of motives.

379. i. e., any prompting of rage, retaliation etc.

380. (immediately).

381. (God and His commandments).

382. i. e., immediately the men of God are assailed by the devil they bring to their minds God and His commandment, and are thus forthwith able to see through the viles of the devil.

202. (واخوانهم . . . يقصرون) And their[383] brethren[384] drag them on towards error,[385] so they stop not short.[386]

203. (و اذا . . . يؤمنون) And whence thou[387] bringest them[388] not a particular sign[389] they say: why hast thou not brought it?[390] Say thou: I follow only what has been revealed to me by my Lord.[391] This[392] is an enlightenment[393] from your Lord and a guidance and a mercy to people who believe.

204. (و اذا . . . ترحمون) So when the Quran is recited listen to it and keep silence;[394] haply you may be shown mercy.[395]

205. (و اذكر . . . الغفلين) Remember thou[396] thy Lord within thyself[397] with humility and reverence, without loudness[398] in word, morning and evening, and be thou not of the heedless.

206. (ان . . . يسجدون) Assuredly those who are with thy Lord[399] do not disclaim against His service,[400] they hallow Him[401] and before Him they prostrate themselves.[402]

383. i. e., the wrong-doers.

384. i. e., the devils.

385. (and make them plunge into error yet deeper).

386. (from pursuing the course of perdition).

387. (O Prophet!).

388. i. e., the infidels.

389. i. e., a miracles such as they demand but which God in His wisdom does not will.

390. As if the miracles were a performance of the Prophet himself.

391. That is the gist of prophethood in Islam. Prophets are only the faithful Messengers of God. No prophet is empowered to perform miracles on his own accord in order to please the infidels. It is only God who, in His infinite wisdom and power, can, and does sometimes, alter the working of His usual, ordinary, normal laws, and bring about what to the limited, finite, intelligence of men appears miraculous. He alone is the Author, equally with the ordinary, every-day events, of natural, extraordinary, and 'super' natural events, known in human language as miracles. To conceive men of God—even the greatest and holiest of them—as the authors, habitual or occasional, of any happenings in the universe is to ascribe to them attributes of Divinity. See also VII. n. 423, XI, n. 188.

392. (Book).

393. i. e., a stupendous miracle in itself; every little chapter of which constitutes a distinct miracle.

394. (in order to listen properly).

395. i. e., in order that you may derive full moral and spiritual benefits from it.

396. (O reader!).

397. (constantly).

398. See P. VIII, n. 495.

399. i. e., angels high in rank with Him, not near Him in point of physical contact. The presence signified by عند here is ideal, not spatial.

400. Attitude indicative of devotion in spirit.

401. Attitude indicative of devotion in words.

402. Attitude indicative of devotion in deeds. (A prostration is prescribed at the end of this Surah.)

Sūrat-ul-Anfāl[403]

The Spoil. VIII

(Madinian, 10 Sections and 76 Verses)

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION I

1. (يسئلونك . . . مؤمنين) They ask thee[404] concerning the spoils;[405] say thou: the spoils are Allah's[406] and the messenger's.[407] So fear Allah,[408] and set right the matter among you,[409] and obey Allah and His messenger if you are believers.[410]

2. (انما . . . يتوكلون) The believers are only those whose hearts quake with awe[411] when Allah is mentioned, and when His revelations are rehearsed to them, it increases their faith[412] and they put trust in their Lord——

3. (الذين . . . ينفقون) who establish prayer and who spend of what We have provided them.

4. (اولئك . . . كريم) These are they who are the true believers.[413] For them are degrees[414] with their Lord[415] and forgiveness and a provision honourable.

403. The title is taken from the question of the division of the property obtained at the first battle of Islam, fought at Badr. The booty 'consisted of 115 camels, 14 horses, an endless store of vestments and carpets, articles of fine leather, with much equipage and armour.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 228)

404. (O Prophet!).

405. i. e., concerning its division. 'By ancient custom a special share of the booty taken in war falls to the commander; he has the first choice, and in old Arabia was entitled to a fourth of the whole. In ancient Israel the practice was similar.' (EBi. c. 4905) In Israel, 'booty was to be divided in equal shares between those who went into the battle and those who guarded the camp. A chosen part was sometimes dedicated to the Lord, ... or reserved for a leader.' (DB. IV, p. 895)

406. i. e., He is their sole Master, Arbiter and Dispenser.

407. (as He is chief representative on the earth). In modern parlance, all acquisitions of war must absolutely go to the theocratic State as such.

408. This exhorts the Muslim soldiery to maintain detachedness and not to be lured by the booty.

409. (by bringing to mind your duty towards God and man). This serves as a mild rebuke to the Muslims who were inclined to dispute among themselves about the division of the booty.

410. (indeed). The dispute was between those who had risked their lives in pursuing the enemy and those stationed to guard the camp—an equally onerous duty.

411. (as God's grandness and glory). Cf. the OT :—'Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my presence.' (Je. 5 : 22) And the NT :—'Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy.' (Re. 15 : 4)

412. (yet more). Each fresh Revelation strengthens the faith of the true believers.

413. (and not those who are greedy of material wealth).

414. (of honour and felicity).

415. i. e., in the Hereafter.

5. (كما . . . لكرهون) As[416] thy Lord had caused thee to go forth[417] from thy houses[418] for a right cause,[419] while a party of the faithful were reluctant[420]——

6. (يجادلونك . . . ينظرون) disputing with thee[421] respecting the right cause after it had become manifest, as though they were led forth to death while they looked on.[422]

7. (وإذ . . . الكافرين) And recall when Allah was promising you[423] one of the two parties[424] that it should be yours[425] and you wished that the one not armed should be yours;[426] while Allah sought to justify[427] the truth[428] by His words[429] and to cut off[430] the root of the infidels[431]——

8. (ليحق . . . المجرمون) in order that He might justify[432] the truth and falsify the false,[433] though the guilty ones were averse to it.[434]

9. (إذ . . . مردفين) And recall when you implored your Lord[435] and He answered you: surely I am about to succour you with a thousand of angels rank in rank.

416. The ellipse if supplied in full must be:— As God's wise and just distribution of the booty is, in its apparent disagreeableness, like the expedition of Badr when— .

417. (O Prophet!).

418. (in Madina).

419. i. e., to fight the infidels.

420. (to go to the battle, in view of their small number and scanty equipment).

421. —as they were not all convinced that it was wise or prudent for them to give battle —

422. i. e., with death staring them in the face. The reference is throughout to the battle of Badr. The Prophet having learnt, by revelation, the approach of a caravan of the Quraish laden with Syrian merchandise and under Abū Sufyān, went forth from Madina with his followers to meet it. Abū Sufyān got scent of the Muslim expedition, gave them the slip by taking another route altogether. Urgent appeal for succour in the meantime reached Makka, and 'immediately the city was in a stir; for the caravan was the chief one of the year, in which every Koreishite of any substance had a venture; and the value of the whole was 50,000 golden pieces . . . . The resolve, at any sacrifice, to chastise and crush the Muslims was universal. Every man of consequence prepared to join the army. A few, unable themselves to go, sent substitutes.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 217) No less than 950 armed men, well-equipped and mounted on horses and camels answered the summons. And notwithstanding the safety of the caravan, which was by now assured, they now advanced, full of zeal and fury, to annihilate from the face of the earth the meagre band of 300 Muslims, ill-fed and poorly equipped.

423. (through the Prophet).

424. i. e., either the caravan comprising 40 men who constituted its guard or the strong Makkan force.

425. i. e., would be delivered into your hands. The holy Prophet had announced the Divine promise that the Muslims would have either the merchandise of the caravan or victory over the Makkan army.

426. The Muslims naturally desired that they should face the caravan, not the army.

427. (demonstrably).

428. i. e., His true religion.

429. i. e., by His desires. (Th) The Muslims wanted to avoid danger and to gain the spoils of the caravan; their Lord willed otherwise. He desired to put to test their faith by open war and to vanquish their powerful enemy in the field.

430. (by that encounter).

431. Muir's description of the pagan debacle is both vivid and faithful. 'Before the onset of the brave three hundred, they began to waver. Their movements were impeded by the heavy sands on which they stood; and, when the ranks gave way, their numbers added but confusion. The Muslims followed eagerly their retreating steps, slaying or taking captive all that fell within their reach. Retreat soon turned into ignominous rout; and the flying host casting away their armour, abandoned beasts of burden, camp and equipage. . . . Many of the principal men of Mecca, and some of Mohammed's bitterest opponents were amongst the slain. Chief of those was Abū Jahl.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 226)

432. (demonstrably).

433. (by inflicting a crushing defeat on the Makkan pagans and smashing their supremacy completely).

434. (thereto).

435. (for succour). The holy Prophet's own supplication on this occasion, a noble specimen of the earnestness of his soul, will bear reproduction. Raising his hands aloft, he poured forth his soul thus: 'O Lord! I beseech Thee, forget not Thy promise of assistance and of victory. O Lord! if this little band be vanquished, idolatry will prevail; and the pure worship of Thee cease from off the earth!' And he continued to repeat these words till his cloak fell from off his back.

حَكِيمٌ ۝ إِذْ يُغَشِّيكُمُ النُّعَاسَ أَمَنَةً مِّنْهُ وَيُنَزِّلُ عَلَيْكُم مِّنَ السَّمَاءِ مَاءً لِّيُطَهِّرَكُم بِهِ وَيُذْهِبَ

10. (وما . . . حكيم) And Allah did not make this[436] promise save as a glad tidings[437] and that[438] your minds might be assured; and victory comes only[439] from Allah.[440] Verily Allah is Mighty,[441] Wise.[442]

SECTION 2

11. (اذ . . . الاقدام) Recall when He caused a slumber to cover you as a security from Himself,[443] and He sent down[444] water on you from heaven[445] that He might cleanse you thereby[446] and take away from you the defilement of Satan,[447] and that He might gird up your hearts and make your feet firm thereby.[448]

12. (اذ . . . بنان) And recall when thy Lord inspired the angels:[449] verily I am with you, so keep firm those who have believed; I will cast terror into the hearts of those who have disbelieved;[450] so strike them above the necks[451] and smite of them every fingertip.[452]

13. (ذلك . . . العقاب) This, because they defied Allah and His messenger and whoever defies Allah and His messenger, then surely Allah is Severe in chastisement.[453]

14. (ذلكم . . . النار) This! taste it then,[454] and know that for the infidels is the torment of the Fire.[455]

---

436. (announcement).

437. (to you) i. e., to cheer you up.

438. i. e., with this support of the angels.

439. (in fact and reality).

440. It is God alone, not His angels, who can, and does, cause victory.

441. i. e., Able to cause victory without any ostensible cause.

442. i. e., One who makes concession to the vulgar mind that looks up more and more to the proximate causes.

443. (so that ye may refresh yourself and renew your energy). 'The Muslim army, wearied with its long march, enjoyed sound and refreshing sleep—a mark of Divine favour, we are told.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 222) This slumber at Badr is different from slumber at Ohud mentioned in Surah AL-'IMRAN, verse 154. See also IV. n. 263.

444. (as a matter of special favour).

445. 'It rained during the night, but more heavily towards the camp of Coreish.' The pagan forces 'moved forward slowly over the sandy hillocks which separated them from the enemy, and which the rain had made heavy and fatiguing. The same rain acting with less intensity, had rendered the ground in front of Mohammed lighter and more firm to walk upon.' (Muir, op. cit, p. 223)

446. (of all impurities, and that you may perform your ablutions).

447. The 'pollution of the devil' refers to his evil suggestion to the Muslims that had they been in the right they would not have been put to distress and trouble.

448. 'The spot where the Prophet's little army lay was a dry and deep sand, into which their feet sank as they walked, the enemy having the command of water. Then having fallen asleep, the greater part of them that were disturbed with dreams, wherein the devil suggested to them that they could never expect God's succour in the battle, since they were cut off from the water, and besides suffering the inconvenience of thirst, were obliged to pray without washing, though they imagined themselves to be favourites of God. In the night, however, rain fell so plentifully that it formed a little brook, and not only supplied them with water for all their uses, but made the sand between them and the infidel army firm enough to bear them, wherefore the diabolical suggestions ceased.' (Bdh.)

449. (deputed to succour the Muslims).

450. 'Prodigies of valour were exhibited on both sides; but the army of the Faithful was borne forward by an enthusiasm which the half-hearted warriors opposite were unable to withstand.' (Muir, op. cit., pp. 225-226)

451. (to finish them off at once without prolonging their agony).

452. This was perhaps with a view to rendering them incapacitated, and hence to make them prisoners of war. 'Civilized warfare, the text-books tell us is confined, as far as possible, to disablement of the armed forces of the enemy.' (EBr. XXVIII. p. 312, 11th Ed.)

453. (whether that retribution comes in this world or in the Hereafter).

454. (here and now).

455. (over and above this immediate chastisement).

15. (يا يها . . . الادبار) O you who believe! when you face[456] those who disbelieve marching[457] to battle, do not turn your backs to them.

16. (ومن . . . المصير) And whosoever[458] turns his back to them on such a day, unless it be swerving to a fight[459] or wriggling round to another company,[460] he has surely drawn upon himself wrath from Allah, and his resort is Hell— —an evil destination.

17. (فلم . . . عليم) You[461] therefore[462] slew them not,[463] but Allah slew them;[464] threwest thou[465] not[466] when thou threwest,[467] but Allah threw;[468] in order that He might try the believers with a goodly trial from Him.[469] Surely Allah is Hearing,[470] Knowing.[471]

18. (ذلكم . . . الكفرين) Thus! and know that Allah weakens the plot of the infidels.[472]

19. (ان . . . المؤمنين) If you[473] beseech a judgment[474] then surely a judgement has come to you.[475] If you desist,[476] better it will be for you, and if you revert,[477] We will also revert;[478] and your host shall avail you not,[479] numerous though it might be,[480] and know that surely Allah is with the believers.[481]

---

456. (in a battle array).

457. (in consequence of their great number, to attack you). زحف is 'an army, or a military force, marching little and little, or leisurely, or heavily, by reason of their multitude and force.' (LL)

458. (of the faithful).

459. متحرفا لقتال means 'turning away for the purpose of returning to fight: the doing of which is one of the stratagems of war.' (LL)

460. او متحيزا الى فئة signifies 'or turning aside to a different company of the Muslims.' (LL)

461. (O Muslims!).

462. i. e., when the fighting was in the cause of God and for the sake of His good-will, and no action on the part of the Muslims was undertaken except by

His command.

463. i. e., it was not you who slew them in reality.

464. Every action by the loyal and faithful agents of God is ascribed to God Himself. He alone was the real, effective Cause, they being mere instruments.

465. (O Prophet!).

466. (the gravel), i. e., it was not thou who in reality cast the gravel.

467. (the gravel seemingly). The holy Prophet, who, even according to the Christian historians, 'was watching the encounter from a leafy hut on a rising ground and praying to God with great ardour and excitement that He would not allow His faithful few to be destroyed, suddenly declared that victory had been promised him in a vision, and flinging a handful of dust after the Koreish, he called out, "Shame on their faces." Soon confusion seized the enemy and the battle ended with a complete defeat of the Koreish.' (HHW. VIII. p. 120)

468. i. e., it was God who threw it in reality. The allusion is to a miracle of the Prophet. The battle was raging furiously when he, as directed by the angel Gabriel, stooped, and taking a handful of gravel flung it at the enemy shouting, 'Confusion seize their faces!" Immediately did confusion seize them; and they took to their heels. Here it is said that it was not the Prophet but his Lord who was the real and effective Cause of their confusion and rout.

469. (and reward them accordingly).

470. So He hears the words of the prayer uttered by the believers.

471. So He knows well the purity of their motives.

472. And this working of His is seen all the more remarkably when a powerful, well-organised army is vanquished at the hands of a small ill-equipped band.

473. (O Makkans!).

474. i. e., a clear sign of Divine supervention.

475. (at Badr, by your complete rout and Islam's most notable victory). 'The battle of Bedr was of the greatest importance for the victory of Islam.' (HHW. VIII. p. 121) 'The prize of victory on the field of Bedr was of incomparably greater consequence to Mohammad than any spoil, however costly.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 221)

476. (even now, after this great witness of Badr, from resisting the Prophet).

477. (to your old habit of persecution and resistance).

478. (to the help of the Prophet and the believers). Note the 'We' with a capital.

479. (as witnessed at Badr).

480. (and howsoever well-equipped).

481. This is the universal rule. The exceptions are only apparent, and those too for very good reasons.

20. (يا يها . . . تسمعون) O you who believe! obey Allah and His messenger,[482] and do not turn away while you are hearing.

21. (ولا . . . يسمعون) And do not be like those who say: we hear; whereas they do not hear.

22. (ان . . . يعقلون) Verily the vilest of beasts[483] in Allah's sight are the deaf[484] and the dumb[485] who do not understand.[486]

23. (ولو . . . معرضون) And had Allah known in them any good[487] He would surely have made them hear;[488] and even if He[489] had made them hear, they[490] would surely turn away as backsliders.[491]

24. (يا يها . . . تحشرون) O you who believe! answer Allah and the messenger when he[492] calls on you to what gives you life; and know that Allah interposes between man and his heart,[493] and know that verily to Him you all shall be gathered.

25. (واتقوا . . . العقاب) And fear the tribulation that shall afflict not those alone who among you do wrong;[494] and know verily that Allah is Severe in chasting.

482. (as the transmitter, interpreter and amplifier of His commands).

483. or 'creatures.'

484. i. e., those who give no ear to the voice of truth.

485. i. e., those who do not utter the words of truth.

486. i. e., those who do not reflect on the religious truth.

487. 'Good' here stands for the will to believe—the yearning for truth.

488. (the admonitions of the Qur'ān). The meaning is; these infidels are totally wanting in the will to believe; had there been any such will, in them, God was sure to have led them to the right path.

489. —as a matter of special grace—

490. —constituted as they are, void of the will to believe—

491. (as they are now).

492. i. e., the apostle as God's deputy.

493. (by disposing the faithful to obedience and virtue and the backslider to sin and guilt).

494. The Divine chastisement visits not only those who are the actual perpetrators of crime but it falls on those also who keep indifferent to the sin and vice around them, and do not admonish the wicked. Islam does not expect of its followers to be passive spectators of guilt and crime; it requires them to be active opponents, so far as in their power, to all forms of irreligion and impiety.

SECTION 4

29. (يايها . . . العظيم) O you who believe: if you fear[506] Allah He will make for you a distinction[507] and will expiate for you your misdeeds and forgive you; and Allah is the Owner of Mighty Grace.

31. (واذا . . . الاولين) And when Our revelations are rehearsed to them, they say:[514] we have heard,[515] we could, if only we willed, say the like of this; naught is this but fables of the ancients.[516]

500. (by increasing you in numbers and in power).
501. (and become good, loyal servants of God).
502. (of their dues) i. e., do not fail in your duties towards them.
503. i. e., your merits, deposited as 'trusts' with God, consequent on the observance of your duties towards God and His apostle.

504. i. e., a trial, a test, to find out who mishandles these gifts of God and who uses them in a proper legitimate way. Note that 'temptation' is not synonymous with sin, nor is love of children or fondness for wealth in itself sinful. Such emotions, appetites, instincts, etc., are part of man, as it has pleased God to make him so: It is only the human will that can shape them into sins.

505. (for those who place the love of God above the love of wealth and children).

506. i. e., continue fearing.

507. i. e. some tangible evidence of His grace and favour; some notable victory in battle.

508. (at Makka).

509. (O Prophet!).

510. (to thy place). Or 'to bring thee to a stand.'

511. The Makkan chiefs 'assembled to deliberate on what might be their wisest course. Should they imprison him? his followers would come to ransom him. Should they forcibly expel him? he might agitate his cause among the tribes of Arabia, and readily lure adherents by the prospect of supremacy at Mecca. Should they assassinate him? the Beni Hāshim would exact an unrelenting penalty for their kinsman's life.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 136)

512. For مكر الله see P. III. nn. 466, 467 and P. IX, n. 29.

513. So He defeated their purpose and frustrated their plots.

32. (واذ . . . اليم) And recall when they[517] said: O Allah, if this be indeed the truth from Thee, rain down stones upon us from the heaven or bring on us a torment afflictive.[518]

33. (وما . . . يستغفرون) And Allah is not one to chastise them[519] while thou[520] art in their midst; nor was Allah going to chastise them while they were asking forgiveness.[521]

34. (وما . . . يعلمون) And what ails them that Allah should not chastise them[522] when they are hindering people from the Sacred Mosque, whereas they[523] are not even its guardians[524]——its guardians[525] are none but the God-fearing——yet most of them[526] do not know.[527]

35. (وما . . . تكفرون) And naught was their prayer at the House[528] but whistling and hand-clapping.[529] Taste then the torment[530] for you were wont to disbelieve.

520. (O Prophet !).

521. The Arab pagans though so hostile to Islam yet prayed to God and implored His forgiveness in their own way.

522. (in a natural, normal way, such as through the victorious Muslim army).

523. (being idolaters).

524. i. e., owing to their idolatry they have forfeited the right of the guardianship of the House. Far less could they have any justification for debarring the true worshippers from visiting the House—a right which even its rightful guardians and trustees could not claim.

526. i. e., the idolaters.

527. i. e., are not even conscious of their incompetence and disability.

529. 'They used to go round the Caaba naked, both men and women, whistling at the same time through their fingers, and clapping their hands.' (Sale) Witness also the present-day practices of many a creed which not only allow but prescribe the use of musical instruments at public worship. Worse still, dancing has formed part and even now forms part of the chief acts of devotion and worship in many religions. 'Religious processions went with song and dance to the Egyptian temples, and Plato said that all dancing ought to be thus an act of religion. In fact, it was so to a great extent in Greece, as were the Cretan chorus, moving in measured pace, sang hymns to Apollo, and in Rome, where the Salian priests sang and danced, beating their shields, along the streets at the yearly festival of Mars . . . Remnants of such ceremonies, come down from the religion of England before Christian times, are still sometimes to be seen in the dances of boys and girls round the Midsummer bonfire, or of the mummers of Yuletide.' (Tylor, Anthropology, Vol. II p. 53, Thinkers' Library Edition.)

530. (in this world, even though in a natural way). The form that the punishment was immediately to take was the signal defeat at Badr, and later on, utter extirpation.

---

1. (O Muslims!).

2. (of war) غنيمة signifies what is obtained from the infidels during war.

3. Four-fifths of the total spoils are to be equally divided among the warriors; only one-fifth is to be appropriated to the particular uses here mentioned.

4. The apostle's one-fifth is the same thing as God's one-fifth, and is not apart from it. The apostle here is obviously the commander of the faithful, and his share is the share assigned to the State. According to Imām shāfa'ī and some other great jurists of Islam, God's fifth (or, call it the apostle's fifth) is to go to the treasury and is to be employed in building and repairing fortresses, bridges, and other public works, and in paying salaries to magistrates, civil officers, professors of learning, etc.

5. Since the demise of the Prophet, neither his share nor that of his relatives holds good any longer.

6. The Prophet's one-fifth is now to be devoted to these three charitable purposes.

7. i. e., Divine help and succour through the angels.

8. Note that the Prophet is even at the highest occasion of elation and exultation no more than a 'bondman' of God.

9. i. e., on the day of the battle of Badr. It is not for nothing that the Qur'ān has characterised this battle as the 'Day of Distinction'. A different result would have changed the entire fate of mankind. If there is any single episode in history of which it can be said that on it depended the march of the world's events, it was this. Even sceptics and rejectors have not entirely failed to grasp its full significance. The day 'both for internal and external policies was of incalculable advantage to Islam.' (EBr, XV. p. 648) 'Seldom has such an insignificant conflict had such far-reaching consequences . . . . The Prophet had received undeniable proof that God was on his side.' (Andrae, op. cit., p. 205) 'Not only was a most decisive victory gained over a force three times his own in number, but the slain on the enemy's side included in a remarkable manner many of his most influential opponents.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 236).

10. (and there ushered a new era in Islam). See p. IV. nn. 142, 144.

11. (so it is not you who won the battle by your arms or brains; it is God who bestowed victory).

12. Or 'nearer.' The holy Prophet with his warriors stood at the well on to the slope nearer Madina.

13. (of the valley of Badr). 'Badr lies in a plain which is bounded on the north and east by steep mountains and in the south by rocky hills and in the west by dunes of shifting sand. In the eastern mountains rises a stream with a good flow of water.' (E.I. Vol. I, p. 559).

14. i. e., the Makkan army, who stood on the slope opposite.

15. Or 'further,' 'hither' and 'yonder' are used in reference to Madina.

(اذ يريكهم . . . الصدور) And recall when Allah showed them[27] few to thee[28] in thy dream.[29] Had He shown them numerous to thee,[30] surely you would have flagged[31] and surely you would have wrangled[32] over the affair,[33] but Allah spared you.[34] Verily He is the Knower of what is in the breasts.

44. (و اذ . . . الامور) And recall when He showed them few in your eyes[35] when you met,[36] and lessened you in their eyes[37] in order that Allah might accomplish an affair already ordained;[38] and to Allah are all affairs returned.[39]

45. (يايها . . . تفلحون) O you who believe! when you encounter a party,[40] stand firm[41] and remember Allah fervently,[42] that haply you may fare well.

46. (واطيعوا . . . الصبرين) And obey Allah and His messenger,[43] and do not dispute,[44] with an emotion, lest you flag[45] and your predominance depart,[46] and be steadfast.[47] Verily Allah is with the steadfast.[48]

47. (ولا . . . محيط) And do not be like those who came forth from their homes vaunting and to be seen of men[49] and debaring others from the way of Allah. Allah is the Encompasser[50] of what they work.

27. i. e., the enemy.

28. (O Prophet).

29. (and with which vision the Prophet had acquainted his companions for their encouragement).

30. (O Prophet! and hadst thou related that vision to the believers).

31. (in your enthusiasm for Holy War).

32. (among yourselves).

33. i. e., whether to fight against so powerful any enemy or not.

34. (from this internal dissension and weakness).

35. (so that you may not be afraid to fight). 'A sandhill at Akankal between which and Badr was the valley of Yalyal concealed the Maccans from the eyes of the Muslims.' (E.I. Vol. I. p. 559).

36. (them in the battle-field).

37. (so that they may not be afraid to fight). Note that the Muslim army is not spoken of as being shown small but as in fact being small: The actual strength of the two armies, according to Muir, was as follows :—

	Men	Camels	Horses
Muslim	305	70	2
Pagan	950	700	100 (horsemen all mail-clad)

38. i. e., the utter discomfiture of the pagans at the hands of the Muslims.

39. i. e., brought back for decision and disposal.

40. (of the enemy).

41. (This firmness of feet is the initial condition of success.

42. (and often, as that would make hearts firm). Mark the high place assigned in Islam to the remembrance of God. A Muslim even when face to face with death, is directed not to defer his devotion, but is on the contrary exhorted to remember his Lord God even more and oftener. This attitude of devotion and prayerfulness is the second condition of success.

43. (in every little detail of your conduct). The perfect obedience is the third requisite of success.

44. (among yourselves or with your leader). This unity of purpose and solidarity of corporate life is the fourth main requisite.

45. (and be demoralized). Morale is the one main thing in war ; everything else is secondary.

46. (from you). Internal dissension, specially in war time, is fatal. It inevitably leads to cowardice and loss of prestige. ريح signifies 'predominance or prevalence ; and power or force.'

47. i. e., bear patiently and endure good-humouredly all the hardships of war. Tenacity and endurance, even more than the qualities of dash and courage, form the indispensable virtues of the soldier.

48. (and His presence is obviously the key to all success and every victory). The boast of the modern civilization is that 'the soldiery of our national armies has drawn the spirit of sacrifice, the sentiment of discipline and duty, from love of his country.' But surely much of the noblest and the best in the soldier would only come out when he would march forth to the way of 'God,' instead of to the way of 'crown' or 'country.'

49. The merchandise caravan, the immediate object of the Muslim attack, had already escaped the ambush by the clever management of its leader, Abū Sufyān. Yet Abū Jahl, the chief of the Makkan state, in his malice and vainglory persisted in the conflict. 'If we turn back,' said he and his associates, 'it will surely be imputed to our cowardice. Let us go forward to Badr ; and there, by the fountain, spend three days eating and making merry. All Arabia will hear of it, and ever after stand in awe of us.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 218). Even Jihad, the highest act of devotion, is not accepted by God if performed in vainglory and ostentation.

50. (by his knowledge).

48. (وإذ . . . العقاب) And recall when Satan made their works[51] fair-seeming to them, and said:[52] there is none of mankind to overcome you to-day,[53] and surely I am your neighbour.[54] Then when the two parties faced each other, he turned on his heels,[55] and said: verily I am quit of you, varily I can see what you cannot;[56] verily I fear Allah;[57] and Allah is Severe in chastising.

SECTION 7

49. (إذ . . . حكيم) And recall when the hypocrites[58] and those in whose hearts was a disease[59] said:[60] their religion has deluded them.[61] And whoever relies on Allah, then verily Allah is Mighty,[62] Wise.[63]

50. (ولو . . . الحريق) And couldest thou[64] see when the angels take away the life of those who disbelieve striking their faces and their backs:[65] taste the torment of burning.[66]

51. (ذلك . . . العبيد) This, because of what your hands had forwarded[67] and Allah is never unjust to His creatures.[68]

51. (of sin and rebellion).

52. This 'saying' of the devil may mean either his inner instigation and his inspiration of the pagans with vain hopes or it may literally mean his conversation while appearing to them in flesh and bone in the likeness of some human being.

53. —so great is your might and so invincible your army—

54. (to assist and protect you).

55. (as he saw the descent of angels in support of the Muslim army).

56. i.e., cannot see the hosts of angels.

57. (for He can inflict punishment on me in this very world). Fear divorced from faith has no merit at all (Th.); so this fear did not avail the devil in the least.

58. (of Madina).

59. This refers to the waverers of Makka who had accompanied the Badr expedition. مرض in the contrast signifies 'weakness of belief' and 'a flagging or remissness in respect of the truth.' (LL).

60. (looking at the fewness of Muslims and their daring in facing an army so formidable as that of Makkans).

61. i. e., their recklessness is only attributable to their religious fanaticism.

62. i. e., Able to make the trusting believers victorious in every case.

63. i. e., Withholder of the victory from the trusting believers when His universal wisdom determines otherwise.

64. (O Prophet!).

65. i. e., belabouring them mercilessly.

66. This refers to the torment in the Barzakhish period—the interval between death and the Resurrection.

67. i. e., your deeds of unbelief and acts of impiety.

68. This marks out the Just God of Islam from the capricious gods of polytheism and also from the 'jealous' God of the Bible. Cf. the OT: 'I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me.' (Ex. 20 : 5).

52. (كداب . . . العقاب) Like[69] the wont of the house of Fir'awn and those before them, they disbelieved in the signs of Allah; so Allah seized them for their sins. Verily Allah is Strong,[70] Severe in chastising.

53. (ذلك . . . عليم) This,[71] because Allah is not one to change His favour once conferred on a people until they changed[72] what was in themselves.[73] Verily Allah is Hearing,[74] Knowing.[75]

54. (كداب . . . ظلمين) Like the wont of the house of Fir'awn and those before them,[76] they belied[77] the signs of their Lord, so We destroyed them for their sins, and drowned the house of Fir'awn and all of them were wrong-doers.

55. (ان . . . يؤمنون) Verily the vilest of moving creatures with Allah are those who disbelieve——wherefore they shall not believe——

56. (الذين . . . يتقون) they with whom thou[78] covenantedest,[79] then they break their covenant every time,[80] and they do not fear.[81]

57. (فاما . . . يذكرون) Wherefore if thou comest upon them in war, deal with them so as to scatter them, and then who are behind them[82] haply they may be admonised.[83]

58. (واما . . . الخائنين) And shouldst thou fear[84] treachery from any people cast then back to them their covenant[85] to be equal.[86] Verily Allah does not approve the treacherous.[87]

69. (in the point of receiving just and due punishment in this very world).

70. All such attributes are predicated of God with pointed reference to the gods of polytheism which were weaklings and in great many instances possessed very little potency.

71. i. e., the Divine practice of no punishment without guilt.

72. (with their own hands).

73. (of His blessings, by misusing His great gifts of understanding and reflection).

74. So let the blasphemers with their words beware.

75. So let the blasphemers with their deeds beware.

76. (of the infidels).

77. (in their deliberate choice of the path of error and guilt).

78. (O Prophet!).

79. (not once, but several times). The allusion is to the Jews of the Prophet's time.

80. (they find a convenient opportunity).

81. (the punishment of God).

82. i. e., so deal with them as to strike fear in those behind them.

83. Of the three Jewish clans here referred to, two were sent into exile and the third exterminated. 'They were a turbulent sect, always setting the people of Medina by the ears . . . . Both tribes had violated the original treaty, and had endeavoured in every way to bring Mohammad and his religion to ridicule and destruction. The only question is whether their punishment was not too light. Of the third clan a fearful example was made, not by Mohammad, but by an arbiter appointed by themselves.' (LSK, p. lxix).

84. (but not have actually experienced).

85. (at thy discretion, and inform them accordingly). It is obligatory on the part of the Muslim head of the government to apprise the enemy beforehand of the non-existence of compacts and treaties. Fighting without this previous notice is unlawful. Could a course of action be more chivalrous or honourable?

86. i. e., so that the two parties shauld be equally acquainted with the true conditions.

87. All this implies disapproval of counter-treachery even in self-defence as justified and approved by some other religions.

SECTION 8

59. (ولا . . . يعجزون) Let not those who disbelieve deem that they have escaped Me;[88] assuredly they cannot frustrate Allah's purpose.[89]

60. (واعدوا . . . تظلمون) And get ready[90] againt them[91] whatever you can of force[92] and well-fed horses[93] with which you may overpower Allah's enemy and your enemy[94] and others besides them whom you do not Know;[95] Allah knows them. And whatever you spend in the way of Allah shall be repaid to you in full,[96] and you shall not be wronged.

61. (وان . . . العليم) And if they incline to peace, then do thou[97] incline to it; and rely thou on Allah.[98] Verily He! He is Hearing; Knowing.[99]

62. (وان . . . بالمؤمنين) And if they seek to deceive thee,[100] then Allah is sufficient for them.[101] He it is who has confirmed thee with His help[102] and with the believers.[103]

63. (والف . . . حكيم) And He united their hearts[104] Hadst thou[105] spent all that is on the earth[106] thou couldst not have united their hearts,[107] but Allah united them;[108] Verily He is Mighty,[109] Wise.[110]

---

88. (i. e., God's just retribution).

89. Sooner or later, they are bound to receive their share of punishment.

90. (O Muslims!).

91. i. e., the infidels. Every infidel community is a prospective enemy of Islam.

92. قوة literally 'force or strength,' includes every variety of arms and weapon of offence and defence, whether those held in the hand for cutting and thrusting or those which are thrown from a distance by hand or by machine. The plain meaning is: Be always on the alert, so that the enemy may not surprise you, and keep yourselves well armed and equipped with the best weapons against your enemy and fully trained in the art of war,

93. Text-books on military science still emphasize the importance of cavalry. 'Throughout the history of war, cavalry have been surrounded by a glamour possessed by no other arm.' (EBr. V. p. 67) Even so late as 1918, Ludendorff, while attributing his failure on the Western Front to lack of cavalry, has said: 'without cavalry it is impossible to reap the fruits of victory' (p. 71). And as these lines are being penned (in 1938) a military correspondent to an English daily has affirmed:—'In the opinion of many military experts, the Spanish civil war has vindicated the cavalry and restored its reputation for usefulness which, to a large extent, it lost in the Great War.' In ancient times of course 'battles were won and lost by cavalry, and, campaigns were conducted in terms of cavalry,' and 'almost every decisive tactical movement was a movement of horse.' (Hilaire Belloc, The Crusade, p. 50). See Appendix at the end of the Surah, and also P. XXX, n. 501 ff.

94. Distracting of the mind of the opponent, frightening him, attacking his morale, in a word, overcoming him in a 'battle of nerves' is the recognized and approved method both of the ancients and moderns. 'The commander's object' writes an Oxford professor of military history, 'is to outwit his antagonist and to demoralize the opposing army.' (EBr. XXIII. p. 325).

95. (definitely and positively). The allusion may well be to the neighbouring Christian and Zoroastrian empires of Byzantine and Persia respectively, with which the rising power of Islam was to collide a few years later.

96. —even more generously than what you can hope for—

97. (O Prophet!)

98. (even when thou hast reason to distrust their word and to fear treachery on their part).

99. (and well able to smash their plots and designs).

100. (by means of false treaties of peace).

101. (in the future, as He has been in the past).

102. i.e., secret succour, by means of angels.

103. i.e., open soccour, by means of believers.

104. (so that they may prove a source of support and strength to thee). It was nothing short of a miracle that a people so disorganised, so prone to mutual rivalries and jealousies and so addicted to internecine warfare as the Arabs could be united and brought under the control of a single leader. Of the time of Paganism no fewer than seventeen hundred battles are recorded.

105. (with all thy plenitude of wisdom and persuasiveness).

106. (of its riches).

107. So hopeless was the prospect of any general union.

108. (as if by a miracle).

109. i.e., Able to effect whatever He will.

110. i.e., Able to adopt any manner His wisdom likes.

يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلنَّبِىُّ حَسْبُكَ ٱللَّهُ وَمَنِ ٱتَّبَعَكَ مِنَ ٱلْمُؤْمِنِينَ ۝ يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلنَّبِىُّ حَرِّضِ ٱلْمُؤْمِنِينَ عَلَى ٱلْقِتَالِ ۚ إِن

حَكِيمٌ ۝ لَّوْلَا كِتَٰبٌ مِّنَ ٱللَّهِ

64. (يايها . . . المؤمنين) O Prophet! sufficient for thee is Allah[111] and those who follow thee of the believers.[112]

SECTION 9

65. (يايها . . . يفقهون) O Prophet! urge the believers unto fighting.[113] If there be twenty of you steadfast, they will overcome two hundred and if there be of you a hundred, they will overcome a thousand of those who disbelieve,[114] for they are a people who do not understand.[115]

66. (الئن . . . الصبرين) Now[116] Allah has lightened your burden, and He knows that there is in you a weakness.[117] So if there be a hundred of you steadfast, they will overcome two hundred, and if there be a thousand of you they will overcome two thousand by the will of Allah; and Allah is with the steadfast.[118]

67. (ماكان . . . حكيم) It does not behove a prophet[119] that he should have captives[120] until he has greatly slaughtered in the land.[121] You[122] seek the gains of this world, while Allah seeks the Hereafter;[123] and Allah is Mighty,[124] Wise.[125]

---

111. (Who is thy real and ultimate Suppor).

112. (who are the ostensible means of supporting thee).

113. According to a Christian student of psychology, 'it is doubtful if prayer and the pilgrimage would have sufficed in themselves to create the required brotherhood. Circumstances threw Mohammad at once upon the defensive, and though he began by preaching peace and love, he soon was driven to proclaiming the Jehad or holy war against all unbelievers.' (Dennison, op. cit., p. 275)

114. Undaunted are the men of faith, however heavy the odds be against them.

115. (and therefore believe not; and hence as infidels they are deprived of Divine succour and a spirit of fortitude).

116. There was a considerable intervening period between the revelation of preceding verse and this one.

117. i.e., lack of resolution and cohesion, perhaps because the number of the believers had by now increased.

118. (helping and supporting them), Cf. the OT :—'When thou goest out to battle against thine enemies, and seest horses, and chariots, and a people more than thou, be not afraid of them; for the Lord thy God is with thee.' (Dt. 20: 1)

119. (who always fights for pure righteousness, and never for any ignoble purpose or with any personal motive).

120. i.e., as prisoners of war alive. They were clearly the very persons who had gathered and combined to fight for the forces of darkness, and to extinguish, if possible, the light of God.

121. (sufficient to uproot the tentacles of vice and evil). The object of the Islamic Jihad being the extirpation of the forces of paganism and the restoration of the kingdom of God, there was no sense in the warrior-prophet sheathing his sword until the culprits had got their deserts and their capacity for mischief utterly smashed. Cf. the far more rigid military law of the OT :—'And when the Lord thy God hath delivered it into thine hands, thou shalt smite every male thereof with the edge of the sword' (Dt. 20: 13). 'And this is the thing that ye shall do, Ye shall utterly destroy every male, and every woman that hath lain by man' (Judg. 21: 11). Among the Jews, 'if a city resisted their summons, the males, without distinction, were put to the sword: the seven nations of Canaan were devoted to destruction; and neither repentance nor conversion could shield them from the inevitable doom, that no creature within their precincts should be left alive.' (GRE. VI, pp. 245-46).

122. The address is to certain Muslims who preferred ransom-money to the slaughter of the captives..

123. (regard for which requires that the power of the infidels be entirely broken and their numbers exterminated).

124. i.e., Able to grant you easy victory, and to make you prosperous by other means than the ransom money.

125. i.e., Allowing you only such means as conform to His universal Plan.

سَبَقَ لَمَسَّكُمْ فِيمَا أَخَذْتُمْ عَذَابٌ عَظِيمٌ (68) فَكُلُوا مِمَّا غَنِمْتُمْ حَلَالًا طَيِّبًا ۚ وَاتَّقُوا اللَّهَ ۚ إِنَّ اللَّهَ غَفُورٌ
رَحِيمٌ (69) يَا أَيُّهَا النَّبِيُّ قُلْ لِمَنْ فِي أَيْدِيكُمْ مِنَ الْأَسْرَىٰ إِنْ يَعْلَمِ اللَّهُ فِي قُلُوبِكُمْ خَيْرًا يُؤْتِكُمْ خَيْرًا
مِمَّا أُخِذَ مِنْكُمْ وَيَغْفِرْ لَكُمْ ۗ وَاللَّهُ غَفُورٌ رَحِيمٌ (70) وَإِنْ يُرِيدُوا خِيَانَتَكَ فَقَدْ خَانُوا اللَّهَ مِنْ قَبْلُ
فَأَمْكَنَ مِنْهُمْ ۗ وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ حَكِيمٌ (71) إِنَّ الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا وَهَاجَرُوا وَجَاهَدُوا بِأَمْوَالِهِمْ وَأَنْفُسِهِمْ فِي
سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ وَالَّذِينَ آوَوْا وَنَصَرُوا أُولَٰئِكَ بَعْضُهُمْ أَوْلِيَاءُ بَعْضٍ ۚ وَالَّذِينَ آمَنُوا وَلَمْ يُهَاجِرُوا
مَا لَكُمْ مِنْ وَلَايَتِهِمْ

68. (لولا . . . عظيم) Were it not that a writ had already gone forth from Allah[126] that would surely have touched you a mighty torment for what you took.[127]

69. (فكلوا . . . رحيم) Enjoy you then[128] of what you have obtained of spoil,[129] lawful and clean, and fear Allah.[130] Verily Allah is Forgiving,[131] Merciful.[132]

SECTION 10

70. (يايها . . . رحيم) O Prophet! say to the captives that are in your hands:[133] if Allah knows any good[134] in your hearts He shall give you better[135] than what has been taken away from you, and shall forgive you; and Allah is Forgiving,[136] Merciful.[137]

71. (وان . . . حكيم) And if they seek tricking thee,[138] they have tricked Allah before,[139] yet Allah gave thee power over them;[140] and Allah is Knowing,[141] Wise.[142]

126. i.e., had it not been written in God's decrees that many of the captives would be converted to Islam, and thus would not prove a source of danger to the cause of Islam and the Muslims.

127. (of the ransom money). When the 70 prisoners of war taken at Badr, all of them pillars of paganism, were brought before the holy Prophet, he asked the advice, as was his wont, of his companions as to what should be done with them. 'Omar advised slaughter, but the Prophet, ever gentle and lenient, agreed with the opinion of Abu Bakr and ordered their release on their paying ransom. Here is Divine rebuke administered to the ill-timed leniency, which, by the way, affords another instance of the exclusively Islamic doctrine that the Prophet, angelic in his character, was only human in his judgement.

128. i.e., now that your action is condoned and the matter is passed over.

129. غنيمة here signifies ransom. Literally it means whatever is won from the infidels in war. The Muslims, after the Divine rebuke, naturally felt scruples whether they might make use of the money and property thus acquired. Here they are reassured and permitted to enjoy the ransom they had received.

130. (in all your dealings, great or small and obey all His ordinances).

131. So he has passed over your guilt.

132. So He has allowed you the use of the ransom money.

133. (and who were received by the citizens of Madina with great kindness and consideration). The Prophet 'was far from intending to treat the prisoners whose lives he had spared, with harshness. He rather hoped, by kind and friendly demeanour, to win their affections and draw them over to the Faith.' (Muir, op. cit., 233).

134. 'good' here stands for 'faith.'

135. (in this world even).

136. His forgiveness He will manifest in the Hereafter.

137. His mercy He will manifest in this very world.

138. (by simulating faith and plotting desertion).

139. (by taking up wars against His prophet).

140. (and made them prisoners). So there is no cause for concern and anxiety; He is sure to vanquish them as He did at Badr, if they are plotting treachery.

141. So He knows well who is treacherous and who is not.

142. i.e., Able to frustrate all their plots.

مِنْ شَيْءٍ حَتّٰى يُهَاجِرُوا ۚ وَإِنِ اسْتَنْصَرُوكُمْ فِي الدِّينِ فَعَلَيْكُمُ النَّصْرُ إِلَّا عَلٰى قَوْمٍ بَيْنَكُمْ وَبَيْنَهُمْ
مِيثَاقٌ ۗ وَاللّٰهُ بِمَا تَعْمَلُونَ بَصِيرٌ ﴿٧٢﴾ وَالَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا بَعْضُهُمْ أَوْلِيَاءُ بَعْضٍ ۚ إِلَّا تَفْعَلُوهُ تَكُنْ فِتْنَةٌ
فِي الْأَرْضِ وَفَسَادٌ كَبِيرٌ ﴿٧٣﴾ وَالَّذِينَ آمَنُوا وَهَاجَرُوا وَجَاهَدُوا فِي سَبِيلِ اللّٰهِ وَالَّذِينَ آوَوْا وَنَصَرُوا
أُولٰئِكَ هُمُ الْمُؤْمِنُونَ حَقًّا ۚ لَهُمْ مَغْفِرَةٌ وَرِزْقٌ كَرِيمٌ ﴿٧٤﴾ وَالَّذِينَ آمَنُوا مِنْ بَعْدُ وَهَاجَرُوا وَجَاهَدُوا مَعَكُمْ
فَأُولٰئِكَ مِنْكُمْ ۚ وَأُولُو الْأَرْحَامِ بَعْضُهُمْ أَوْلٰى بِبَعْضٍ فِي كِتَابِ اللّٰهِ ۗ إِنَّ اللّٰهَ بِكُلِّ شَيْءٍ عَلِيمٌ ﴿٧٥﴾

72. (ان . . . بصیر) Surely those who believed and emigrated[143] and strove hard in the way of Allah with their riches and lives;[144] and those who gave refuge[145] and succoured:[146] those shall be heirs one unto another.[147] And those who believed and did not emigrate, you have naught of inheritance to do with them unless they emigrate.[148] And should they[149] seek succour from you in the matter of religion, then incumbent on you is their succour[150] except against a people with whom you have a treaty.[151] And Allah is the Beholder of what you work.

73. (والذین . . . کبیر) And those who disbelieve: they shall be heirs one unto another.[152] If you do not do this,[153] persecution there will be in the land and great corruption.[154]

74. (والذین . . . کریم) And those who have believed and emigrated and striven hard in the way of Allah,[155] and those who gave refuge and succoured[156]—these! they are the believers in very truth;[157] for them shall be forgiveness[158] and a provision honourable.[159]

75. (والذین . . . علیم) And those who believed afterwards[160] and emigrated and strove hard along with you: these also are of you;[161] and the kindred by blood[162] are nearer[163] unto one another[164] in Allah's decree.[165] Verily Allah is of everything[166] the Knower.

---

143. (from Makka to Madina, in the cause of Islam). هجرت is one of the most difficult words to translate. It is not 'emigration' or 'flight' pure and simple, but emigration with a religious motive. مهاجرین has been variously translated as 'emigrants,' 'fugitives' or 'refugees.'

144. After the pagan persecution had reached its highest pitch, the Prophet commanded his followers to depart for Madina, a city lying about 250 miles north of Makka, and to find a home there.

145. آوای literally means he betook himself to some one. آووا in the context signifies:—they gave refuge or shelter, or, they received hospitality.

146. (the Prophet and the refugees). The Makkan Muslims who had now migrated to Madina and numbered between one and two hundred souls 'were welcomed with cordial and even eager hospitality by their brethern at Madina, who vied with one another for the honour of receiving them into their homes and supplying their domestic wants.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 134).

147. (and succession will be regulated accordingly suppperseding all natural relationships). The enactment remained in force till there was a return to normal life and the refugees were joined by their blood relations and had their own settled households in Madina.

148. (and undergo the great and many personal sacrifices attendant on the exile).

149. i.e., the non-emigrant believers.

150. (sought for).

151. (of mutual alliance).

152. (to the exclusion of the Muslims, both as heirs and as legators).

153. (and go on making blood-relationship the basis of inheritance irrespective of faith and belief).

154. The great wisdom underlying this ordinance in the early days of Islam, when the believers were a scattered minority and when they required, more than anything else, cohesion and solidarity, has been perceived even by the enemies of Islam. This verse, writes a modern traducer of the holy Prophet, 'illustrates the political sagacity of Muhammad' who 'divides all Arabs into two classes and unites all his following, from whatever quarter they might come, against the fragmentary elements of the opposition.'

155. (in the earliest days of the struggle).

156. These were known as—انصار helpers or auxiliaries of Madina.

157. (being the first to come forward and risk their all to receive the truth).

158. (in the Hereafter).

159. (in the Paradise).

160. i. e., after the Prophet's own hijrat or emigration.

161. (though not of the same rank as the first believers).

162. (among the latter-day emigrants).

163. (to one another; or, to the earlier emigrants).

164. (then those who are not thus related).

165. (in the matter of inheritance).

166. (and therefore His ordinances are the wisest and the most appropriate).

APPENDIX TO N. 93, P. X

(Surat-ul-Anfal, v. 60)

The Role of Cavalry : German Opinion.

(Translated from a German Article in the Magazine "Sankt Georg, Berlin" by Gustav Rau):

The world is filled with astonishment, the friends of Germany with admiration, their enemies with anger, that it was possible for the German armies to shatter the million-strong power of Poland in 18 days . . .

All those who have an interest in the horse ask themselves, of course, what role the horse played in the German campaign against Poland. The answer one may say, without fear of contradiction, is that the whirlwind advance of the German armies would not have been possible without the horse. Moreover, that the German-bred horse acquitted itself as we would have wished it to.

Beyond discussion, of course, is the value and importance of the motorized and mechanized units of the new German armies. But it must be remembered that they made up only a comparatively small part of the German forces. Yet, what is more interesting, these were hardly faster than the horse.

Every student of military affairs knows that every German infantry regiment possesses practically 500 horses, that the greatest part of our artillery is drawn by teams of horses.

Now, it is known from the various army orders published that five German armies participated in the advance on Poland. Therefore, one may assume that more than 200,000 horses participated on the German side in the campaign, and that this extraordinary number of horses gave the advance units of the German army their pace, or tempo.

Exact figures as to the number of horses participating are not yet available, nor do we as yet know the number of horses that fell by the wayside. We have already heard, however, that there was in those exciting first 18 days, no opportunity to set horses aside. One need hardly wonder, under the circumstances, that the advance was so swift.

The tactical manoeuvres of the German armies during those days did not call for great cavalry action. And yet we know that the German cavalry had, during that time, great accomplishments to its credit. The report of G.H.Q. did not fail to mention the cavalry: 'In magnificent co-operation did the Panzer and motor divisions, the cavalry, and other forward units fulfil our hopes.'

Division Commanders did not fail to single out the cavalry for useful operations. Indeed, certain squadrons performed unique heroic services. In the southern German army, over the most difficult terrain (consisting of terraces of vineyards), one cavalry squadron coolly attacked a Polish battery and forced it to surrender. The losses were negligible.

Even though the weather was extraordinarily good, making progress easy for motorized units, cavalry and horse-drawn artillery came strongly to the fore. The future of breeding, development, training seems assured for German horses; experience gained in the Polish campaign seems to assure that.

It is well known, of course, that the Poles had prepared 40 regiments of cavalry for the possibility of war. Furthermore, their cavalry was the apple of Marshal Pilsudski's eye, and he was the sponsor of the supposedly great Polish army. Indeed, the Polish cavalry enjoyed a great tradition; Poland's victories of the past had been fought almost entirely with knights on horses.

Poland, therefore, in the days before the German conflict, did not speak merely of cavalry regiments, or divisions, but of whole cavalry armies, who would find outdoors all their fields of action. The Polish cavalry was pledged to promote bloody action.

Actually, when the war broke out, the Polish cavalry was found distributed in a number of divisions and brigades. And it must be admitted that these cavalry units exhibited great bravery. At times, indeed, they attacked not only with the gallantry but with the weapons of the past, flung themselves with lances at German motorized units. Disaster was inevitable.

The Polish cavalry lacked suitable weapons and co-operation from neighbouring units. They were met and shattered, for all their bravery, by German aircraft and German armoured units. (The Statesman, Calcutta and Delhi, March 10, 1940).

Repentance IX

(Madinian, 16 Sections and 129 Verses)

SECTION 1

1. (براءة . . . المشركين) Freedom[168] from obligation is this from Allah and His messenger to the associators with whom you[169] had covenanted.[170]

2. (فسيحوا . . . الكفرين) Go about[171] then, in the land for four months,[172] and know that you cannot escape Allah,[173] and that verily Allah is the humiliator of the infidels.[174]

3. (واذان . . . اليم) And a proclamation is this from Allah and His messenger to mankind on the day[175] of the greater pilgrimage[176] that Allah is quit of the associators[177] and so is His messenger.[178] Wherefore if you repent,[179] it shall be better for you,[180] but if you turn away, then know that you cannot escape Allah.[181] And announce[182] to those who disbelieve a torment afflictive– —

---

167. This is the only Surat in the Qur'ān without the usual auspiciatory formula which marks off each separate chapter, since it was felt doubtful by the compilers of the Qur'ān if this formed a new chapter at all or merely a continuation of the last one. As a matter of compromise between the two opposing views, the Companions agreed to separate the two chapters but not to interpose the distinction of the Bismillāh.

168. براءة is more of a freedom from obligation than 'a declaration of immunity.'

169. (O Muslims!).

170. (for an indefinite period).

171. (O idolaters! freely, as you will).

172. (since the date of this proclamation; so there is yet ample time for recounting and making amends).

173. i. e., you cannot baffle or frustrate the Divine plan.

174. (whether immediately or ultimately).

175. Either the 9th of Zul-Hijja at 'Arafāt, or the 10th at Minā. يوم is here used in a generic sense.

176. i. e., the Hajj. The epithet 'greater' is only added to distinguish it from 'Umra.

177. (immediately, and without giving any respite). Here by 'associators' is meant that group of them that had deliberately and persistently violated the treaty pledges and acted treacherously.

178. i. e., with this class of the idolaters the treaty obligations are immediately dissolved.

179. (O perfidious pagans!).

180. (as you will thereby escape punishment both in this world and the Next).

181. i. e., you cannot baffle or frustrate the Divine plan.

182. (O Prophet!).

4\. (الا الذين . . . المتقين) except those of the associators[183] with whom you covenanted and they have not failed you in aught, nor have they baked up any one against you; so fulfil to them their covenant till their full period. Assuredly Allah loves the God-fearing.[184]

5\. (فاذا . . . رحيم) When, therefore, the sacred months[185] have slipped away,[186] slay the associators[187] wherever you find them and capture them[188] and confine them[189] and lie in wait for them at every ambush.[190] Then should they repent and establish prayer and give the poor-rate, leave them alone.[191] Verily Allah is Forgiving,[192] Merciful.[193]

6\. (وان . . . يعلمون) And should any of the associators seek thy protection[194] grant him protection, that he may hear the word of Allah,[195] then let him reach his place of security.[196] That[197] is because they are a people who do not know.[198]

SECTION 2

7\. (كيف . . . المتقين) How can there be for the associators[199] a covenant with Allah and His messenger save for those with whom you[200] covenanted near the Sacred Mosque[201]? Act straight with them[202] so long as they act straight with you. Verily Allah loves the God-fearing.

183\. Note that the exception is in regard to the declaration of immunity and withdrawal of security. Freedom from obligations on the part of God and the apostle does not cover such of the idolaters—idolaters though they are—as have not proved traitors.

184\. i. e., those who are regardful of their duties to man and of their treaties and covenants.

185\. i. e., the four months wherein no attack was permissible.

186\. (but not before that). Thus even the worst offenders are allowed a respite.

187\. (of the perfidious, treacherous group). The command obviously is not of general application, but only refers to particular groups of the Makkan idolaters—notorious offenders.

188. i. e., make use of all military operations to break their resistance. Compare the governing maxim of modern warfare:—Whatsoever thy hand guideth to do, do it with thy right.' (EBr. XXIII, p. 323).

189. i. e., besiege them if they are fortified, dislodge them from their positions, and reduce them to submission, either by direct military force or by starvation.

190. Ambushing is the hiding of troops for the purpose of a sudden surprise attack, and is recognized as one of the most effective military operations in war time.

191. So that even such confirmed sinners are not past redemption.

192. So that He shall forgive them in the Hereafter.

193. So that He saves their lives in this world.

194. i. e., after the period of security is over, and the pagans are liable to be slain at any moment.

195. The 'word of Allah' is here used in a general sense, and stands for any argument in support of Islam. (Th).

196. i. e., the injunction to give asylum and protection with a view to having proper opportunities for reflection.

197. i. e., giving him a safe conduct so that he may return home securely and think over the matter calmly.

198. (the excellence of the religion af Islam).

199. (who are bent on violating treaty pledges).

200. (O Muslims!).

201. The reference is to Banu Dhamra and Banu Mudlaj, two classes of Kinana tribe, who, it was expected, would keep the pledge.

202. (and observe faithfully the remaining term of their truce).

8. (كيف . . . فسقون) How indeed[203]? When if they get better of you, they respect not regarding you either kinship[204] or agreement.[205] They flatter you with their mouths,[206] the while their hearts refuse;[207] and most of them are ungodly.[208]

9. (اشتروا . . . يعملون) They have sold the revelations of Allah for a small price[209] so they keep back them from His path. Vile is that which they are working.

10. (لا يرقبون . . . المعتدون) They respect no kinship or agreement[210] in a believer: those! they are the transgressors.

11. (فان . . . يعلمون) If they repent and establish prayer and give the poor-rate they are your brethren-in-faith.[211] And We expound the revelations for a people who know.

12. (و ان . . . ينتهون) And if they violate their oaths after their covenant and revile your religion,[212] fight those leaders of infidelity—verily no oaths shall hold in their case.[213] Haply they may desist.

---

203. i. e., how can there be a truce with the deliberate violators of treaties?

204. Which bond was regarded in the old Arabian society as particularly sacred and inviolable.

205. Even their plighted oath they were wont to disregard if the other party happened to be the Muslims.

206. i. e., they cajole you with their words.

207. (to abide by their terms).

208. (who from the very start had no intention of fulfilling their pledges).

209. (by preferring the life of this world to the Hereafter).

210. See nn. 204, 205 above.

211. (and shall be forgiven the past).

212. طعن conveys more than anything else the idea of defiance. Reviling God's religion is blasphemy in its worst form, and blasphemy, both in the Jewish and Christian religions, is punishable with death. 'And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him.' (Le. 24:16). It also stood, till recently, in the secular laws of Europe as an indictable offence punishable with the capital sentence. 'By the law of Scotland, as it originally stood, the punishment of blasphemy was death. . . . . In France, ... the punishment was death in various forms, burning alive, mutilation, torture, or corporal punishment.' (EBr. IV. p. 44, 11th Ed.).

213. (any more, in consequence of their habitual perfidy).

13. (الا . . . مؤمنين) Will you not fight a people who have violated[214] their oaths and conspired the banishment of the messenger[215] and who have therefore began against you first? Are you afraid of them? Allah is worthier that you should fear Him,[216] if you are believers at all.

14. (قاتلوهم . . . مؤمنين) Fight them; Allah will chastise them at your hands,[217] and humble them and give you victory over them and heal the spirit of the believing people.[218]

15. (و يذهب . . . حكيم) And He shall take away the rage from their hearts.[219] And Allah shall relent towards whom He pleases;[220] and Allah is Knowing,[221] Wise.[222]

16. (ام . . . تعملون) Do you think that you would be left alone while yet Allah has not known[223] those of you who have striven hard and have not taken an ally besides Allah and His Messenger and the faithful[224]? Allah is Aware of what you do.

---

214. The verse was revealed after the pagans had actually violated the treaty. The reference is to the Quraish aiding and assisting Banu Bakr who had treacherously raided an unsuspecting encampment of Banu Khuzā'a and mercilessly slain several of them.

215. (from their city).

216. (and implicitly obey His commands).

217. Cf. the OT:—'I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand; and thou shalt drive them out before thee.' (Ex. 23 : 31).

218. (of the wounds sustained from the tongue and hands of the powerful and perfidious enemy).

219. (and make them comforted and satisfied at finding themselves avenged at long last against their cruel, relentless persecutors).

220. This implies a prophecy that some at least of the pagan leaders would be converted to Islam.

221. So that He knows who shall die in faith and who in unbelief.

222. So that He unfolds His perfect plan at its proper time.

223. (demonstrably; by a trial of your faith).

224. The reference is to those of the Muslims who were reluctant to fight against their own kindred.

18. (انما . . . المهدين) They only shall tend Allah's mosques who believe in Allah and the Last Day and establish prayer and give the poor-rate and fear none save Allah. They may[230] be among the guided ones.

19. (اجعلتم . . . الظلمين) Do you think the giving of drinks to the pilgrims and the tendance of the Sacred Mosque[231] is like[232] the conduct of one who believes in Allah and the Last Day and strives hard in the way of Allah? Equal they are not in Allah's sight, and Allah does not guide the wrong-doing people.[233]

20. (الذين . . . الفائزون) Those who have believed and have emigrated and have striven hard in the way of Allah with their riches and their lives are far higher in degree with Allah. Those! they are the achievers.[234]

21. (يبشرهم . . . مقيم) Their Lord gives them glad tidings of a mercy from Him and of goodwill and of the Gardens wherein theirs will be a Delight lasting.

225. (with all their filth of impiety and infidelity).

226. Or 'manage.' عمر is 'to keep in a good state or in repair.'

227. i. e., places of His worship, so clean, and so removed from defilement of every sort. Note the observations of an eminent scientist of the late 19th century. After remarking that Islam 'has preserved the character of pure monotheism . . . . much more faithfully than the Mosaic and Christian religions,' he proceeds. 'When I visited the East for the first time in 1873, and admired the noble mosques of Cairo, Smyrna, Brussa, and Constantinople, I was inspired with a feeling of real devotion by the simple and tasteful decoration of the interior, and the lofty and beautiful work of the exterior. How noble and inspiring do these mosques appear in comparison with the majority of Catholic churches, which are covered internally with gaudy pictures and gilt, and are outwardly disfigured by an immoderate crowd of human and animal figures!' (Hækel, Riddle of the Universe, p. 233).

228. (Seemingly of virtue and piety, on which they could presume).

229. (for ever).

230. عسى, as uttered by God in the Holy Qurān is, with a solitary exception, always 'expressive of an event of necessary occurrence' (LL), and does not convey the sense of doubt or uncertainty as ignorantly imagined by a Christian missionary.

231. This is said in answer to an erstwhile infidel who had said to a Muslim, 'Ye rip up our evil deeds, but take no notice of our good ones; we tend the people of Makka, and adore the K'aba with hangings, and give drink to the pilgrims.'

232. (in worth and merit).

24. 235. The passage refers to such of the Muslims as had neglected, on account of domestic ties, to emigrate.

236. (and that friendship proves a hindrance in the performance of his Islamic duties).

237. (O Prophet! to the believers).

238. Some persons had expressed their fear that the Muslims' trade at Makka was bound to suffer if all of them were to emigrate to Medina.

239. i. e., His punishment for their not performing the emigration or Hijrat.

26. (ثم . . . الكفرين) Thereafter did Allah send down His calm upon His messenger and upon the believers; and He sent down the hosts[245] that you did not see, and chastised them who disbelieved:[246] such is the meed of the infidels.[247]

241. 'A deep and irregular valley, with clusters of palm trees, situated at a day's journey from Mecca on one of the roads to Tāif; the scene of the famous battle . . . fought soon after the surrender of Mecca.' (EI. II. p. 335) The date of the battle, according to the Christian calendar, is the 1st of February, 630.

242. 'Four thousand pagans advanced with secrecy and speed to surprise the conqueror . . . . The banners of Medina and Mecca were displayed by the Prophet; a crowd of Bedouins increased the strength or numbers of the army, and 12,000 Mussalmans entertained a rash and sinful presumption of their invincible strength.' (GRE. V. p. 369).

243. (and your advance guard was caught by the ambuscade laid by the enemy). 'On leaving the narrow oasis of Hunain the road enters winding gorges, suitable for ambuscades. In them Mālik b. 'Awf awaited the Muslims, coming along in no order and not suspecting the presence of the enemy.' (EI. II, p. 335).

244. 'Staggered by the unexpected onslaught, column after column fell back and chocked the narrow pass. Aggravated by the obscurity of the hour and the straitness of the ragged road, panic seized the army.' (Muir, op, cit., p. 416) 'In the narrow and precipitous pass, their great numbers, of which they had been vaingloriously proud, only added to the difficulty.' (p. 418 n.) 'Surprised by the sudden attack of the Bedouin cavalry, overwhelmed by a hail of arrows, the Prophet's soldiers retired in disorder.' (EI. II. p. 335).

245. (of angels).

246. 'The enemy fled; and the rout was so complete, and so fierce the pursuit, that some even of the women and children were killed, an atrocity strictly forbidden by the Prophet.' (Muir op. cit., p. 417) 'In the valley of Hunain and Autas the power of the infidels was for ever broken . . . Women, children and spoil fell into the hands of the victors' (HHW. VIII. p. 129) 'Victory finally rested with the Muslims . . . . Hunain was not a battle, but two routs; first that of the Muslims, then that of the Bedouins of Hawāzin. This accounts for the large number of prisoners—6,000 women and children are mentioned—and the almost negligible total of the Muslim losses, about 12 killed. The booty captured was enormous, over 24,000 camels. The fleeing Bedouins sought refuge behind the ramparts of Taif.' (EI. II, p. 336).

247. (in this very world).

248. (of these infidels, and shall lead them on to Islam).

249. So He will forgive the converts their past misdeeds.

250. So He will lead them on to the Everlasting Bliss.

251. i.e., impure in heart and soul. The word here has no reference to the pagans' physical uncleanliness.

252. i.e., henceforth they are not allowed to enter the sacred precincts.

253. (by the cutting off of trade and communications with the Makkan pagans).

254. (and quite independently of the Makkans).

SECTION 5

30. (وقالت . . . يؤفكون) And the Jews say:[262] 'Uzair[263] is a child of God;[264] and the Christians say: Masīh[265] is a child of God.[266] That is their saying with their mouths,[267] resembling the saying of those who disbelieved aforetime.[268] Allah confound them![269] whither are they turning away.

31. (اتخذوا . . . يشركون) They have taken their priests[270] and their monks[271] for their Lords, besides Allah,[272] and also the Masīh, son of Maryam;[273] whereas they[274] were enjoined[275] that they should worship but One God; no god is there but He.[276] Hallowed be He from that which they associate.[277]

32. (يريدون . . . الكافرون) They seek to extinguish the light of Allah[278] with their mouths;[279] and Allah refuses to do otherwise than perfect His light,[280] although the infidels may detest.[281]

33. (هو . . . المشركون) He it is who has sent down His messenger with guidance and the true faith, that He may make it prevail[282] over all religions,[283] although the associators[284] may detest.

---

257. i.e., 'those who have been vouchsafed the Book'; the Jews and Christians.

258. Or 'agree to pay,' (Th).

259. جزية, the root meaning of which is compensation, signifies, 'the tax that is taken from the free non-Muslim subjects of a Muslim government, whereby they ratify the compact that assures them protection.' (LL) In effect it was a tax levied on able-bodied males of military age as a substitute for compulsory military service, the exemptions being the destitute, females, children, slaves, monks and hermits. Non-Muslims under the Muslim state were exempted from compulsory military service, and it was only just and equitable that they should pay some little amount in return for the protection afforded by Muslim soldiery. How rigidly the Muslims observed the condition of this ability to afford protection is well evidenced by an incident in the reign of the second Caliph. The Emperor Heraclius had raised an enormous army with which to drive back the invading forces of the Muslims, who had in consequence to concentrate all their energies on the impending encounter. The Arab general, Abū 'Ubayda, accordingly, wrote to the governors of the conquered cities of Syria, ordering them to pay back all the Jizyah, that had been collected from the cities, and wrote to the people, saying, "....The agreement between us was that we should protect you, and as this is not now in our power, we return you all that we took...." In accordance with this order enormous sums were paid back out of the state treasury, and the Christians called down blessings on the heads of the Muslims, saying, "May God give you rule over us again and make you victorious over the Romans: had it been they, they would not have given us back anything, but would have taken all that remained with us." (Arnold, Preaching of Islam, pp. 60-61). 'It is very noticeable that when any Christian people served in the Muslim army, they were exempted from the payment of this tax.' (p. 61) 'The collectors of the Jizyah were particularly instructed to show leniency, and refrain from all harsh treatment or the infliction of corporal punishment, in case of non-payment.' (p. 60)

260. (as subjects) i.e., in token of willing submission. أعطاه عن يد signifies, 'He gave it in acknowledgment of superiority of the receiver: that the power (يد) of the latter was superior to that of the giver.' (LL)

261. (and have accepted the authority of the law of Islam).

262. Here follows some elucidation of the error of the fundamental Jewish and Christian conceptions.

263. Ezra of the Bible, whose official title in the Jewish tradition is the 'Scribe of the words of the commandments of the Lord and His statutes for Israel' (Friedlander, 'Jewish religion, p. 125) and whose work constitutes a landmark in the history of Judaism. 'One of the most important personages of his day, and of far-reaching influence upon the development of Judaism.' (JE. V. p. 321) Spinoza 'goes so far as to attribute the composition of the Pentateuch, not to Moses, but to Ezra, which view appears to have existed even in the time of the Apocrypha' (IX. p. 590). 'He is said to have restored not only the law, which had been burnt, but also all the other Hebrew scriptures which had been destroyed, and seventy apocryphal works in addition.' (EBr. IX. p. 14). 'With the Return,' i.e., since the era of Ezra 'began the codification of the Torah and scriptures, their translation and exegesis, and the development of their intensive teaching. From now onwards Judaism can be spoken of as distinct from the religion of Israel.' (VJE. p. 339). 'He succeeded in reviving with increased strength the old Jewish national religious ideal; and because he did so he is called the father of Judaism.' (The Columbia Encyclopaedia, p. 599). He was the first of the scribes or soferin. But who exactly were they? and what standing had they in the Jewish theology? Not only were they 'the great authorities on the text of the Scriptures and on its interpretation' but it was they who first 'fixed the norm of Jewish religious practice,' and they were considered competent to effect whatever changes they liked even in the Scripture. In fact they did introduce 'eighteen changes into the text of the Pentateuch, chiefly in order to soften expressions which were considered too harsh by a later age. They also modified some of the precepts of the Pentateuch in order to meet the spirit of the age and the needs of the times. These modifications are called in the Talmud dibre soferin, "the words of the Scribes," and were accepted as binding by later generations' (VJE. pp. 585-586). His traditionary tomb is on the Tigris, near its junction with the Euphrates. (Layard, Nineveh Babylon, p. 501 f.n.).

264. Man, even the greatest of men, is but a creature, a servant of God with whom he can have nothing in common, and it is blasphemous to suggest, even remotely and by metaphor, any filial relationship between man and God. The very idea is repellent to Islam. Speaking of the severe and strict monotheistic attitude of the Prophet who 'could not tolerate that other beings should receive the slightest portion of the divine honours which were His due,' observes a modern Christian scholar, 'He went much farther than Eastern Christianity, whose Christolatry and Mariolatry he regarded as idolatry. Not even Judaism withstood the test of his monotheistic zeal. He regarded the Jewish reverence for Ezra as on the same level as the Christian adoration of Jesus (Andrae, op. cit., p. 28).

265. مسيح literally is 'wiped over with some such thing as oil,' and المسيح (with the definite article ال) is 'the Anointed, the Christ.' Note that the Holy Qur'ān never disputes the title of Jesus to Messiahship. It is only his Divinity whether as Son or as Child or Incarnation that Islam so consistently denounces.

266. 'Children of God' and 'Sons of God' are both Biblical phrases. In the former, the favourite phrase of St. John, 'the idea of origin is most prominent': while the latter, so frequently used by St. Paul, emphasizes 'rather the notion of relation and privilege' (DB. II. p. 215). The doctrine of Jesus being 'a child of God' is distinct from his Sonship, though the two ideas later on coalesced into one. Both are equally blasphemous and derogatory to the dignity of God.

267. (void of all substance) i.e., unsupported by their own prophets.

268. Pagan mythologies and polytheistic theologies are full of the underlying notion of the fatherhood of God, man's genetic relationship with Him, and community of nature between man and God. 'The idea of divine Fatherhood had not failed to make its appearance in the Jewish scriptures, canonical and uncanonical, as it indeed appears in many religions.' (EBr. XIII. p. 21). There may be a special reference to the great influence on the Christian theology of Greece which 'supplied the philosophy of the Christian religion' and of Rome of which 'the stubborn local traditions survive in Catholic Europe to this day.' (UHW. IV. p. 2083).

269. An expression of reproach at the wilful blindness and perversity of the Jews and Christians.

270. i.e., men learned in religious lore.

271. i.e., men devoted to religious penances.

272. (by considering them infallible as the very Lord God.) Among the Jews, the ancient rabbis claimed 'under certain circumstances even to suspend and to abrogate a Biblical law . . . . There are cases mentioned in the Talmud, in which a Biblical law was entirely abrogated.' (JE. I. p. 131). 'The distinguished rank of the highpriest is apparent from the fact that his sins are regarded as belonging also to the people' (VI. p. 390). Among the Christians, the Church of Christ and the Pope are infallible. 'Without this visible Church there is no salvation. It is under the abiding influence of the Holy Ghost, and therefore cannot err in the matters of faith.' (EBr. XVI. p. 940). 'The Church and the Pope cannot err when solemnly enunciating, as binding on all the faithful, a decision on a question of faith or morals.' (XII. p. 318). Catholicism maintains that the Church alone with the assistance of the Holy Ghost promised her by Christ can tell us with infallible certainty what truth God has actually revealed, whether these be found in the Bible or in tradition.' (CD. p. 358).

273. (whom the Christians have taken as their very Lord God). Incredible as it may sound to the Muslim ears, the position of Jesus among the Christians is actually that of God. The Catholic Church holds 'that her Founder and generator of her inerrancy, Jesus Christ is God.' (CD. p. 265). 'Christ is both God and man. As man He was the Ambassador of His Eternal Father: as God, He and the Father are equal in all things' (p. 824). 'God the Son, made man, and named Jesus Christ, to be worshipped in His Divinity and in His Humanity.' (p. 1027).

274. i.e., both the Jews and Christians.

275. (by God through their prophets).

276. In the OT:—'I am the Lord thy God . . . Thou shalt have no other gods before me' (Ex. 20: 1, 2). Also Dt. 5: 6, 7; 6: 4, 14. And in the NT:—'The first of all the commandment is, Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord.' (Mk. 12: 29). Also Mt. 4: 10; Lk. 4: 8.

277. (with Him).

278. i.e., His true religion.

279. (as are oil lamps extinguished by blowing with the mouth).

280. (by spreading His religion far and wide and making it a signal success). A prophecy that has stood the test of thirteen centuries. Witness the admission of Sale, that the success achieved by Islam is 'unexampled in the world.' And the still more recent admission of a competent European scholar, that the Holy Prophet is 'the most successful of all prophets and religious personalities.' EBr. XV. p. 898, 11th Ed.)

281. (and make every effort to check its progress).

282. (by means of solid achievements and clear arguments). Note that it is the religion of Islam, as such, that is to outshine and outlive all other religions; and there is no necessary connection between the religious superiority of Islam and the political supremacy of the Muslim states.

283. Witness the confession of failure on the part of the Christian missionaries with all their vast resources:—'The solid mass of experience due to the efforts of numerous missionaries is not of an encouraging nature. There is no reasonable hope of the conversion of important numbers of Mohammedans to any Christian denomination.' (Hurgronje, op. cit., p. 174).

284. It is not the Arab idolaters but the Jews and Christians, who, for taking others beside God for their Lord, are here spoken of as 'associators.'

التوبة ٩ واعلموا ١٠

الرُّهْبَانِ لَيَأْكُلُونَ أَمْوَالَ النَّاسِ بِالْبَاطِلِ وَيَصُدُّونَ عَنْ سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ ۗ وَالَّذِينَ يَكْنِزُونَ الذَّهَبَ وَالْفِضَّةَ

وَجُنُوبُهُمْ وَظُهُورُهُمْ ۖ هَٰذَا مَا كَنَزْتُمْ لِأَنْفُسِكُمْ فَذُوقُوا مَا كُنْتُمْ تَكْنِزُونَ ۝ إِنَّ عِدَّةَ الشُّهُورِ عِنْدَ اللَّهِ اثْنَا
عَشَرَ شَهْرًا فِي كِتَابِ اللَّهِ يَوْمَ خَلَقَ السَّمَاوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضَ مِنْهَا أَرْبَعَةٌ حُرُمٌ ۚ ذَٰلِكَ الدِّينُ الْقَيِّمُ ۚ فَلَا

الْمُتَّقِينَ ۝ إِنَّمَا

34. (يا ايها الذين . . . اليم) O you who believe! surely many of the priests[285] and monks[286] devour the substance of men in falsehood,[287] and[288] hinder people from the way of Allah. And those[289] who treasure up gold and silver and do not spend them in the way of Allah[290]—announce thou to them a torment afflictive.[291]

35. (يوم . . . تكنزون) on a Day when they[292] shall be heated in Hell-fire, and with it shall be branded their foreheads and their sides and their backs: this is what you have treasured up for yourselves, so taste now what you have been treasuring up.

36. (ان . . . المتقين) Verily the number of months[293] with Allah is twelve months[294] ordained in the writ of Allah on the Day when He created the heavens and the earth;[295] and of these four[296] are sacred:[297] that is the right religion.[298] Wherefore wrong not yourselves in this respect.[299] And fight the associators,[300] all of them,[301] as they fight[302] all of you. And know that Allah is with the God-fearing.[303]

---

285. i. e., Jewish priests and divines.

286. i.e., Christian monks and clergy.

287. i.e., on false pretences; for dispensing with the commands of God, by way of commendation or granting of indulgences. As regards the Jews:—'Every one loveth gifts and followeth after rewards.' (Is. 1 : 23) 'From the least of them even unto the greatest of them every one is given to covetousness.' (Je. 6 : 13). The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire'. (Mi. 3 : 11). 'Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses' (Mt. 23 : 14). Also Lk. 20 : 46, 47 : Mk. 12 : 38, 40. As regards the Christians:—'The morality of the clergy was exposed to no ordinary temptations by their growing power and wealth; and especially by the right which the church acquired under Constantine of holding landed property and inheriting it by bequest.' (DCA. II. p. 1916). By some of the stewards of the church 'the riches of the church were lavished in sensual pleasures; by others they were perverted to the purposes of private gain, of fraudulent purchases, and of rapacious usury.' (GRE. II. p. 200). From the seventh century onward 'the people compounded for the atrocious crimes by gifts to shrines of those saints whose intercession was supposed to be unfailing.' And the monks, on their part, 'by the very wealth they had acquired, sank into gross and general immorality.' (Lecky, op. cit., II. p. 230).

288. (with that end in view).

289. (among the priest and monk classes).

290. i. e., do not pay the obligatory alms.

291. Cf. the NT :—'Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, . . . but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven.' (Mt. 6 : 19, 20).

292. i.e., those heaps of gold and silver.

293. (making a year).

294. (of the lunar calendar). And so the seasons of the year ought to be ambulatory, and not fixed as in the solar calendar or by means of the intercalation of a month every third year, which later practice the Arabs had learnt of the Jews. See also P. II. n. 260.

295. This puts an end to intercalation altogether.

296. i.e., Muḥarram, Rajab, Zul Qāda and Zul Hijja.

297. (wherein all fighting is prohibited).

298. Or 'the right or true reckoning' (LL).

299. (by transposing the true order of the months and fixing the pilgrimage to a particular season of the year through intercalating).

300. (of Arabia).

301. The main principle of the modern strategy is that of the limitless use of force, and the principal aim of modern warfare is total destruction of the opposing army in utter disregard of any cost involved.

302. i.e., are prepared to fight.

303. (so do not be afraid of the number or equipment of the infidels).

النسيء زيادة في الكفر يضل به الذين كفروا يحلونه عاما ويحرمونه عاما ليواطئوا عدة ما حرم
الله فيحلوا ما حرم الله زين لهم سوء أعمالهم والله لا يهدي القوم الكفرين ۝ يايها الذين
امنوا ما لكم إذا قيل لكم انفروا في سبيل الله اثاقلتم إلى الأرض أرضيتم بالحيوة الدنيا من الأخرة
فما متاع الحيوة الدنيا في الأخرة إلا قليل ۝ إلا تنفروا يعذبكم عذابا أليما ويستبدل قوما
غيركم ولا تضروه شيئا والله على كل شيء قدير ۝ إلا تنصروه فقد نصره الله إذ أخرجه
الذين كفروا ثاني اثنين إذ هما في الغار إذ يقول

37. (انما . . . الكفرين) The postponement[304] is but an addition to infidelity, with which the infidels are led astray,[305] allowing it[306] one year and forbidding it another year,[307] that they may make up the number which Allah has sanctified,[308] and then[309] they allow what Allah has forbidden. Fair-seeming to them are made their foul acts; and Allah does not guide an infidel people.[310]

SECTION 6

38. (يايها . . . قليل) O you who believe: why is it with you that when it is said to you: march forth in the way of Allah,[311] you linger slothfully earthward?[312] Are you pleased with the life of the world rather than the Hereafter? Whereas the enjoyment of the life of the world by the side of[313] the Hereafter is but little.

39. (الا . . . قدير) If you do not march forth,[314] He will torment you with a torment afflictive,[315] and will replace you by another people,[316] and Him[317] you cannot harm in aught; and Allah is over everything Potent.

---

304. (of a sacred month to another month). 'This was an invention or innovation of the idolatrous Arabs, whereby they avoided keeping a sacred month, when it suited not their convenience, by keeping a profane month in its stead; transferring, for example, the observance of Muḥarram to the succeeding month, Safar.' (Sale)

305. (still further).

306. i. e., a certain month.

307. (as it suited their immediate purpose with no regard to Divine injunctions).

308. (without caring as to which particular months are to be kept sacred).

309. i. e., when the Divine sanctity of particular months is dispensed with.

310. (who themselves care not for their guidance).

311. i. e., to make war in His cause. The reference is to the expedition of Tabūk, in Rajab, 9 A.H., or 630 C.E. directed against the Roman Empire. The town 'now situated on the pilgrim road and on the railway from Damascus to Madina, about 12 days' foot journey from Madina, was in 'the time of the Prophet, on the northern frontiers of Arabia beyond which Byzantine territory began.' (E. I. IV, p. 594) Several Syrian tribes 'were flocking around the Roman eagle, and the vanguard was already at the Belka.' (Muir p. 439).

312. The Muslims set out with great unwillingness, because the expedition 'was undertaken in the midst of the summer heats, and a time of great drought and scarcity; whereby the soldiers suffered so much, that this army was called the distressed army; besides, their fruits were just ripe, and they had much rather have stayed to have gathered them.' (Bdh).

313. فِي 'also denotes comparison; and this is when it occurs between a preceding mention of a thing excelled and a following mention of a thing excelling.' (LL).

314. (when summoned to war in His cause).

315. (in this very world).

316. (to serve the Divine purpose and to comply with His behests).

317. i. e., His true religion. (Th).

لِصَاحِبِهِ لَا تَحْزَنْ إِنَّ اللَّهَ مَعَنَا فَأَنْزَلَ اللَّهُ سَكِينَتَهُ عَلَيْهِ وَأَيَّدَهُ بِجُنُودٍ لَمْ تَرَوْهَا وَجَعَلَ كَلِمَةَ الَّذِينَ

40. (الا . . . حكيم) If you do not succour him,[318] then surely Allah has succoured him[319] when those who disbelieved banished him:[320] the second of the two;[321] when the twain were in a cave,[322] and when he[323] said to his companion:[324] do not grieve, verily Allah[325] is with us.[326] Then Allah sent down His peace on him[327] and supported him with hosts[328] which you did not see, and made the word of those who disbelieved the lowest[329] and the word of Allah is the uppermost.[330] And Allah is Mighty,[331] Wise[332]

41. (انفروا . . . تعلمون) March forth,[333] light and heavy,[334] and strive hard with your riches and lives in the way of Allah; that is the best for you,[335] if you have knowledge.

42. (لوكان . . . الكذبون) Were there a gain nigh[336] and a journey easy,[337] they[338] would have followed thee,[339] but the distance was too far to them. Still they will swear by Allah[340] saying: if only we could, we would surely have come forth[341] with you. They kill their own souls[342] and Allah knows that verily they are liars.[343]

SECTION 7

43. (عفا . . . الكذبين) Allah pardon thee[344] ! why didst thou give them leave[345] before it was clear unto thee as to who told the truth[346] and thou hadst known the liars.[347]

---

318. i. e., the Prophet.

319. —on even graver occasion, such as—

320. (out of Makka, and he felt lonely and helpless, having only one companion with him).

321. i. e., the one of this tiny party was the Prophet himself. His single companion was no other than the first Caliph, Abu Bakr. The 'second of the two' became one of his most honoured titles. 'His life attained its apogee when Muḥammad chose him to accompany him on the flight from Mecca, and his self-sacrificing friendship was rewarded by his name being immortalized in the Koran as "the second of the two." (EI. I. p. 81).

322. The cave was in Mount Thaur, to the south-east of Makka, where the two fugitives lay hidden for three days to avoid the very close search of their enemies bent on capturing them and well skilled in tracking. They very narrowly escaped detection and only with the help of some miracles. 'They crept in the shade of evening through a back window, and escaped unobserved from the southern suburb. Pursuing their way, south, and clambering in the dark up the bare and rugged ascent, they reached at last the lofty peak of Mount Thaur, distant about an hour and a half from the city, and took refuge in a cave near its summit' (Muir, op. cit. p. 138).

323. i. e., the Prophet.

324. (who on perceiving the great danger that they both were in was naturally a little nervous). 'The cave, lonely and remote as it was, could not have been a safe place for the two flying men, for the search was active; the scouts actually came once to its mouth, and the prophet and his companion heard their voices.' (Gilman, The Saracens, p. 121).

325. i. e., His succour. (Th).

326. 'Glancing upwards at a crevice through which the morning light began to break, Abu Bakr whispered: "What if one were to look through the chink, and see us underneath his very feet?" "Think not thus, Abu Bakr!" said the Prophet, "We are two, but God is in the midst a third" (Muir, op. cit., p. 139).

327. 'Armed men on camels were searching the hill and meeting a shepherd they enquired for news of the fugitives. Pointing in the direction of the cave the man answered: "Perhaps they are hidden there; it is a likely place." Abu Bakr was terrified. "What can we two do againt so many?" he asked and Muhammed quietly replied: "Fear naught, Allah is with us." A spider was spreading its intricate web across the mouth of the cave and a white dove was cooing at the entrance. Peace reigned in that tiny corner of the world and the pursuers, seeing the dove and the spider's web, did not trouble to enter. As the sound of their footsteps died away, the Prophet cried: Praise be to God! God is greater than all." (Lady Cobbold, op. cit., pp. 57-58).

328. (of angels who bring security).

329. i. e., defeated and humbled their plan.

330. i. e., His Plan is always successful.

331. i. e., Able to maintain for ever the supremacy of the believers.

332. So that He makes the believers victorious only when that victory conforms with His universal Plan.

333. (O Muslims!).

334. i. e., whether light-armed and ill-equipped or heavy-armed and well-equipped.

335. (both in this world and the Next).

336. i. e., were the spoils of war to cost them little or no trouble.

337. i. e., were there no difficulties to surmount in the Tabūk expedition.

338. i. e., the hypocrites who had lagged behind. The reference here is to the hypocrites, not to the believers.

339. (to the battle-ground, O Prophet!).

340. (and saying to the Muslims). This is said by way of prophecy before the return of the Muslim army to Madina.

341. (out of Madina to meet the enemy).

342. (by this act of lying and false swearing).

343. (who without any just excuse failed to go out for Jihād).

344. (O Prophet! for thy excusing certain persons from joining the Tabūk expedition). عفو (literally, effacement, forgiveness, absolution) does not necessarily imply sin or moral guilt. Very often, as here, it implies only an honest, bona fide error of judgment, from which no mortal—not even the greatest of the prophets—can be entirely immune. But no prophet is ever allowed to stick to such errors of judgment: Divine revelation invariably and immediately corrects them. And that is the differentia, in Islam, of the sinless prophets—distinguishing them from ordinary mortals.

345. (to stay at home). The reference here is to certain hypocrites.

346. The reference here is to certain Muslims who had just reasons to remain behind.

347. i. e., the habitual malingerers. The ever-forgiving Prophet is here gently admonished for being too liberal in granting exemption to the habitual malingerers.

التوبة ٩ واعلموا ١٠

يَسْتَأْذِنُكَ الَّذِينَ يُؤْمِنُونَ بِاللَّهِ وَالْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ أَنْ يُجَاهِدُوا بِأَمْوَالِهِمْ وَأَنْفُسِهِمْ ۗ وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ
بِالْمُتَّقِينَ ﴿٤٤﴾ إِنَّمَا يَسْتَأْذِنُكَ الَّذِينَ لَا يُؤْمِنُونَ بِاللَّهِ وَالْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ وَارْتَابَتْ قُلُوبُهُمْ فَهُمْ
فِي رَيْبِهِمْ يَتَرَدَّدُونَ ﴿٤٥﴾ وَلَوْ أَرَادُوا الْخُرُوجَ لَأَعَدُّوا لَهُ عُدَّةً وَلَٰكِنْ كَرِهَ اللَّهُ انْبِعَاثَهُمْ
فَثَبَّطَهُمْ وَقِيلَ اقْعُدُوا مَعَ الْقَاعِدِينَ ﴿٤٦﴾ لَوْ خَرَجُوا فِيكُمْ مَا زَادُوكُمْ إِلَّا خَبَالًا وَلَأَوْضَعُوا
خِلَالَكُمْ يَبْغُونَكُمُ الْفِتْنَةَ وَفِيكُمْ سَمَّاعُونَ لَهُمْ ۗ وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ بِالظَّالِمِينَ ﴿٤٧﴾ لَقَدِ ابْتَغَوُا
الْفِتْنَةَ مِنْ قَبْلُ وَقَلَّبُوا لَكَ الْأُمُورَ حَتَّىٰ جَاءَ الْحَقُّ وَظَهَرَ أَمْرُ اللَّهِ وَهُمْ كَارِهُونَ ﴿٤٨﴾ وَمِنْهُمْ

44. (لا ... بالمتقين) Those who believe in Allah and the Last Day would not ask thy leave to be excused from striving hard with their riches and their lives,[348] and Allah is the Knower of the God-fearing.[349]

45. (انما ... يترددون) It is only those who do not believe in Allah and the Last Day and whose hearts doubt who ask thy leave;[350] so in their doubt they are tossed to and fro.[351]

46. (ولو ... القعدين) Had they intended[352] the marching forth[353] they would have made some preparation for it;[354] but Allah[355] was averse to their wending,[356] so He withheld them[357] and the word was passed:[358] stay at home with the stay-at-homes.[359]

47. (لو ... بالظلمين) Had they marched forth with you,[360] they would have added to you naught save unsoundness, and they would have hurried about in your midst seeking sedition unto you;[361] and there are among you listeners to them;[362] and Allah is the Knower of the wrong-doers.[363]

48. (لقد ... كرهون) Assuredly they sought confusion before[364] and turned the affairs upside down for thee[365] until the truth[366] arrived and the decree of Allah prevailed, averse though they were.

348. i. e., the true believers will always subordinate their personal interests to those of Islam.

349. (and He will reward them accordingly).

350. (to stay behind).

351. Belief, says a psychologist with no religious sympathies, 'is opposed, not by disbelief but by doubt . . . In matters of great import, doubt is the name for unspeakable misery' (Bain, Mental Science, p. 384). Doubt, which signifies on the part of the doubter unstability, double-mindedness and perplexity in everything, is the exact opposite of faith and incompatible with it, and therefore receives in religion utter condemnation.

352. —as now they pretend that they did—

353. (with thee).

354. (and would have equipped themselves).

355. (in His Ultimate Will).

356. (in consequence of their own lack of will to go forth).

357. (as is His wont in all such cases) i. e., He did not exert His will that they should move.

358. (unto them) i. e., it was inspired in their minds.

359. i. e., those who are really incapable of active service, such as the aged and the infirm, and are obliged to stay.

360. Literally, 'among you.'

361. This explains God's superior wisdom in not willing the hypocrites to accompany the Muslim army, hinted at by the words 'Allah was averse to their wending' in the preceding verse.

362. (even now). Or 'those who would have listened to them.'

363. (and will requite them accordingly).

364. (as at Ohud).

365. (i. e., created difficulties for thee).

366. i. e., fulfilment of God's promise of the Muslim victory.

مَّن يَقُولُ ائْذَن لِّي وَلَا تَفْتِنِّي ۚ أَلَا فِي الْفِتْنَةِ سَقَطُوا ۗ وَإِنَّ جَهَنَّمَ لَمُحِيطَةٌ بِالْكَافِرِينَ ۝ إِن
تُصِبْكَ حَسَنَةٌ تَسُؤْهُمْ ۖ وَإِن تُصِبْكَ مُصِيبَةٌ يَقُولُوا قَدْ أَخَذْنَا أَمْرَنَا مِن قَبْلُ وَيَتَوَلَّوا وَّ
هُمْ فَرِحُونَ ۝ قُل لَّن يُصِيبَنَا إِلَّا مَا كَتَبَ اللَّهُ لَنَا هُوَ مَوْلَانَا ۚ وَعَلَى اللَّهِ فَلْيَتَوَكَّلِ الْمُؤْمِنُونَ ۝
قُلْ هَلْ تَرَبَّصُونَ بِنَا إِلَّا إِحْدَى الْحُسْنَيَيْنِ ۖ وَنَحْنُ نَتَرَبَّصُ بِكُمْ أَن يُصِيبَكُمُ اللَّهُ بِعَذَابٍ مِّنْ
عِندِهِ أَوْ بِأَيْدِينَا ۖ فَتَرَبَّصُوا إِنَّا مَعَكُم مُّتَرَبِّصُونَ ۝ قُلْ أَنفِقُوا طَوْعًا أَوْ كَرْهًا لَّن يُتَقَبَّلَ مِنكُمْ ۖ
إِنَّكُمْ كُنتُمْ قَوْمًا فَاسِقِينَ ۝ وَمَا مَنَعَهُمْ أَن تُقْبَلَ مِنْهُمْ نَفَقَاتُهُمْ

49. (ومنهم . . . بالكفرين) And among them[367] there is he[368] who says: give me leave[369] and tempt me not.[370] Lo! into temptation they are already fallen;[371] and verily the Hell is the encompasser of the infidels.

50. (ان . . . فرحون) If good happens to thee[372] it annoys them,[373] and if an affliction befalls thee, they say:[374] we surely took hold of our affair before.[375] And they turn away while they are exulting.

51. (قل . . . المؤمنون) Say thou:[376] naught shall ever befall us save what Allah has ordained for us; He is our Patron[377] and on Allah let the believers rely.

52. (قل . . . متربصون) Say thou: do you await for us anything save one of the two excellences,[378] while for you we wait that Allah shall afflict you with a torment from Himself,[379] or at our hands.[380] Await then,[381] we also are with you awaiting.

53. (قل . . . فسقين) Say thou[382] spend[383] willingly or unwillingly it will not be accepted from you: verily you are a people ever ungodly.

---

367. i. e., of the hypocrites who lagged behind.

368. The allusion is to one J'ad Ibn Qais, who came to the Prophet and said: 'I have a weakness for beauty, and Syrian girls are reported to be extremely beautiful.'

369. (to stay behind).

370. i. e., expose me not to temptation.

371. (by their refusing to follow the call of the Prophet).

372. (O Prophet!).

373. So envious are they!

374. (among themselves, felicitating each other).

375. (by keeping ourselves out of harm's way).

376. (O Prophet! on behalf of the Muslims).

377. (so what pleases Him most pleases us as well).

378. i. e., either victory and glory in this world, or death in God's cause, a sure passport to Paradise. 'An army made up of men holding such a faith could hardly fail of success.' (Wherry) Cf. a saying of Shri Krishna in the Bhagwada Gita:—'Slain, thou wilt obtain heaven; victorious, thou wilt enjoy the earth; therefore stand up, O son of Kunti, resolute to fight.' (II: 37).

379. (either in this world or the Next).

380. (in this world on your making a public avowal of your ill-concealed infidelity).

381. (and see what becomes the end of you).

382. (to the hypocrites, O Prophet!).

383. (in purposes apparently laudable).

إِلَّا أَنَّهُمْ كَفَرُوا بِاللَّهِ وَبِرَسُولِهِ وَلَا يَأْتُونَ الصَّلَاةَ إِلَّا وَهُمْ كُسَالَىٰ وَلَا يُنفِقُونَ إِلَّا وَهُمْ
كَارِهُونَ ﴿٥٤﴾ فَلَا تُعْجِبْكَ أَمْوَالُهُمْ وَلَا أَوْلَادُهُمْ ۚ إِنَّمَا يُرِيدُ اللَّهُ لِيُعَذِّبَهُم بِهَا فِي الْحَيَاةِ الدُّنْيَا
وَتَزْهَقَ أَنفُسُهُمْ وَهُمْ كَافِرُونَ ﴿٥٥﴾ وَيَحْلِفُونَ بِاللَّهِ إِنَّهُمْ لَمِنكُمْ وَمَا هُم مِّنكُمْ وَلَٰكِنَّهُمْ
قَوْمٌ يَفْرَقُونَ ﴿٥٦﴾ لَوْ يَجِدُونَ مَلْجَأً أَوْ مَغَارَاتٍ أَوْ مُدَّخَلًا لَّوَلَّوْا إِلَيْهِ وَهُمْ يَجْمَحُونَ ﴿٥٧﴾ وَمِنْهُم
مَّن يَلْمِزُكَ فِي الصَّدَقَاتِ فَإِنْ أُعْطُوا مِنْهَا رَضُوا وَإِن لَّمْ يُعْطَوْا مِنْهَا إِذَا هُمْ يَسْخَطُونَ ﴿٥٨﴾
وَلَوْ أَنَّهُمْ رَضُوا مَا آتَاهُمُ اللَّهُ وَرَسُولُهُ وَقَالُوا حَسْبُنَا اللَّهُ سَيُؤْتِينَا اللَّهُ مِن فَضْلِهِ

54. (وما . . . كرهون) And naught does prevent their spendings from being accepted[384] except that they[385] have disbelieved in Allah and His messenger, and that they perform not prayer except as sluggards[386] and spend not save as those averse.

55. (فلا . . . كفرون) Let not therefore[387] their riches and their children[388] amaze thee.[389] Allah only intends to chastise them therewith in the life of the world and that their souls should depart while they are infidels.[390]

56. (ويحلفون . . . يفرقون) They swear by Allah that they are surely of you,[391] while they are not of you; but they are a people who dread.[392]

57. (لو يجدون . . . يجمحون) Could they find a place of shelter or caverns or a retreating hole, they would turn round to it rushing headlong.[393]

58. (ومنهم . . . يسخطون) And of them are some who traduce thee[394] in respect of alms.[395] Then if they are given a share of these,[396] they are pleased,[397] and if they are given none, lo! they are enraged.[398]

---

384. (by God).

385. (in their hearts).

386. (since the motive force is wanting).

387. i.e., now that they are found out and damned.

388. (with which favours they seem to be blessed).

389. (O reader!) i.e., imagine not that the hypocrites with their portion of wealth and offspring are the favourites of God; they are but ensnared therewith.

390. So that by these very favours the infidels are wedded to their infidelity and their final condemnation is ensured thereby.

391. (O Muslims!).

392. (to appear in their true colours) i.e., to avow their infidelity. The hypocrites on the one hand concealed their infidelity lest the Muslims should treat them like the open infidels, and on the other never hesitated to declare their contempt and hatred of Islam when they thought they could do so with impunity.

393. (and would not make even an outward profession of faith).

394. (O Prophet !).

395. i.e., in respect of its just and fair distribution. صدقة is any charitable gift that is not an obligatory one.

396. (as they desire and covet).

397. (and complain no more).

398. So that it is not on any matter of principle that they raise objections. It is only their inordinate greed that they wish to satisfy.

وَرَسُولُهُ إِنَّا إِلَى اللَّهِ رَاغِبُونَ ۝ إِنَّمَا الصَّدَقَاتُ لِلْفُقَرَاءِ وَالْمَسَاكِينِ وَالْعَامِلِينَ عَلَيْهَا وَالْمُؤَلَّفَةِ قُلُوبُهُمْ
وَفِي الرِّقَابِ وَالْغَارِمِينَ وَفِي سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ وَابْنِ السَّبِيلِ فَرِيضَةً مِنَ اللَّهِ وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ حَكِيمٌ ۝ وَمِنْهُمُ الَّذِينَ
يُؤْذُونَ النَّبِيَّ وَيَقُولُونَ هُوَ أُذُنٌ قُلْ أُذُنُ خَيْرٍ لَكُمْ يُؤْمِنُ بِاللَّهِ وَيُؤْمِنُ لِلْمُؤْمِنِينَ وَرَحْمَةٌ
لِلَّذِينَ آمَنُوا مِنْكُمْ وَالَّذِينَ يُؤْذُونَ رَسُولَ اللَّهِ لَهُمْ عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌ ۝ يَحْلِفُونَ بِاللَّهِ لَكُمْ لِيُرْضُوكُمْ وَاللَّهُ
وَرَسُولُهُ أَحَقُّ أَنْ يُرْضُوهُ إِنْ كَانُوا مُؤْمِنِينَ ۝ أَلَمْ يَعْلَمُوا أَنَّهُ مَنْ يُحَادِدِ اللَّهَ وَرَسُولَهُ فَأَنَّ

59. (ولو انهم . . . راغبون) Would that they were content with what Allah and His messenger had given them and were to say:[399] sufficient to us is Allah,[400] soon will Allah give us out of His grace, and so will His messenger, verily to Allah we lean.[401]

SECTION 8

60. (انما . . . حكيم) The obligatory alms are only for the poor[402] and the needy[403] and the agents employed therein[404] and those whose hearts are to be conciliated[405] and those in bondage[406] and debtors[407] and for expenditure in the way of Allah[408] and for the wayfarer:[409] an ordinance from Allah,[410] and Allah is Knowing, Wise.

61. (ومنهم . . . اليم) And of them[411] are some who vex the messenger[412] and say:[413] he is all ears.[414] Say thou: he is all ears[415] unto you is good for you, believing in Allah[416] and giving credence to the believers[417] and a mercy to those of you who believe. And those who vex the messenger of Allah,[418] for them shall be a chastisement afflictive.

62. (يحلفون . . . مؤمنين) They swear to you[419] by Allah[420] in order that you may be pleased,[421] while worthier are Allah and His messenger that they should please Him,[422] if they be believers indeed.

---

399. (like true Muslims).

400. (and His Judgment as regards our share).

401. (and to Him we turn all our hopes).

402. i.e., those who are utterly destitute of money and means of livelihood.

403. i.e., those who are in want indeed but not able to get something towards their support.

404. (for their collection and distribution).

405. (fully to Islam) i.e., those recently converted to Islam, requiring financial assistance and support. These 'costly presents' in the case of half-hearted converts, observes a Christian historian, 'wrought effectively,' and 'in most cases a genuine conversion followed in time,' (HHW. VIII, p. 12).

406. i.e., for their redemption.

407. (who are insolvent or nearly so).

408. i.e., for the provision and equipment of those who fight in the cause of the true religion.

409. i.e., for the relief and support of those stranded in the way.

410. (and is therefore not to be treated lightly).

411. i.e., of the hypocrites.

412. (by speaking of him slightingly).

413. (when rebuked).

414. (and prepared to give credence to every profession of friendship so we shall readily reconcile him to ourselves).

415. (indeed ; but only—).

416. (and His power of revealing secrets).

417. The purport is that the Prophet is thoroughly wide-awake and well aware of the evil-speaking indulged in by his detractors.

418. (by their venomous tongues).

419. i.e., the Muslims.

420. (denying that they said such and such things).

421. (and that their life and property may remain safe at your hands).

422. —the first and foremost duty of every sincere believer—

التوبة ٩ واعلموا ١٠

لَهُ نَارَ جَهَنَّمَ خَالِدًا فِيهَا ۚ ذَٰلِكَ الْخِزْيُ الْعَظِيمُ ﴿٦٣﴾ يَحْذَرُ الْمُنَافِقُونَ أَن تُنَزَّلَ عَلَيْهِمْ
سُورَةٌ تُنَبِّئُهُم بِمَا فِي قُلُوبِهِمْ ۚ قُلِ اسْتَهْزِئُوا إِنَّ اللَّهَ مُخْرِجٌ مَّا تَحْذَرُونَ ﴿٦٤﴾ وَلَئِن سَأَلْتَهُمْ
لَيَقُولُنَّ إِنَّمَا كُنَّا نَخُوضُ وَنَلْعَبُ ۚ قُلْ أَبِاللَّهِ وَآيَاتِهِ وَرَسُولِهِ كُنتُمْ تَسْتَهْزِئُونَ ﴿٦٥﴾ لَا
تَعْتَذِرُوا قَدْ كَفَرْتُم بَعْدَ إِيمَانِكُمْ ۚ إِن نَّعْفُ عَن طَائِفَةٍ مِّنكُمْ نُعَذِّبْ طَائِفَةً بِأَنَّهُمْ
كَانُوا مُجْرِمِينَ ﴿٦٦﴾ الْمُنَافِقُونَ وَالْمُنَافِقَاتُ بَعْضُهُم مِّن بَعْضٍ ۚ يَأْمُرُونَ بِالْمُنكَرِ وَيَنْهَوْنَ
عَنِ الْمَعْرُوفِ وَيَقْبِضُونَ أَيْدِيَهُمْ ۚ نَسُوا اللَّهَ فَنَسِيَهُمْ ۚ إِنَّ الْمُنَافِقِينَ هُمُ الْفَاسِقُونَ ﴿٦٧﴾ وَعَدَ

63. (الم . . . العظيم) Do they not know that anyone who will oppose[423] Allah and His messenger, verily for him shall be Hell-fire in which he shall abide: a mighty humiliation.

64. (يحذر . . . تحذرون) The hopocrites apprehend[424] lest a Surah should be revealed to them[425] declaring to them[426] what is in their hearts.[427] Say thou:[428] mock on: truly Allah is about to bring out what you apprehend.

65. (ولئن . . . تستهزءون) Shouldst thou question them,[429] thy will surely say:[430] we were only plunging about[431] and playing.[432] Say thou: was it Allah and His signs and His messenger that you have been mocking?[433]

66. (لا . . . مجرمين) Make no excuse.[434] Of a surety you are disbelieving[435] after declaring your faith.[436] If a section of you[437] We will pardon, another section[438] We will chastise, for they have remained sinners.

SECTION 9

67. (المنفقون . . . الفسقون) The hypocrites, men and women, are all of a piece, they bid what is disreputable and prohibit what is reputable, and they tighten their hands.[439] They neglected Allah[440] and so He had neglected them.[441] Verily the hypocrites are the ungodly ones.

---

423. (as the hypocrites are opposing).

424. (as do all men of guilty conscience).

425. i.e., the believers. The pronoun refers to the Muslims. (Th). If the reference be to the hypocrites, the rendering instead of 'to them', would be 'concerning them.'

426. i.e., the believers.

427. i.e., the hypocrites.

428. (to the hypocrites, O Prophet !).

429. (regarding their conduct).

430. (by way of explanation and apology).

431. (in idle discourses without being in earnest at all).

432. (without meaning the least insult to the Prophet). In the Tabūk expedition, certain hypocrites passed by the holy Prophet, speaking of him slightingly. When called upon by him to explain, they replied on oath that they were not talking of him and his companions, but only diverting themselves with indifferent discourses to while away the tedium of the journey.

433. i. e., granted that you were only guilty of frivolity in your talks but are these most solemn topics the fitting subjects for vain discourses and hilarious remarks?

434. (as no excuse can justify your reprehensible conduct).

435. (now openly).

436. (instead of ultimately becoming sincere believers).

437. (who shall remain hypocrites as now).

438. Literally, 'some of them or of others.'

439. (against spending in the cause of religion).

440. (by disobeying His commands).

441. (by depriving them of His special grace and mercy).

اللّٰهُ الْمُنٰفِقِيْنَ وَالْمُنٰفِقٰتِ وَالْكُفَّارَ نَارَ جَهَنَّمَ خٰلِدِيْنَ فِيْهَا ۭ هِيَ حَسْبُهُمْ ۚ وَلَعَنَهُمُ
اللّٰهُ ۚ وَلَهُمْ عَذَابٌ مُّقِيْمٌ ﴿٦٨﴾ كَالَّذِيْنَ مِنْ قَبْلِكُمْ كَانُوْٓا اَشَدَّ مِنْكُمْ قُوَّةً وَّاَكْثَرَ اَمْوَالًا وَّ
اَوْلَادًا ۭ فَاسْتَمْتَعُوْا بِخَلَاقِهِمْ فَاسْتَمْتَعْتُمْ بِخَلَاقِكُمْ كَمَا اسْتَمْتَعَ الَّذِيْنَ مِنْ قَبْلِكُمْ بِخَلَاقِهِمْ
وَخُضْتُمْ كَالَّذِيْ خَاضُوْا ۭ اُولٰۗىِٕكَ حَبِطَتْ اَعْمَالُهُمْ فِي الدُّنْيَا وَالْاٰخِرَةِ ۚ وَاُولٰۗىِٕكَ هُمُ
الْخٰسِرُوْنَ ﴿٦٩﴾ اَلَمْ يَاْتِهِمْ نَبَاُ الَّذِيْنَ مِنْ قَبْلِهِمْ قَوْمِ نُوْحٍ وَّعَادٍ وَّثَمُوْدَ ڏ وَقَوْمِ اِبْرٰهِيْمَ
وَاَصْحٰبِ مَدْيَنَ وَالْمُؤْتَفِكٰتِ ۭ اَتَتْهُمْ رُسُلُهُمْ بِالْبَيِّنٰتِ ۚ فَمَا كَانَ اللّٰهُ لِيَظْلِمَهُمْ وَلٰكِنْ كَانُوْٓا

68. (وعد . . . مقیم) Allah has promised the hypocritical men and women and to the infidels the Hell-fire, wherein they shall abide: sufficient is that unto them. And Allah shall accurse them and theirs shall be a chastisement lasting.

69. (کالذین . . . الخسرون) You are[442] like those before you:[443] mightier than you were they in prowess and more abundant in riches and children. They enjoyed their portion[444] awhile, so enjoy your portion awhile even as those before you enjoyed their portion awhile, and you plunged about[445] even as they plunged about. Their works have come to naught in the world and the Hereafter, and they are the losers!

---

442. (O hypocrites!).
443. (in your infidelity and its consequent meed).
444. (of this world).
445. (in vain discourses and in evil).

أَنفُسَهُمْ يَظْلِمُونَ ۝ وَالْمُؤْمِنُونَ وَالْمُؤْمِنَاتُ بَعْضُهُمْ أَوْلِيَاءُ بَعْضٍ ۚ يَأْمُرُونَ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ
وَيَنْهَوْنَ عَنِ الْمُنكَرِ وَيُقِيمُونَ الصَّلَاةَ وَيُؤْتُونَ الزَّكَاةَ وَيُطِيعُونَ اللَّهَ وَرَسُولَهُ ۚ

70. (ألم . . . يظلمون) Have not come to them the tidings[446] of those before them: the people of Nūḥ and 'Aad and Thamūd and the people of Ibrāhīm and the dwellers of Madayn and of the overturned towns?[447] There came to them their messengers with evidences.[448] So Allah was not one to wrong them, but themselves they were wont to wrong.

71. (والمؤمنون . . . حكيم) And the believing men and women are friends to one another:[449] they bid each other what is reputable and prohibit what is disreputable, and establish prayer and pay the poor-rate and obey Allah and His mesenger.[450] Those! Allah will surely show mercy to them;[451] verily Allah is Mighty,[452] Wise.[453]

72. (وعد . . . العظيم) Allah has promised the believing men and women Gardens under which rivers flow, wherein they shall abide,[454] and goodly dwellings in the Everlasting Gardens[455]——and goodwill from Allah is the greatest of all——that is the achievement supreme.

SECTION 10

73. (يايها . . . المصير) O Prophet! strive hard against the infidels[456] and the hypocrites,[457] and be stern to them.[458] And their resort is Hell, a helpless destination.

446. (of death and destruction).

447. (of Sodom and Gomorah). See P. VIII. nn. 572, 574; P. XII. nn. 251, 255.

448. (which these peoples rejected).

449. i. e., comrades in religion and piety.

450. These are the main characteristics of the Muslims and the Muslim society.

451. (in a very special and marked degree).

452. i. e., Able to reward immensely.

453. i. e., Rewarding everyone as it suits him best.

454. (for ever).

455. جنات عدن are 'Gardens of perpetual abode' (LL). The Quranic جنت عدن is not at all identical with the Biblical 'a garden eastward in Eden' which 'the Lord God planted.' (Ge. 2 : 8).

456. (with arms).

457. (with words and arguments).

458. (as it may suit in each case). Or 'use roughness towards them' (LL). If one has really seen the Light and has come to believe in God, not as a matter of mere formality and convention but in the fulness of his heart, every pore of his being pulsating and quivering with that belief, what can be wrong in such a person if he proclaims that truth not only from housetops and as often as he chooses, but also a little harshly? What is this much dreaded and much-abhorred 'intolerance' except the natural result of fulness of faith ?

قَالُوا كَلِمَةَ الْكُفْرِ وَكَفَرُوا بَعْدَ إِسْلَامِهِمْ وَهَمُّوا بِمَا لَمْ يَنَالُوا ۚ وَمَا نَقَمُوا إِلَّا أَنْ أَغْنَاهُمُ اللَّهُ
وَرَسُولُهُ مِنْ فَضْلِهِ ۚ فَإِنْ يَتُوبُوا يَكُ خَيْرًا لَهُمْ ۖ وَإِنْ يَتَوَلَّوْا يُعَذِّبْهُمُ اللَّهُ عَذَابًا أَلِيمًا فِي الدُّنْيَا
وَالْآخِرَةِ ۚ وَمَا لَهُمْ فِي الْأَرْضِ مِنْ وَلِيٍّ وَلَا نَصِيرٍ ۝ وَمِنْهُمْ مَنْ عَاهَدَ اللَّهَ لَئِنْ آتَانَا مِنْ

مُعْرِضُونَ ۝ فَأَعْقَبَهُمْ نِفَاقًا فِي قُلُوبِهِمْ إِلَىٰ يَوْمِ يَلْقَوْنَهُ بِمَا أَخْلَفُوا اللَّهَ مَا وَعَدُوهُ وَبِمَا كَانُوا
يَكْذِبُونَ ۝ أَلَمْ يَعْلَمُوا

74. (يحلفون . . . نصير) They[459] swear by Allah that they said it not,[460] but assuredly they uttered the word of infidelity[461] and disbelieved after their profession of Islam and they resolved that to which they could not attain.[462] And they avenged not except this that Allah and His messenger had enriched them out of His grace.[463] If then[464] they repent, it will be better for them, and if they turn away,[465] Allah shall chastise them with an afflictive torment in the world and the Hereafter, and on the earth theirs shall be no friend or helper.

75. (ومنهم . . . الصلحين) And of them are some who covenanted with Allah[466] saying: if He gives us of His grace, we shall surely pay the poor-rate[467] and shall become of the righteous.

76. (فلما . . . معرضون) Then when He gave them out of His grace, they became niggardly therewith and turned away[468] as backsliders.[469]

77. (فاعقبهم . . . يكذبون) So He chastised them with setting hypocrisy in their hearts until the Day they will meet Him,[470] because they kept back[471] from Allah what they had promised Him, and because they were wont to lie.

---

459. i. e., the hypocrites.

460. i. e., the words they are charged with.

461. (by plotting against the life of the holy Prophet, which is clearly an act of infidelity). There was a conspiracy among the Medinians hypocrites to kill the holy Prophet, on his return from Tabūk, by pushing him from his camel into a precipice as he rode by night over the highlands of Aqabah. The plot failed, and the plotters were disclosed by the the Divine revelation.

462. i. e., the murder of the holy Prophet.

463. (which fact made their crime all the more dastardly).

464. i. e., even now.

465. (from repentance and reform, and keep to their evil ways).

466. (or His apostle).

467. (cheerfully and plentifully). One of the hypocrites approached the the Prophet to pray for his prosperity. He grew rich in a short time but refused even to pay the poor-due when collecters of Zakat called upon him. (Bdh.)

468. (from their covenant and from fulfilling their obligations).

469. (refusing to contribute to the funds required by Islam).

470. Note that it is not God who took the initiative. The permanent placing of hypocrisy in the heart is the inevitable result, the necessary consequence, of a life of broken pledges and constant deceit.

471. (again and again).

أَنَّ اللَّهَ يَعْلَمُ سِرَّهُمْ وَنَجْوَاهُمْ وَأَنَّ اللَّهَ عَلَّامُ الْغُيُوبِ ۝ الَّذِينَ يَلْمِزُونَ الْمُطَّوِّعِينَ مِنَ

قُلْ نَارُ جَهَنَّمَ أَشَدُّ حَرًّا لَّوْ كَانُوا يَفْقَهُونَ ۝

78. (الم . . . الغيوب) Know they not that Allah knows their secret[472] and their whisper,[473] and that Allah is the Knower of things Unseen?

79. (الذين . . . اليم) These are they who traduce those who give alms cheerfully, from among the believers, and those who do not have anything to give but their hard earnings. At them they scoff,[474] Allah shall scoff back at them[475] and theirs shall be a torment afflictive.[476]

80. (استغفر . . . الفسقين) Ask thou[477] forgiveness for them[478] or ask thou not forgiveness for them;[479] if thou askest forgiveness for them[480] seventy times, Allah will not forgive them.[481] This, because they disbelieved in Allah and His messenger;[482] and Allah does not guide[483] an ungodly people.[484]

SECTION 11

81. (فرح . . . يفقهون) Those who were left[485] rejoiced at their staying behind the messenger of Allah, and they detested[486] to strive hard with riches and their lives in the way of Allah, and they said:[487] do not march forth in the heat.[487-A] Say thou : hotter still is the Hell-fire.[488] Would that they understood!

---

472. i. e., what they hide in their heart.

473. i. e., what they confide to their confederates.

474. The holy Prophet having exhorted his companions to voluntary alms, some of them brought very large sums, and one poor Muslim a modest amount. All this, the hypocrites remarked, was due to sheer ostentation.

475. i. e., will requite them fully for their scoffing.

476. (in the Hereafter).

477. (O Prophet !).

478. i. e., these impertinent hypocrites, after their death.

479. (it is all equal). i. e., their sin is in any case unforgivable.

480. (after their death).

481. The word 'seventy' here, in conformity with the usage of Arabic language, does not signify any precise number but only 'a large number indefinitely.'

The phrase means, 'If thou beg forgiveness for them many times, even then God will not forgive them; not that God would forgive them if forgiveness were begged more than seventy times.' (LL)

482. (deliberately and persistently, and died in that state of defiant hostility to God).

483. (in their life-time).

484. (who themselves do not will to be guided and who make no dispassionate effort to arrive at the truth).

485. (in the Tabūk expedition). Tabūk, 12 days' journey from Madina, stood on the northern frontier of Arabia beyond which Byzantine territory lay. The population, Greeks and others, fled on the approach of the army of Islam and the holy Prophet returned after ten days' stay, and after some border tribes had made their submission to him.

486. (first, because of their lack of belief, and secondly, because of their love of ease).

487. (to one another).

487-A. The summer is the worst and the hardest season in Arabia. Wells, few as they are, are dried up, even the last vestiges of posture are burnt up, and the intensity of the blazing, scorching sun is ferocious. 'Painful indeed was the distress of the march; lassitude and thirst were aggravated by the scorching and pestilential winds of the desert.' (GRE. V. p. 372).

488. (which is the meed of the scoffers and law-breakers).

فَلْيَضْحَكُوا قَلِيلًا وَّلْيَبْكُوا كَثِيرًا جَزَآءًۢ بِمَا كَانُوا يَكْسِبُونَ ۝ فَإِن رَّجَعَكَ اللّٰهُ إِلٰى طَآئِفَةٍ مِّنْهُمْ فَاسْتَأْذَنُوكَ

مَعَ رَسُولِهِ اسْتَأْذَنَكَ أُولُوا الطَّوْلِ مِنْهُمْ وَقَالُوا

82. (فليضحكوا . . . يكسبون) Little then let them laugh,[489] and much shall they weep;[490] this is the meed of what they have been earning.

83. (فإن . . . الخلفين) If, then, Allah brings thee back[491] to a party of them, and[492] they ask leave of thee[493] for marching forth,[494] say thou:[495] never shall you march forth with me, nor ever fight an enemy with me; verily you were well-pleased[496] to tarry at home the first time,[497] so stay now with the stay-at-homes.[498]

84. (ولا . . . فسقون) And pray thou not ever over any of them when he is dead, nor stand thou over his grave.[499] Surely they have denied Allah and His messenger and died while they were rejectors.[500]

85. (ولا . . . كفرون) And let not their riches and their children amaze thee.[501] Allah intends only to chastise them therewith in the world, and that their souls may depart while they are infidels.[502]

489. (and that little laughing would be confined to this world).

490. (in the Hereafter, where the weeping would be unceasing).

491. (safely from this expedition).

492. (on the occasion of any future expedition).

393. (in order to show off their loyalty while still they are harbouring disloyalty in their heart).

394. (with thee).

495. (in accordance with the Divine knowledge).

496. (out of sheer disloyalty to God and His apostle).

497. (and even now you are masquerading).

498. i. e., with those who are obliged to stay behind such as the children and the sick and the infirm.

499. (by way of attending at the funeral, or showing respect to the dead).

500. i.e., rejectors of faith. فاسق in the context, is not one who simply acts against the religion of God, but rejects it.

501. (O reader!). See nn. 388, 389 above.

502. See n. 390 above.

87. (رضوا . . . يفقهون) Well-pleased are they[507] to be with the women sitters-at-home, and their hearts are sealed up,[508] so they are bereft of understanding.[509]

88. (لكن . . . المفلحون) But the messenger and those who believed in his company strive hard with their riches and their lives.[510] These are they for whom are goods,[511] and these are the blissful.[512]

90. (وجاء . . . اليم) And[513] there came[514] the apologists[515] from the dwellers of the desert[516] praying that leave may be granted to them,[517] and those[518] who had lied[519] to Allah and His messenger sat at home.[520] An afflictive torment shall afflict[521] those of them who disbelieve.[522]

503. (with your riches and lives in the cause of God).

504. اولوا الطول literally means 'the possessors of opulence.'

505. (to stay behind).

506. i.e., with those who are obliged and allowed to stay.

507. (in their utter cowardice and extreme impudence).

508. (in consequence of their lifelong habit of insubordination and subterfuge).

509. (to sheer meanness of their position).

510. (in the cause of God). The enthusiasm of the true believers was phenomenal. 'Extraordinary eagerness pervaded the ranks of loyal and earnest Muslims. Tithes and free-will offerings poured in from every quarter, while the leading companions vied with one another in the costliness of their gifts.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 440).

511. (both in this world and the Next).

512. See P. I. n. 43.

513. The reference now is not to the hypocrites of Medina but to those of the adjoining deserts.

514. (to the Prophet).

515. معذر is one who is only pretending, and having no real excuse, is putting forward only a false one.

516. These cover the names of the tribes of Asad and Ghaṭfān, who came to claim exemption on the pretended ground of the necessities of their families.

517. (to stay behind).

518. (of the desert Arabs).

519. (altogether in their profession of faith).

520. (altogether, without offering any excuse whatever). These desert Arabs were of two classes. One of them, the weak-spirited, the timid-hearted came to the Prophet and offered him false excuse for their staying at home. The other class consisted of hypocrites, pure and simple, total rejectors of faith. The cared not even to approach the Prophet with any excuses.

521. (in the Hereafter).

522. (and remain disbelievers to the end).

سَبِيلٍ وَاللَّهُ غَفُورٌ رَحِيمٌ ﴿٩١﴾ وَلَا عَلَى الَّذِينَ إِذَا مَا أَتَوْكَ لِتَحْمِلَهُمْ قُلْتَ لَا أَجِدُ مَا أَحْمِلُكُمْ عَلَيْهِ تَوَلَّوْا وَ

92. (ولا . . . ينفقون) Nor on those who, when they came to thee[527] that thou mightest mount them[528] and thou saidst; I do not find any animal to mount you on, turned back while their eyes overflowed with tears of grief that they could not find aught to spend.[529]

93. (انما . . . يعلمون) The way[530] is only against those who ask leave of thee[531] while they are rich. They are pleased to be with the women sitters-at-home.[532] Allah has sealed up their hearts,[533] so they do not know.[534]

---

523. (on account of extreme poverty).
524. (on war equipment).
525. (and behave sincerely towards them in other matters of faith).
526. i.e., ground to lay blame on.
527. (O Prophet !).
528. (and provide them means of transport.)
529. (in the equipment and provision). There were seven men of the Anṣār (or Helpers) who came to the Prophet and begged that he would give them soled shoes, as they could not march so long a distance at such a hot season barefooted. The Prophet expressed to them his inability, whereupon they went away weeping.

PART XI

94. (يعتذرون . . . تعملون) They[1] will apologise to you[2] when you return to them.[3] Say thou:[4] make no excuse; we shall by no means believe you; Allah has already declared to us[5] some tidings about you,[6] and Allah will behold your work, and so will His messenger;[7] and thereafter you will be brought back to Him who knows the hidden and the manifest,[8] and who will declare to you what you have been working.[9]

95. (سيحلفون . . . يكسبون) When you return to them they will indeed swear to you by Allah[10] that you may turn aside from them.[11] So turn aside from them;[12] verily they are an abomination[13] and their resort is Hell: a recompense for what they have been earning.

96. (يحلفون . . . الفسقين) They will swear to you in order that you may be reconciled with them. Then even if you are reconciled with them,[14] Allah is not to be reconciled with a people who are ungodly.[15]

97. (الأعراب . . . حكيم) The desert-dwellers are the hardest in infidelity and hypocrisy[16] and[17] they are likeliest not to know the ordinances which Allah has imposed upon His messenger. And Allah is Knowing,[18] Wise.[19]

---

1. i.e., the hypocrites.
2. (O Muslims!).
3. (victorious from the expedition).
4. (O Prophet! on behalf of the Muslims).
5. (through His apostle).
6. i.e., has already acquainted us with your true state and the fact that you had no real excuse.
7. (in the future to find out how far sincere and loyal you are even now).
8. (and from whom you will not be able to conceal anything).
9. (and will requite accordingly).

10. (that they had some very good and sound reasons for staying at home).

11. (and let them alone without reproaching them).

12. (as incorrigibles, O Muslims!).

13. (and thus past redemption).

14. (even that would do them no good because—).

15. (and the ungodliness of the hypocrites is evident).

16. The ancient Arabs were divided into two distinct classes—those who dwelt in cities and towns, and those who lived in tents in the desert. These latter employed themselves in pasturage constantly changing their habitations to suit the convenience of water and pasture for their herds of camels, goats and sheep. The hypocrites among them, perhaps, because of the hardness of their hearts and their wild way of life, were of a particularly wicked variety.

17. (because of their remoteness from men of learning and knowledge).

18. So He knows all the facts concerning everyone.

19. So He deals with everyone as it befits him.

98. (ومن . . . عليم) And among the desert-dwellers is one who takes what he spends[20] as a fine,[21] and waits for evil turns of fortune[22] for you. Theirs[23] shall be the evil turn. And Allah is Hearing,[24] Knowing[25]

99. (ومن . . . رحيم) And among the desert-dwellers is one[26] who believes in Allah and the Last Day and takes what he spends as approaches to Allah[27] and the blessings of His messenger. Lo! verily these[28] are an approach for them;[29] and soon will Allah enter them into His mercy.[30] Surely Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.

SECTION 13

100. (والسبقون . . . العظيم) And the emigrants[31] and the helpers,[32] the leaders[33] and the pioneers[34] and those who followed them[35] in well-doing—well-pleased in Allah with them and well-pleased are they with Him, and He has prepared for them Gardens whereunder rivers flow as abiders there for ever. That is the achievement supreme.

---

20. (willy-nilly in alms or in equipment of holy war).

21. i.e., as something extracted by force which they were not morally bound to pay.

22. i.e., reverse in war, hoping thereby that he may have a chance of throwing off the burden.

23. i.e., upon such a person and his associates and accomplices.

24. So He hears the words they utter.

25. So He knows the evil thoughts they conceal in their minds.

26. Now the reference is to the believing among the wandering desert Arabs.

27. i.e., as the means of access to Him.

28. (free gifts and voluntary contributions).

29. i.e., a sure means of access to Him for such believing folk.

30. i.e., special grace and mercy.

31. (who having borne for thirteen years untold persecution at the hands of the Makkan pagans had now forsaken their home for Madina). مهاجر literally is 'a refugee' or 'an emigrant,' and the term gradually became a title of honour. (See P. X. n.n. 143, 146).

32. (who gave a hearty welcome to the homesick emigrants, fraternized with them, and defended the holy Prophet with their money and lives). انصار literally is 'helpers' or 'auxiliaries.' 'The holy fraternity was respected in peace and war, and the two parties vied with each other in a generous emulation of courage and fidelity.' (GRE. V. p. 357) 'The bond was of the closest description, and involved not only a special devotion to each other's interests in the persons thus associated but in case of death the "brother" inherited the property of deceased.' (Muir, op. cit., p. 174)

33. i.e., those who led the way of the converts.

34. (for all future time).

35. (to embrace Islam).

101. (ومن . . . عظيم) And among the desert-dwellers around you some are hypocrites and so are some of the dwellers of Madinah,[36] they have become inured to hypocrisy.[37] Thou dost not know them;[38] We know them. We will chastise them twice,[39] and thereafter they shall be brought back to a torment terrible.[40]

102. (وآخرون . . . رحيم) And others[41] have confessed their sins[42] they have mixed up a righteous deed[43] with another vicious.[44] Perchance Allah is to relent towards them, Verily Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.[45]

103. (خذ . . . عليم) Take thou alms of their riches ; thereby thou wilt cleanse them and purify them,[46] and pray thou for them. Verily thy prayer is a solace for them,[47] and Allah is Hearing,[48] Knowing.[49]

104. (الم . . . الرحيم) Do they not know that it is Allah who accepts the repentance of His bondmen and takes the alms, and that it is Allah who is the Relenting, the Merciful.[50]

105. (وقل . . . تعملون) And say thou: work on![51] Allah beholds your work and so do His messenger and the believers, and soon you will be brought back to the Knower of the hidden and the manifest. He will then declare to you what you have been working.[52]

36. Yathrib of the heathen Arabs, the place of the emigration of the Prophet and the capital of the early Islamic caliphate, about 820 miles S.-E. of Damascus.

37. (and have thus become destitute of all good).

38. (O Prophet!). Adepts as they were in the art of duplicity, even the Prophet with all his keenness of insight could not be aware of their hypocrisy.

39. (in this very world: first by their public exposure, secondly, by the frustration of all their efforts).

40. (in the Hell-fire).

41. Now the reference is to the weak-spirited Muslim stay-at-homes, not to the hypocrites. Certainly they lacked the strength to accompany the Prophet on the expedition, yet they were of the faithful all the same.

42. Those Muslim stay-at-homes in their extreme remorse had of their own accord, bound themselves to the pillars of the mosque and had vowed that they would not free themselves until they were loosed by the Prophet himself.

43. —such as this very confession—

44. —such as their staying back without sufficient reason—

45. The holy Prophet, after this verse had been revealed, loosed, those men and blessed them.

46. (of the ill-effects of their wrongdoing). Those three persons on being loosed presented the holy Prophet with charitable gifts which he refused saying that he had no orders to accept anything from them. Thereupon the present verse was revealed.

47. i.e., will reassure them.

48. So He has heard the words of regret.

49. So He knew the feelings of remorse.

50. (so it is to Him that one must always turn in repentance and to obtain His mercy). The expiation of sins, in Islam, let it be noted once again, entirely rests, next to the repentance of the sinner himself, on the forgiving and merciful nature of God.

51. (as you will).

52. (and will recompense you accordingly).

حكيم ﴿١٠٦﴾ والذين اتخذوا مسجدا ضرارا وكفرا وتفريقا بين المؤمنين وإرصادا لمن حارب

أسس بنيانه على شفا جرف هار فانهار به في نار جهنم ۗ والله لا يهدي القوم الظالمين ﴿١٠٩﴾
لا يزال بنيانهم الذي بنوا ريبة في قلوبهم إلا أن تقطع قلوبهم ۗ والله عليم حكيم ﴿١١٠﴾ إن الله

106. (وآخرون . . . حكيم) And others[53] are awaiting[54] the decree of Allah, whether He is to chastise them or He will relent towards them, and Allah is Knowing,[55] Wise.[56]

107. (والذين . . . لكذبون) And as for those[57] who have set up a mosque[58] for hurting[59] and blaspheming[60] and causing of division among the believers[61] and as a lurking-place for one who has warred against Allah and His messenger before,[62] and[63] surely they will swear: we meant only good, while Allah testifies that they are truly liars.

108. (لاتقم . . . المطهرين) Thou[64] shalt never stand therein.[65] Surely a mosque built from the first day on piety is worthier that thou shouldst stand therein.[66] In it are men who love to purify themselves, and Allah approves the pure.[67]

109. (افمن . . . الظلمين) Is he, then,[68] who has founded his building upon piety towards Allah and His goodwill better or he who has founded his building on the brink of a crumbling bank,[69] so that it crumbles with him into the Hell-fire? And Allah does not guide a wrong-doing people.

110. (لايزال . . . حكيم) And their building which they have built will not cease to be a cause of doubt[70] in their hearts unless it be that their hearts are cut asunder;[71] and Allah is Knowing, Wise.

---

53. Now the reference is to another class of weak-spirited Muslims, who on the return of the Prophet neither invented excuses nor bound themselves to the pillars of the mosque, but came to him straightway and confessed to him their delinquency.

54. (in suspense).

55. So to Him is apparent the sincerity or insincerity of confession and repentance.

56. So He decides what accords best with His universal Plan.

57. Now the reference is to the basest group of the hypocrites, who at the instigation of Abū 'Amir a Christian monk, and an inveterate enemy of Islam, had built a 'mosque' of their own, and had begged the Prophet to consecrate it by praying therein.

58. i.e., a 'mosque' so-called, not a genuine place of worship and prayer.

59. (the cause of Islam).

60. (the name of God by their ill designs against Islam).

61. i.e., by drawing off men from the original mosque at Qubā and affording shelter to the hypocrites.

62. The allusion is to Abū 'Amir, who had fought against the Muslims at Ohud.

63. (in order to justify themselves).

64. (O Prophet !).

65. (for prayer, as it is no mosque at all).

66. The allusion is to the mosque at Qubā, a place about 3 miles to the south-east of Madina, where the holy Prophet had rested for four days before entering the city on his emigration from Makka, and where he had laid the foundation of the mosque.

67. Contrast with this position of importance assigned to cleanliness in Islam, the theory and practice of the Christian 'fathers' and 'saints' in the early Middle Ages. 'Dirt and disease became' in Christendom from C. E. 373 onward, 'the honourable insignia of saintship; loathsome fakirs exhibited their filth and their sores for the veneration of the faithful.' (UHW. IV. p. 2333). See P. II. n. 478, and P. VI. n. 200.

68. i. e., now when the motives of the founders of the two mosques have been made clear.

69. The simile suggests the extreme infirmity of all designs for opposing the religion of God.

70. (and disguised till the time of their death) i. e., they shall never look back upon this handiwork of theirs except with the bitterest memories.

71. i. e., unless their hearts, the seat of judgment and understanding, are entirely metamorphosed.

111. (ان . . . العظيم) Surely Allah has purchased of the faithful their lives and their riches for the price that theirs shall be the Garden: they fight in the way of Allah and slay and are slain[72]——a promise due thereon[73] in the Tawrāt[73-A] and the Injil[73-B] and the Qur'ān. And who is more true to his covenant than Allah?[74] Rejoice therefore[75] in your bargain which you have made,[76] and that is a mighty achievement.

112. (التائبون . . . المؤمنين) They are those who repent,[77] who worship, who praise,[78] who fast constantly,[78-A] who bow down, who prostrate themselves, who bid the reputable and who forbid the disreputable, and who keep the ordinances of Allah; and bear thou glad tidings to the believers.

113. (ماكان . . . الجحيم) It is not for the Prophet and those who believe to ask for the forgiveness of the associators, even though they be relatives after it has become clear to them[79] that they are the fellows of the Flaming Fire.

---

72. So the spirit of self-surrender is the main thing; victory or martyrdom is immaterial.

73. i. e., an entire surrender of ourselves and possession to God. The pronoun in عليه refers to the act of self-surrender, not to God.

73-A. Cf. the OT:—And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.' (Dt. 6 : 5) 'And the Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live. (Dt. 30 : 6).

73-B. Cf. the NT:—'And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive a hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life.' (Mt. 19 : 29).

74. (who has promised Paradise on this bargain).

75. (O believing fighters!).

76. (of having the eternal bliss of Paradise in return for your ephemeral lives and properties in the world).

77. Here follow some further attributes of the true believers.

78. (the Almighty God).

78-A. Or, 'who journey to war against infidels or to seek knowledge.'

79. (by their dying as infidels).

114. (وما . . . حليم) And Ibrāhīm's asking[80] for the forgiveness of his father[81] was only in pursuance of a promise which he had made to him.[82] Then, when it became clear to him[83] that he was an enemy of Allah,[84] he declared himself quit of him.[85] Verily Ibrāhīm[86] was long-suffering, forbearing.[87]

115. (وما . . . عليم) Allah is not one to lead a people astray[88] after He has guided them until He makes clear to them as to what they should guard against.[89] Verily Allah is the Knower of everything.[90]

116. (ان . . . نصير) Assuredly Allah's is the dominion of the heavens and the earth. He gives life and He causes to die; and for you there is, besides Allah, no protector or helper.

117. (لقد . . . رحيم) Assuredly has Allah relented towards the Prophet and the emigrants and the helpers who followed him in the hour of distress[91] after the hearts of a part of them had nearly swerved aside[92] when He relented toward them.[93] He is to them Clement, Merciful.

---

80. (in his father's life-time).

81. (by disposing his heart to the acceptance of Islam).

82. (and of course he could not have with confidence foreseen the final state of his father).

83. (through God's revelation).

84. (and had died as such).

85. (and desisted from praying for him).

86. —an exact prototype of the holy Prophet of Islam—

87. (and this accounts for his promise to his pagan father).

88. (and to consider them guilty).

89. The verse was revealed to assuage the misgivings of those Muslims who had prayed for the infidels before such prayer was forbidden. Here they are told in effect that a sin is a sin only when an act is consciously committed against a known law, and that there is no meaning in reckoning as sin an act that has not yet been forbidden. The Muslims, therefore, were guilty of no sin at all when they prayed for the infidel dead before such prayer was declared sinful.

90. So He well knows the innocence of the Muslims' motive.

91. i. e., in the expedition to Tabūk, in A. H. 9 or C. E. 630, wherein the Muslim soldiery were driven to the extremities. It is not for nothing that the expedition has been known as 'the hour of distress.' In addition to the excessive heat, provisions and water were so scarce that two men had to share a date between them, and many of them were obliged to quench their thirst by drinking the water out of the camels' stomachs. To lull the suspicions of the enemy, the usual custom of the Prophet, says Muir, 'had been to conceal to the very least the object of an intended march . . . . But the journey now in contemplation was so distant, and the heat of the season so excessive, that timely warning was deemed necessary in order hat the necessities of the way might be foreseen and provided for.' All the believers eceived 'an urgent call to join the army. But the Arabs of the desert, ever loose and fickle in their loyalty, and even citizens of Madina, showed little alacrity in obeying the command. Anticipated hardships of the journey, long-continued draught and overpowering heat . . . . made them loath to quit the ease and shelter of their homes.' (Muir, pp. 439-440)

92. (from the path of duty), Or, 'wavered for a short time.' This was due solely to the weakness of the flesh, not to any revolt of the spirit.

93. (and out of this grace gave them strength to conquer even that incipient weakness). So that they all did their duty.

118. (وعلى . . . الرحيم) And He relented toward the three who were left behind[94] until when the earth, vast as it is, became straitened unto them,[95] and their own lives became straitened unto them,[96] and they imagined[97] that there was no refuge from Allah except in Him.[98] Thereafter He relented towards them,[99] so that they might repent.[100] Verily Allah is the Relenting, the Merciful.

SECTION 15

119. (يايها . . . الصدقين) O you who believe! fear Allah[101] and be with the truthful.[102]

120. (ماكان . . . المحسنين) It was not for the people of Madina and those around them of the desert-dwellers that they should forsake the messenger of Allah,[103] nor that they should prefer themselves before him.[104] That[105] is because they are neither smitten with thirst or fatigue or hunger in the way of Allah, nor they tread any step enraging the infidels, nor they attain an attainment from the enemy, but a good deed is thereby written down unto them.[106] Allah surely leaves not to waste the reward of the well-doers.

121. (ولا . . . يعملون) And they[107] do not spend any sum,[108] small or great, or traverse a valley[109] but it is written down unto them, so that Allah may recompense them with the best[110] for what they have been working.[111]

---

94. i. e., whose cases were left over, whether they should be pardoned or not. The allusion is to three Anṣār, named K'ab ibn Mālik, Hilāl ibn Umiyya and Mirāra ibn Rabī', who merely out of lethargy failed to accompany the Prophet on the expedition, and on his return confessed to him their weakness openly. They were asked to wait for God's revelation, and were excluded from the fellowship of the other Muslims.

95. Social life was denied to them altogether, so that no member of the community would greet them or converse with them; and this continued not for a day or two but for 50 days.

96. (owing to the consciousness of their guilt). So full of remorse were they!

97. Or 'they realized.' ظن signifies both doubt and certainty.

98. (and their discipline and grounding in a contrition had become complete).

99. So it is God Himself who creates the new, contrite, penitent heart.

100. Repentance, primarily, is not a function of the will but of the heart. It makes a change in the direction of the will, no doubt, but always after a change in inner disposition.

101. (and observe your duty by Him).

102. i. e., those who are true and sincere in thought, word and deed.

103. (when he was marching forth to brave the dangers).

104. (by failing to share with him the hardships, fatigues and dangers of war).

105. i. e., the imperative necessity to follow the Prophet.

106. i. e., for all such acts the doer, sometimes a mere passive participator in Jihād, has a deed of merit recorded in his favour.

107. i. e., the believers.

108. (in the cause of God).

109. (in marching with the troops).

110. (of rewards).

111. So that not the least effort on their part would go unrewarded, and they would be repaid with the best conceivable rewards.

كُلِّ فِرْقَةٍ مِّنْهُمْ طَآئِفَةٌ لِّيَتَفَقَّهُوا فِي الدِّينِ وَلِيُنذِرُوا قَوْمَهُمْ إِذَا رَجَعُوا إِلَيْهِمْ لَعَلَّهُمْ يَحْذَرُونَ ۝ يَٰٓأَيُّهَا

122. (وما كان . . . يحذرون) And it is not for the faithful to march forth all together.[112] So why should not a band[113] from each party of them march forth,[114] and the rest get instruction in religion,[115] and[116] to warn[117] their people[118] when they return to them? Perchance they may beware.[119]

SECTION 16

123. (يايها . . . المتقين) O you who believe! fight the infidels who are close to you,[120] and surely let them find in you sternness,[121] and know that Allah[122] is with the God-fearing.[123]

124. (واذا . . . يستبشرون) And whenever a Sūrah is sent down, there are some of them[124] who say:[125] which of you has this increased in faith? As for the faithful it has increased them in faith and they rejoice.[126]

125. (واما . . . كفرون) And as for those in whose heart is a disease,[127] unto them it has increased pollution[128] to their pollution,[129] and they die while they are infidels.

126. (اولا . . . يذكرون) Do they not observe that they are tested every year once or twice?[130] Yet they neither repent nor are they admonished.[131]

112. Alarmed at the rebuke administered in the preceding passages to those who had stayed at home every man now wanted to go to the war, to the loss and neglect of religious instruction at home. To prevent this practice it is hereby directed that a convenient number be left behind.

113. i. e., only a limited number of men; a contingent.

114. (to the war, and the rest should remain behind).

115. (at the feet of the Prophet in his lifetime, and by his learned successors afterwards).

116. (becoming well-grounded in religious learning).

117. (and instruct with the sound knowledge thus gained).

118. i. e., those who by reason of their continual employment in the wars are precluded from having sound religious education.

119. (of infringing the commandments of God).

120. i. e., the neighbouring pagan states, for they claim your care in the first place, and their reclamation ought to be endeavoured first. Guarding and strengthening of the frontier are, again, from a military point of view all-important.

121. (as opposed to tenderness of misplaced mildness).

122. i. e., His succour.

123. (so do not be downhearted in the least).

124. i. e., the hypocrites.

125. (to the humble believers mockingly).

126. (as they grow conscious of an increase in their faith).

127. (of concealed infidelity).

128. i. e., fresh abomination caused by the denial of fresh Revelations.

129. i. e., old abomination already existing by their denying the old portions of the Revelation.

130. (by various kinds of trials) i. e., by being called forth to the war, or by being made witness of God's miraculous protection of the faithful, and the like.

131. i. e., they pay no heed to these events, nor they care to reform themselves.

انصَرَفُوا صَرَفَ اللَّهُ قُلُوبَهُم بِأَنَّهُمْ قَوْمٌ لَّا يَفْقَهُونَ ۝ لَقَدْ جَاءَكُمْ رَسُولٌ مِّنْ أَنفُسِكُمْ عَزِيزٌ عَلَيْهِ مَا
عَنِتُّمْ حَرِيصٌ عَلَيْكُم بِالْمُؤْمِنِينَ رَءُوفٌ رَّحِيمٌ ۝ فَإِن تَوَلَّوْا فَقُلْ حَسْبِيَ اللَّهُ لَا إِلَٰهَ إِلَّا هُوَ عَلَيْهِ
تَوَكَّلْتُ وَهُوَ رَبُّ الْعَرْشِ الْعَظِيمِ ۝

127. (وإذا . . . يفقهون) And whenever a Sūrah is sent down they look on at each other, as though saying: does anyone watch you?[132] Then they turn to go.[133] Allah has turned away their hearts,[134] for verily they are a people who do not want to understand.[135]

128. (لقد . . . رحيم) Assuredly there has come to you a messenger from among yourselves;[136] heavy upon him is whatever harasses you, and who is solicitous for you and is unto the faithful tender and merciful.[137]

129. (فإن . . . العظيم) If then, they turn away,[138] say thou: sufficing unto me is Allah,[139] there is no God but He; in Him I put my trust,[140] and He is the Lord of mighty Throne.

132. (of the Muslims, lest he may report to the Prophet).

133. The hypocrites winked at one another to rise and leave the Prophet's presence if they thought they could do so without being observed.

134. (from the truth).

135. (their own good).

136. (O mankind! so that you may profit by him all the more easily).

137. Solicitude and care for humanity at large, and love and affection for the believers; this portrays the Prophet's character in epitome.

138. (from the truth, and persist in their ways).

139. (as friend and protector).

140. (so that no harm can come to me by your rejection).

Sūrah Yūnus

Jonah. X

(Makkan, 11 Sections and 109 Verses)

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION 1

1. (الر . . . الحكيم) Alif-Lām-Rā.[141] These are the verses of the wise Book.[142]

2. (اكان . . . مبين) Is it a matter of wonder to the mankind that We should reveal to a man among them[143] saying: warn thou the mankind, and bear the faithful the glad tidings that theirs shall be a sure footing[144] with their Lord? The infidels say that this[145] is a plain sorcerer.[146]

3. (ان . . . تذكرون) Verily your Lord is Allah who has created the heavens and earth in six days,[147] then established Himself on the Throne[148] disposing the affair,[149] no intercessor is there except after His leave.[150] That is Allah, your Lord; so worship Him.[151] Would you not then[152] be admonished?

---

141. See P, I, n. 28.

142. i. e., Book full of wisdom.

143. i. e., a mere mortal like themselves, who is neither a god-incarnate, nor a super-man.

144. i. e., full reward.

145. (man who claims to be a prophet).

146. The pagans of Arabia, like the pagans elsewhere, had no conception of Prophethood and Revelation at all. They would understand incarnation—God becoming man—or else explain the fact of Messengership by attributing it to magic and sorcery. In idolatrous communities it is the sorcerers or magicians who are credited with supernatural powers, the principal of which is the power of fortelling the future.

147. See P. VIII, nn. 483-484.

148. (Of authority and majesty). The God of Islam being above matter and spirit cannot possibly have an 'abode' or a 'seat' of His own. His 'throne' cannot in any sense of the word be described as His 'dwelling-place'. It is of course, supermundane, above the firmament and all created things; and thus it connotes the ideas of authority, glory, majesty and holiness. See also P. VIII, n. 485.

149. (of all His creation). i. e. governing all things with supreme justice and wisdom. He is not only the Creator but also the constant Ruler and the continuous Disposer of the affairs.

150. (and there is no 'saving' through the merits of a Mediator). This refutes not only the doctrine of the pagans who imagined that their gods were intercessors with Great God for them but also the Christian dogma of Mediation. The Christian position briefly is this. 'God and man have been estranged. The relation which normally subsists between them has been destroyed and the work of the mediation is to restore it . . . . There is one mediator between God and man, Himself man, Jesus Christ, who gave Himself a ransom for all.' (EBr. VIII, p. 856).

151. (and join none other with Him in worship).

152. i. e., even after this clear enunciation of the true doctrine.

وَعْدَ اللّٰهِ حَقًّا ۚ إِنَّهُ يَبْدَؤُا الْخَلْقَ ثُمَّ يُعِيدُهُ لِيَجْزِيَ الَّذِينَ اٰمَنُوا وَعَمِلُوا الصّٰلِحٰتِ بِالْقِسْطِ ۚ وَالَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا لَهُمْ
شَرَابٌ مِّنْ حَمِيمٍ وَّعَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌۢ بِمَا كَانُوا يَكْفُرُونَ ۝ هُوَ الَّذِي جَعَلَ الشَّمْسَ ضِيَآءً وَّالْقَمَرَ نُورًا وَّقَدَّرَهُ
مَنَازِلَ لِتَعْلَمُوا عَدَدَ السِّنِينَ وَالْحِسَابَ ۚ مَا خَلَقَ اللّٰهُ ذٰلِكَ إِلَّا بِالْحَقِّ ۚ يُفَصِّلُ الْاٰيٰتِ لِقَوْمٍ يَّعْلَمُونَ ۝ إِنَّ
فِي اخْتِلَافِ الَّيْلِ وَالنَّهَارِ وَمَا خَلَقَ اللّٰهُ فِي السَّمٰوٰتِ وَالْأَرْضِ لَاٰيٰتٍ لِّقَوْمٍ يَّتَّقُونَ ۝ إِنَّ الَّذِينَ لَا
يَرْجُونَ لِقَآءَنَا وَرَضُوا بِالْحَيٰوةِ الدُّنْيَا وَاطْمَأَنُّوا بِهَا وَالَّذِينَ هُمْ عَنْ اٰيٰتِنَا غٰفِلُونَ ۝ أُولٰٓئِكَ مَأْوٰىهُمُ النَّارُ
بِمَا كَانُوا يَكْسِبُونَ ۝ إِنَّ الَّذِينَ اٰمَنُوا وَعَمِلُوا الصّٰلِحٰتِ يَهْدِيهِمْ رَبُّهُمْ

4. (إليه . . . يكفرون) To Him[153] is the return of you all – the promise of Allah is true. He begins the creation,[154] then He shall repeat it,[155] that He may requite with equity those who believed and did righteous deeds. And those who disbelieved——for those shall be draught of boiling water and torment afflictive, for they were wont to disbelieve.

5. (هو . . . يعلمون) He it is who has made the sun a glow and the moon a light,[156] and has determined mansions for her that you may know[157] the number of the years and the reckoning.[158] Allah has not created all this except with a purpose.[159] He expounds these signs to those who know.[160]

6. (ان . . . يتقون) Verily in the alteration of night and day and in what Allah has created in the heavens and the earth are surely signs[161] to a people who fear God.

7. (ان . . . غفلون) Verily those who hope not for meeting with Us,[162] and are well-pleased with the life of the world,[163] and are satisfied with it,[164] and those who are heedless of Our signs[165]——

8. (اولئك . . . يكسبون) these! their abode shall be the Fire for what they have been earning.

153. (and to none other).

154. (out of nothing).

155. (in the Hereafter) i. e., He shall once again bring into being and reproduce all His creation.

156. 'The moon has no light of its own. It only shines by the reflected light of the sun. Hence its appearance varies according to the amount of illuminated surface visible to us, which depends on its position relative to the sun.' The Holy Quran indicates this distinction by the use of two different expressions. ضیاء signifies that light which exists by itself, while نور signifies that which subsists by some other things.

157. (thereby) i. e., by means of the moon which is the real measurer of time.

158. The sun, the moon and all other heavenly bodies are thus merely created beings, brought into existence to serve the purposes of man. It is monstrous that man should bow to them and treat them as so many gods or godlings.

159. And that purpose, above all, is to demonstrate the truth of the Divine unity.

160. (who alone will profit by them).

161. (of His uniqueness and might and glory). Notice the superstitious cults that have largely been prevalent in antiquity but are also existing at the present day. 'Light and darkness, day and night, sun, moon, and stars are often personified or worshipped as gods; or the sun, the moon, and stars, as sources of light are the dwellings of gods.' (ERE. VIII. p. 49). See also P. II, n. 113; VII, nn. 227, 228.

162. (and have in them no sense of religion alive).

163. (and whose whole outlook of life is materialistic and 'naturalistic'). The modern European nations, engrossed as they are in their materialistic pursuits every hour of their life, have neither time nor inclination to think in terms of religion, piety and spirituality.

164. (to the exclusion of God and the Hereafter). 'The average European—he may be a Democrat, or a Fascist, or a Capitalist, or a Bolshevik, a manual worker, or an intellectual—knows only one positive "religion", and that is the worship of material progress, the belief that there is no other goal in life than to make that very life continually easier, or, as the current expression goes, "independent of Nature". The temples of this "religion" are the gigantic factories, cinemas, chemical laboratories, dancing halls, hydro-electric works; and its priests are bankers, engineers, film-stars, captains of industry, record-airmen.' (Mohd. Asad, Islam at the Crossroads, pp. 45-46).

165. i. e., those who have excluded all evidence of God's power and majesty and man's accountability to Him from practical considerations, and who are not stirred even by His special signs, such are big catastrophes.

بِإِيمَانِهِمْ تَجْرِي مِن تَحْتِهِمُ الْأَنْهَارُ فِي جَنَّاتِ النَّعِيمِ ﴿٩﴾ دَعْوَاهُمْ فِيهَا سُبْحَانَكَ اللَّهُمَّ وَتَحِيَّتُهُمْ فِيهَا
سَلَامٌ ۚ وَآخِرُ دَعْوَاهُمْ أَنِ الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ رَبِّ الْعَالَمِينَ ﴿١٠﴾ وَلَوْ يُعَجِّلُ اللَّهُ لِلنَّاسِ الشَّرَّ اسْتِعْجَالَهُم بِالْخَيْرِ لَقُضِيَ ع
إِلَيْهِمْ أَجَلُهُمْ ۖ فَنَذَرُ الَّذِينَ لَا يَرْجُونَ لِقَاءَنَا فِي طُغْيَانِهِمْ يَعْمَهُونَ ﴿١١﴾ وَإِذَا مَسَّ الْإِنسَانَ الضُّرُّ دَعَانَا لِجَنبِهِ

يَعْمَلُونَ ﴿١٢﴾ وَلَقَدْ أَهْلَكْنَا الْقُرُونَ مِن قَبْلِكُمْ لَمَّا ظَلَمُوا ۙ وَجَاءَتْهُمْ رُسُلُهُم بِالْبَيِّنَاتِ وَمَا كَانُوا لِيُؤْمِنُوا ۚ
كَذَٰلِكَ نَجْزِي الْقَوْمَ الْمُجْرِمِينَ ﴿١٣﴾ ثُمَّ جَعَلْنَاكُمْ

9. (ان . . . النعيم) Verily those who believe and do righteous deeds, their Lord will guide them[166] through their faith; beneath them will flow rivers in the Gardens of Delight.

10. (دعوهم . . . العلمين) Their call[167] therein will be: hallowed be Thou! O Allah! and their greeting[168] therein: peace! And the end of their call[169] will be: all praise to Allah, the Lord of the worlds.[170]

SECTION 2

11. (ولو . . . يعمهون) And were Allah to hasten ill to the mankind as their desire of hastening the good,[171] their fate would surely have been sealed to them.[172] So[173] We let alone those who hope not for meeting with Us, wandering[174] in their exorbitance perplexed.[175]

12. (و اذا . . . يعملون) And when harm touches man,[176] he calls Us on his side, or sitting or standing;[177] when We have removed his harm from him, he passes on as though he had never called Us because of the harm that touched him.[178] In this wise is made fair-seeming to the extravagant what they have been working.

13. (ولقد . . . المجرمين) And assuredly We have destroyed generations before you when they did wrong,[179] while their messengers came to them with the evidences,[180] and they[181] were not such as to believe. In this wise We requite the sinning people.

---

166. (to their goal) i. e., Paradise and God's good-will.

167. (of joy as they enter).

168. (to one another and to the angels).

169. (as they find themselves settled therein).

170. Is that the much derided sensuous sex-ridden Muslim Paradise so glibly pictured by the Christian writers?

171. i. e., if God had been so swift in chastising as He is in rewarding according to the human wish.

172. (and the respite granted to them would have already expired).
173. —but as it does not accord with Our Plan—
174. (unhampered and unchecked).
175. See P. I. n. 66.
176. (of the disbelieving disposition).
177. i. e., in all postures and at all times.
178. (and reverts to his former course of life).
179. (and adopted the course of infidelity and unbelief).
180. (of His sovereignty and of their mission).
181. —the contumacious infidels—

خَلٰٓئِفَ فِى الْاَرْضِ مِنْۢ بَعْدِهِمْ لِنَنْظُرَ كَيْفَ تَعْمَلُوْنَ ﴿١٤﴾ وَاِذَا تُتْلٰى عَلَيْهِمْ اٰيَاتُنَا بَيِّنٰتٍ ۙ قَالَ الَّذِيْنَ لَا يَرْجُوْنَ

عِنْدَ اللّٰهِ ۭ قُلْ اَتُنَبِّـُٔوْنَ اللّٰهَ بِمَا

14. (ثم . . . تعملون) Then We appointed you in the land as successors after them, that We might see how you would work.

15. (واذا . . . عظيم) And whenever Our clear revelations are rehearsed to them, those who hope not for the meeting with Us, say:[182] bring us a Qur'ān other than this[183] or change it.[184] Say thou:[185] it does not lie with me[186] to change it of my own accord;[187] I only follow what is Revealed to me;[188] verily I fear, if I disobey my Lord,[189] torment of an aweful Day.

16. (قل . . . تعقلون) Say thou: had Allah so willed, I would not have rehearsed it to you, nor would He have acquainted you therewith. Of a surety I have tarried with you[190] a life-time[191] before it.[192] Would you not then reflect?[193]

17. (فمن . . . المجرمون) Who then is a greater wrong-doer than he who forges a lie against Allah[194] or belies His revelations? Surely the culprits shall not prosper.

---

182. (to the Prophet).

183. (which may not be so distasteful to us) i. e., which may not be so vehement and uncompromising in its denunciation of idolatry.

184. i. e., make some alteration therein, by way of compromise, to suit our taste.

185. (O Prophet!).

186. —a mere messenger—

187. —much less to abrogate it altogether—

188. i. e., I am but an instrument; a mere mouthpiece. Note that in Islam a prophet, whether he wills it or not, is impelled to announce whatever descends on Him from the Above—nothing more, nothing less, nothing else. Far from constraining the revelation to come to him, he cannot make the slightest alteration in it at his choice.

189. —to assume an impossibility—

190. (O Makkans!).

191. i. e., for full forty years before I laid claim to prophethood, and you have had fullest opportunities of testing my veracity and integrity. '. . . . an honest, upright man, irreproachable in his domestic relations and universally esteemed by his fellow-citizens' (Palmer, 'The Quran', Intro. p. XIX). '. . . . known as a simple upright man, whose life was severely pure and refined, and whose desert sense of honour and faith-keeping had won him the high title of El-Emeen, "the Trusty"' (LSK, Intro. p. XXXIX). 'The fair character and honourable bearing of the unobtrusive youth won the approbation of the fellow-citizens; and he received the title, by common consent, of Al-Amin, "the Faithful."' (Muir, op. cit., p. 20).

192. i. e., before it came to me. The Prophet's veracity was almost a by-word in Makka. The following is a portion of a dialogue between the Christian Emperor Heraclius and Abū Sufyān, the Prophet's arch-enemy at the time:

Emperor Heraclius, 'Did ye suspect him of lying before he said what he said?'

Abū Sufyan, 'No.'

Emperor Heraclius, 'And doth he break his pledges?'

Abū Sufyan, 'No.'

193. i. e., have I not all this time been renowned for my veracity? Have you all these years ever suspected me of lying? How is it then that the moment I begin to preach the Unity of God and to denounce your idolatry, you begin to call me a liar?

194. (as you suppose in my case).

لَا يَعْلَمُ فِي السَّمٰوٰتِ وَلَا فِي الْاَرْضِ سُبْحٰنَهٗ وَتَعٰلٰى عَمَّا يُشْرِكُوْنَ ۝ وَمَا كَانَ النَّاسُ اِلَّآ اُمَّةً وَّاحِدَةً

18. (ويعبدون . . . يشركون) And they worship, beside Allah, what neither harms them nor profits them, and they say:[195] these are our intercessors with Allah.[196] Say thou: do you presume to apprise Allah[197] of what He knows not in the heavens nor the earth?[198] Hallowed be He and Exalted far above what you associate![199]

19. (وما كان . . . يختلفون) And[200] mankind were but a single community;[201] then they differed.[202] And had not a word from thy Lord gone forth,[203] it would have been decreed[204] between them regarding what they differed.[205]

20. (ويقولون . . . المنتظرين) And they[206] say:[207] how is it that not a sign[208] is sent down on him from his Lord? Say thou: the Hidden belongs to Allah alone; so wait, verily I am with you among those who wait.[209]

SECTION 3

21. (وإذا . . . تمكرون) And when We let mankind taste of Our mercy after an adversity has touched them, forthwith they have a scheme in regard to Our signs.[210] Say thou: Allah is Swifter in scheming.[211] Verily Our messengers[212] write down what you plot.

---

195. (justifying the idolatry).

196. i. e. mediating with God on our behalf, and are not gods themselves. By a reasoning closely similar, have the Christians persuaded themselves to the adoration not only of Christ but of a number of saints and martyrs. 'We ask God to grant blessings, we ask the saints to be our advocates. To God we say: Have mercy on us; to the saints we commonly say: Pray for us' (ERE. XI, p. 51).

The Holy Qur'ān frankly repudiates and negatives the current opinion that monotheism has been evolved out of polytheism. It openly proclaims that monotheism was the original, universal religion of mankind gradually debassed into polytheism. See P. II, n. 384.

208. (of our choice).

209. The passage does not imply that the Prophet wrought no miracle, but it only amounts to saying: the matter rests entirely with God; it lies with Him alone whether He allows a particular miracle or not; and performance of this or that miracle has clearly nothing to do with the true functions of a messenger of God.

210. The verse is of course of a general application, but it also has an allusion to a particular event. The unruly Makkans were afflicted with a severe famine, and were very near perishing. But on the holy Prophet's prayer and petitioning, no sooner were they relieved by God than they again began to charge him with imposture. Cf. Muir, op. cit., p. 125.

(فلما . . . تعملون) Yet when He delivers them, they forthwith rebel in the earth without justice.[219] O men! your rebellion is only against yourselves[220]— a brief enjoyment of the life of the world; thereafter unto Us is your return; then We will declare to you what you have been working.[221]

24. (إنما . . . يتفكرون) The likeness of the life of the world is only as the rain which We send down from the sky, with which mingles the growth of the earth, of which men and cattle eat, until, when the earth puts on her ornament[222] and is adorned[223] and its inhabitants imagine that they are potent over it,[224] there comes to it Our decree[225] by night or by day, then We make it stubble as though it had not flourished yesterday.[226] This is how We detail the signs to a people who ponder.

These teachings account for much of the success of Islam as a missionary religion. Its pure monotheism stands out in strong contrast with the polytheism of the idolaters.' "The beauty of man," declares an Arabic adage, "lies in the eloquence of his tongue" . . . . By virtue of its peculiar structure Arabic lent itself admirably to a terse, trenchant, epigrammatic manner of speech. Islam made full use of this feature of the language and of this psychological peculiarity of its people. Hence the "miraculous character" (ijāz) of the style and composition of the Koran, adduced by Moselms as the strongest argument in favour of the genuineness of their faith.' 54. (ولو . . . يظلمون) And if every one who has wronged had all that is in the earth, surely he would ransom himself therewith.[296] And they shall conceal the remorse[297] when they are to face the torment, and the matter will be decreed between them in equity, and they shall not be wronged.

55. (الا . . . يعلمون) Lo! verily Allah's is whatsoever is in the heavens and the earth.[298] Lo! verily Allah's promise is true; but most of the people do not know.

56. (هو . . . ترجعون) He gives life and causes to die,[299] and to Him you shall be returned.

57. (يايها . . . للمؤمنين) O mankind! there has come to you an exhortation from your Lord and a healing for what is in your breasts,[300] and a guidance and a mercy for the believers.

58. (قل . . . يجمعون) Say thou: in the grace of Allah and in His mercy[301]——let them[302] therefore rejoice; far better it is than what they amass.[303]

59. (قل . . . تفترون) Say thou: bethink of what Allah has sent down to you of provision, and you[304] have then made thereof[305] allowable and forbidden? Say thou: is it that Allah has given you leave, or do you fabricate a lie against Allah?[306]

---

296. (on the Judgment Day). So horrible would be the terrors of that Day!

297. (to escape further exposure and infamy). This self-control would only last for some time, and then they would openly declare their remorse and repentance. Other meanings assigned to the phrase are:—

(1) They will conceal it from their chiefs.

(2) They, the chiefs of the polytheists, will conceal repentance from the lower class of their people, whom they shall have caused to err. (Th).

298. So He can do whatever He will to His creation.

299. (so the event of Resurrection can present Him no difficulty at all).

300. (of doubts and ills).

301. (has come this religion of Islam, exquisitely ideal on the one hand and wonderfully practical on the other).

302. i.e., the mankind.

303. (of wordly riches).

304. (O superstitious and idolatrous Makkans !)

305. (Of your own accord).

306. All this alludes to the superstitious practices of the Makkan idolaters forbidding lawful foods and allowing those forbidden.

عَلَى اللَّهِ الْكَذِبَ يَوْمَ الْقِيَامَةِ ۗ إِنَّ اللَّهَ لَذُو فَضْلٍ عَلَى النَّاسِ وَلَٰكِنَّ أَكْثَرَهُمْ لَا يَشْكُرُونَ ﴿٦٠﴾ وَمَا تَكُونُ فِي شَأْنٍ

60. (وما ظن . . . يشكرون) And what do imagine those who fabricate a lie against Allah on the Day of Resurrection?[307] Verily Allah is the Owner of grace unto mankind;[308] but most of them do not return thanks.

SECTION 7

61. (وما تكون . . . مبين) Thou[309] art not engaged in any business nor dost thou recite any part of the Qur'ān, nor do you[310] work, but We are witnesses over you when you are engaged therein.[311] And there escapes not thy Lord the weight of an ant[312] in the earth or the heavens, nor less than that nor greater, but it is in a Book luminous.[313]

62. (الا . . . يحزنون) Lo! verily the friends of Allah! no fear shall come upon them nor shall they grieve——

63. (الذين . . . يتقون) they who believed and have been fearing Allah.[314]

64. (لهم . . . العظيم) For them is glad tidings in the life of the world and in the Hereafter. There is no changing in the words of Allah.[315] That ! is a mighty achievement.

307. i.e., whether that Day would not come at all, or whether they would be able to elude the horrors of that Day ?

308. (so He does not inflict immediate punishment but allows long respite to every offender).

309. (O Prophet !).

310. (O mankind !).

311. i.e., the Omnipresent's constant watchful care embraces all His creatures.

312. The word ذرة in Arabic is used to denote a thing exceedingly small. The passage means that not the tiniest of objects is hidden from Him.

313. i.e., in the Preserved Tablets whereon all God's decrees are recorded and registered. He is thus not only Omnipresent but also Omniscient. This repudiates the foolish doctrine of certain philosophers that God has Knowledge of universals only, and not of particulars.

314. i.e., who lead lives of piety. The conjoining of a life of piety with true belief is no mere supererogation and is not without deep significance. Purely intellectual conviction of the existence of God means very little until it has become associated with feelings and with experience. The mere proof of the existence of a supreme being would lead us little further towards a religion than the proof of the existence of infinite numbers. A man with a religion purely of the rational type would be in a worse position than the devils.' (Thouless, Psychology of Religion, p. 90).

315. (and all His promises are absolutely true).

65. (ولا . . . العليم) And let not their saying[316] grieve thee.[317] Verily honour is wholly Allah's.[318] He is the Hearer,[319] the Knower.[320]

66. (الا . . . يخرصون) Lo! indeed Allah's is whosoever is in the heavens and whosoever is on the earth.[321] What is it that they follow who call associate-gods besides Allah?[322] They follow but a guess and they are but conjecturing.

67. (هو الذي . . . يسمعون) He it is who has appointed for you the night that you may repose therein and the day enlightening.[323] Surely in that are signs[324] for a people who listen.[325]

68. (قالوا . . . تعلمون) They[326] say: God has taken a son.[327] Hallowed be He——He, the Self-sufficient! His is whatever is in heavens and whatever is in the earth. No warranty is there with you[328] for this.[329] Do you ascribe falsely[330] to Allah what you know not?[331]

69. (قل . . . يفلحون) Say thou: verily those who forge a lie against Allah shall not prosper——

316. (however impious and blasphemous it may be).

317. (after having received this Divine assurance).

318. He is sufficient to protect the dignity of His apostle and His religion.

319. (of their impious words).

320. (of their impious designs).

321. (saints, angels, prophets all bowing to Him in humility.)

322. i.e., do these infidels care for logic and reason ? do they follow their inward light ? have they any Scriptural authority to support them ?

323. مبصرا is that which makes things visible. For 'day' and 'night' see P. XXI, nn. 131, 132; P. XXX. nn. 9, 11.

324. (Of His greatness and majesty).

325. (to the arguments of the Qur'ān with an open mind).

326. i.e., the pagans.

327. The reference here is not to Christ, but to the various 'Son-gods' of the polytheistic nations. The doctrine of the sonship of God is not peculiarly Christian. Pagan mythologies and polytheistic theologies are teeming with such notions, and the Arab mythology was no exception.

328. (O associators !)

329. i.e., for this attributing of sons to Him.

330. قال عليه is 'He lied, or said what was false, against him.' (LL)

331. (by any valid and sound process of learning).

70. (متاع . . . يكفرون) A brief enjoyment in the world;[332] then to Us is their return. Then We will make them taste a severe torment in that they have been disbelieving.

SECTION 8

71. (واتل . . . تنظرون) Recite thou[333] to them the story of Nūḥ when he said to his people: O my people! if my standing forth[334] and my admonishing with the commands of Allah offends you then,[335] on Allah[336] I rely.[337] So devise your affair,[338] you and your associate-gods and let not your affair be dubious for you; have it decreed against me, and give me no respite.[339]

72. (فان . . . المسلمين) So then if you turn away, I have asked of you no wage;[340] my reward[341] is only with Allah, and I am commanded to be of those who submit.[342]

73. (فكذبوه . . . المنذرين) Then they denied him; then We delivered him and those with him in the ark, and We made them successors;[343] while We drowned them who belied Our signs.[344] Behold then how was the end of those who had been warned.[345]

332. (which is itself of a very brief duration).

333. (O Prophet!).

334. (among you) i.e., my taking abode with you.

335. —know that—

336. (who is well Able to protect me against all your machinations).

337. (and I am neither afraid nor dejected).

338. (concerning me) i.e., resolve upon your plot concerning me and prepare for it. جمع امره is 'He determind, resolved, or decided, upon his affair' (LL).

339. i.e., your device need not remain in the dark; do not keep it secret; do it openly with no fear of me.

340. (as I ask no favour of you). These are the outpourings not of a braggart, but of a devout heart entirely trustful of God.

341. i.e., my preaching to you is wholly disinterested ; I am not actuated by any money-grabbing motives.

342. (to Him in Islam).

343. (of those drowned).

344. Note that the Holy Qur'ān makes no claim of a 'universal' deluge. It only says that those who rejected Noah's mission were drowned. It is not the Qur'ān but the Bible that asserts the universal character of the deluge. 'And the Lord said : I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth.' (Ge. 6 : 7).

345. (of the Divine sentence and yet they had remained heedless). It is the occurrence of the universal deluge, covering the whole surface of the earth and wipping off all men and all terrestrial animals, excepting those providentially saved in the ark, that has been negatived by the scientists and denied by the explorers, and not the fact of a local inundation, as described by the Qur'ān, howsoever devastating in its effects. And even the Christian scholars are led to remark :—'The belief in a universal deluge has long been abandoned by well-informed writers . . . . Such a deluge as that described in the Bible is impossible, at least without a series of improbable miracles.' (ERE. IV. p. 545-6). It is on occasions like this that the accuracy of the Quranic versions is found so strongly vindicated. That 'those who were warned' by Noah, that is, his countrymen inhabiting the Tigris and Euphrates valley were overtaken by an extremely distressful flood is confirmed rather than contradicted by modern exploration. 'Inundations are of normal occurrence' says Sir Leonard Woolley, Director of the Joint British and American expedition to Mesopotamia, 'in Lower Mesopotamia, but no ordinary rising of the rivers would leave behind it anything approaching the bulk of this clay bank : 8 feet of sediment imply a very great depth of water, and the flood which deposited it must have been of a magnitude unparalleled in local history.' (Woolley, Ur, of the Chaldees p. 22). 'This deluge was not universal, but a local disaster confined to the lower valley of the Tigris and Euphrates, affecting an area perhaps 400 miles long and 100 miles across ; but for the occupants of the valley that was the whole world.' (p. 31).

74. (ثم . . . المعتدين) Then We sent other messengers after him to their people, and they brought the evidences, but they were not such as to believe what they had once rejected.[346] Thus We seal the hearts of the transgressors.[347]

75. (ثم . . . مجرمين) After them We sent Mūsā and Hārūn to Fir'awn and his chiefs with Our signs, but they grew stiff-necked and they were a culprit people.[348]

76. (فلما . . . مبين) Then when there came to them the truth from Us, they said: this is clear magic.[349]

77. (قال . . . الساحرون) Mūsā said: do you say this of the truth after it has come to you? Is this magic? And the magicians do not fare well.[350]

78. (قالوا . . . بمؤمنين) They said: hast thou come to turn us aside from that faith we found our fathers thereon,[351] and that the greatness in the land shall be for you twain?[352] For the sake of you twain we are not going to be believers.

79. (وقال . . . عليم) And Fir'awn said:[353] bring to me every magician knowing.[354]

80. (فلما . . . ملقون) Then when the magicians were come, Mūsā said to them: cast down[355] what you are going to cast down.

81. (فلما . . . المفسدين) Then when they had cast down,[356] Mūsā said: what you have brought is magic;[357] verily Allah will make it soon vain; Allah does not set right the work of the corrupters.[358]

---

346. 'Once deny, always deny' has always been the rule of life among perverse and contumacious rejectors.

347. (in consequence of their wilful rejection of God's truth).

348. Note that the Bible makes no mention of Moses and Aaron having been sent to the Egyptians as apostles of God for their conversion to the true faith. It is the Holy Qur'ān that makes good this serious omission. In fact it is inconceivable that Moses being an apostle of God should leave the gross irreligion of Egypt untouched.

349. (the only potent agency which they could understand). 'From the Egyptian point of view we may say that there was no such thing as 'religion'; there was only ḥike, the nearest English equivalent of which is magical power' (ERE. VIII. p. 263).

350. (when they rise up to oppose God's messengers).

351. And what was this faith of ancient Egyptians? Unmitigated superstition and unabashed polytheism. 'The Egyptians themselves speak not unfrequently of the thousand gods......Nor was this the whole, or the worst. The Egyptian was taught to pay a religious regard to animals..... Cows, cats, dogs, ibises, hawks, and cynocephalous apes were sacred throughout the whole of Egypt.' (Rawlinson, Ancient Egypt, pp. 30-31). See also P. XIX. nn. 181, 182, P. XX. n. 207.

352. Worldly-minded and mean-spirited as the Egyptians were, they judged of the motives of the prophets of God with their own measures.

353. (to his officials).

354. (to combat and counteract the malignant powers presumed by Moses and Aaron). 'The Egyptians believed, or feigned to believe, that their wizards could do all kinds of wonders.' (ERE. VIII. p. 263).

359. (conveyed through His apostles).

360. (of promise).

361. i.e., after the combat with the sorcerers was over, and Moses had emerged gloriously triumphant.

362. The reference seems to be to the sorcerers who were the few Egyptians to become converts to the true faith of Moses. The pronoun 'his' refers to Pharaoh.

363. (so that the fears of his people were not unfounded). "Lofty" that is, haughty, overbearing, vainglorious.

364. i.e., of them who commit excesses. See P. XVI. n. 271.

365. i.e., those who have surrendered themselves entirely to God.

366. i.e., the Israelites.

367. (after the Israelities had prayed for their delivery).

368. i.e., remain as hitherto in Egypt till Our command to leave that country arrives. Miṣr is the Arabic form of Mizraim, the old name for the country of Egypt. To the Semites the country was known as Mizraim. The older cuneiform texts, vocalize Musr, the later Miṣr ; the Amarna letters have generally Misri pl. (DB. I. p. 652). Misri is the earliest Babylonian form. (JE. V. p. 58).

369. (and duly perform your prayers in your houses privately). This suggests that Pharaoh had prohibited public prayers to the Israelites. قبلة in the context is a place, not the direction, of worship. 'At least one prayer a day was obligatory from the time of Moses to Ezra.' (JE. X. p. 166).

88. (وقال . . . الاليم) And Mūsā said: our Lord! verily Thou hast given to Fir'awn and his chiefs adornment[370] and riches in the life of world. Our Lord, that they may lead astray men from Thy way.[371] Our Lord! wipe out their riches,[372] and harden their hearts, so that they may not believe until they face the torment afflictive.[373]

89. (قال . . . يعلمون) Allah said: surely the petition of you twain is granted; so keep straight on,[374] and do not follow the path of those who are bereft of knowledge.[375]

90. (وجوزنا . . . المسلمين) And we led the Children of Isrā'īl across the sea;[376] then Fir'awn and their hosts pursued them in rebellion and enmity,[377] until, when the drowning overtook him,[378] he said:[379] I believe that He! there is no god but He, in whom the Children of Isrā'īl[380] believe, and I am of the Muslims.[381]

91. (آلئن . . . المفسدين) Now indeed![382] while thou hast rebelled afore, and wast of the corrupters![383]

370. i.e., pomp and power.

371. (so, knowing as we do Thy Plan and purpose, we cannot possibly envy that glitter and wealth).

372. (so that they may not further spread their mischief).

373. (when no repentance could be of any avail). The prayer was for swiftest possible (consistent with the Divine Plan) destruction of the evil-doers, so that their contamination may not infect a larger circle. The doom of Pharaoh, quite apart from the imprecation of Moses, was inevitable, in view of his persistent pitting of his own will against God's. The Prophet having exhausted all possibilities of expostulation, argumentation, persuasion and warning,—all in vain—nothing was left but the inevitable doom.

374. (in your mission).

375. (Us and Our ways).

376. 'The wilderness shut them in one side, the Red Sea on the other;

the Jabal Attākah blocked up further passage to the south . . . . . It was indeed a frightful situation, humanly speaking. . . . . But Moses had no such fear. In bold strong words he addressed the multitude and quietened it. A sort of broad causeway, guarded by water upon either side, was formed, and upon this the column advanced . . . The distance to be traversed may not have been more than a mile, and the entire column may easily have accomplished the passage in five or six hours.' (Rawlinson, Moses : His Life and Times, pp. 124, 126). See also P. I. n. 210.

377. 'Rapidly calling together such troops as were tolerably near at hand, he collected a considerable force of infantry and chariots—of the latter more than six hundred—and following upon the steps of the Hebrews, he caught them on the western shore of the Red Sea . . . It was probably some part of the region that is now dry land, between Suez and the southern extremity of the Bitter Lakes.' (Rawilson, Ancient Egypt, p. 264). Pharaoh had gathered together six hundred of his best chariots, a force which constituted the very elite of his army: with these were united a large body of the ordinary class of chariots, and a considerable force of foot.' (Rawlinson, Moses : His Life and Times, p. 124). 'Then the Egyptians began to see what happened . . . The sight woke in them a burning anger, and an intense longing for revenge . . . Without waiting for orders, as far as it appears, they rushed to satiate their lust of carnage and of spoil . . . The soft sand and ooze of the sea-bed was unsuited for the passage of chariots : the wheels sank into it up to their axles, and were in consequence clogged, and made to go heavily . . . The result was that the Egyptian host never came in contact with the Israelites. . . Water threatened on both sides ; the hungry waves rushed in upon either flank, surged, boiled, united their seething waters, and soon went over the heads of the host . . . Mighty, marvellous, and most complete was the deliverance. The army that had pushed Israel was utterly destroyed (Rawlinson, Moses : His Life and Times, p. 126, 127, 128). 'And thus did all these men perish, so that there was not one man left to be a messenger of this calamity to the rest of the Egyptians'. ("Ant." II. 16 : 3).

378. (and he saw the angel of death face to face). 'Before the troops could extricate themselves, the waters returned on either hand . . The channel, which had lately been dry land, became once more sea, and the entire force that had entered it in pursuit of the Israelites, perished.' (Rawlinson, Ancient Egypt, pp. 264-65).

379. (horror-stricken, and perceiving the beginning of his end).

380. —the very same people whom he had so long oppressed and held in utter contempt—.

381. i.e., those who surrender themselves to God.

382. (when thou art in the veritable grip of death, and thy repentance forced by the sight of the angels of horror, is more of an automatic than voluntary nature.

383. (so now thy profession of faith will remain absolutely unavailing).

يَغْفُلُونَ ﴿٩٢﴾ وَلَقَدْ بَوَّأْنَا بَنِي إِسْرَائِيلَ مُبَوَّأَ صِدْقٍ وَرَزَقْنَاهُم مِّنَ الطَّيِّبَاتِ فَمَا اخْتَلَفُوا حَتَّىٰ جَاءَ

SECTION 10

93. (ولقد . . . يختلفون) And assuredly We settled the Children of Isrā'īl into a secure settlement,[387] and We provided them with good things;[388] nor they differed[389] until there had come to them knowledge.[390] Verily thy Lord shall judge between them on the Day of Resurrection as to what they had been differing in.

94. (فان . . . الممترين) If thou[391] be in doubt concerning what We have sent down to thee,[392] ask then those who have read the Book[393] before thee.[394] Assuredly the truth[395] has come to thee from thy Lord, so be not then of the doubters.

95. (ولا . . . الخسرين) And be not[396] of those who belie Allah's signs, lest thou be of the losers.

96. (ان . . . يؤمنون) Surely those on whom the word of thy Lord[397] has been justified shall not believe[398]——

97. (ولوجا . . . الاليم) even though every sign[399] should come to them, until they face an afflictive torment.

---

384. (alone, exclusive of thy soul, from the bottom of the sea).

385. 'His mummy has recently been found at Thebes, and is now in the Museum at Cairo.' (JE. VIII. p. 500). 'Who this man was we do not know—perhaps the last Pharaoh of the eighteenth dynasty, whose withered remains now lie, for every idler to look upon, in a glass case in the Cairo Museum.' (Hall Caine, Life of Christ, p. 112). [See also EBi. c. 3688; EBr. XVIII. p. 968 (11th Ed.); Breasted, History of Egypt, p. 472].

386. (and do not profit by them). Such people are the modern materialist nations of Europe and America, who look upon all those tokens of God as mere objects of curiosity.

387. (in the land of Canaan or Palestine). 'And I am come down to deliver them out of the land of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land unto a good land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey: unto the place of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites and the Jebusites.' (Ex. 3 : 8).

388. (for their sustenance).

389. (and deviated from the right course).

390. (of God's commandments, first through their own prophets and finally through the Prophet of Islam).

391. (O Prophet!).

392. (of the histories of the Israelite and other peoples).

393. i.e., pre-Quranic Revelations.

394. (and the readings in those scriptures, as unaffected by human glosses and interpolations are sure to confirm them).

395. i.e., what is true in every aspect and every portion of it.

396. (O reader!).

397. (i.e., the eternal decree that they shall not believe).

398. (in view of their own contumacy).

399. (demonstrating God's truth).

98. (فلولا . . . حين) Why then was there not a town[400] which believed, so that its faith might have profited,[401] except the people of Yūnus?[402] When they believed, We removed, from them the chastisement of abjection in the life of the world,[403] and We let them enjoy[404] for a season.[405]

99. (ولو . . . مؤمنين) And had thy Lord willed,[406] those on the earth would have believed, all of them, together;[407] canst thou[408] then compel mankind[409] that they become believers.[410]

100. (وما . . . يعقلون) It is not[411] for any soul that it should believe save with Allah's will, and He lays the abomination[412] upon those who do not reflect.[413]

101. (قل . . . يؤمنون) Say thou:[414] behold what is in the heavens and the earth;[415] and signs[416] and warnings[417] do not avail those who do not believe.[418]

102. (فهل . . . المنتظرين) Do they not await aught but the days[419] of those who have passed away before them. Say thou: wait[420] then, I am with you among those who wait.

103. (ثم . . . المؤمنين) Thereafter[421] We rescued Our messengers and those who believed. Even so, as is incumbent upon Us, We deliver the believers.[422]

---

400. (among the many that had been warned).

401. (and the people might have escaped the penalty).

402. Jonah of the Bible; a prophet of God. He was sent to the idolatrous people of Nineveh, the Assyrian capital, which stood near the place where Mosul now stands in Iraq. They saved themselves by timely repentance at the very first and rather distant signs of the Divine wrath, when the prophet had left them after threatening them with the impending doom. Son of Amittai, he lived probably in the first half of the 8th century B.C. 'He spake by the hand of his servant Jonah, the son of Amittai, the prophet, which was of Gath-hepher.' (2 Ki. 14 : 25). 'The story presupposes a pre-exilic date, when Assyria was at the height of its power and Nineveh was the metropolis of the world.' (VJE. p. 325). That he was in the time of Jeroboam II is clearly affirmed in the Bible, and the reign of this king is generally believed to have lasted from 781 to 741 B.C. See also P. XXIII. nn. 239-250.

403. As soon as they saw, after the angry departure of their prophet, the sky overcast with a dark cloud hanging directly over their city, they put on sackcloth and humbled themselves before God, calling aloud for pardon and mercy and sincerely repenting of their wickedness in the past. They were, on their showing signs of contrition, forgiven, and the storm blew over.

404. (their lives and possessions).

405. i.e., until the time of their natural death.

406. (in accordance with His Universal Plan and Purpose).

407. (irrespective of any will and intention on their part; but God planned that only those should believe who executed their will in that direction and who had a will to believe).

408. (O Prophet!).

409. (in thy enthusiasm, against their will and disposition).

410. All this is by way of consolation to the Prophet, who in his unbounded enthusiasm coveted a wholesale conversion. He is told in effect: you are powerless to effect a universal reclamation. Nobody can believe except with the permission of God, and His permission is withheld from the wantonly rebellious.

411. (open or possible).

412. (of unbelief and infidelity).

413. i.e., those who would not rightly exercise their limited gift of free-will.

414. (O Prophet!).

415. (and this reflective observation of His creation will ultimately lead you to the Oneness of the Creator).

416. (howsoever clear).

417. (howsoever frequent).

418. Man is the only inhabitant of this globe who is the proud possessor of self-determining reason and conscious will. Now if he refuses to exact this great gift in its true and proper spirit, surely guidance will not be his portion.

419. Or 'judgements on.'

420. (the issue).

421. i.e., after the sentences had been executed on the rebels of old.

422. (so they ought to be reassured).

104. (قل . . . المؤمنين) Say thou: O men![423] if you are in doubt concerning my religion, then I worship not those[424] you worship besides Allah; but I worship Allah who causes you to die, and I am commanded that I should be of the believers—

105. (و ان . . المشركين) and that: keep thy face straight toward the religion, upright;[425] and by no means be of the polytheists.

106. (ولا تدع . . الظلمين) And do not invoke besides Allah what can neither profit thee nor hurt thee, then if thou dost so, thou art forthwith of the wrong-doers.

107. (وان . . . الرحيم) And if Allah touches thee with hurt there is no remover thereof but He, and if He intends any good, there is no averter of his grace. He lets it befall on whomsoever of His bondmen He will; and He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.[426]

108. (قل . . . بوكيل) Say thou: O mankind! the truth has surely come to you from your Lord:[427] any one who is guided is only guided for himself,[428] and any one who strays, strays only against himself;[429] and I am not your keeper.[430]

109 (واتبع . . . الحكمين) And follow thou[431] whatever is Revealed to thee and endure[432] until Allah decides,[433] and He is the Best of deciders.

423. (of Makka).

424. (gods and idols).

425. i.e., resolutely inclined to the true faith to the exclusion of all false worships.

426. The passage is at once a vigorous denunciation of idolatry and a passionate exhortation for belief in the One true God.

427. (supported by evidences and substantiated by arguments).
428. i.e., to his own benefit.
429. i.e., to his own undoing.
430. (and responsible for your acts).
431. (O Prophet!).
432. (their fierce persecution).
433. (in this world or the Next).

Sūrah Hūd[434]

Hud. XI

(Makkan, 10 Sections and 123 Verses)

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION I

1. (الر . . . خبير) Alif. Lām. Ra.[435] A Book this, verses of which are guarded,[436] and then detailed, from before the Wise, the Aware[437]——

2. (الا . . . بشير) saying: you shall not worship except Allah.[438] Verily I am unto you a warner[439] from Him, and a bearer of glad tidings[440]——

3. (و ان . . . كبير) and that: ask forgiveness of your Lord, then turn to Him in repentance. He will let you enjoy a goodly enjoyment[441] until a term appointed and will grant[442] His grace to every owner of grace.[443] And if you turn away, I fear for you the torment of a Great Day.

4. (الى . . . قدير) To Allah is your return and He is over everything Potent.

5. (الا . . . الصدور) Lo! they[444] fold their breasts[445] that they may hide[446] from Him. Lo! when they cover themselves with their garments, He knows what they conceal and what they reveal. Verily He is the Knower of the innermost secrets.[447]

---

434. One of the group of the chapters known as the 'terrific' surahs. Abū Bakr, one of the most faithful Companions, on seeing the hair of the Prophet's beard whitening is reported to have said: 'Ah, thou, for whom I would sacrifice father and mother, white hairs are hastening upon thee!' Thereupon the Prophet observed: 'Yes, Hūd and its sisters have hastened my white hair'.

435. See P. I. n. 28.

436. (against error and corruption). Or, 'made firm' like a building orderly and well-constructed).

437. (so that every verse of the Book is embedded with the wisdom and all-awareness of its Author).

438. This is the quintessence of Islam distinguishing it from all forms of polytheism, trinitarianism and dualism.

439. (to the disobedient and ungodly).

440. (to the obedient and godly).

441. (in this world).

442. (in the Hereafter).

443. ذی فضل is one who has acquired great merit by his acts of supererogation, over and above the obligatory good works.

444. i.e., the enemies of Islam in Makka.

445. (in the utterly foolish hope).

446. (their secret plans and designs).

447. In the case of pagan Arabia, no less than in the midst of modern paganism, the fact of God's Omniscience needed particular emphasis and constant reminding.

وَمَا مِن دَآبَّةٍ فِي الْأَرْضِ إِلَّا عَلَى اللَّهِ رِزْقُهَا وَيَعْلَمُ مُسْتَقَرَّهَا وَمُسْتَوْدَعَهَا ۚ كُلٌّ فِي كِتَابٍ مُّبِينٍ ۝ وَهُوَ

PART XII

6. (وما . . . مبين) No moving creature[1] is there on the earth but upon Allah is its provision,[2] and He knows its dwelling and resting-place;[3] everything is[4] in a Book luminous.[5]

7. (و هو . . . مبين) He it is who has created the heavens and the earth in six day[6]— and His Throne[7] was on the water[8]—that He might test you,[9] as to which of you is excellent in work. And if thou sayest:[10] you shall be certainly raised after death, those who disbelieve are sure to say: naught is this[11] but magic manifest.[12]

8. (ولئن . . . يستهزؤن) And if We defer from them the chastisement till a determined period,[13] they say:[14] what does withold it? Lo! the day it befalls them it shall not be averted from them, and there shall encompass them what they have been mocking at.[15]

SECTION 2

9. (ولئن . . . كفور) And if We let man taste mercy[16] from Us, and then withdraw it from him, surely he is despairing, blaspheming.

---

1. دابة literally, is 'a moving creature; anything that walks or creeps or crawls upon the earth.'

2. i.e., providing every living creature with its food is incumbent upon the great Provider. Cf. the OT: 'Who provideth for the raven his food? When his young ones cry unto God, they wander for lack of meat.' (Job. 38: 41). 'He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry.' (Ps. 147:9).

3. Universal providence obviously presupposes universal knowledge. مستقر denotes permanent abode and مستودع a temporary repository.

4. (recorded).

5. i.e., in the Preserved Tablet; in the Book of Divine decrees.

6. See P. VIII. n. 484.

7. (of authority and majesty) i.e., this rule, His reign.

8. (before the creation of the heavens and the earth). This is only a restatement of the well-known scientific fact that a universal sea preceded the birth of the land. Cf. the Bible. 'And the earth was without form, and void : and darkness was upon the face to the deep. And the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.' (Ge. 1 : 2). According to another rendering, adopted by Ewald, Dillmann, and Schrader (following Rishi)', 'and the earth was waste and void, and darkness was over the watery abyss, and the breath of God was brooding over the waters.' (D.B. I, 502) It is, however, to be noted that unlike the Bible which lays down a sequence of the creation of the heavens and earth, and which has been disproved by modern scientific researches, the Qur'ān does not describe their origin in any particular sequence.

9. (O mankind !).

10. (O Prophet ! to these pagans).

11. (Qurān, announcing a Day of Resurrection).

12. i.e., a sorcerer's talk, void of truth and reality).

13. Literally, 'numbered'.

14. (by way of mockery).

15. i.e., the Divine sentence.

16. i.e., any special favour.

أَذَقْنَٰهُ نَعْمَآءَ بَعْدَ ضَرَّآءَ مَسَّتْهُ لَيَقُولَنَّ ذَهَبَ ٱلسَّيِّـَٔاتُ عَنِّىٓ إِنَّهُۥ لَفَرِحٌ فَخُورٌ ﴿١٠﴾ إِلَّا ٱلَّذِينَ صَبَرُوا۟ وَعَمِلُوا۟

10. (ولئن . . . فخور) And if We let him taste favour after harm has touched him,[17] he says:[18] ills have departed from me, and he becomes elated, boastful.

11. (الا . . . كبير) Not so are those who persevere[19] and do righteous works. Those: theirs shall be forgiveness and a great reward.

12. (فلعلك . . . وكيل) So[20] perchance thou[21] mayest abandon[22] part[23] of what has been Revealed to thee,[24] and thy breast is straitened thereby, because they[25] say: why has not a treasure been sent down on him[26] or an angel[27] has come with him?[28] Thou art but a warner,[29] and of everything Allah is a Trustee.[30]

13. (ام . . . صدقين) Or do they say:[31] he has fabricated It? Say thou:[32] bring you then ten Surahs[33] the like of it,[34] fabricated,[35] and call[36] whom you can besides Allah, if you say sooth.

14. (فالم . . . مسلمون) Then if they[37] do not respond,[38] you know[39] that it has been sent down with the Knowledge[40] of Allah, and that there is no god but He: are you Muslims then?[41]

---

17. Such as health after disease, or opulence after adversity.

18. (filled with self-exultation).

19. (in their true belief).

20. i.e., in view of the incessant mockery of the infidels.

21. (O Prophet !).

22. i.e., mayest feel inclined to abandon.

23. i.e., the portion commanding the Prophet to preach publicly the whole of the Revelation.

24. (and as this obviously cannot be thy intention, why shouldst thou grieve so much over the fate of the scoffers ?).

25. i.e., the scoffing infidels.

26. (to infuse in us belief in his prophethood).

27. (whom we could see and perceive).

28. (heralding and proclaiming his prophethood).

29. (and not essentially a wonder-worker or a 'miracle-man': why then this insistence on the performance of some specific miracles) ?

30. So He alone is Able to perform all such acts as seem 'supernatural' to human mind, whenever and wherever He will.

31. (of the greatest standing miracle, the Holy Qur'ān).

32. (O Prophet !).

33. That was the number fixed at first; later the matter was made still easier to the opponents, by reducing the number to a single chapter.

34. i.e., comparable to the Holy Qur'ān in its innumerable excellences. See P. I. n. 99; P. XI. n. 258.

35. (by yourselves).

36. (for your help).

37. i.e., those to whom this challenge is addressed.

38. (O believers! and fail to produce anything like the Qur'ān). 'The best of Arab writers has never succeeded in producing anything equal in merit to the Quran.' (Palmer, 'The Quran'. Intro. p. LV). 'We find even so bigoted an opponent of Islam as Alvar acknowledging that the Qur'ān was composed in such eloquent and beautiful language that even Christians could not help reading and admiring it.' (Arnold, Preaching of Islam, p. 138).

39. (O infidels!).

40. (and power).

41. i.e., will you even now refuse to believe in this Divine origin of the Holy Qur'ān ?

15. (من . . . يبخسون) Any one who desires the life of the world and its embelishment,[42] We shall repay them in full their works therein,[43] and in it[44] they shall not be defrauded.

16. (اولئك . . . يعملون) These are they for whom there is nothing in the Hereafter except the Fire; to naught shall come what they have performed,[45] and vain is[46] what they have been working.[47]

17. (افمن . . . يومنون) Is he[48] like him[49] who rests upon an evidence from His Lord,[50] and there recites it a witness from Him?[51] And before it was the Book of Mūsā, a pattern[52] and a mercy;[53] these believe therein;[54] and whoever of the sects[55] disbelieves therein, the Fire is his promised resort. Be then thou not[56] in doubt thereof, verily it is the truth from thy Lord, yet[57] most of the mankind do not believe.

18. (ومن . . الظلمين) And who does a greater wrong than he who fabricates a lie against Allah?[58] These shall be set before their Lord, and the witnesses[59] shall say: these are they who lied against their Lord. Lo! the curse of Allah shall fall on the wrong-doers—

---

42. (to the exclusion of the Hereafter).

43. i.e., in this very world. This solves the problem of the virtuous infidels. If there is such a one, he would be repaid for his good works in this very world, and nothing will be left over for the Hereafter.

44. i.e., in so far as the enjoyments and delicacies of the present world are concerned.

45. (in this world).

46. (even now, on account of the absence of the right motive).

47. i.e., want of right belief has rendered all their good works fruitless, and what apparent merit these works possessed has faded away in the world of stern realities, where there is no more of sham and no more of make-belief.

48. i. e., the infidel; one whose works are fruitless.

49. i. e., the believer.

50. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān. The believer stands on the rock-stone of the Holy Qur'ān.

51. The whole life of the holy Prophet was that of a living witness of God and a witness to the truths of the Holy Qur'ān.

52. (unto those who were addressed thereby). Or, 'a leader.' امام is both a model or pattern and an exemplar or an object of imitation.

53. (unto those who believed therein).

54. i. e., in the Holy Qur'ān.

55. حزب is a powerful sect. The reference is to the contemporary powerful sects, especially the Jews.

56. (O reader!).

57. i. e., in spite of clear arguments and evidences.

58. (and denies the authenticity of His true religion).

59. i. e., the ever-present witnesses of their misdeeds; the angels.

19. (الذين . . . كفرون) Who[60] hinder others from the path of Allah and[61] could seek crookedness therein and they: in the Hereafter are disbelievers.

20. (اولئك . . يبصرون) These could not escape[62] on the earth, nor could there be for them protectors against Allah; doubled[63] shall be the torment for them; they[64] were not able to hearken nor would they be clear-sighted.

21. (اولئك . . يفترون) These are they who have lost their souls, and has strayed from them what they had been fabricating.[65]

22. (لاجرم . . الاخسرون) Undoubtedly they ! they in the Hereafter shall be the greatest losers.

23. (ان . . . خلدون). Surely those who believed and worked righteous works and humbled themselves before their Lord—they shall be the inhabitants of the Garden; therein they shall abide.

24. (مثل . . . تذكرون) The likeness of the two parties[66] is as the blind and deaf,[67] and the seeing and hearing.[68] Are the two[69] equal in likeness? Are you not admonished then?

SECTION 3

25. (ولقد . . . مبين) And assuredly We sent Nūḥ[70] to his people saying: I am to you a plain warner—

60. ——to add to the enormity of their own infidelity——
61. (with a view to seducing and misleading others).
62. (the punishment, and elude God).
63. ——for they not only themselves deviated from the path of truth but also misled and seduced others——
64. (blinded and deafened as they were by their contumacy).
65. i. e., their false gods have left them in the lurch.
66. (spoken of above) i. e., the believers and the infidels.
67. So are the infidels, destitute of sight and hearing.
68. So are the believers, seeing with their eyes and hearing with their ears.
69. i. e., the one far removed from guidance; the other so steady on the right course.
70. (as a true apostle of God). See P. VIII, nn. 509, 510.

26. (ان . . . اليم) that you shall worship none except Allah; verily I fear for you[71] the torment of a Day afflictive.

27. (فقال . . . كذبين) The chiefs of those who disbelieved among his people said: we find thee nothing more than a human being like ourselves,[72] and we find no one except the meanest of us[73] following thee by an immature opinion;[74] nor we find in you[75] any superiority over us;[76] nay! we deem you are liars.[77]

28. (قال . . . كرهون) He said: bethink O my people: if I rested upon an evidence from my Lord, and a mercy has come to me from Him, and that has been obscured to you,[78] can we[79] make you adhere to it, while you are averse thereto?[80]

29. (ويقوم . . تجهلون) And O my people: I do not ask of you any riches therefor;[81] my reward is only with Allah.[82] And I am not going to drive away[83] those who have believed;[84] they are going to meet their Lord,[85] but I find you a people steeped in ignorance.

30. (ويقوم . . تذكرون) O my people: who will support me against Allah, if I drove them away?[86] Are you not admonished then?

---

71. (O worshippers of false gods!).

72. (and no mere mortal can be a messenger of God). That has been the ever-recurring argument of the polytheistic nations. A god-man, according to them, must be above humanity and must partake of Divine nature.

73. (and therefore their opinion carries no weight).

74. i. e., and even they have been carried away by mere impulse of their fancy.

75. i. e., thyself and thy followers.

76. (in wealth, power, etc.).

77. (so far as this claim to prophethood is concerned).

78. (and therefore you do not perceive it).

79. i. e., the prophet and the believers.

80. i.e., it is a physical impossibility on our part to inject the true doctrine in you forcibly while you reject it deliberately and refuse to think over it calmly and reasonably.

81. i. e., for my preaching; and so there is no worldly motive for my claiming Divine messengership.

82. That is one of the distinguishing features of the prophets of God. They have no ends of their own to serve; they work absolutely disinterestedly.

83. (as you ask me to do).

84. (though they happen to be lacking in worldy goods).

85. (at the Resurrection, and to be received honourably; so how can I drive away a people esteemed by my Lord?)

86. A prophet is as much, if he were to break a Divine law, subject to Divine punishment as any other mortal.

خَزَآئِنُ اللّٰهِ وَلَآ اَعْلَمُ الْغَيْبَ وَلَآ اَقُوْلُ اِنِّىْ مَلَكٌ وَّلَآ اَقُوْلُ لِلَّذِيْنَ تَزْدَرِىْۤ اَعْيُنُكُمْ لَنْ يُّؤْتِيَهُمُ اللّٰهُ

31. (ولا . . . الظلمين) And I do not say to you that with me are the treasures of Allah,[87] nor that I know the Unseen, nor do I say: I am an angel. And I do not speak[88] of them whom your eyes despise[89] as those on whom Allah will not bestow any good[90]—Allah knows best what is in their souls. Verily in that case I should be of the wrong-doers.[91]

32. (قالوا . . . الصدقين) They said: O Nūḥ! surely thou hast disputed with us and has multiplied the dispute with us; now bring us that with which thou threatenest us,[92] if thou be of the truth-tellers.

33. (قال . . . بمعجزين) He said: only Allah will bring it on you if He will,[93] and you will not escape.[94]

34. (ولا . . . ترجعون) Nor would my good counsel profit you even if I wished to give you good counsel, if Allah wished to keep you astray.[95] He is your Lord,[96] and to Him you shall be returned.

35. (ام . . . تجرمون) Or do they say:[97] he[98] has fabricated it?[99] Say thou: on me be my guilt,[100] and I am quit of that of which you are guilty.[101]

---

87. i. e., the illimitable treasures of His omnipotence and omniscience.

88. (as you are wont to say).

89. (for their lack of worldly goods).

90. The infidels charged Noah's followers with hypocrisy; and therefore they said, these converts would remain devoid of all spiritual good.

91. i. e., in case they are true believers, and I refuse to credit them with true belief, I am sure to be reproved.

92. i. e., the much dreaded punishment.

93. i. e., I am powerless to bring about any such disaster; I am a mere preacher and warner.

94. (His punishment).

95. (in consequence of your continuous obstinacy and habitual contumacy),

96. (and it is against Him that you stand as rebels).

97. i. e., the Makkan pagans. Notice the abrupt brief change from the story of Noah to that of the holy Prophet of Islam.

98. i. e., the holy Prophet.

99. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

100. (if, as you say, I have forged it).

101. i. e., of the great guilt of rejecting the true Prophet of God.

SECTION 4

36. (واوحى . . يفعلون) And to Nūḥ it was Revealed:[102] verily none of thy people will believe save those who have believed already, so do not be distressed at what they have been doing.[103]

37. (واصنع . . مغرقون) And make thou the ark[104] under Our eyes[105] and Our Revelation;[106] and do not address Me regarding those who have done wrong;[107] they are surely to be drowned.

38. (ويصنع . . تسخرون) And as he was making the ark, and whenever the chiefs of the people[108] passed by him they scoffed at him.[109] He said: if you scoff at us,[110] we also[111] shall scoff at you, as you scoff at us.

39. (فسوف . . . مقيم) So presently you shall know on whom comes a torment that humiliates him,[112] and on whom is let loose the torment lasting.[113]

40. (حتى . . . قليل) Thus were they employed when Our decree came and[114] the oven[115] boiled over. We said: carry thereon[116] of every kind[117] two,[118] and thy household, save him thereof against whom[119] the word has already gone forth,[120] and the faithful. And these had not believed with him save a few.[121]

41. (وقال . . . رحيم) And he said:[122] embark therein; in the name of Allah be its course and its anchorage; verily my Lord is Forgiving, Merciful.[123]

---

102. (after his long and patient preaching had proved fruitless).

103. (by way of thy persecution, as their end is drawing near).

104. (in order to save the believers from the impending deluge). The ark, in modern measures, according to the calculation of Christian scholars, was '525 ft. long, 87½ ft. broad, and 52½ ft. high,' (D. B. I. p. 149). Cf. Ge. 6 : 14, 16.

105. i. e., under Our direct supervision and protection.

106. (i. e., under Our directions as to its form and dimensions).

107. i. e., do not plead with Me that the wicked may yet be saved.

108. (perhaps priding themselves on the drainage schemes of their country).

109. (on his building a vessel in an inland country at a safe distance from the sea). The people of Noah lived in a plain, in the higher reaches of Mesopotamia, hundreds of miles away from the Persian Gulf.

110. (now, in the height of your ignorance and arrogance).

111. (in our turn).

112. (in this very world).

113. (in the Hereafter).

114. (as the first signal of the deluge).

115. (as, simultaneously with the catastrophic downpour of rain, water gushed forth from the underground). The story of Noachian deluge, so long dismissed as legendary, has at last come to be recognized as 'historical disaster' 'for which material evidence has been found in the soil of Ur ; . . . it was a widspread but a local inundation.' (Woolly, Abraham, p. 170) 'Archaeological evidence . . . . has established the reality of the Flood.' (Marston, The Bible Comes Alive, p. 33). 'The Septuagint version of Genesis (translated into Greek from the Hebrew about 300 B.C.) represents Abraham as being born 1072 years after the Flood, which would bring the date up to about 3200 B.C. (Marston, The Bible is True, p. 70). 'Langdon excavating at Kish and Woolley at Ur in 1929 came upon unmistakable traces of a deluge of unparalleled dimensions about 3000 B.C.' (VJE, p. 226). تنور is not only an 'oven' but it also signifies 'surface of the ground' 'highest part of the earth or ground,' 'any place from which water pours forth,' and 'a place where the water of a valley collects.' (LL)

116. i. e., into the ark.

117. (of animals serviceable to man).

118. i. e., a male and a female. Cf. the OT :—'And of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark, to keep them alive with thee ; they shall be male and female.' (Ge. 6 : 19).

119. (in consequence of his infidelity).

120. 'in Divine knowledge, not in the knowledge of Noah.' (Th.)

121. Note that the Qur'ān distinctly affirms that Noah was sent to a particular people, and affords no ground to imagine that the deluge was universal. His mission may possibly have been for the then populated earth, but certainty he did not address the whole world as we know it. The inundation, however catastrophic, must have been limited to the land of Noah : and to the historicity of a flood thus defined, modern archaeology has set its seal. 'Both Sumerian and Hebrew legends,' says a distinguished explorer Lt.-Col. Wagstaff, speak of a flood which destroyed the habitable world as they knew it. The deluge was not universal, of course, being confined to the lower valley of the Tigris and Euphrates. It might have affected an area of 400 miles long by 100 miles broad, sufficiently devastating for the inhabitants to presume a world-wide catastrophe.'

122. (to his family and followers).

123. (to His believing servants).

42. (وهي . . . الكفرين) And it moved on with them amidst waves like mountains.[124] And Nūḥ called out his son,[125] and he was apart:[126] my son! embark with us, and be not with the infidels.[127]

43. (قال . . . المغرقين) He said:[128] I shall betake me to a mountain which will shield me from the water. Nūh said: there is no protector[129] today from the decree of Allah save for one on whom He has mercy.[130] And a wave intervened between the two;[131] so he was of the drowned.

44. (وقيل . . . الظلمين) And it was said:[132] O earth: swallow up thy water, and cease, O heaven:[133] And the water abated; and fulfilled was the decree.[134] And it[135] rested upon the Judi;[136] and it was said: away with the wrong-doing people.[137]

45. (ونادى . . الحاكمين) And Nūḥ cried to his Lord,[138] and said: Lord! verily my son is of my household, and Thy promise[139] is the truth,[140] and Thou art the Greatest of rulers.

46. (قال . . . الجاهلين) He said: O Nūḥ! verily he is not of thy household![141] verily he is of the unrighteous conduct;[142] so do not ask Me that of which thou hast no knowledge.[143] I exhort thee to be not of the ignorant.[144]

124. i. e., waves rising to the height of mountains. 'And the flood was forty days upon the earth; and the waters increased, and bare up the ark, and it was lifted up above the earth. And the waters prevailed, and were increased greatly upon the earth; and the ark went upon the face of the waters. And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth; and all the high hills, that were under the whole heaven, were covered.' (Ge. 7: 17-19).

125. (who was an infidel, named Kan'ān).

126. (from him and the family).

127. (neither physically nor spiritually).

128. (fondly and foolishly hoping that the mountain-peaks would remain out of the reach of the flood).

129. Or 'no person defended.' عاصم may be an instance of فاعل used in the sense of مفعول .

130. 'Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail; and the mountains were covered.' (Ge. 7 : 20) 'And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth: and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark' (23).

131. i. e., the believing father and the unbelieving son.

132. (after the sentence had been duly executed). 'And the waters prevailed upon the earth one hundred and fifty days' (Ge. 7 : 24).

133. (from raining). The deluge was brought about by the gushing forth of underground fountains as well as torrential rain. 'And the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights.' (Ge. 7 : 12).

134. 'And God made a wind to pass over the earth, and the water assuaged; The fountains also of the deep and the windows of heavens were stopped, and the rain from heaven was restrained. And the waters returned from off the earth continually: and after the end of the hundred and fifty days the waters were abated.' (Ge. 8 : 1-3).

135. i. e., the ark.

136. 'still regarded by the Kurds as the scene of the descent from the ark.' (D. B. I. p. 140). While the Biblical reference to the Ararat is 'indefinite' (JE. II. p. 74), there is evidence to identify 'the mountain of the ark with the Jebel Judi, south-west of Lake Vam.' (EBi. c. 290). It is 'not without significance that the neighbourhood of the Caucasus Mountain should be indicated by historians in our own times, as well as by relics of remote times, for the original homeland of our own, and many other races.' (Marston, The Bible is True, p. 73).

137. The whole passage, says Lane, 'is considered the most sublime in the Kurān.'

138. (before Kan'ān was drowned and there was yet hope of his deliverance).

139. (to save the believers among my family).

140. i. e., there cannot be the slightest doubt as to Thy promise coming true; Thy words are the very truth itself.

141. (in Our fore-knowledge) i. e., he is not among believing members of thy family, but on account of his incorrigible infidelity is excluded from the members of thy family who are promised deliverance.

142. عمل غير صالح is here equivalent to ذو عمل غير صالح (Th.).

143. i. e., plead on behalf of no one unless thou hast some knowledge of his faith.

144. (by praying for those who are devoid of faith). The prophet Noah is warned for the future to be on his guard against pleading in ambiguous cases.

47. (قال . . . الخسرين) Nūh said: Lord! I take refuge with Thee lest I may ask Thee that of which I have no knowledge. And if Thou forgivest me not and hast not mercy on me, I shall be among the losers.[145]

48. (قيل . . . أليم) It was said: O Nūḥ! get thou down[146] with peace from Us and blessings upon thee and the communities with thee.[147] And there shall be communities[148] whom We shall let enjoy themselves,[149] and afterwards there shall befall them from Us a torment afflictive.[150]

49. (تلك . . . للتقين) That is of the stories of the unseen![151] We reveal it to thee; thou knewest it not, nor did thy nation know it ere this.[152] So be thou steadfast;[153] verily the happy end is for the God-fearing.[154]

SECTION 5

50 (وإلى . . . مفترون) And We sent to 'Aād[155] their brother,[156] Hūd.[157] He said: O my people! worship Allah,[158] there is no god but He: you are but fabricators.[159]

51. (يقوم . . . تعقلون) O my people! I ask of you no wage therefor;[160] my reward is only on Him Who created me, will you not then reflect?

145. All this shows extreme eagerness on the part of Noah, like all men of God, to show contrition on the slightest opportunity.

146. (on the land).

147. (in the ark and their believing posterity).

148. (deviating from the true religion).

149. (in this world).

150. (in the Hereafter).

151. (little known to thee, O Prophet! by any available source of information).

152. i.e., before the Revelation, this ancient history was an unheard of secret to the Arabian nation.

153. (when thy people are still rejecting thee in spite of clear evidences in thy favour).

154. (as was demonstrated in the case of Nūḥ and his followers).

155. The ancient Arab tribe which inhabited Yaman and Hadhramaut, extending from the coasts of the Persian Gulf to the borders of Mesopotamia. See P. VIII. n. 523.

156. i.e., their tribesman.

157. In the province of Hadhramaut, at some distance east of Qasm, there still 'stands the shrine of Nabi Hūd, a pre-Islamic saint, whose grave is an important centre of pligrimage.' (EBr. XI. p. 62). Now Nabi Hūd is the Prophet Hūd, not a 'saint.' See P. VIII. n. 525.

158. (and abandon polytheism altogether).

159. (in making others co-equal with Him).

160. i.e., for my preaching.

53. (قالوا . . . بمؤمنين) They said: O Hūd! thou hast not brought us an evidence[163] and we are not going to abandon our gods for thy saying,[164] nor are we going to be believers in thee.

54. (ان . . . تشركون) All that we say is that some of our gods[165] have stuck thee with evil.[166] He said; verily I call Allah to witness, and bear you witness, that I am quit of what you associate—

55. (من . . . تنظرون) With Him.[167] So do plot against me all together and do not respite me.[168]

56. (انى . . . مستقيم) I rely on Allah, my Lord and your Lord; no moving creature[169] is there whose destiny He does not control,[170] verily my Lord is on the straight path.[171]

57. (فان . . . حفيظ) If then you turn away, I have preached you that with which I was sent to you.[172] And my Lord will set up in succession a people other than you,[173] and you shall not[174] be able to harm Him at all,[175] verily my Lord[176] is over everything a Guardian.

161. (rain plentifully). The Aadites had been grievously distressed by a draught of three years.

162. i.e., He will exalt you still further, and increase the power, prestige and prosperity you already possess.

163. (such as we desire). i.e., a miracle of our own choice.

164. عن in عن قولك is denotative of cause.

165. (to whom thou offerest indignities and whose power, nay, whose very existence, thou deniest).

166. (by way of punishment; and so thou hast been deprived of thy reason). اعتراى is used of a malady and of diabolical possession.

167. (and I shudder at the very idea of associating aught with Him).

168. The indignant reply of the Prophet Hūd in effect is:—If your false gods have any power at all, well I am here. Let them do their worst, and give me no quarter. Out with your revenge now!.

169. See n. I above.

170. Litt. He holdeth it by its forelock i.e., He exercises an absolute power over it. The idiom, in Arabic, refers to a horse's forelock; the animal held in this manner being considered to be reduced to the lowest subjection. The moral is: everything, big or small, is in the firm grasp of God.

171. (and to Him man can attain only by treading the right path).

172. (and no blame lies on me if you still persist in your unbelief and infidelity).

173. (after you are punished with destruction).

174. (with all your capacity for mischief).

175. (but it is only yourselves that you shall hurt).

176. (unlike the 'gods' of polytheism).

58. (ولما . . . غليظ) And then when Our decree came to pass, We delivered Hūd and those who believed with him by a mercy from Us, and We delivered them from a torment rough [177]

59. (وتلك . . . عنيد) Such were 'Aād. They opposed the signs of their Lord[178] and denied His messengers and followed the bidding of any tyrant froward.[179]

60. (واتبعوا . . . هود) And they were followed in this world by a curse,[180] and so will be they on the Judgement Day.[181] Lo: verily the 'Aād disbelieved in the Lord. Lo! away with 'Aād, the people of Hūd.

SECTION 6

61. (والى . . . مجيب) And to Thamūd[182] We sent their brother[183] Sāleh.[184] He said: O my people! worship Allah, there is no god for you but He.[185] He has made you spring out from the earth and has made you dwell therein.[186] Therefore ask forgiveness of Him, then turn to Him in repentance; verily my Lord is Nigh,[187] Responsive.[188]

62. (قالوا . . . مريب) They said: O Sāleh! hitherto[189] thou wast amongst us as one hoped for.[190] Dost thou forbid us to worship what our fathers have worshipped? We are in disquieting doubt[191] regarding that to which thou callest us.

177. In an Himyaritic inscription discovered in 1834 in the ruins of Hisn-Ghurāb occurs the following :—

1. We dwelt at ease for ages within the court of this castle. A life without strait, and above wants . . . .
2. Kings reigned over us, far removed from baseness. And vehement against the people of perfidy and fraud . . . .
3. They sanctioned for us, from the religion of Hūd, right law. And we believed in miracles, the resurrection, and the resuscitation of the dead by the breath of God . . . .' (Forster, Historical Geography of Arabia, II. p. 93). This establishes, in the first place, the historical personality of the Prophet Hūd, and secondly, the fact that his followers were the only people of the tribe of 'Aād, who survived the Divine catastrophe.

178. —the All-Powerful—

179. —possessor of tiny little power—

180. i.e., by extermination.

181. i.e., by everlasting perdition.

182. As the tribe of 'Aād were the masters of south-eastern Arabia, so were the Thamūd masters of north-western Arabia, then known as Wādī-ul-Qurā. See P. VIII. n. 542.

183. i.e., their countrymen.

184. '· · · A similar shrine is that of Nabi Salih in Wadī Sirf, near Shibam,' (EBr. XI. p. 63). See P. VIII. n. 543.

185. (so renounce polytheism in all its forms).

186. Or 'hath prolonged your lives therein.'

187. (unto those who strive to approach Him).

188. (unto those who petition Him).

189. i.e., before the preaching of this new religion.

190. i.e., the centre of our hopes and aspirations. With a sense of regret, curiosly similar, and sentiment almost identical, over what might-have-been, does a modern Christian speak of the holy Prophet ;—'Had Moḥammad, stern to his early convictions, followed the leading of Jewish and Christian truth, and inculcated upon the fellows their simple doctrine, there might have been a "saint Mohammad," more likely a "Mohammad the Martyr," laying the foundation-stone of the 'Arabian Church.' (Muir. op. cit. Intro. p. XCVIII).

191. i.e., this strange, unfamiliar doctrine of negativing all 'gods' has aroused suspicions in us.

عَلَىٰ بَيِّنَةٍ مِّن رَّبِّي وَآتَانِي مِنْهُ رَحْمَةً فَمَن يَنصُرُنِي مِنَ اللَّهِ إِنْ عَصَيْتُهُ ۖ فَمَا تَزِيدُونَنِي غَيْرَ تَخْسِيرٍ ۝ وَيَا قَوْمِ

63. (قال . . . تخسير) He said: O my people! Think! If I stand upon evidence from my Lord,[192] and there has come to me from Him a mercy,[193] then who will succour me against Allah, if I disobey Him?[194] You then[195] increase me not save in loss.

64. (و يقوم . . . قريب) And O my people! here is the she-camel of Allah,[196] a sign to you; so leave her to graze at will in Allah's land, and do not touch her with evil, lest there may overtake you an instant chastisement.

65. (فعقروها . . مكذوب) Yet[197] they hamstrang her.[198] Then he said: enjoy youselves in your dwellings only three days[199]——a prophecy sure to be fulfilled.

66. (فلما . . العزيز) Then when Our decree came to pass We delivered Sāleh and those who believed with him, by a mercy from Us and from the humiliation of that day. Verily thy Lord! He is the Strong,[200] the Mighty.[201]

67. (واخذ . . . جثمين) And the shout[202] overtook those who had done wrong, so they lay in their dwellings crouching[203]——

68. (كان . . . لثمود) as though they had never lived at ease therein. Lo! verily Thamūd disbelieved in their Lord.[204] Lo! away with Thamūd.

192. i. e., clear and convincing arguments supporting His unity.

193. i. e., the special gift of apostleship which implies that I must preach and proclaim the true doctrine.

194. (by suppressing the true doctrine instead of publishing it).

195. i. e., if I were to act upon your counsel.

196. i. e, a wonder; a token of His omnipotence; a direct outcome of Divine intervention; and therefore attributed to Him. See P. VIII. n. 546.

197. i. e, in spite of full and repeated remonstrances.

198. See P. VIII. n. 551.

199. (after which you shall be destroyed).

200. i. e., Able to destroy whomsoever He will.

201. i. e., Able to save whomsoever He will.

202. (from heaven, accompanied by a violent earthquake).

203. (and dead).

204. (and were therefore extirpated).

SECTION 7

69. (ولقد . . . حنيذ) And assuredly Our messengers[205] came to Ibrāhīm with glad tidings.[206] They said:[207] peace! He said: peace! And soon he brought a calf roasted.[208]

70. (فلما . . . لوط) And when he saw that their hands did not touch it[209] he mistrusted them, and conceived a fear of them.[210] They said; do not fear; verily we[211] are sent to the people of Lūṭ[212]

71. (وامراته . . يعقوب) And his wife[213] was standing by;[214] she laughed.[215] And We gave her the glad tidings of Isḥāq, and after Isḥāq, Y'aqūb.

72. (قالت . . . عجيب) She said: O for me![216] Shall I bear a child when I am old?[217] and this my husband is advanced in years! A marvellous thing is this![217-A]

73. (قالوا . . . مجيد) They said: marvellest thou[218] at the decree of Allah?[218-A] Mercy of Allah and His blessings be upon you, O people of the house,[219] verily He is Praiseworthy,[220] Glorious.[221]

74. (فلما . . . لوط) Then when alarm had left Ibrāhīm and the glad tidings had come home to him, he took to disputing with Us[222] for the people of Lūṭ.[223]

75. (ان . . . منيب) Verily Ibrāhīm was forbearing,[224] long-suffering,[225] penitent.[226]

205. i. e. angels in human form; perhaps three is number. 'And he lifted up his eyes and looked and, lo, three men stood by him.' (Ge. 18 : 2).

206. (of the birth of his son Isaac).

207. (by way of greeting).

208. Hospitable in the extreme as Abraham was, he began to feast the guests although they were as yet total strangers to him. 'And Abraham ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf tender and good, and gave it unto a young man; and he hasted to dress it. And he took butter, and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them.' (Ge. 18 : 7, 8)

209. i. e., the meat served before them. This corrects the Biblical mis-statement that "they did eat'. (Ge. 18 : 8)

210. (apprehending that they might have some ill design and hostile intention against him). Partaking of food, in antiquity, made the guest a temporary member of the family, and formed a special bond of friendship between the host and the guest.

211. (angels in human form).

212. (to punish them). Lūṭ, Lot of the Bible, was a prophet of God. His 'people' does not signify his kinsmen or tribe, but the people to reclaim whom he was sent as an apostle. See P. VIII. n. 561.

213. i. e., Sarah. The first wife of Abraham.

214. (somewhere nearby but till now hidden from the strangers' view). 'And Sarah heard it in the tent door, which was behind her.' (Ge. 18 : 10).

215. (immensely pleased with finding angels as her guests).

216. An exclamation of wonder.

217. (and past child-bearing).

217-A. 'Now Abraham and Sarah were old and well striken in age; and it ceased to be with Sarah after the manner of women. Therefore Sarah laughed within herself, saying, After I am waxed old shall I have pleasure, my lord being old also.' (Ge. 18: 11 : 12).

218. (who is the consort of a prophet of God and fully conversant with His working).

218-A. (for whom nothing is too hard).

219. The House of Abraham had already been the recipient of special Divine favours.

220. i. e., so instead of wondering at His power, praise Him and glorify Him.

221. i. e., Able to do whatever He will.

222. i. e., pleading with Us with such a vehemence that it looked like disputing.

223. For the details of Abraham's pleadings compare Ge. 18 : 23-33.

224. (and patient with other people's faults).

225. اواه is one who often says Ah! or alas! or often moans from a motive of pity, affection or fear of God.

226. (i. e., turning to God very frequently).

76. (یا براهیم . . . مردود) Ibrāhīm! leave off this;[227] the decree from thy Lord has already come, and verily upon them an approaching torment is unavoidable.[228]

77. (ولما . . . عصيب) And when Our envoys[229] came to Lūṭ,[230] he was distressed on their account,[231] and he felt straitened for them,[232] and he said:[233] this is a day dreadful.

78. (وجاءه . . . رشيد) And his people came to him rushing on towards him,[234] and they were wont to work vices[235] before. He said:[236] O my people! here are my daughters:[237] clean are they for you.[238] so fear Allah[239] and do not disgrace me in the face of my guests;[240] is there among you no man right-minded?[241]

79. (قالوا . . . نريد) They said: assuredly thou knowest that we have no right to thy daughters.[242] and verily thou knowest what we would have.[243]

80. (قال . . . شديد) He said:[244] would that I had strength against you or could betake me to a powerful support!

---

227. (pleading and interceding).

228. i. e., a doom that cannot be averted; because they are so deep in sin that they shall not reform themselves.

229. (angels in human form).

230. (who lived in the city of Sodom). It was 'the first city of Pentapolis . . situated in the vale of Siddim, either in the present plain of Sabkhah or farther north in the southern Seccudes between the peninsula of Al-Lisan and the Sabkhah.' (JE. XI. p. 424).

231. (as they appeared in the shape of beautiful young boys which must needs excite the unnatural lust of the people of Sodom).

232. (as he felt himself powerless to protect them).

233. (in extreme distress).

234. (with wicked intentions towards his guests).

235. 'They hated strangers, and abused themselves with sodomitical practices.' ("Ant". I. 11 : 1)

236. (after all his remonstrances with his people had proved futile).

237. 'My daughters' is not necessarily Lot's own daughters; they may well have been any unmarried girls of his city.

238. (if you care to take them in marriage.)

239. (in the matter of your lust).

240. 'Death, or something as bad he could suffer, rather than his guests should be exposed to gross ill-treatment.' (EBi. c. 2128).

241. Perhaps there were no good men at all in the population of Sodom. 'And the Lord said, If I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the city, then I will spare all the place for their sakes . . . . And he said, I will not destroy it for ten's sake.' (Ge. 18 : 26, 32).

242. (nor are we inclined towards women at all).

243. 'Now when the Sodomites saw the young men to be of beautiful countenances, and this to an extraordinary degree, and that they took up their lodgings with Lot, they resolved themselves to enjoy those beautiful boys by force and

81. (قالوا . . . بقريب) They[245] said: O Lūṭ! verily we are envoys[246] of thy Lord;[247] they shall be no means reach thee. Go forth thou[248] with thy household in a part of the night, and let none of you look back save thy wife.[249] Certainly what happens to them will happen to her also;[250] this appointment is for the morning; is not morning nigh?

82. (فلما . . . منضود) Then when Our decree came to pass, We turned the upside thereof downward, and We rained thereon stones of baked clay,[251] piled up;

83. (مسومة . . . ببعيد) marked from before thy Lord.[252] Nor are they[253] from those wrong-doers[254] far away.[255]

SECTION 8

84. (والى . . . محيط) And to Madyan[256] We sent their brother[257] Shu'aib.[258] He said: O my people! worship Allah; there is no god for you but He.[259] Do not give short measure and weight.[260] I find you in prosperity,[261] and verily I fear for you[262] the torment of a Day encompassing.[263]

85. (ويقوم . . . مفسدين) O my people! give full measure and weight with equity, and do not defraud the people of their things, and do not commit mischief on the earth as corrupters.[264]

245. i. e., the angels disguised as his guests.

246. (and angels).

247. (and so do not be distressed on our account at all).

248. (out of this city).

249. —an infidel at heart and as such doomed—

250. (as she would disregard all warning).

251. 'Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven; And he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground.' (Ge. 19: 24, 25). According to the Jewish authorities, 'first the rain came down, possibly they might repent; when they did not repent, it was turned into brimstone and fire . . . . The four towns were built on one rock and the Angel overturned them from above downwards.' (Rashi, On Genesis, pp. 222, 223), See P. VIII, nn. 572, 574.

252. 'to distinguish them from other stones.' (Th). 'Stones of baked clay having upon them the semblance of seals impressed in the presence of thy Lord, in order that they may be known to be from God.' (LL)

253. i. e., the ruins of Sodom.

254. (of Makka).

255. The Jordan valley in which the ruined cities were situated was not very far from Makka, and the Makkan caravans on their way to Syria used to pass by it regularly. 'The final destruction of the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah by a cataclysm which, according to the chronology, took place about 2061 B. C., raises the question of their precise location, although no one seems to doubt the reality of the story. Controversy is still active as to whether the cities lay at the north or south end of what is now the Dead Sea.' (Marston, The Bible is True, p. 128). 'The cataclysmic destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah and the other cities round the Dead Sea, ... occurred in 2061 B. C. The occurrence was probably due to volcanic action, and its effects must have been felt over a wide area.' (The Bible Comes Alive, p. 43).

256. See P. VIII. n. 575.

257. i. e., their countryman.

258. See P. VIII n. 576.

259. (so renounce polytheism in all its forms).

260. (as is your wont). They were a trading people, not only infidel but also given to commercial malpractices.

261. (which fact makes it all the more reprehensible that you should be dishonest in your dealings).

262. (if you go on with your crooked ways).

263. i. e., the Day that shall encompass all varieties of the torment : or, the Day that shall encompass one and all.

264. Business can be conducted prosperously only if the rules of commercial morality are strictly adhered to.

86. (بقيت . . . بحفيظ) Allah's remainder[265] is better for you,[266] if you are believers, and I am not over you a guardian.[267]

87. (قالوا . . . الرشيد) They said:[268] O Shu'aib! does thy prayer bid thee that we should abandon what our fathers worshipped;[269] or that we should not do with our riches whatsoever we will?[270] thou, indeed! thou forsooth art mild, right-minded![271]

88. (قال . . . انيب) He said: O my people! think, if I rested upon an evidence from my Lord, and He has provided me with a goodly provision from Himself,[272] shall I fail to deliver His message? I do not desire, in order to oppose you,[273] to do what I forbid you.[274] I desire only reformation so far as I am able, and my hope of success is not save with Allah;[275] in Him I rely and to Him I turn in repentance.

89. (ويقوم . . . ببعيد) O my people! let not the cleavage with me[276] incite you so that there befall you the like of what befell the people of Nūḥ and the people of Hūd and the people of Sāleḥ. and the people of Lūṭ are not far away from you.[277]

90. (واستغفروا . . . ودود) Ask forgiveness of your Lord, and turn to Him in repentance; verily my Lord is Merciful, Loving.

265. بقية الله signifies 'what is left by Allah after giving legal alms.' Or, 'that which God has preserved for you, of what is lawful.' (LL)

266. i. e., the income that is yours by law and right is in the long run far more profitable than that derived by unfair means.

267. (to force on you the ways of piety and virtue).

268. (in ridicule and mockery).

269. i.e., is it thy prayers which prompt thee to ask us to abandon the cult of our forefathers? The fetishism of usage and custom is seen here at its full play.

270. i.e., are we not at liberty to do with our business as we please ? Whether we adulterate our goods, or manipulate our measures or use false coins, what has religion to do with our economic and commercial lives ?

271. All this is said by way of mockery.

272. i.e., His highest gift—prophethood.

273. i.e., for opposition's sake.

274. i.e., my opposition to you is not for its own sake, nor I do it lightheartedly. I do myself whatever I ask you to do and that is an evidence of my seriousness of purpose.

275. i.e., whatever success I may be able to achieve is only due to Divine assistance and not to my own exertions.

276. i.e., your spite of me.

277. (viewed whether chronologically or geographically). In point of time, Shu'aib was a near descendant of Abraham; and as regards habitat, Madyan was at no great distance from the Jordan Valley.

91. (قالوا . . بعزيز) They said: O Shu'aib! we do not understand much of what thou sayest,[278] and verily we see thee weak[279] among us; and were it not for thy tribe[280] we had surely stoned thee,[281] and thou art not mighty among us.[282]

92. (قال . . . محيط) He said: O my people! is my tribe[283] then stronger[284] with you than Allah? Him you have cast behind your backs naglected;[285] verily my Lord is Encompasser[286] of what you do.

93. (ويقوم . . . رقيب) O my people! act according to your station, verily I am going to work in my way; presently you will know on whom comes a chastisement humiliating him and who is a liar. And watch:[287] I am also with you a watcher.

94. (ولما . . . جثمين) And when Our decree came to pass, We delivered Shu'aib and those who believed with him by a mercy from Us, and the shout[288] overtook them who did wrong, so they lay in their dwellings crouching;[289]

95. (كأن . . . ثمود) As though they had never lived at ease therein. Lo! a far removal for Madyan,[290] even as Thamūd were removed afar![291]

SECTION 9

96. (ولقد . . . مبين) And assuredly We sent Mūsā with Our signs and a clear authority;[292]

278. This want of understanding was due to the infidels' refusal to give their prophet proper hearing. Religious truths, simple in themselves, certainly require to be listened to patiently.

279. (with no power or influence at thy back).

280. Or, family.

281. The pre-Islamic pagan 'was little occupied with the things of the gods and neligent in matters of ritual worship. But he had a truly religious reverence for his clan, and a kinsman's blood was to him a thing holy and inviolable.' (Robertson Smith, Religion of the Semites', p. 47).

282. Or 'an esteemed one'. Note the change in the tone of the infidels from mockery to threat.

283. (for whose sake you are sparing me).

284. Or 'more esteemed.'

285. (paying Him no consideration at all).

286. (and He will requite you accordingly).

287. (whether the issue is with me or you).

288. (from the heaven).

289. (and dead).

290, 291. (from God's grace and mercy).

292. i.e., a powerful argument.

97. (الى . . . برشيد) To Fir'awn, and his chiefs. They followed the commandment of Fir'awn, and the commandment of Fir'awn was not rightly-directed.

98 (يقدم . . . المورود) He shall head his people on the Day of Resurrection, and cause them to descend into the Fire,[293] — ill is the descent descended!

99. (واتبعوا . . . المرفود) And they were followed in this world by a curse,[294] and so they will be on the Day of Resurrection,[295] — ill is the present presented!

100. (ذلك . . . وحصيد) That is from the stories of the cities[296] which We recount to thee:[297] of them some are standing,[298] and some mown down.[299]

101. (وما . . . تتبيب) And We wronged them not,[300] but they wronged themselves.[301] So their gods whom they called upon besides Allah did not avail them in aught, when there came the decree of thy Lord, they added to them naught save perdition.[302]

102. (وكذلك . . . شديد) Such[303] is the overtaking of thy Lord when He overtakes the cities while they are wrong-doers; verily His overtaking is afflictive, severe.

103. (ان . . . مشهود) Verily herein is a sign[304] to him who fears the torment of the Hereafter. That is a Day whereon mankind shall be gathered together, and that is a Day to be witnessed.[305]

293. i.e., he shall lead them to Hell as animals are led to the watering-place.

295. i.e., by everlasting perdition.
296. (of ancient nations and peoples).
297. (O Prophet).
298. (such as the cities of Egypt).
299. (such as the city of Sodom). The imagery is of corn standing and cut down.
300. (by punishing them).
301. (by meriting that punishment).
302. i.e., those false gods simply served as the cause of their worshippers' agony.
303. i.e., so thorough in its application, and so inexorable.
304. (of a far greater torment in the Hereafter).
305. (by one and all).

105. (يوم . . . سعيد) The day it comes no soul shall speak save by His leave;[307] then of them some shall be wretched and some blest.

106. (فاما . . . شهيق) As for those who shall be wretched,[308] they shall be in the Fire, there for them shall be panting and roaring.[309]

107. (خلدين . . . يريد) They shall abide there so long as the heavens and the earth remain,[310] save as thy Lord may will.[311] Verily thy Lord is the Doer of whatever He intends.[312]

108. (واما . . . مجذوذ) And as for those who shall be blest,[313] they shall be in the Garden, abiding therein so long as the heavens and the earth remain, save as thy Lord may will[314]——a gift unending.[315]

109. (فلا . . . منقوص) So be not thou[316] in doubt concerning what these people worship.[317] They worship only as[318] their fathers worshipped before; and verily We will repay them their portion[319] in full, undiminished.

306. (and not very remote).

307. So fearful will that Day be.

308. (on account of their want of faith).

309. 'The two words in the original signify, properly, the vehement drawing in and expiration of one's breath, which is usual to possess in great pain and anguish; and particularly the reciprocation of the voice of an ass when he brays.' (Sale) شہیق signifies the ending, or final part, of the crying, or braying, of the ass; . . . and زفیر signifies the beginning, or commencing part, thereof.' (LL)

310. The phrase signifies 'for ever'.

311. (by way of remission). The sentence would be as a rule eternal, but always subject to Divine will. He, the All-Powerful, the All-Supreme. can remit any sentence any time.

312. (without any let or hindrance on the part of anyone). His power is all-in-all. He can do anything, and is not bound by any conditions or by any co-equal entities. This refutes in toto the position of diests and others who have restricted the Divine activity to the creation of the world and the fixation of its primary collocations, and also the doctrine of those who like the Arya Samaj, conceive God as no other than 'a great Cosmic Executive, whose business it is to preside over the inexorable processes of transmigration and Karma.' (ERE. II. p. 60). In Greece, the power even 'of the highest god was limited, and overruling fate then became an inexorable law, before which even he must bow.' (DB. V. p. 147). The God of Islam rules and sways the world and man, subordinates the laws of nature to His will, and is not governed by them. It is His will which is Supreme and All-Powerful, and not any abstract cosmic law.

313. (on account of their faith and good works).

314. (by way of adding to their share of bliss and felicity).

315. The bliss would be everlasting and uninterrupted, and no one after once entering Paradise is ever in danger of being deprived of it.

316. (O reader!).

317. (and rest assured that their worship would lead them to perdition).

318. i.e., as foolishly as; as perversely as

319. (of torment, on the Day of Judgement).

110. (ولقد . . . مريب) And assuredly We gave Book to Mūsā, and disputation arose thereabout;[320] and had not a word preceded from thy Lord,[321] it would have been decreed between them.[322] And verily they are concerning that in disquieting doubt.[323]

114. (واقم . . . للذاكرين) Establish thou prayer at the two ends of the day,[329] and in some watches of the night;[330] verily virtues obliterate[331] vices.[332] That[333] is a reminder[334] to the mindful.

115. (واصبر . . . المحسنين) And be patient thou;[335] verily Allah does not waste the wage of the well-doers.

321. (that full requital is to be held over till the Day of Judgement).

322. (here and now, and the rejectors would have received their full requital immediately).

323. i.e., concerning the Requital.

324. i.e, feeling sceptical of the doctrine of Divine Retribution.

325. (O Prophet!).

327. Thus the entire Muslim community is exhorted to work for faith, unaffected by whatever the infidels may do.

328. (transgressing the bounds of religion and piety).

329. i.e., morning and afternoon. The phrase thus clearly indicates three obligatory prayers of فجر (dawn), ظهر (midday) and عصر (afternoon).

330. The phrase comprehends the two remaining obligatory prayers of مغرب (sunset) and عشا (supper); thus totalling the five canonical prayers,

331. Or 'wipe off.'

332. (from the Book of deeds).

333. i.e., the law that every virtue has a condemning effect.

334. i.e., an exhortation to cultivate assiduously every form of virtue.

337. (from nemesis).

338. (in accordance with His Plan and Purpose).

339. —since He has made man a free agent in the choice of his career—

341. i.e., for demonstrating the Divine law of individual variety dominating all human life.

347. See n. 287 above.

348. i.e., the believers.

359. (the outcome of your infidelity and unbelief).

350. (the outcome of our true belief.)

Joseph XII

(Makkan, 12 Sections and 111 Verses)

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION 1

1. (الر . . . المبين) Alif. Lam. Ra.[355] These are the verses of a Book luminous.[356]

2. (انا . . . تعقلون) Verily We! We have sent it down, an Arabic[356-A] Recitation,[357] that perchance you may reflect.[358]

3. (نحن . . . الغفلين) We! We recount to thee[359] the best of stories, by Revealing to thee, this Qur'ān,[360] though thou hast been hitherto among the unaware ones.

4. (اذ . . . سجدين) Recall when Yūsuf[361] said to his father:[362] O my father! I have seen[363] eleven stars and the sun and the moon; I have seen them prostrating themselves before me.[364]

---

354. The story of Joseph as given in the Qur'ān 'is similar to but not identical with the Biblical story; but the atmosphere is wholly different. The Biblical story is like a folk-tale in which morality has no place. Its tendency is to exalt the clever and financially-minded Jew against the Egyptian, and to explain certain ethnic and tribal peculiarities in later Jewish history. Joseph is shown as buying up all the cattle and the land of the poor Egyptians for the State under the stress of famine conditions, and making the Israelites "rulers over Pharaoh's cattle." The Quranic story, on the other hand, is less a narrative than a highly spiritual sermon . . . explaining the seeming contradictions in life, the enduring nature of virtue in a world full of flex and change, and the marvellous working of God's eternal purpose in His Plan is unfolded to us on the wide canvas of history.' (AYA)

355. See P. I. n. 28.

356. (i.e., clear and unambiguous; a Book that contains no mysteries. Contrast this with Christianity which boasts of its 'mysteries'. 'There are three great and fundamental mysteries in the Catholic religion: (1) the Trinity, (2) the Incarnation; (3) the Eucharist; to which Mgr Kolbe adds that of the Mystical Body of Christ.' (CD. p. 659).

356-A. Or, 'an eloquent.' عربي means both Arabic and eloquent.

357. i.e., a Book delivered in the most chaste language of the Arabs. 'No people in the world, perhaps manifest such enthusiastic admiration for literary expression and are so moved by the word, spoken or written, as the Arabs. Hardly any language seems capable of exercising over the minds of its users such irresistible influence as Arabic . . . The triumph of Islam was to a certain extent the triumph of a language, more particularly of a book.' (Hitti, op cit. pp. 90-91).

358. The address is to mankind in general, and to the Arabs in particular, who formed the immediate audience of the Holy Discourse.

359. (O Prophet!).

360. i.e., this portion of the Qur'ān. The word قرآن denotes not only the whole volume but also any distinct section or chapter of it. Note that all the narratives in the Qur'ān are used didactically, not for the sake of telling a story but with a view to preaching a moral.

361. Joseph of the Bible (1910-1800 B.C.) a prophet of God. A beautiful youth and the eldest born of Jacob's beloved wife Rachel, he occupied the first place in his affections. Born at Haran, he was the eleventh son of Jocob and the elder the two sons of Rachel.

362. Jocob or Israel; another prophet of God. See P. I. vv. 132, 133.

363. (in a dream).

364. 'And he dreamed yet another dream, and told it his brethren, and said, Behold, I have dreamed a dream more; and, behold, the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me.' (Ge. 37:9). Among ancient Israel, 'prostration was deemed as the most reverential form of greeting'. (JE. VII. p. 89).

5. (قال . . . مبين) He said:[365] O my son! do not recount thy vision[366] to thy brethren,[367] lest they may scheme a plot against thee;[368] verily Satan is to men a manifest enemy.[369]

6. (وكذلك . . . حكيم) And thus[370] will thy Lord choose thee[371] and[372] teach thee of the interpretation of discourses, and will fulfil His favour upon thee and upon the house of Y'aqūb, as He has fulfilled it upon thy fathers, Ibrāhīm and Is-ḥāq formerly, verily thy Lord is Knowing, Wise.

SECTION 2

7. (لقد . . . السائلين) Assuredly in Yūsuf and his brethren[373] there have been signs[374] for the inquirers.

8. (اذ . . . مبين) Recall when they said: Surely Yūsuf and his brother[375] are dearer to our father than we,[376] whereas we are a band;[377] our father is in a manifest error indeed.[378]

9. (اقتلوا . . . صلحين) Slay Yūsuf or cast him away to some land;[379] your father's solicitude will be free for you[380] and you will be thereafter a people favoured.[381]

10. (قال . . . فعلين) Said a speaker from among them: do not slay Yūsuf,[382] but cast him into the bottom of a well,[383] some of the caravan[384] will take him up—if you must be doing.[385]

---

365. (knowing its interpretation immediately).

366. (presaging thy superiority to thy brethren).

367. (who were ten in number, and were born of another mother or other mothers).

368. 'And when his brethren saw that their father loved him more than all his brethren, they hated him, and could not speak peaceably unto him.' (Ge. 37 : 4). 'And his brethren envied him.' (Ge. 37 : 11). 'Upon Joseph centred the love of his father, Jacob who showered upon "the son of his old age" many tokens of special favour, and arrayed him in a "coat of many colours." 'This favouritism, however, excited the envy of his elder brothers, and Joseph increased their envy by telling them of two dreams which prognosticated his ruling over them.' (JE. VII. p. 246).

369. 'And his brethren said to him, Shalt thou indeed reign over us? or shalt thou indeed have dominion over us? And they hated him yet the more for his dreams, and for his words.' (Ge. 37 : 8). 'This affection of his father excited the envy and the hatred of his brethren; as did also his dreams which he saw.' ("Ant", II. 2 : 1).

370. i.e., as thou hast seen in thy dream.

371. (for His apostleship). 'Now Jacob was pleased with the dream; . . . because it declared the future happiness of his son.' ("Ant". II. 2 : 3).

372. (as a further gift).

373. i.e., sons of the same father but of different mothers.

374. (of His great providence).

375. Benjamin, the brother to Joseph on both sides.

376. 'Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was the son of his old age; and he made him a coat of many colours.' (Ge. 37 : 3). 'His father loved him above the rest of his sons, both because of the beauty of his body, and the virtues of his mind, for he excelled the rest in prudence.' ("Ant". II. 2.1). 'Upon Joseph centered the love of his father. (JE. VII. p. 246).

377. (of robust and powerful men, and so considering our strength and number we are entitled to a greater regard). 'They were deficient in nothing, but were of great souls, both of labouring with their hands and enduring of toil; and shrewd also in understanding.' ("Ant". II. 2 : 1).

378. (in his fondness for Joseph). 'This favouritism excited the envy of his elder brothers, and Joseph increased their envy by his telling them of two dreams which prognosticated his ruling over them.' (JE. VII. p. 246).

379. All this they said among themselves while conspiring against Joseph.

380. i.e., your father's favour will then be all for you, once Joseph was removed from the scene.

381. Or 'ye shall thereafter become a people righteous'; meaning; anyhow get rid of Joseph first, and then there will be time enough for you to repent of the crime and lead a righteous life. IQ favours the latter interpretation of صالين اى تائين.

382. (and thus avoid the charge of blood-guiltiness). 'And Reuben heard it, and he delivered him out of their hands; and said, Let us not kill him. And Reuben said unto them, Shed no blood, but cast him into this pit that is in the wilderness, and lay no hand upon him.' (Ge. 37 : 21, 22). 'So Reuben took the lad and tied him to a cord and let him down gently into the pit, for it had no water at all in it.' ("Ant". II. 3: 2).

383. The well they selected was a blind one—without water—so that there was no imminent danger of his life. 'And they took him, and cast him into a pit: and the pit was empty, there was no water in it.' (Ge. 37 : 24).

384. (while passing that way). There was constant influx of caravans and commercial travellers between Palestine and Egypt and between Arabia and Egypt via south-eastern Palestine.

385. (something effective).

11. (قالوا . . . لنصحون) They said: O our father! why is it that thou does not trust us with Yūsuf, whereas we are his well-wishers.

12. (ارسله . . . لحفظون) Send him with us tomorrow, that he may refresh himself[386] and play, and we are to be his guards.

13. (قال . . . غفلون) He said; verily it grieves me[387] that you should take him away, and[388] I fear lest a wolf may devour him,[389] while you are negligent of him.[390]

14. (قالوا . . . لخسرون) They said: if the wolf devoured him despite of our numbers,[391] we shall surely be lost.[392]

15. (فلما . . . يشعرون) So when they took him away and resolved[393] to place him in the bottom of the well, We revealed to him:[394] surely thou wilt[395] declare to them this their affair, while they will perceive it not.[396]

16. (وجاءو . . يبكون) And they came to their father at nightfall, weeping.[397]

17. (قالوا . . . صدقين) They said : father! we went off competing[398] and left Yūsuf by our stuff, so a wolf devoured him; and thou wilt not put credence in us : though we are the truth-tellers.

18. (وجاءو . . . تصفون) And they brought his shirt with false blood.[399] He said: nay! you have embellished for yourself an affair;[400] so patience is seemly.[401] And Allah is to be implored for help[402] in what you ascribe.

389. (as the land is full of wolves). Though now comparatively rare, in ancient Palestine, wolves were among the most important wild animals. (EBr. XVII. p. 120).

390. (and are occupied elsewhere).

391. (of robust and powerful young men).

392. i.e., does it stand to reason that we, ten strong, well-built young men shall not be able to guard this lad from the wolves ?

398. (with one another in racing) ذهبنا نستبق in the Kuran means, We went to compete, or contend, together in shooting, or in running.' (LL).

399. (thereon). 'And they took Joseph's coat, and killed a kid of the goats, and dipped the coat in the blood.' (Ge. 37:31) 'Rashi asks why they took a goat, and he says: because its blood is like human blood.' (Rashi, On Genesis, p. 401). 'They said that they had not seen Joseph, nor knew what mishap had befallen him, but that they had found his coat bloody, and torn to pieces, whence they had a suspicion that he had fallen among wild beasts, and so perished.' ("Ant". II. 3 : 4).

400. (i.e., you have invented a tale).

401. (is for me). صبر جميل is perfect faith in God without semblance of bitterness and complaint. (Th) 'European grammarians have often erred in their analysis of the phrase فصبر جميل in the Koran . . . The Arab commentators are right in regarding the words either as a compound خبر i.e., فأمري صبر جميل : And therefore my business (or duty) is (to show) becoming patience, or as a compound مبتدأ , i.e., فصبر جميل اجمل (امثل) : and therefore (to show) becoming patience is more seemly. The former of these two views seems to be the perferable one.' (WGAL. II. p. 286).

403. (travelling from Midian or Arabia to Egypt). There were 'some Arabians, of the posterity of Ismael, carrying spices and Syrian wares out of the land of Gilead to the Egyptians.' ("Ant." II. 3 : 3). 'And behold, a company of Ishmaelites came from Gilead with their camels bearing spicery and balm and myrrh, going to carry it down to Egypt.' (Ge. 37 : 25)

404. (and alighted near the well in which Joseph was cast).

405. (into the well, making use of which opportunity Joseph took hold of the cord and was pulled up).

406. 'He was now seventeen years old.' ("Ant." II. 3 : 3).

407. (—prudent traders as they were—)

408. (that they might sell him as a slave at exorbitant price).

409. i.e., the ten brethren on the one hand and the traders on the other.

410. i.e., the brethren, who had hastened to the caravan and claimed Joseph as their absconding slave, but eventually agreed to part with him for a low price.

411. 'And they drew and lifted up Joseph out of the pit, and sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites for twenty pieces of silver.' (Ge. 37 : 28). 'So they drew Joseph up out of the pit, and sold him to the merchants for twenty minus.' ("Ant." II. 3 : 3). 'The brothers then divided among themselves the purchase-money—twenty pieces of silver, each taking two pieces, with which they bought shoes.' (JE. VII. p. 249). درہم the Arabicized form of the Persian word درم, signifies a silver coin. 'And they sold him for a deficient, or an insufficient price : for prices of silver not many, so as to require their being weighed, but few, and therefore counted.' (LL)

412. Or 'abstemious'. This implies that the brethren were not at all keen on making a bargain out of Joseph ; they were only keen on getting rid of him anyhow.

413. He was a court officer of the highest rank. 'And they brought Joseph into Egypt,' (Ge. 37 : 28). 'And Joseph was brought down to Egypt; and Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard, an Egyptian, bought him of the hands of the Ishmaelites, which had brought him down thither.' (Ge. 39 : 1). 'And the Midianites sold him into Egypt unto Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh's, and captain of the guard.' (Ge. 37 : 36). 'He is described as a "saris" of Pharaoh and as "captain of the guard." The term "saris" is commonly used in the Old Testament of eunuchs, but occasionally, it seems to stand in a more general sense for "court official," and sometimes it designates a military officer.' (JE. X. p. 147). Potiphar literally means eunuch as well as "court-official," the most important offices having been in the Ancient Orient in the hand of royal slaves who were often eunuchs' (EBi. c. 3813). (For Misr see P. XI. n. 368).

414. 'And Joseph found grace in his sight and he served him : and he made him overseer over his house, and all that he had he put into his hand.' (Ge. 39 : 4). 'Now Potiphar an Egyptian, who was chief cook to King Pharoah, bought Joseph of the merchants, who sold him to him. He had him in the greatest honour, and taught him the learning that became a free man . . . He entrusted also the care of his house to him.' ("Ant." II. 4 : 1).

415. The officer and his wife were childless. Assuming that the husband was an eunuch, the need for adoption was obvious. 'Cases are on record, in both ancient and modern times, of eunuchs being married.' (DB. IV. p. 23).

416. (of Egypt). 'Seeing that he prospered in all that he did, his master appointed him superintendent of his household.' (JE VII. p. 246). 'Joseph found grace in the eyes of Potiphar, and was placed over the house of the latter, and over all his possessions." (Polano, The Talmud, p. 79).

417. i.e., He effects whatever He wills.

418. i.e., are not cognizant of the absolutely sure, though subtle, working of the Divine will.

419. (in mundane affairs).

420. (of religious truths).

421. (to lie with her). راوده عن الامر signifies, 'she endeavoured to turn him by blandishment, or by deceitful arts, or to entice him to turn, from the thing.' And the phrase in the text means, 'she desired, or sought, of him, copulation or his lying with her, using blandishment, or artifice, for the purpose.' (LL) 'His master's wife conceived a passion for him.' (JE. VII. p. 246). 'At this time Joseph was about eighteen years of age, and a lad of such beautiful appearance that his equal could not be found in the land of Egypt. . . He attracted the attention of Zelicha, Potiphar's wife. She was fascinated by his manners and handsome form and face, and declared to him day by day her passion.' (Polano, op. cit. p. 80).

422. Or 'locked.' غلّقت instead of اغلقت conveys a special degree of emphasis.

423. 'And it came to pass after these things that his master's wife cast her eyes upon Joseph; and she said. Lie with me.' (Ge. 39 : 7) 'And it came to pass, as she spake to Joseph day by day, that he hearkened not unto her, to lie by her, or to be with her. And it came to pass about this time, that Joseph went into the house to do his business; and there was none of the men of the house there within. And she caught him by his garment saying. 'Lie with me.' (Ge. 39 : 10, 11, 12).

424. (the very idea is so abominable!). This is Joseph's main reason for rejecting the immoral overtures of his master's wife.

425. i.e., the woman's husband.

426. (whose honour I am in duty bound to guard and uphold). This is Joseph's second reason, and in view of the Egyptian notions of sexual morality a very important one. It was not unchastity as such, but misconduct with a married woman that was condemnable in the Egyptian ethics. 'Pre-nuptial immorality was very lightly regarded; we find no prohibition concerning it in the Negative confession.' (ERE. V. p. 482).

427. (and is thus my benefactor). An additional ground for turning down the immodest proposal. 'But he refused, and said unto his master's wife, Behold, my master wotteth not what is with me in the house, and he hath committed all that he hath to my hand; there is none greater in this house than I; neither hath he kept back anything from me but thee, because thou art his wife: how then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?' (Ge. 39 : 8, 9). (Joseph) 'put her in mind that she was a married woman, and that she ought to co-habit with her husband only; and desired her to suffer these considerations to have more weight with her than the short pleasure of lustful dalliance, which would bring her to repentance afterwards.' ("Ant." II. 4 : 4).

428. i.e., those who violate the rules of religion and morality.

24. (ولقد . . . المخلصين) And assuredly she besought him,[429] and he[430] would have besought her[431] were it not that he[432] had seen the argument of his Lord.[433] Thus We did, in order that We might avert from him all evil[434] and indecency;[435] verily he was a single-hearted bondman[436] of Ours.

25. (واستبقا . . . اليم) And the two raced to the door,[437] and she rent his shirt from behind.[438] And the two met her master[439] at the door. She said:[440] what is the meed of him who intended evil towards thy household except that he be imprisoned, or an afflictive chastisement?[441]

26. (قال . . . الكذبين) He said:[442] it is she who solicited me.[443] And a witness from her own household[444] bore witness: if his shirt is rent in front, she speaks truth and he is a liar.

27. (وان . . . الصدقين) But if his shirt is rent from behind, she lies and he is a true-teller.

28. (فلما . . . عظيم) So when he[445] saw his shirt rent from behind, he said:[446] verily it[447] is the guile of you women; the guile of you women is mighty.[448]

29. (يوسف . . . الخطئين) Yūsuf! turn away therefrom;[449] and thou woman! ask forgiveness for thy sin; verily thou hast been guilty.

429. (and made advances to him).

430. (also, as was natural for a healthy young man).

431. i.e., would have responded to her advances.

432. (as a prophet of God, and as a man of saintly character).

433. i.e., had he not seriously considered the great guilt and utter filthiness of the act. Note that what is extolled is Joseph's supreme self-control, not his indifference or incapacity.

434. i.e., evil thoughts; sins intended and contemplated.

435. i.e., evil deeds; sins committed. 'Neither did pity dissuade Joseph from his chastity, nor did fear compel him to a compliance with her.' ("Ant." II. 4 : 4)

436. (and purified, as all prophets of God are). 'He opposed her solicitations, and did not yield to her threatings, and was afraid to do an ill thing.' ("Ant." II. 4: 4).

437. (he flying from her, and she running after him to detain him). 'And they strove, or contended, each with the other, to precede, or get before, to the door.' (LL) 'She attired herself in her richest garments, and was more ardent than ever in her appeals to Joseph; as that to escape them he turned and fled abruptly from her presence.' (Polano, op cit. p. 81).

438. (in her attempts to catch hold of him and detain him). 'And she caught him by his garment, saying, 'Lie with me: and he left his garment in her hand, and fled, and got him out.' (Ge. 39: 12). 'She caught his garment to stay him, but it sundered, and a portion remained in her hand.' (Polano, op. cit. p. 81).

439. i. e., her husband.

440. (with an alacrity for deception congenital in her sex, reinforced in this instance with a feeling of revenge).

441. 'And she laid up his garment by her until his lord came home. And she spake unto him according to these words, saying, The Hebrew servant, which thou hast brought unto us, came in unto me to mock me: And it came to pass, as I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled out. And it came to pass, when his master heard the words of his wife, which she spake unto him, saying, After this manner did thy servant to me; that his wrath was kindled.' (Ge. 39: 16-19) 'Lombroso and Ferrero actually regard deception as being "physiological" in women. They ascribe it to her weakness, ... to her periodical functional disturbances . . . . they adduce the testimony of such astute psychologists as Flaubert, Balzac, Zola, Schopenhauer, Weininger, Moliere, to support their contention that in woman lying is instinctive. We might add Shakespeare, Luther, Byron, Nietzsche, La Bruyere, and many others to the list.' (Ludovici. Woman, A Vindication, p. 281).

442. (in self-defence).

443. (by her artifice and blandishment). See n. 421 above.

444. i. e., a cousin of hers.

445. i. e., her husband.

446. (first turning to his wife).

447. i. e., this false charge of assault brought against Joseph.

448. Notice that this is not the dictum of Islam, but an observation of Potiphar——a view that has found favour with many non-Muslim savants and writers. 'Nature has not destined them, as the weaker sex, to be dependent on strength, but on cunning; that is why they are instinctively crafty, and have an ineradicable tendency to lie.' (Schopenhauer, Essays, p. 66) See also P. III. n. 178. Compare the following Buddhistic aphorism: 'Inscrutable as the way of a fish in water is the nature of women, those thieves of many devices, with whom truth is hard to find.' (ERE. V. p. 271) Compare also the observations of modern scientific writers :—'Every one is acquainted with instances from life or from history of women whose quick and cunning ruses have saved lover or husband or child . . . . It is inevitable, and results from the constitution of women, acting in the conditions under which they are generally placed.' (Havelock Ellis, Man and Woman, p. 196) '. . . from folklore and myth, from national proverbs and traditions, and from the text-books of the oldest religions, therefore, we learn that woman is two-faced, or false, or treacherous, or disloyal . . .' (Ludovici, The Woman, p. 304) 'Woman's tendency to ruse and deception is a constant, positive and life-promoting instinct.' (p. 307, n.). 'Finally among the great thinkers of Europe who have held the view that women are indifferent to truth, and incapable of rectitude. I would further mention Rousseau, Diderot, La Bruyere, and that great genius Kant.' (p. 320, n.) Another noted observer, Mr. Ingleby Oddit London coroner for twenty-seven years, only so recently as December, 1939 summed up his age-long experience in regard to the veracity of women in the following words:—

> 'I have come to the conclusion that most women are simply born liars and can't help themselves. I have seen women stand up in front of men and give the most detailed and precise information, every word of which has been a lie.' (The Sunday Express, London, 17th December, 1939).

449. i. e., pass over this affair and take no further notice of it. After rebuking his wife he turns to Joseph apologisingly.

30. (وقال . . . مبين) And women[450] in the town said:[451] the wife of the 'Azīz[452] has solicited her page,[453] he has inflamed her with love,[454] verily we see her in error manifest.

31. (فلما . . . كريم) Then when she heard of their cunning talk,[455] she sent to them a messenger[456] and prepared for them a repose,[457] and provided each with a knife.[458] And she said come forth to them. Then when they saw him, they were astonished at him,[459] and they made a cut in their hands,[460] and said: how perfect is God![461] no man is he; he is naught but a noble angel.[462]

32. (قالت . . . الصغرين) She said: this is he whom you reproached me for. Assuredly I solicited him, but he abstained.[463] Yet if he does not what I wish him to do, he is sure to be imprisoned and sure to be humbled.[464]

33. (قال . . . الجهلين) He said:[465] my Lord! prison[466] is dearer to me than that these women call me[467] to; and if Thou does not avert their guile from me I[468] should incline to them and become of the ignorant.[469]

450. (who in Egyptian society, as in modern European society, were a very important factor).

451. (among themselves as a matter of common gossip).

452. Potiphar of the Bible; literally 'of the exalted rank'. See n. 413 above.

453. See n. 421 above.

454. i. e., she has been completely infatuated by him, she has fallen so low as to attach herself to her own servant. Literally, 'he has affected her so that the love of him has entered beneath the precardium.'

455. i. e., slanderous society gossip; gibes at her infatuation.

456. (inviting them to a banquet). These women must have been ladies of high rank and status, fit to dine with the premiers wife.

457. (to sit upon and to recline at). In the houses of the rich 'floors were covered with heavy rugs, upon which guests, especially ladies, frequently sat'. (Breasted. 'History of Egypt, p. 88) 'In the tomb scenes the high-born ladies are often represented sitting on mats and carpets in the customary oriental fashion . . . . Rich carpets and mats and luxurious cushions were provided by highly-skilled artisans . . . . Stools and chairs had comfortable and beautiful leather seats.' (EMK. II. p. 856).

458. The Egyptians were familiar with the use of table cutlery.

459. (by his beauty and splendour no less than his saintly demeanour and self-possession).

460. (in bewilderment). The women, unable to turn their eyes from Joseph, cut their fingers while peeling the oranges, 'Her female friends who called to see her also admired Joseph, and lauded his beauty. On one occasion when fruit was set before the visitors, one of them passing the same, cut her fingers, and knew nothing of the accident till her attention was called to the blood upon her garments, for her eyes were fixed on Joseph, and her mind was filled with thoughts of his appearance.' (Polano, op. cit., p. 80).

461. The phrase 'denotes remoteness from imperfection or the like, or freedom therefrom; and may be rendered, 'I ascribe unto God remoteness from every imperfection or the like or freedom therefrom; generally implying wonder or admiration, so that it may be rendered, how far, or how free, is God from every imperfection! . . . . It implies wonder at the power of God as manifested in the creation of such a person as Joseph' (LL).

462. 'And Joseph was of a beautiful countenance, and comely to behold'. (Ge. 39 : 6, DV.). 'Joseph made a pleasing impression on all those who saw him'. (Rashi, op. cit., p. 415) 'A lad of such beautiful appearance that his equal could not be found in the land of Egypt (Polano, op. cit., p. 80).

But the expression ان هذا الا ملك كريم suggests moral dignity and sublimity of character rather than physical beauty or carnal charms. The highly-placed Egyptian ladies are paying a tribute to Joseph's character as human being rather than referring to the eroticising effect of his personality.

463. (and in spite of my advances he remained firm on the path of virtue and piety). 'And it came to pass, as she spake to Joseph day by day, that he hearkened not unto her, to lie by her, or to be with her.' (Ge. 39 : 10).

464. This she said turning to Joseph, and warning him of her revenge. 'She assured him . . . . that he must look for revenge and hatred from her, in case he rejected her desires, and preferred the reputation of chastity before his mistress.' ("Ant." II. 4 : 3).

465. (in utter aversion to the prospect of sin).

466. (In Egypt, in addition to the royal prisons, the great temples had prisons of their own. Imprisonment is mentioned as a penalty.' (DB. IV. p. 103).

467. (now by persuasion and now by threats). He chose to undergo the sharpest punishment rather than to enjoy his present advantages, by doing what his own conscience knew would justly deserve that he should die for it.' ("Ant." II. 4 : 4).

468. (as a mere mortal, unsupported by God's special protection).

469. Note the entire dependence of God's prophets on His protection.

إِنَّهُ هُوَ السَّمِيعُ الْعَلِيمُ ﴿٣٤﴾ ثُمَّ بَدَا لَهُم مِّن بَعْدِ مَا رَأَوُا الْآيَاتِ لَيَسْجُنُنَّهُ حَتَّىٰ حِينٍ ﴿٣٥﴾ وَدَخَلَ مَعَهُ السِّجْنَ
فَتَيَانِ ۖ قَالَ أَحَدُهُمَا إِنِّي أَرَانِي أَعْصِرُ خَمْرًا ۖ وَقَالَ الْآخَرُ إِنِّي أَرَانِي أَحْمِلُ فَوْقَ رَأْسِي خُبْزًا تَأْكُلُ الطَّيْرُ مِنْهُ ۖ
نَبِّئْنَا بِتَأْوِيلِهِ ۖ إِنَّا نَرَاكَ مِنَ الْمُحْسِنِينَ ﴿٣٦﴾ قَالَ لَا يَأْتِيكُمَا طَعَامٌ تُرْزَقَانِهِ إِلَّا نَبَّأْتُكُمَا بِتَأْوِيلِهِ قَبْلَ
أَن يَأْتِيَكُمَا ۚ ذَٰلِكُمَا مِمَّا عَلَّمَنِي رَبِّي ۚ إِنِّي تَرَكْتُ مِلَّةَ قَوْمٍ لَّا يُؤْمِنُونَ بِاللَّهِ وَهُم بِالْآخِرَةِ هُمْ كَافِرُونَ ﴿٣٧﴾
وَاتَّبَعْتُ مِلَّةَ آبَائِي إِبْرَاهِيمَ وَإِسْحَاقَ وَيَعْقُوبَ ۚ مَا كَانَ لَنَا أَن نُّشْرِكَ بِاللَّهِ مِن شَيْءٍ ۚ ذَٰلِكَ مِن فَضْلِ
اللَّهِ عَلَيْنَا وَعَلَى النَّاسِ وَلَٰكِنَّ أَكْثَرَ النَّاسِ لَا يَشْكُرُونَ ﴿٣٨﴾ يَا صَاحِبَيِ السِّجْنِ أَأَرْبَابٌ

34. (فاستجاب . . العليم) Then his Lord answered to him[470] and averted their guile from him. Verily He! He is the Hearer,[471] the Knower![472]

35. (ثم . . . حين) Thereafter it occurred to them,[473] even after they[474] had seen the signs,[475] to imprison him for a season.[476]

SECTION 5

36. (ودخل . . . المحسنين) And there entered with him two pages[477] in the prison. One of them[478] said: verily I saw myself[479] pressing wine;[480] and the other said:[481] verily I saw myself[482] carrying upon my head bread whereof the birds were eating;[483] declare to us the interpretation thereof, verily we see thee of the well-doers.[484]

37. (قال . . . كفرون) He said: no food will come to you for your sustenance but before it comes to you I shall have declared to you the interpretation thereof.[485] That[486] is of what my Lord has taught me.[487] Verily I have abandoned[488] the creed of a people who do not believe in Allah and who are disbelievers in the Hereafter.[489]

38. (واتبعت . . . يشكرون) And I have followed the creed of my fathers, Ibrāhīm and Is-ḥāq and Y'aqūb:[490] it is not for us to associate anything with Allah. That[491] is of Allah's grace upon us[492] and mankind, but most of mankind thank not.

470. i. e., prayer.

471. (for prayers).

472. (of heart's contrition).

473. (as politic).

474. i. e., Potiphar and his counsellors; or "the judges" as Talmud has it.

475. (and proofs of Joseph's innocence). 'They declared Joseph innocent. Joseph was nevertheless thrown into prison by Potiphar, who was anxious thus to save his wife a public exposure.' (JE. VII, p. 252) 'The judges then ordered that the rent garment should be brought to them, and upon an examination of the same they pronounced Joseph "not guilty". And still they sent him to prison, that the character of the wife of one as high in the state as Potiphar might not suffer.' (Polano, op. cit., p. 82).

476. (until the scandalous gossip of the town regarding Potiphar's wife had ceased). 'His wrath was kindled. And Joseph's master took him, and put him into the prison, a place where the king's prisoners were bound: and he was there in the prison.' (Ge. 39: 19, 20) The prison, in ntiquity, was often used merely for keeping a person in confinement until the leasure of the judicial or executive authority should be known. The dungeon into which Joseph was thrown 'was not an ordinary gaol, but a very special prison for dangerous criminals or political offenders . . . . It was in the well-known fortress Saru on the borders of the Palestine frontier.' (Yahuda, Accuracy of the Bible, p. 5).

477. (one was king's chief butler, the other his baker, both charged with an attempt to poison him). 'And Pharaoh was wroth against two of his officers, against the chief of the butlers, and against the chief of the bakers. And he put them in ward in the house of the captain of the guard, into the prison, the place where Joseph was bound.' (Ge. 40: 2, 3).

478. i. e., the chief butler.

479. (in a dream) 'In Egypt (as in Babylon, and indeed in other ancient countries) much importance was attached to dreams.' (DB. II. p. 772).

480. (from grapes). Cf. Ge. 40: 9-11.

481. i. e., the baker.

482. (in a dream).

483. Cf. Ge. 40: 16, 17.

484. The fellow-prisoners had evidently perceived in Joseph marks of wisdom, piety and beneficence——features characteristic of a prophet of God.

485. i. e., in no time you will have from me the interpretation of your dreams: you shall know everything before you are served with your next meal.

486. i. e., this gift of the interpretation of dreams.

487. i. e., there is in thus no personal credit to me; all this is God's free gift and blessing. Further, by making a distinct reference to the gift of God, Joseph distinguishes his power of true interpretation of dreams from the crudities of magicians and soothsayers.

488. (from the very first).

489. The Egyptians were of course ignorant of the Unity of God, and were for all practical purposes deniers of Resurrection. 'Presumably, this world appeared to the ancient Egyptian in a light so fine that in general he was unable to conceive of a time when it should be no more, and when no Egyptian should dwell any more on the banks of the Nile.' (DB. V. p. 181) Notice that it is the Qur'ān, not the Bible, that credits Joseph, as befits the character of a prophet, with this excellent discourse on true religion.

490. The founders of the Hebrew race and religion and well-known figures as preachers of the doctrine of unity. See also P. I n. 602.

491. i. e., this religion of monotheism.

492. i. e., the progeny of Abraham.

39. (يصاحبي . . . القهار) O my two fellow-prisoners![493] are sundry lords[494] better or Allah the One,[495] the Subduer?[496]

40. (ما تعبدون . . . يعلمون) You do not worship besides Him, but only names you have forged,[497] you and your fathers. Allah has not sent down for them any authority.[498] Judgement is but Allah's;[499] He has commanded that ye should worship none except Him. That is the right religion,[500] but most of the mankind know not.

41. (يصاحبي . . . تستفتين) O my two fellow-prisoners! as for one of you[501] he will pour out wine for his master,[502] and as for the other,[503] he will be crucified,[504] and the birds will eat off his head;[505] thus is decreed the affair of which you two enquired.[506]

42. (وقال . . . سنين) And he said to one of them,[507] who he imagined would be saved: mention me[508] before your master.[509] But Satan caused him to forget to mention him to his lord.[510] So that he stayed in the prison for several years.[511]

---

493. Noticeable is the deeply touching form of address.

494. (adored and worshipped by polytheistic peoples). In pagan ideology the universe is divided into separate departments, each department being presided over by its own deity.

495. i. e., admitting of no duality or plurality in His nature or person.

496. i. e., admitting of no partnership in His attributes. القهار as an epithet applied to God means, 'The Subduer of His creatures by His sovereign authority and power, and the Disposer of them as He pleaseth, with and against their will.' (LL).

497. i. e., they have no existence whatever anywhere save in your imagination, they are names absolutely without any corresponding reality.

498. (either in reason or in Revelation).

499. i. e., His alone is the all-inclusive Sovereignty. In the theocracy of Islam, God is the only Sovereign, the only Law-giver. And this has a direct bearing on the political theory of the Islamic State.

500. Science has now established that monotheism, not polytheism, was the original religion of mankind. See Marston, The Bible Comes Alive, pp. 25, 250.

501. i. e., the royal butler.

502. (as previously, and will be acquitted of the charge). Cf. Ge. 40: 12, 13.

503. i. e., the royal baker.

504. (after being duly convicted).

505. Cf. Ge. 14 : 18, 19. 'He told him that he had only three days in all to live, for that the [three] baskets signify that on the third day he should be crucified, and devoured by fowls.' ("Ant." II 5 : 3).

506. i.e., that is the true interpretation of your dreams.

507. (perhaps on the eve of his release).

508. (whose sentence has not even a semblance of justification).

509. (intimating to him that a person wholly innocent is undergoing imprisonment). 'But think on me when it shall be well with thee, and show kindness. I pray thee, unto me, and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house: For indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews: and here also have I done nothing that they should put me into the dungeon.' (Ge. 40: 14, 15). 'When thou art in authority, do not overlook us in this prison, wherein thou wilt leave us, when thou art gone to the place we have foretold; for we are in prison not for any crime, but for the sake of virtue and sobriety are we condemned to suffer the penalty of malefactors.' (Ant," II 5 :2)

510. 'Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but forgat him.' (Ge. 40 :23)

511. بِضْعَ سِنِين is any number of years from three to nine.

SECTION 6

43. (وقال . . . تعبرون) And the king said:[512] I saw[513] seven fat kine which seven lean ones are devouring and seven green corn-ears and seven others dry.[514] O chiefs! give me an answer in regard to my vision, if a vision you are at all able to interpret.[515]

44. (قالوا . . . بعلمين) They said: medleys of nightmare![516] and in the interpretation of nightmare[517] we are not skilled.

45. (وقال . . . فارسلون) Then the one of the two who was saved, now at length remembered and said: I shall declare to you interpretation thereof; so send me forth,[518]

46. (يوسف . . . يعلمون) Yūsuf, O saint![519] give an answer to us in regard to seven fat kine which seven lean ones are devouring and seven green corn-ears and seven others dry. Perchance I may return to the people;[520] perchance they may learn.

47. (قال . . . تاكلون) He said: you shall sow seven years as is your wont,[521] and what you reap leave in its ears,[522] except a little of it which you may eat.[523]

48. (ثم . . . تحصنون) Thereafter will come seven hard years which will devour what you have laid up beforehand for them, except a little which you shall preserve.[524]

49. (ثم . . يعصرون) Thereafter will come another year when people[525] will have rain[526] and when they will press grapes.[527]

512. (many days later, to his nobles).

513. (in a dream). For the Biblical description of Pharaoh's dreams see Ge. 41 : 1-8.

514. 'The Egyptians attached great significance to dreams.' (JE. VI. p. 252). 'Such a story was only conceivable in Egypt, where the goddes Hathor was worshipped in the form of a cow. And as there were seven districts each having its Hathor cow, hence the seven kine. In the tomb of Nefretiry, the beautiful wife of Rameses II, the seven cows are to be seen accompanied by the bull-god, as if they were marching in a solemn procession . . . This is the picture that appeared to Pharaoh in his dream.' (Yahuda, op. cit. p. 8)

Hathor, the goddess of fruitfulness and Isis, the goddess of the fertile soil of the Delta, were both cow-headed. So 'kino would be a natural emblem of fruitful season's; and 'seven was a sacred number in Egypt.' (DB. II. pp. 772-73).

515. Dreams 'occupied a constant place in Egyptian life'; and 'the role allocated to them was much larger than is generally thought.' (ERE. V. p. 34). 'A belief in the significance of dreams was particularly characteristic of Egypt.' (EBi. c. 2586).

516. (only falsely resembling true visions divinely sent).

517. (so confused and jumbled). Dream, like events of waking consciousness, come direct from God as well as from elsewhere; and the king's dream, the court nobles pointed out, was not of the first variety.

518. (to the person, in prison, who will interpret it to me).

519. Or, 'O man of truth and variety!'

520. (who have sent me).

521. 'Egypt's staple industry was her agriculture. She early became a granary for surrounding world.' (EBr. VIII. p. 50). The natural symbol for nutrition among a people so essentially agricultural as the Egyptian was the commonest domestic animal the cow.

522. (so as to keep it preserved from the pests).

523. What so much disturbed the king and confused his nobles 'was not the appearence of the seven cows in itself, but the accompanying details, that there were fat and lean kine, that they were followed by seven full and seven empty ears of wheat . . . And that was where Joseph's wisdom came in, that he eliminated any connection of the time with the Beyond, but regarded the whole dream as a prognostication of happenings in the land itself'. (Yahuda, op. cit. p. 8).

524. (for seeding purposes). For the Biblical version of this piece of story see Ge. 41 : 34-36. 'The economic conditions of Egypt are, and always have been, peculiar. The fertility of the soil is dependent upon a system of irrigation, which can only be kept in proper order by the central government; and the cultivator falls into a state of dependency and indebtedness to it at the same time . . . Joseph did not do more than was consistent with the conditions of the country, with the age in which he lived, and with the position in which he found himself placed at the time.' (DB. II., p. 770). 'Famines of long duration . . . are not unknown in Egypt . . . The sepulchral inscription of one Baba, found at El-Kab in Upper Egypt, represents the deceased, in an enumeration of his virtues, as saying, "I collected corn, as a friend of the harvest god. I was watchful at the time of sowing. And when a famine arose, lasting many years, 'I distributed corn to the city each year of famine." The age of Baba (end of the 17th dyes) would coincide approximately with that of Joseph; and it has ever been supposed that the famine referred to may be the same.' (DB. II. pp. 773-74).

525. Note that it is not Egypt but 'mankind' that is to have rain. This implies that the famine was not local but very widespread. 'The famine which took place in the time of Jacob was one of great extent, as it included Syria, Egypt, and the sources of the Nile, and was one of great severity and long duration.' (DB. I. p. 851).

526. 'The Pharaoh of Joseph is evidently resident in Lower Egypt', not at Thebes' (Rawlinson, Ancient Egypt, p. 146). And rains in Lower Egypt are frequent. 'Notwithstanding what some ancient authors write to the contrary, it often rains in Lower Egypt, and even snow has been observed to fall at Alexandria.' (Sale). See also EBr. VIII. p. 35. This disposes of the ignarant criticism of Noeldeke, that in Egypt 'rain is almost never seen.' (EBr. XV. p. 900, 11th Ed'.) Further, there is no mention in the Qur'ān of rain falling in Egypt. It is mankind, that is the people inhabiting other parts of the earth, adjacent to Egypt, that shall have rain, and not Egypt alone. And it is precisely the rains falling in these countries that occasion the inundations in the Nile—the proximate cause of the fertility of Egypt.

527. (grapes and other fruits). 'The custom of squeezing grapes into a cup is illustrated by Ebers from a text published by Navile from the temple at Edfu, where it is said that grapes squeezed into water formed a refreshing beverage, which was drunk by the king' (DB. II, p. 772).

50. (وقال . . . عليم) And the king said:[528] bring him[529] to me. Then when the messenger came to him, he said:[530] return to thy Lord, and ask him, what about the women who cut their hands? Verily my Lord is the Knower of their guile.[531]

51. (قال . . . الصدقين) He[532] said:[533] what was the matter with you when you solicited Yūsuf? They said: how perfect is God![534] we know not of any evil against him. The wife of 'Azīz said: now has the truth come to light.[535] It was I who sought to seduce him,[536] and he is of the truth-tellers.[537]

52. (ذلك . . . الخائنين) He said: that I did in order that he[538] may know that I did not betray him in secret, and that Allah guides not the guile of betrayers.[539]

528. (to his officers, after the chief butler had repeated all this).

529. (who has so exquisitely interpreted the dream).

530. —confident as he was of his innocence—

531. In other words: my innocence is well established before God, but before I come out of the gaol I must see it vindicted by a free public inquiry.

532. i.e., the king.

533. (to the Egyptian ladies).

534. See n. 461 above.

535. (and there is nothing for me but to make a plain confession).

536. (and it was not he who solicited me as I falsely accused him).

537. (in protesting his innocence). See nn. 426, 427, ff. and 463 above.

538. i.e., the Potiphar.

539. i.e., never allows it to prosper; never causes it to succeed.

PART XIII

53. (وما . . . رحيم) Nor do I acquit myself.[1] Verily the self[2] ever urges to evil save that self on whom my Lord has mercy;[3] verily my Lord is Forgiving,[4] Merciful.[5]

54. (وقال . . . امين) And the king said: bring him to me.[6] I shall single him out for myself. Then when he spoke to him,[7] he said: thou art to-day with us high-placed, intrusted.[8]

55. (قال . . . عليم) He said: set me over the store-houses of the land;[9] I shall be a keeper knowing.[10]

56. (وكذلك . . . المحسنين) In this wise[11] We established Yūsuf in the land so that he might settle therein wherever he wished.[12] We bestow of Our mercy on whom We will, and We are not to waste the wage of the well-doers.[13]

57. (ولا . . . يتقون) And surely the wage of the Hereafter is better for those who believe and ever fear.

SECTION 8

58. (وجاء . . . منكرون) And[14] the brethren of Yūsuf[15] came and entered unto him,[16] and he recognised them, while they did not recognise him.[17]

1. i.e., my own self is no exception to this general rule; I do not hold that my self is above all evil propensities.

2. (of every human being).

3. (and whom He specially guards, such as the selves of the prophets).

4. (to the punishment).

5. (to His chosen servants in a special measure).

6. (and not keep him as a subordinate to the Potiphar). 'And the thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of all his servants. And Pharaoh said unto his servants, Can we find such a one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?' (Ge. 4: 37, 38). According to ancient traditions, 'the king who made

Joseph his prime minister, and committed into his hands the entire administration of Egypt, was Apepia.' (Rawlinson, Ancient Egypt, p. 145). 'Two of the El-Amarna tablets show that a Semite held a position in Egypt quite analogous to that attributed to Joseph . . . The Pharaoh by whom Joseph was made the practical ruler of Egypt was one of the Hyksos kings.'' (JE. VII. pp. 251-52).

7. (and was still more impressed by him).

8. (with high offices) 'And Pharaoh said unto Joseph . . . Thou shalt be over my house, and according unto thy word shall all my people be ruled . . . See, I have set thee over all the land of Egypt.' (Ge. 41 : 39-41). 'And he made him ruler over all the land of Egypt. And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt.' (Ge. 43-44). Joseph now 'enjoyed great honours from the King, who called him, Prothom Phanech, out of regard to his prodigious degree of wisdom, for that name denotes revealer of secrets.' (''Ant.'' II. 6 : 1). See also n. 12 below.

9. 'With the viziership Joseph combined the office of director of the granaries.' (EBi. c. 2591). ''He was appointed superintendent of the royal granaries with viceregal powers.' (VJE. p. 326).

10. 'The magazines had to be carefully guarded and replenished, for on this the life of thousands might depend.' (EBi. c. 2591).

11. i.e., in this wonderful way.

12. (in sharp contrast to his confinement first in a well and then in prison) 'And Joseph went out over all the land of Egypt.' (Ge. 41 : 45). 'And Joseph went out from the presence of Pharaoh, and went throughout all the land of Egypt.' (Ge. 41:46).

13. (even in this world).

14. (after the famine had extended to such other countries as Palestine and Syria). 'And the dearth was in all lands ; but in all the land of Egypt there was bread.' (Ge. 41 : 54). 'And the famine was over all the face of the earth . . . And all countries came into Egypt to Joseph for to buy corn ; because that the famine was so sore in all lands.' (Ge. 41 :56, 57), 'For the land of Canaan was grievously afflicted with the famine ; and this great misery touched the whole continent'. (''Ant'', II. 6 : 2).

15. i.e., ten of them ; Benjamin alone excepted.

16. (to purchase food for its price). 'And the sons of Israel came to buy corn among those that came : for the famine was in the land of Canaan. And Joseph was the governor over the land, and he it was that sold to all the people of the land.' (Ge. 42 : 5, 6).

17. Or 'unto them he was a stranger.' 'And Joseph's brethren came, and bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth . . . . And Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him'. (Ge. 42 : 6-8).

59. (ولما . . . المنزلين) And when he had furnished them with their furnishing, he said: bring to me a brother of yours[18] from your father;[19] do you not see that I give full measure and that I am the best of hosts?[20]

60. (فان . . . تقربون) But if you do not bring him to me there shall be no measuring[21] for you from me[22] and you shall not approach me.[23]

61. (قالوا . . . لفاعلون) They said: we will certainly solicit him of his father[24] and certainly we will do it.[25]

62. (وقال . . . يرجعون) And he said to his pages:[26] put their merchandise[27] into their packs; they will find it when they reach back to their household; perchance they may return.[28]

63. (فلما . . . لحافظون) Then when they returned to their father, they said: father, the measuring[29] has been denied us,[30] so send thou with us our brother, and we shall get our measure; and certainly we shall be his guards.[31]

64. (قال . . . الراحمين) He said: I can trust you with him only as I trusted you with his brother before:[32] Allah is the best Guard. He is the Most Merciful of the merciful.[33]

18. i.e., Benjamin, whom they said their father had kept with him.

19. (and then you will be able to get his share also).

20. (so be sure to bring him with you the next time ye visit us).

21. (of corn).

22. (for then I would conclude that you had no such brother and wanted to cheat me with one more share).

23. 'By the life of Pharaoh ye shall not go forth hence, except your youngest brother come hither.' (Ge. 42 : 15).

24. i.e., we will endeavour to turn his father from him, by blandishment or artifice, and to make him yield him us.

25. i.e., we shall certainly do what we promise.

26. (confidentially, as the brethren were departing).

27. (with which they had bartered corn.) 'Then Joseph commanded to fill their sacks with corn, and to restore every man's money into his sack, and to give them permission for the way.' (Ge. 42 : 25). He also commanded his steward privily to put the money which they had brought with them for the purchase of corn into their sacks, and to dismiss them therewith: who did what he was commanded to do.' (Ant." II. 6 : 4).

28. i.e., visit us once more. Joseph did this with a view to give them an additional incentive to their coming back.

29. (of corn).

30. (unless we take our brother Benjamin with us). See Ge. 42 : 32-34.

31. (against any mischance). 'If thou wilt send our brother with us, we will go down and buy thee food : But if thou wilt not send him, we will not go down.' (Ge. 43 : 4-5). 'And Judah said unto Israel his father . . . I will be surety for him ; of my hand shalt thou require him : if I bring him not unto thee, and set him before thee, then let me bear the blame for ever.' (Ge. 43, 8, 9)

32. i.e., little is the faith that I put in your promises and assurances.

33. (so in Him alone I put my trust).

65. (ولما . . . يسير) And when the opened their pack they found their merchandise returned to them; they said: father! what more can we desire? here is our merchandise returned to us,[34] we shall have portions for our family and shall guard our brother and shall add another measure of a camel-load;[35] this[36] is only an easy measure.[37]

66 (قال . . . وكيل) He said: I will by no means send him with you until you give us an assurance by Allah that you will bring him back to me, unless it be that you are prevented.[38] Then when they gave him their assurance, he said: Allah is Witness[39] over what we had said.

67. (وقال . . . المتوكلون) And he said: my sons! do not enter[40] by one gate,[41] but enter by different gates,[42] and I cannot avail you against Allah at all;[43] judgement is but Allah's. On Him I rely, and on Him let the relying rely.

68. (ولما . . . يعلمون) And when they entered as their father had enjoined them to enter, it[44] did not avail them against Allah[45] at all It was only a craving in the heart of Y'aqūb[46] that he satisfied, verily he was endued with knowledge, for We had taught him;[47] but most people know not.

34. 'And it came to pass as they emptied their sacks, that, behold, every man's bundle of money was in his sack.' (Ge. 43 : 35).

35. (to what we obtained the last time).

36. i.e., the corn we have brought.

37. (and would not suffice for long).

38. (by some insuperable impediment, and are thus forcibly detained).

39. Jacob, as befits a prophet of God, again and again invokes God in the course of the whole transaction.

40. (the city).

41. —strangers as you will be in that foreign land—

42. (to avoid suspicion of being spies as well as to avert the evil eye). 'The belief that a glance can damage life and property ...was held also by the Jews in Biblical times.' (JE. V., p. 280). Their father had commanded them not to show themselves all passing through one and the same gate, but that each one should enter at his own gate so that the evil eye should not hover over them.' (Rashi, op. cit., p. 436). The belief in evil eye has been and is still very widely spread. 'Evil eye' is the common English term for an influence 'the belief in which may justly be described as both primeval and universal, and which is in many countries as current to-day as it was in prehistoric times. Its equivalent may be said to exist in every written language, living or dead . . . Bacon says there is a belief in a power of working evil which is ejaculated upon any object it beholds, that has existed in all times and in all countries. Notwithstanding modern science and education, this belief is as strong as ever it was; and, if this were the place, endless authentic stories might be adduced to prove it . . . In Scripture, envy and the evil eye are synonymous!' (ERE. V. p. 608). 'The blessing in Nu. 6 : 24-26 was intended to protect Israel against the evil eye.' (DB. IV. p. 605). For the OT references to the evil eye see Dt. 28 : 54-56, Is. 13 : 18, Ps. 92 : 11, Ps. 23 : 6, 28 : 22. And for the NT references see Mt. 6 : 22-23, 20 : 18, MK. 7 : 22, LK. 11 : 34.

43. (with any precaution or advice of mine).

44. i.e., the caution advised by Jacob.

69. (ولما . . . يعملون) And when they entered unto Yūsuf, he betook his full brother to himself and said:[48] I am thy own brother Yūsuf, so do not grieve over what they[49] have been doing.[50]

70. (فلما . . . لسرقون) And when he had furnished them with their furnishing,[51] he placed the drinking-cup[52] in his brother's pack.[52-A] Thereafter[53] a crier cried, caravan men! you are thieves.[53-A]

71. (قالوا . . . تفقدون) They said, as they turned to them: what is it that you are missing?

72. (قالوا . . . زعيم) They[54] said: we miss the royal cup and for him who brings it shall be a camel-load,[55] and of him I[56] am a guarantor.

73. (قالوا . . . سرقين) They said by God! assuredly you know[57] that we have not come to work corruption in the land, nor we have been thieves.

74. (قالوا . . . كذبين) They said: what shall be the penalty of him,[58] if you are found liars?[59]

75. (قالوا . . . الظلمين) They said: his penalty is that he in whose pack it is found shall himself be the recompense thereof:[60] thus we recompense the wrong-doers.[61]

48. (when alone with him).

49. i.e., the ten brethren.

50. (to us from envy). And Joseph also confided to him that he would employ a stratagem to retain him with himself.

51. (while they were departing).

52. (which was also used to measure corn).

52-A. And he commanded the steward of his house, saying, Fill the man's sacks with food, as much as they can carry, and put every man's money in his sack's mouth. And put my cup, the silver cup, in the sack's mouth of the youngest, and his corn money. And he did according to the word that Joseph had spoken.' (Ge. 44: 1-2).

53. i.e., as they started on their journey.

53-A. This man must have been the steward of the royal guest-house. (Cf. Ge, 44 : 3-6).

54. i.e., officers deputed to search the suspected caravan.

55. (of corn, as reward).

56. This personal pronoun may refer either to Joseph or to one of his subordinate officials.

57. (as you must have found by our conduct).

58. (who as the result of our search shall be found to have stolen it).

59. (in your denying the guilt).

60. (and he shall be made a bondman in satisfaction of the same). 'With whomsoever of thy servants it be found, both let him die, and we also will be my lord's bondmen.' (Ge. 44 : 9).

61. i.e., this is the law among us, the descendants of Abraham.

76. (بدا . . . عليم) Then he[62] began with their sacks before the bag of his brother;[63] then he brought it forth from the bag of his brother.[64] In this wise We contrived for Yūsuf.[65] He was not to get his brother by the law of the king,[66] except that Allah willed.[67] We exalt in degrees[68] whom We will, and above every knowing one is a Knower.[69]

77. (قالوا . . . تصفون) They[70] said: if he steals, then[71] a brother of his has stolen afore.[72] But Yūsuf concealed it in himself, and disclosed it not to them. He said;[73] you are in evil plight,[74] and Allah is the Best Knower of what you ascribe.

78. (قالوا . . . المحسنين) They said: O 'Azīz[75] verily he has a father, an old man very aged;[76] so take one of us in his stead;[77] verily we perceive thee to be of well-doers.

79. (قال . . . لظالمون) He said: God forbid that we should take anyone but him with whom we found our stuff;[78] verily we then[79] should be the wrong-doers.

62. i.e., Joseph, or one of his deputies.

63. 'Then they speedily took down every man his sack to the ground, and opened every man his sack. And he searched, and began at the eldest, and left at the youngest.' (Ge. 44 : 11, 12).

64. 'And the cup was found in Benjamin's sack' (Ge. 44 : 12).

65. (a stratagem carried out so neatly and finely at every stage).

66. (of Egypt). In the law of Egypt the thief was not reduced to servitude, but was scourged, and obliged to restore the double of what he had stolen.

67. (by inspiring into Joseph the course of His universal Plan).

68. (of knowledge and wisdom).

69. i.e., human knowledge, howsoever profound, is after all relative; in God alone Perfection dwells. The passage is introduced as a corrective to human conceit.

70. i.e., the ten brethren.

71. —it is not surprising, as—

72. The alusion is to the following little story. Joseph, when he was a child, had taken away and destroyed an idol of gold belonging to his maternal grandfather so that he might not worship it.

73. (with himself).

74. i. e., guilty of a far worse crime than Joseph and Benjamin whom you so falsely accuse of theft.

75. Joseph was now the Potiphar.

76. (who loves Benjamin passionately). 'Then Judah came near unto him, and said: O my Lord . . . Now therefore when I come to thy servant my father, and the lad be not with us; seeing that his life is bound up in the lad's life: it shall come to pass, when he seeth that the lad is not with us, that he will die.' (Ge. 44: 18, 30-31). 'Then Judah came near unto him, and said: O my Lord . . . . let thy servant abide instead of the lad a bondman to my Lord, and let the lad go up with his brethren.' (Ge. 44: 18, 33).

77. (as a slave, and allow Benjamin to go with us).

78. 'And he said, God forbid that I should do so: but the man in whose hand the cup is found, he shall be my servant; and as for you, get you up in peace unto your father.' (Ge. 44:17).

79. i. e., in that case; if we did such injustice.

SECTION 10

80. (فلما . . . الحكمين) Then when they despaired of him[80] they counselled together privately. The eldest of them said: do you not remember that your father has taken an assurance from you before Allah?[81] and earlier you have been remiss in your duty in respect of Yūsuf; so I will by no means go forth from the land[82] until my father gives me leave[83] or Allah judges for me,[84] and He is the Best of judges.

81. (ارجعوا . . . حفظين) Return to your father and say: father! verily thy son has stolen, and we testify not save according to what we know,[85] and of the unseen we could not be watchers.[86]

82. (وسئل . . . لصدقون) And inquire of the people[87] of the city where we have been[88] and of the caravan with whom we have travelled hither;[89] and verily we speak truth.

83. (قال . . . الحكيم) He[90] said: nay! your minds have embellished for you an affair.[91] So patience is comely.[92] Perchance Allah may bring them all[93] to me;[94] verily He! only He is the Knowing,[95] the Wise.[96]

84. (وتولى . . . كظيم) And he turned away from them,[97] and said:[98] O my grief for Yūsuf! and his eyes were whitened[99] with grief, and he was choked with sorrow.

85. (قالوا . . . الهلكين) They said:[100] by Allah, thou wilt not cease remembering Yūsuf until thou art wizened[101] or thou be of the dead.

80. i. e., of moving Joseph. The pronoun refers to Joseph.

81. See verse 66.

82. (of Egypt).

83. (to return to him).

84. (i. e., God decrees in our favour by softening the heart of the Egyptian Vizier, and Benjamin is set free.)

85. (by our personal knowledge; as eye-witness).

86. (when We gave you our solemn promise) i. e., had we known that he would commit theft we would not have given you the pledge to bring him back safely.

87. (through thy own trusted agents, if our statement is not worthy of credence).

88. i. e., of the inhabitants of the capital of Egypt.

89. (and they will support our statement).

90. (who knew Benjamin too well to believe that he had committed theft).

91. See P. XII, n. 400.

92. See P. XII, n. 401.

93. i. e., Joseph, Benjamin and the eldest son now detained in Egypt.

94. So unfailing and unswerving was Jacob's faith in the goodness of God!

95. i. e., so He knows well the whereabouts of my three sons.

96. i e., so He will restore them to me at an opportune moment.

97. (in sorrow and grief).

98. (now that this latest wound was fresh).

99. i. e., his sight grew dim and his pupils lost their deep blackness, becoming of a pearl colour.

100. (resenting his excessive love for Joseph).

101. (by this excessive affection and affliction). حرض is one who though not actually dead is on the point of death.

87. (يبني . . . الكفرون) My sons! go and ascertain about Yūsuf and his brother,[104] and despair not of the mercy of Allah; none despair of the mercy of Allah except a people disbelieving.[105]

88. (فلما . . . المتصدقين) And when they entered unto him,[106] they said:[107] O 'Azīz! distress[108] has seized us and our family and we have brought scant goods,[109] so give us full measure[110] and be charitable to us;[111] verily Allah rewards the charitable.[112]

89. (قال . . . جهلون) He said:[113] remember what you did[114] to Yūsuf and his brother while you were ignorant,[115]

90. (قالو . . . المحسنين) They said:[116] art thou Yūsuf? He said: I am Yūsu and this is my brother; Allah has surely been gracious to us;[117] verily he who fears God[118] and endures affliction,[119] then Allah leaves not the wage of well-doers to waste.

91. (قالوا . . . لخطئين) They said:[120] verily Allah has chosen thou above us,[121] and we have been sinners indeed.

102. (and make no complaint to any mortal).

103. (of His mercy and loving-kindness; of His beneficient dealings with men).

104. (and seek the means of his delivery).

105. A true man of faith never gives up his hope in God; it is only those wanting in faith who mistrust His goodness.

106. (at the end of their next journey to Egypt).

107. (with a view to moving Joseph to pity).

108. i. e., extreme want and hunger.

109. i. e., barter of very little purchasing value.

110. (of corn, out of pity, disregarding the worthlessness of our barter).

111. Or, 'bestow alms on us.'

112. Or 'the almsgivers'. The effect of this humiliating prayer, coming as it did from persons so hauahty and arrogant as the ten brethren were, on a man of God like Joseph, can easily be imagined.

113. ——moved greatly to pity and compassion, Joseph could no longer hold himself——

114. (so wantonly, by way of persecution).

115. (of the consequences of your actions). This he said half excusing their malicious conduct.

116. (ejaculating in wonder).

117. (by preserving us and by bringing us together).

118. (and shuns evil).

119. (with his faith in God remaining unshaken).

120. (exclaiming in penitence).

121. (and now we realize the justice of this preference).

93. (اذهبوا . . . اجمعين) Go with this shirt of mine and cast it upon my father's face; he shall become clear-sighted;[124] and bring to me all your family.

SECTION 11

94. (ولما . . . تفندون) And when the caravan[125] had departed their father said:[126] surely I feel the breath of Yūsuf, if you do not think I am doting.[127]

95. (قالوا . . . القديم) They[128] said: by Allah! thou art in thy old-time illusion.[129]

96. (فلما . . . تعلمون) Then when the bringer of the glad tidings arrived, he cast it upon his face and he became clear-sighted. He said: did not I tell you,[130] that I knew from Allah what you knew not.[131]

97. (قالوا . . . خطئين) They said: father! pray for us forgiveness of our sins,[132] verily we have been sinners.

98. (قال . . . الرحيم) He said: presently[133] I shall pray of my Lord for forgiveness for you, verily He! only He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.

---

122. (from me) In identical language did the holy Prophet freely forgive a whole population of his worst foes who were entirely at his mercy, when he entered into Makka as a conqueror at the head of a powerful army.

123. (so He also is sure to forgive you).

124. (once more, and his full sight will be restored to him).

125. (from Egypt for Canaan).

126. (to those around him).

127. (and thus dismiss the thing as incredible).

128. i. e., those about Jacob.

129. i. e., steeped in thy delusion that Joseph is still living and that he shall meet thee.

130. (when you were incredulous of my words).

131. (and now all of you see my faith justified).

132. (and forgive them thouself).

133. i. e., at the most suitable time; presumably in the early hours of the morning.

99. (فلما . . . آمنين) Then when they[134] entered unto Yūsuf,[135] he betook his parents[136] to himself[137] and said:[138] enter Miṣr, Allah willing, in security.[139]

100. (ورفع . . . الحكيم) And he raised his parents to the throne, and they[140] fell down before him prostrate.[141] And he said:[142] father! this is the interpretation of my dream aforetime,[143] my Lord has now made it come true;[144] and surely He did well by me when he took me forth from the prison,[145] and has brought you from the desert after Satan had stirred strife between me and my brethren;[146] verily my Lord is Subtle[147] to whom He will. Verily He, only He, is the Knowing,[148] the Wise.[149]

101. (رب . . . بالصلحين) My Lord![150] Thou hast given me[151] of the dominion,[152] and hast taught me of the interpretation of discourse,[153] Creator of the heavens and the earth! Thou art my Patron in the world and the Hereafter.[154] Make me die a Muslim and join me[155] with the righteous.

102. (ذلك . . . يمكرون) This[156] is of the tidings of the unseen,[157] which We Reveal to thee.[158] Nor wast thou with them[159] when they resolved on their affair while they were plotting.

134. i. e., the whole family.

135. (towards the end of their journey, at the frontier of Egypt, where Joseph had gone forth to receive them). 'And Joseph made ready his chariot, and went up to meet Israel his father, to Goshen.' (Ge. 46 : 29).

136. Joseph's own mother had been dead since his childhood; it was her sister Leah who had brought him up, and had married his father.

137. (and received them in a manner worthy of their honour).

138. (to his whole family).

139. 'And Joseph placed his father and brethren and gave them a possession in the land of Egypt in the best of the land.' (Ge. 47 : 11) For Miṣr see p. XI. n. 368.

140. i. e., his parents and brethren.

141. (as was the Hebrews' customary mode of obeisance).

142. (in acknowledging his gratitude to God).

143. See verse 4.

144. Note that Joseph in keeping with his character as a prophet of God is all humility and attributes everything good and worthy, not to himself but to the grace of God.

145. Joseph refrains from referring to his confinement in the well, from a motive of generosity, lest his brethren might be abashed.

146. So it is the devil, not the brethren themselves, who is responsible for the relentless and inhuman persecution of Joseph! Could magnanimity go further?

147. i. e., knowing with respect to the subtleties and niceties of things and affairs.

148. i. e., acquainted with every subtlety in accordance with His perfect wisdom.

149. i. e., One who manages every nicety with perfect wisdom.

150. Thus Joseph prayed, when after a long happy life he felt an earnest yearning to return to his Lord.

151. (by way of material gifts).

152. 'After the king, the vizier is the highest dignity in the state with all the rights and powers accruing to the king. In a word he replaces the king.' (Yehuda, op. cit., p. 16) Joseph was the de facto 'ruler over all the land of Egypt.' (Ge. 41 ; 43).

153. (by way of spiritual gifts).

154. Once more the sense of modesty in Joseph's prayer is transparent.

155. (after death).

156. (full and true history of Joseph).

157. i. e., unknown to them in any other way.

158. (O Prophet!) It is only through Divine revelation that the Prophet comes to know of this story in its true details.

159. i. e., Joseph's brethren.

103. (وما . . . بمؤمنين) And most of the people, though thou desiredest ardently, are not going to be believers.[160]

104. (وما . . . العلمين) And thou[161] dost not ask of them[162] any wage for it,[163] it[164] is but an admonition[165] to the worlds.

SECTION 12

105. (وكاين . . . معرضون) And how many a sign[166] in the heavens and the earth they[167] pass by, while they are averse therefrom.

106. (وما . . . مشركون) And most of them[168] do not believe in Allah except as associators.[169]

107. (افامنوا . . . يشعرون) Are they then secure against this, that there may come upon them an overwhelming of Allah's torment,[170] or that there may come upon them the Hour of a sudden while they perceive not?[171]

108. (قل . . . المشركين) Say thou:[172] this is my way; I call to Allah resting upon an insight—I, and whoso follows me. Hallowed be Allah![173] and I am not of the associators.[174]

160. (in spite of every convincing argument).

161. (O Prophet!).

162. i. e., the infidels.

163. i. e., for the preaching and publishing of the Qur'ān.

164. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

165. (so whosoever denies it, does so to his own peril). The mission of Islam is thus unequivocally universal. The true faith is to be preached to all nations, and the whole of human race is to be summoned to the belief in the One God.

166. (of His unity, providence and omnipotence).

167. i. e., the infidels.

168. i. e., mankind, people is general.

169. i. e., attributing partners to Him in spite of their profession of monotheism. The description covers not only the open idolatry of the polytheistic peoples but also its veiled forms such as Christolatry, Mariolatry, the worship of heroes, the adoration of saints and the deification of Reason. This may also have a reference to the pseudo-monotheism of the Greek philosophers, specially of Plato, who in common with others was never "fully monotheistic, even if he shows a strong tendency in that direction now and again . . . . His divinity is and remains God and yet gods at the same time, and he continues to use the singular and the plural with an indifference which seems to us thoroughly perverse.' (Gurlae's Plato's Thought, p. 178).

170. غاشية من عذاب signifies, 'punishment that is general, or universal, in its extent.' (LL)

171. (its approach).

172. (O Prophet! to the infidels).

173. i. e., He is above all taint of being joined by others.

174. 'This hatred of idolatry has been found even among the most uncivilized followers of the Prophet . . . . In this horror of all objective symbols, in the simplicity of its liturgical forms, in the absence of a priestly class, and therefore of all belief in such doctrines as apostolical succession, inherent sanctity, indissoluble vows, the duty of confession or powers of absolution, Islam stands alone among the religions of the world'. (Bosworth Smith, op. cit., pp. 265-266).

109. (وما . . . تعقلون) And we sent not before thee any save men[175] unto whom We revealed[176] from among the people of the towns.[177] Have then they not travelled about in the land?[178] Have they observed how has been the end of those before them?[179] And surely the abode of the Hereafter is best for the God-fearing. Do you not then reflect?

110. (حتى . . . المجرمين) Respited were they[180] until when the messengers[181] had despaired[182] and imagined that they were deluded,[183] there came unto them Our succour;[184] and whosoever We willed was delivered.[185] And Our wrath is not warded off[186] from a sinning people.[187]

111. (لقد . . . يؤمنون) Assuredly in their stories[188] is a lesson[189] for men of understanding. It[190] is not a discourse concocted but a confirmation of what went before it, and a detailing of everything,[191] and a guidance and a mercy to a people who believe.

187. (so let the pagans of Makka beware of their ultimate fate).

188. i. e., in the histories of the former prophets and their peoples.

189. (by which one may take warning or example). Narratives in Qur'ān have invariably to point a moral, to teach that God has always finally rewarded the righteous and punished the wicked.

190. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

191. (necessary to a perfect faith).

The Thunder. XIII

(Makkan, 6 Sections and 43 Verses)

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION 1

1. (المرا . . . يؤمنون) Alif. Lam. Mim. Ra.[192] These are the verses of the Book. And what is sent down to thee[193] from thy Lord is the truth,[194] but most of the people believe not.

2. (الله . . . توقنون) Allah it is who has raised the heavens without the pillars[195] you can see, then He established Himself on the Throne[196] and subjected the sun and the moon[197] to Himself each running to a period determined.[198] He directs the affair[199] and details the signs,[200] that haply you may be convinced of the meeting with your Lord.[201]

---

192. See P. I n. 28.

193. (O Prophet).

194. (and therefore these verses ought to have been believed in).

195. i. e., without any visible support. 'The pillars that are not seen being his power.' (LL)

196. (of authority and majesty). See P. VIII, n. 485.

197. (to His laws and to do service). So that these awe-inspiring luminaries are mere helpless creatures, and there are no such absurd things as solar and lunar 'gods', whose cult has been common among polytheistic nations. 'It is no exaggeration to say,' observe Sir William Jones and Dr. E. B. Tylor, 'that one great fountain of all idolatry in the four quarters of the globe was the veneration paid by men to the sun.' (PC. II. p, 286) 'Moon-worship, naturally ranking below Sun-worship in importance, ranges through nearly the same district of culture.' (p. 299).

198. i. e., in accordance with the fixed laws of nature, governed and regulated by the will of God.

199. (of His whole creation with supreme justice and wisdom). i. e., He is not only the Creator, but also the constant Ruler and the continuous Governor.

200. (of His unity, might and providence, both in the Holy Qur'ān and in the universe).

201. (by reflecting thereon).

3. (وهو . . يتفكرون) And He it is who has stretched the earth.[202] and placed therein firm mountains[203] and rivers,[204] and of every fruit He has placed therein two in pairs.[205] He covers the night with the day; verily in that are signs for a people who ponder.[206]

4. (وفی . . . يعقلون) And in the earth are regions adjoining[207] and gardens of vine and corn-fields,[208] and palm-trees clustered and single, watered by the same water; yet some We make excel others in food.[209] Verily in that[210] are signs[211] for people who reflect.

5. (وان . . . خلدون) And shouldest thou marvel,[212] then marvellous[213] is their[214] saying: when we have become dust, shall we be in a new creation?[215] These are they who disbelieved in their Lord;[216] and these!—shackles round their necks; and these shall be the fellows of the Fire as abiders therein.

6. (ويستعجلونك . . العقاب) And they ask thee[217] to hasten the evil[218] before the good,[219] while examples have already gone forth before them.[220] And thy Lord is Owner of forgiveness[221] to mankind despite their wrong-doing; and verily thy Lord is Severe in requital.[222]

---

202. (which is neither a goddess nor a Mother, but a helpless created being like the rest of the universe).

203. (which are neither the home nor the embodiment of the Divine power, as assumed by superstitious communities). 'There are few peoples who have not looked upon mountains with awe and reverence, or who have not paid worship to them as to gods or spirits associated with them in various ways.' (ERE. VIII, p. 863).

204. (which are neither 'mothers' nor 'protectors' as imagined by polytheistic peoples). 'Rivers are often worshipped as such——e. g., by the Celts who regard them as divine or as fertile mothers, while in Egypt the Nile was worshipped as a man.' (ERE. IX, p. 204) In India the cult of the Ganges, the Jamna, the Sarju, the Bhagirathi, the Nerbada, and other rivers is too well known to need description.

205. Pairs such as sweet and sour, large and small, etc. It may also refer to sex in plants.

206. All these grand performances testify to His eternal power and Godhead.

207. (yet with different propensities some fruitful, others barren, some plain, some hilly, etc.).

208. It is God Almighty who grows all corn and vegetations, and there are no such absurdities as a 'corn-god' or a 'vegetation-god.'

209. i. e., all fed and watered the same way, yet so different in yielding the harvests.

210. i. e., in all these diversities, in spite of fundamental uniformity.

211. (of Allah's providence).

212. (O Prophet! at the infidels' denying the Resurrection).

213. (because of its being so foolish and so devoid of reason).

214. i. e., the pagans'.

215. The argument is : creation is the everyday experience of pagans, why should they be incredulous at all of renewed creation?

216. (thereby ; by denying the fact of Ressurrection).

217. (O Prophet! by way of challenge).

218. i. e., the Divine punishment.

219. i. e., before the expiry of the good : before their term of respite is over. They provoke thee to call down the Divine wrath on them for their impertinence.

220. (of the destruction of ancient infidel nations, and this ought to serve as an eye-opener).

221. (as a rule).

222. (at its proper occasion).

ع كَفَرُوا لَوْلَا أُنْزِلَ عَلَيْهِ آيَةٌ مِّنْ رَّبِّهٖ ۗ إِنَّمَا أَنْتَ مُنْذِرٌ وَّلِكُلِّ قَوْمٍ هَادٍ ۝٧ اَللّٰهُ يَعْلَمُ مَا تَحْمِلُ كُلُّ أُنْثٰى وَمَا

7 (ويقول . . هاد) And those who disbelieve say: why is not a sign[223] sent down to him from his Lord?[224] Thou art but a warner,[225] and to every people there is a guide.

SECTION 2

8. (الله . . . بمقدار) Allah knows what every female bears[226] and what the wombs want and what they exceed,[227] and with Him everything is in due measure—[228]

9. (عٰلم . . . المتعال) Knower of the hidden and the manifest! the Great! the Exalted![229]

10 (سواء . . . بالنهار) Alike to him[230] is he among you who hides the word and he who proclaims it, and he who hides himself in the night and he who goes about freely in the day.[231]

11. (له . . وال) For each[232] one are attendant angels,[233] before him and behind him. They guard him with Allah's command.[234] Verily Allah alters not what is with a people,[235] until they[236] alter what is within them.[237] And when Allah intends evil to a people,[238] there is no turning it back, nor is for them any patron, beside Him.[239]

12. (هو . . . الثقال) He it is who shows lightning to you[240] for inspiring fear[241] and hope,[242] and brings up the heavy clouds.[243]

---

223. i. e., a miracle such as we desire. A miracle, in Islamic phraseology, is an event deviating from the usual course of events, appearing at the hands of him who claims to be a prophet, as a challenge to those who deny this, of such a nature that it makes it impossible for them to produce the like of it. It is God's testimony to the truth of his prophets, but clearly an act of God, not of the prophet. See also P. I. nn. 534, 538, P. VII. nn. 374, 681.

224. Cf. the NT:—'An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonah.' (Mt. 12:39).

225. (and not a wonder-worker, O Prophet!). Clearly the Holy Qur'ān treats the miraculous as subordinate to the moral evidence of the Prophet's mission.

226. (in her womb, whether it is a male or female, etc.).

227. 'The wombs' falling short of completion, and of their exceeding therein, is in respect of the body of the factors, and the period of gestation, and the number borne.' (LL)

228. i. e., His knowledge is absolutely perfect and comprehensive, the female womb only serving as an example or a type.

229. 'above the description of the attribute of the created being.' (LL)

230. (in respect to His omniscience).

231. i. e., to Him everything big or small, open or secret, is known equally well.

232. i. e., for everyone.

233. i. e., succeeding one another by turns.

234. Not only is God's knowledge perfect and all-comprehensive, but great also is His solicitude for everyone of His creatures. This refutes and repudiates those polytheistic religions which hold their 'chief God' to be entirely unconcerned with the affairs of the world.

235. i. e., their state of grace.

236. (themselves).

237. (by constant disobedience).

238. (in consequence of their persistent unruliness in the face of warnings and reminders).

239. i. e., when at long last the sinner has drawn upon himself the Divine wrath, there is none to hold it back.

240. So lightning, as a created, natural force; like all other natural forces, is a mere inanimate instrument in God's hands; and thunderstorm is not a semi-divine Being who, as taught by certain superstitious religions, could harm anybody.

241. (lest it may strike).

242. (that it may be the harbinger of plentiful rains).

243. (with rains).

بحمده والملائكة من خيفته ويرسل الصواعق فيصيب بها من يشاء وهم يجادلون في الله وهو شديد
المحال ﴿١٣﴾ له دعوة الحق والذين يدعون من دونه لا يستجيبون لهم بشيء إلا كباسط كفيه إلى
الماء ليبلغ فاه وما هو ببالغه وما دعاء الكافرين إلا في ضلال ﴿١٤﴾ ولله يسجد من في السموت والأرض
طوعا وكرها وظللهم بالغدو والأصال ﴿١٥﴾ قل من رب السموت والأرض قل الله قل أفاتخذتم من
دونه أولياء لا يملكون لأنفسهم نفعا ولا ضرا قل هل يستوي الأعمى والبصير أم هل تستوي
الظلمت والنور أم جعلوا لله شركاء خلقوا

13. (ويسبح . . . المحال) And the thunder[244] hallows His glory,[245] and so do the angels,[246] in awe of Him, and He sends the thunderbolts and smites with them whomsoever He will.[247] They dispute concerning Allah,[248] and He is strong in prowess.[249]

14. (له . . . . ضلل) To Him alone is the true call;[250] and those whom they call upon beside Him[251] answer them not at all,[252] save as is answered one stretching out his palms to water that it may[253] reach his mouth, while it will reach it not. And the supplication of infidels[254] goes only astray.[255]

15. (ولله . . . والاصال) And to Allah bows[256] whosoever is in the heavens and the earth, willingly or unwillingly,[257] and also their shadows[258] in mornings and evenings.[259]

244. (so awful and so frightening to you, but in reality a mere created, inanimate object).

245. (along with innumerable others celebrates of His praise). Compare and contrast the attitude of various polytheistic peoples. 'Thunder was one of the great gods of the Germans.' (Menziez, History of Religion, p. 29) 'The place of the Thunder-god in polytheistic religion is similar to that of the Rain-god, in many cases even to entire coincidence. But his character is rather of wrath than of beneficence.' (PC. II. p. 262) According to the Greeks, 'the thunderbolt was cast by Zeus.' (ERE. X. p. 370) 'The Mandans attributed thunder to the flapping of the wings of a huge bird.' (ib.)

246. (whom ye look upon as Beings divine or semi-divine). For angelolatry see P. I. n. 132; III. n. 586.

247. It is He, the all-powerful One, who does all this, and not any minor 'thunder-god', such as Zeus (of the Greeks), Jupiter (of the Romans) or Indra (of the Hindus). See PC. II. pp. 262-265.

248. i. e., the polytheists still go on disputing and wrangling about His uniqueness.

249. It was not beneficence but wrath and prowess that the polytheists attributed to their thunder-gods; hence it is this particular misconception that is noticed, and the All-sufficiency of God is pointed out in this direction.

250. i. e., He alone is able to respond to all prayers and invocations.

251. ——be they idols, nature-gods, hero-gods, saints, etc. etc.——

252. (because of their inability to grant any prayer).

253. (of itself).

254. (always misdirected, addressed now to this god and now to that goddess).

255. i. e., is simply futile, because addressed to beings who (or which) are themselves powerless. 'Belief in the one Deity, sovereign in the universe carries with it a sense of security and of elevation which has an ennobling influence on thought and life. It makes man strong and free in the world. Here is the secret of the transmission which Islam effects for the African animist . . . the monotheist . . . lifts his face to heaven and gives his worship to the Supreme alone, and asks help from a Power which, he is assured, has no rival.' (ERE. X. p. 171).

256. (acknowledging subjection).

257. Every thing, high or low, is after all a created being, and must as such submit to the laws of the Creator, whether willingly, as in the case of good believers and inanimate objects, or unwillingly, as in the case of devils and rebels.

258. ——as contradistinguised from substances——

259. The two periods when the shadows are the longest and most prominent.

كَخَلْقِهِ فَتَشَابَهَ الْخَلْقُ عَلَيْهِمْ ۚ قُلِ اللَّهُ خَالِقُ كُلِّ شَيْءٍ وَهُوَ الْوَاحِدُ الْقَهَّارُ ۝ أَنزَلَ مِنَ السَّمَاءِ مَاءً فَسَالَتْ أَوْدِيَةٌ

16. (قل . . . القهار) Say thou:[260] who is the Lord of the heavens and the earth?[261] Say thou: Allah. Say thou: have you then taken beside Him, patrons who own neither benefit nor hurt to themselves?[262] Say thou: are there the blind and the seeing alike[263] or are darkness and light alike?[264] Or have they set up associates with Allah, who have created as He has created,[265] so that the creation[266] has become dubious to them? Say thou: Allah is the Creator of everything; and He is the One,[267] the Subduer [268]

17. (انزل . . . الامثال) He sends down water from the heaven, so that the valleys flow according to their measure; then the torrent bears the scum on top; and from that over which they kindle a fire seeking[269] ornaments or goods[270] arises a scum like thereto: thus Allah propounds[271] the truth and falsity. Then as for the scum,[272] it departs as rubbish, and as for that which benefits mankind,[273] it lasts on the earth:[274] thus does Allah propound similitudes.

18. (للذين . . . المهاد) For those who answer their Lord[275] is ordained good.[276] And as for those who do not answer their Lord, if they had[277] all that is in the earth together with its like, they would ransom themselves with that.[278] These! for them shall be an evil reckoning; and their resort is Hell, a hapless bed!

260. (O Prophet!) Here follows 'one of the best passages of the Qur'ān.' (Rev. E. M. Wherry).

261. i. e., their Creator, Sustainer, and Preserver.

262. So utterly powerless are they!

263. So dissimilar is an infidel from a believer!

264. So removed is unbelieved from belief!

265. (according to your own admission).

266. (of His on the one hand and the creation of theirs on the other).

267. (both in His Person and in His attributes).

268. i. e., God of real and irresistible power, where infinite mercy and loving-kindness are not to be brought at the expense of His supreme majesty and intensity.

269. (to make thereby).

270. (for use).

271. Or 'likeneth, or conformeth.' (LL)

272. (of untruth and guilt).

273. i. e., truth and virtue.

274. So ultimately it is truth that wins and untruth that perishes.

275. i. e., who respond to His call, and believe and act righteously.

276. (in the Hereafter).

277. (on the Day of Judgment).

278. (but all to no purpose).

19. (افن . . . الباب) Shall he then who knows that what has been sent down upon thee is the truth belike him who is blind?[279] Only the men of understanding are admonished—

20. (الذين . . . الميثاق) those who fulfil the covenant of Allah,[280] and do not violate the bond;

21. (والذين . . الحساب) And those who enjoin what Allah has commanded to be enjoined[281] and fear their Lord, and dread the evil-reckoning;[282]

22. (والذين . . . الدار) And those who preserve[283] seeking the pleasure of their Lord and establish prayer and spend,[284] privately and publicly, out of what We have provided them, and combat evil with good. These: for them is the happy end in the Abode:

23. (جنت . . . باب) Gardens Everlasting;[285] they shall enter them, and also whosoever would have acted righteously from among their fathers and spouses and progeny. And angels shall enter unto them from every portal, saying:

24. (سلم . . . الدار) peace be upon you for you patiently persevered.[286] Excellent then is the happy end in the Abode!

279. (to spiritual verities).

280. (to obey Him and His apostles implicitly).

281. i. e., those who do their duty by God and man regularly.

282. i. e., dread going near infidelity, as 'evil reckoning' is peculiar to the infidels.

283. (in their faith in the face of trials and tribulations).

284. (in God's cause).

285. See P. X. n. 455.

286. (in your faith).

يفسدون في الأرض أولئك لهم اللعنة ولهم سوء الدار ۝ الله يبسط الرزق لمن يشاء ويقدر و
فرحوا بالحيوة الدنيا وما الحيوة الدنيا في الآخرة إلا متاع ۝ ويقول الذين كفروا لولا أنزل عليه آية
من ربه قل إن الله يضل من يشاء ويهدي إليه من أناب ۝ الذين آمنوا وتطمئن قلوبهم
بذكر الله ألا بذكر الله تطمئن القلوب ۝ الذين آمنوا وعملوا الصلحت طوبى لهم وحسن مآب ۝
كذلك أرسلنك في أمة قد خلت من قبلها أمم لتتلوا عليهم الذي أوحينا إليك وهم يكفرون بالرحمن
قل هو ربي لا إله إلا هو عليه توكلت وإليه

25. (والذين . . . الدار) And those who violate the covenant of Allah[287] after its ratification[288] and sunder what Allah has commenced to be conjoined[289] and act corruptly in the earth—upon them is a curse[290], and for them shall be the evil Abode.[291]

26. (الله . . . . متاع) Allah increases the provision for whom He will[292] and also[293] He stints. They[294] exult in the life of this world, whereas the life of this world, by the side of the Hereafter,[295] is only a passing enjoyment.[296]

SECTION 4

27. (ويقول . . . اناب) And those who disbelieve say: why is it that a sign[297] is not sent down to him from his Lord?[298] Say thou: verily Allah sends astray whom He will,[299] and guides to Himself whoso turns in the penitence –

28 (الذين . . . القلوب) They are those who believe and whose hearts find comfort in the remembrance of Allah. Lo! in the remembrance of Allah hearts do find comfort.[300]

29. (الذين . . . مآب) Those who believe and work righteous works, for them is bliss[301] and a happy resort.

---

287. (to obey Him and His apostles implicitly).

288. (by themselves). This may refer to the religious instinct innate in every human being.

289. See P. I. n. 118.

290. (in this world).

291. (in the Hereafter).

292. (in consonance with His universal Plan, irrespective of his merits and demerits; so to be prosperous in this world does not necessarily mean to be favoured of God).

293. (for whomsoever He will, irrespective of his merits and demerits; so to be in adversity does not necessarily mean to be in disfavour of God).

294. i. e., the infidels.

295. ق in the text is demonstrative of comparison.

296. (and unworthy of serious notice).

297. i. e., a miracle such as we desire.

298. See nn. 223, 224 above.

299. (in consequence of his own want of will to believe).

300. (and contentment). This state of serene tranquillity and steady peace of mind, is clearly marked off from boisterous merriment, the invariable concomitant of material pleasures to be inevitably followed by a sad reaction. The greater the communion of man with his Maker, the more contented, the more optimistic would he be in his outlook of life.

301. (in the Hereafter). طوبیٰ is 'an announcement, meaning a good, final state.' (LL)

متاب ۝۳۰ ولو ان قرانا سيرت به الجبال او قطعت به الارض او كلم به الموتى بل لله الامر جميعا افلم
ييئس الذين امنوا ان لو يشاء الله لهدى الناس جميعا ولا يزال الذين كفروا تصيبهم بما
صنعوا قارعة او تحل قريبا من دارهم حتى ياتي وعد الله ان الله لا يخلف الميعاد ۝۳۱ ولقد
استهزئ برسل من قبلك فامليت للذين كفروا ثم اخذتهم فكيف كان عقاب ۝۳۲ افمن هو قائم
على كل نفس بما كسبت وجعلوا لله شركاء قل سموهم ام تنبئونه بما لا يعلم في الارض ام بظاهر
من القول بل زين للذين كفروا مكرهم وصدوا

30. (كذلك . . متاب) Thus[302] We have sent thee[303] to a community before whom other communities have passed away, in order that thou mayest recite to them what We have revealed to thee; yet[304] they deny the Compassionate. Say thou: He is my Lord,[305] there is no god but He; on Him I rely, and to Him is my return in penitence.

31. (ولو . . . الميعاد) And if there were a Qur'ān whereby[306] mountains could be moved or the earth could be traversed[307] or the dead could be spoken to,[308] it would be in vain.[309] Aye![310] the affair[311] belongs to Allah[312] entirely. Have not then those who believe[313] yet known[314] that had Allah willed,[315] He would have guided all mankind.[316] And a rattling adversity[317] does not cease to befall those who disbelieve[318] for what they have wrought or to alight near their dwelling,[319] until Allah's promise comes;[320] verily Allah does not fail his tryst.

SECTION 5

32. (ولقد . . . عقاب) And assuredly mocked were messengers before thee;[321] then I respited those who disbelieved;[322] thereafter I seized them, so how terrible has been My requital.[323]

---

302. i. e., in the way We have sent apostles to former nations.

303. (O Prophet!).

304. (instead of gratefully accepting this guidance).

305. (and Guardian).

306. i. e., by whose power. The word قرآنا may also be rendered by 'a Recital'.

307. i. e. by whose means.

308. i. e., by whose aid.

309. (for even then the disputants would not believe). 'The apodosis of جواب لو the answer, complement, or correlative of lau لو is frequently omitted, when the context readily suggests it.' (WGAL. II. p. 8).

310. (for these and other miracles and not real, operative causes).

311. (of guidance).

312. (Who only guides those who have a will to believe).

313. (and long for the wholesale conversion of the infidels).

314. (with a knowledge wherewith they should despair يئس is here synonymous with علم (LL).

315. (in accordance with His universal Plan).

316 (but clearly He did will in this way, and left man the master of his own destiny).

317. Now death, now defeat.

318. The reference is to the Makkan pagans.

319. (and thus be a means of frightening them).

320. (in the form of death and Judgment).

321. (O Prophet!).

322. (and bore long with them).

323. How terrible! how devastating!

33. (افمن . . . هاد) Is He, then, who is ever standing over every soul with what he earns,[324] like unto other? And yet they have set up associates[325] unto Allah. Say thou: name them.[326] Would you inform Him of what He knows not on the earth[327] Or is it[328] by way of outward enquiry.[329] Aye! fair-seeming to those who disbelieve is made their plotting,[330] and they have been hindered from the way [331] And whom Allah sends astray, for him there is no guide.

34. (لهم . . . واق) For them is chastisement in the life of this world,[332] and surely the chastisement of the Hereafter is harder [333] None can protect them from Allah.

35. (مثل . . . النار) The likeness of the Garden which has been promised to the God-fearing is: running streams underneath, its fruit eternal, and so is its shade. This is the ending of those who fear Allah, and the ending of the infidels is the Fire.

36. (والذين . . . ماب) They to whom the Book[334] has been given rejoice at what has been sent down to thee,[335] and of their bands are some who reject part of it.[336] Say thou: I have only been bidden that I should worship Allah and should not associate aught with Him.[337] To Him I call,[338] and to Him is my return.[339]

37. (وكذلك . . . واق) And thus[340] We have sent it[341] down as a judgement in Arabic.[342] And wert thou[343] to follow their vain desires,[344] after what has come to thee of knowledge,[345] thou wilt not have any patron or protector against Allah.

324. i. e., the Omnipresent, Omniscient God.

325. (who are not only not aware of anything but are as such altogether unreal and imaginary).

326. i. e., let me know who and what are these associate-gods.

327. He has no knowledge of their existence, because they have no existence.

328. i. e., your practice of calling them associate-gods.

329. (corresponding to no objective reality at all).

330. (and their fondness for dubious ways and distorted views).

331. (in consequence of their own foolish contumacy).

332. (such as defeat and disease and disgrace).

333. i. e., not only far more intense, but also everlasting.

334. (of old, and who still believe in its pure, unadulterated form).

335. (believing it to be continuation and culmination of previous Revelations). The allusion is to the early proselytes to Islam from Judaism and Christianity.

336. i. e., its portions which do not tally with their perverted, corrupted Scriptures.

337. This, the first fundamental doctrine of Islam, that of monotheism, is the one agreed to by all the ancient Scriptures.

338. (as a prophet). This, the second fundamental doctrine, that of prophethood, is also agreed to by other Scriptures.

339. (in common with the rest of His creatures). This, the third and last of the fundamental doctrines, that of Resurrection, is also agreed to by all. What, then, thus runs the argument, of the central doctrines of Islam is left for the Jews and Christians to take exception to?

340. i. e., just as We sent, with the central unity, different messages to different peoples.

341. i. e., the Holy Qur'ān.

342. The older prophets too have had their messages in one language or the other.

343. ——to assume what is on other grounds an impossibility——

344. (based on their corrupted and perverted texts).

345. (by Revelation, and therefore absolutely true and perfect).

لهم أزواجا وذرية ۚ وما كان لرسول أن يأتي بآية إلا بإذن الله ۗ لكل أجل كتاب ۝ يمحوا الله ما

سيعلم الكفر لمن عقبى الدار ۝ ويقول الذين كفروا لست مرسلا ۚ قل كفى بالله شهيدا بيني و بينكم ۙ ومن عنده علم الكتب ۝

SECTION 6

38. (ولقد . . . كتاب) Assuredly We have sent messengers before thee[346] and We made for them wives and progeny;[347] and it is not for a messenger to produce a verse,[348] except by the command of Allah;[349] for every term there is a Book.[350]

39. (يمحوا . . . الكتب) Allah abolishes what He will,[351] and keeps;[352] and with Him is the mother of the Book.[353]

40. (وان . . . الحساب) Whether We show thee[354] part of what We have promised them,[355] or We take thee away,[356] on thee is only the preaching,[357] and on Us is the reckoning.[358]

41. (اولم . . . الحساب) Do they not see that[359] We visit the land[360] diminishing it by its borders?[361] Allah judges and there is no reviser of His judgement; and He is Swift in reckoning.[362]

42. (وقد . . . الدار) And of a surety there plotted those before them,[363] but to Allah belongs the plotting[364] entirely. He knows what each soul earns.[365] And soon will the infidels know for whom is the happy ending of the Abode.

43. (ويقول . . . الكتب) And those who disbelieve say:[366] thou art not a sent one. Say thou: Allah is a sufficient witness between me and you, and also he with whom is knowledge of the Book.[367]

346. (so thy apostleship is no novelty).

347. (so it is no reproach to thee if thou art blessed with wives and children). There is absolutely no contradiction between a family life and the dignity of the prophetic office; and there is nothing unholy or unclean about marriage and married life. This refutes and negatives the position of the Christians and others who have held that woman and the begetting of children were repugnant to spirituality. Influenced by the teachings of Paul, 'the celibate life was exalted above that of marriage, . . . on the ground that there was in marriage and its relations something impure and defiling.' In the language of some Gnostic sects, it belonged to the kingdom of Demiurgus, the creator of the material universe and of the human body as a part of it, not to that of the higher Christ-Aeon, who was Lord of the kingdom'. (DCA. I. p. 324). Orders of celibates are found in many religious systems, specially in Buddhism and Christianity, and marriage and marital relations have been considered very low by these two religions. See also P. I. n. 108.

348. (of the Scriptures).

349. This is said in answer to the Jews and Christians who objected to the Qur'ān on the ground of its differences from the ancient Scriptures. They are told that the Omniscient God alone legislates in consonance with the time and place, and it is not in the hands of any mortal prophet to promulgate of his own accord any particular Divine law or commandment.

350. (with laws and ordinances suited to that particular age). So there is no force in the objection that the Qur'ān differed in certain of its commandments with previous Revelations.

351. (of His commandments, by a subsequent Decree).

352. (whatsoever He will of His commandments, by a subsequent confirmation).

353. i. e., the Preserved Tablet; the original of all Divine decrees.

354. (O Prophet! within thy life-time).

355. (of Our punishment).

356. (before the punishment is inflicted on them).

357. (of the message, in any case). All this is said with reference to the challenge of the Makkans for the infliction of immediate punishment.

358. (whether in this world or in the next).

359. (as a prelude to their final chastisement).

360. (of Makka and its suburb). Or 'We bring destruction upon the land'; اتاه also meaning 'he destroyed him or it.' (LL)

361. i. e., curtailing it of its sides, districts, one by one, by the Islamic conquests.

362. (no matter how long a period of respite He may grant).

363. (against the prophets of their times).

364. (that is real and effective).

365. (of good and evil, as He requires each accordingly).

366. (to the Prophet, forgetful of their own end).

367. i. e., ancient Scriptures containing prophecies about the advent of the holy Prophet.

Sūrah Ibrāhīm

Ibrahim. XIV

(Makkan. 7 Sections and 52 Verses)

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION 1

1. (الر . . . الحميد) Alif. Lam. Ra.[368] This is a Book which We have sent down to thee that thou mayest bring forth the mankind from darkness[369] to light,[370] by the command of their Lord, to the path of the Mighty, the Praiseworthy.

2. (الله . . . شديد) Allah, whose is whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth, and woe be to the infidels because of a torment severe[371]——

3. (الذين . . . بعيد) those who prefer the life of this world to the Hereafter, and hinder people from the way of Allah and seek crookedness therein,[372] these are in error far-off.

368. See P. I. n. 28.

369. (of sin and superstition).

370. (of truth and virtue).

371. (that awaits them).

372. (that they may mislead others thereby).

وَيَهْدِي مَنْ يَشَاءُ ۚ وَهُوَ الْعَزِيزُ الْحَكِيمُ ۝ وَلَقَدْ أَرْسَلْنَا مُوسَىٰ بِآيَاتِنَا أَنْ أَخْرِجْ قَوْمَكَ
مِنَ الظُّلُمَاتِ إِلَى النُّورِ وَذَكِّرْهُمْ بِأَيَّامِ اللَّهِ ۚ إِنَّ فِي ذَٰلِكَ لَآيَاتٍ لِكُلِّ صَبَّارٍ شَكُورٍ ۝ وَإِذْ قَالَ مُوسَىٰ
لِقَوْمِهِ اذْكُرُوا نِعْمَةَ اللَّهِ عَلَيْكُمْ إِذْ أَنْجَاكُمْ مِنْ آلِ فِرْعَوْنَ يَسُومُونَكُمْ سُوءَ الْعَذَابِ وَيُذَبِّحُونَ أَبْنَاءَكُمْ
وَيَسْتَحْيُونَ نِسَاءَكُمْ ۚ وَفِي ذَٰلِكُمْ بَلَاءٌ مِنْ رَبِّكُمْ عَظِيمٌ ۝ وَإِذْ تَأَذَّنَ رَبُّكُمْ لَئِنْ شَكَرْتُمْ لَأَزِيدَنَّكُمْ ۖ ع
وَلَئِنْ كَفَرْتُمْ إِنَّ عَذَابِي لَشَدِيدٌ ۝ وَقَالَ مُوسَىٰ إِنْ تَكْفُرُوا أَنْتُمْ وَمَنْ فِي الْأَرْضِ جَمِيعًا فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ
لَغَنِيٌّ حَمِيدٌ ۝ أَلَمْ يَأْتِكُمْ نَبَأُ الَّذِينَ مِنْ قَبْلِكُمْ قَوْمِ نُوحٍ وَعَادٍ وَثَمُودَ ۛ

4. (وما . . . الحكيم) And We sent not a messenger[373] but with the speech of his people that he might expound the message to them.[374] Then[375] Allah sends astrays whom He will and guides whom He will. He is the Mighty,[376] the Wise.[377]

5. (ولقد . . . شكور) And assuredly We sent Mūsā with Our signs saying: bring forth thy people from darkness into light, and remind them of the annals of Allah.[378] Verily therein[379] are signs for everyone patient[380] and thankful.[381]

6. (واذ . . . عظيم) And recall when Mūsā said to his people: remember the favour of Allah upon you when He delivered you from the house of Fir'awn who were imposing upon you evil torment, slaying your sons[381-A] and letting your women live,[382] and in it was a terrible trial[383] from your Lord.

SECTION 2

7. (واذ . . . لشديد) And recall when your Lord proclaimed :[384] if you give thanks I will increase you,[385] and if you disbelieve, My torment is severe.

8. (و قال . . . حميد) And Mūsā said: if you disbelieve ---you and all those on the earth---then verily Allah is Self-sufficient,[386] Praiseworthy.[387]

---

373. (in the past).

374. (Our will and law the more perfectly and readily).

375. i. e., after the Message has been clearly preached and fully explained.

376. i. e., Able to guide one and all.

377. i. e., Guiding according to the best and wisest Plan.

378. ايام الله literally 'days of Allah', signifies great events manifesting God's special grace or damnation.

379. i. e., in those landmarks of history.

380. i. e., persevering in the hour of adversity. صبار is one having an intense degree of patience.

381. i. e., appreciator of His favours and blessings. شكور also is an intensive epithet.

381-A. 'Government officials would be employed to see the king's orders carried out, and no doubt for several years many thousands of innocent lives were sacrificed.' (Rawlinson, Moses, his Life and Times, p. 12).

382. See P. I. n. 208.

383. (for you). See P. I. n. 209.

384. (through me). This is continuation of Moses' speech.

385. (in prosperity and Divine favour). Cf. the Bible: 'O give thanks unto the Lord for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever. O give thanks unto the God of gods: for his mercy endureth for ever. O give thanks unto the Lord of lords: for his mercy endureth for ever .... O give thanks unto the God of heaven: for his mercy endureth for ever.' (Ps. 136: 1-3, 26).

386. i. e., in need of nobody's thanks.

387. i. e., Himself the Owner of all perfection, and therefore of all praise.

وَالَّذِينَ مِن بَعْدِهِمْ لَا يَعْلَمُهُمْ إِلَّا اللَّهُ جَاءَتْهُمْ رُسُلُهُم بِالْبَيِّنَاتِ فَرَدُّوا أَيْدِيَهُمْ فِي أَفْوَاهِهِمْ وَقَالُوا إِنَّا

أَنتُمْ إِلَّا بَشَرٌ مِّثْلُنَا تُرِيدُونَ أَن تَصُدُّونَا عَمَّا كَانَ يَعْبُدُ آبَاؤُنَا فَأْتُونَا بِسُلْطَانٍ مُّبِينٍ ۝ قَالَتْ
لَهُمْ رُسُلُهُمْ إِن نَّحْنُ إِلَّا بَشَرٌ مِّثْلُكُمْ وَلَٰكِنَّ اللَّهَ يَمُنُّ عَلَىٰ مَن يَشَاءُ مِنْ عِبَادِهِ وَمَا كَانَ لَنَا أَن نَّأْتِيَكُم
بِسُلْطَانٍ إِلَّا بِإِذْنِ اللَّهِ وَعَلَى اللَّهِ فَلْيَتَوَكَّلِ الْمُؤْمِنُونَ ۝

9. (الم . . . مريب) Has not the tidings come to you of those before you: the people of Nūḥ and the 'Aād and the Thamūd and those after them? None knows them[388] save Allah. There came to them their messenger with evidences,[389] but they[390] put their hands[391] to their mouths,[392] and said: verily we disbelieve in that with which you have been sent,[393] and regarding that to which you call us[394] we are in doubt disquieting.

10. (قالت . . مبين) Their messengers said: What! is there doubt about Allah, the Maker of the heavens and the earth? He calls[395] you that He may forgive you of your sins[396] and retain you[397] till a term fixed. They said: you are but[398] like us;[399] you mean to turn us aside from what our fathers have been worshipping; so bring us a manifest authority.[400]

11. (قالت . . . المؤمنون) Their messengers said to them: we are naught but human beings like you,[400-A] but Allah bestows favour on whom He will of His bondmen,[401] and it is not for us to bring you a miracle[402] except by the command of Allah. On Allah then let the believers rely.[403]

---

388. (in full and true details). They are little known to history.

389. i. e., powerful arguments as well as miracles.

390. i. e., the rejectors.

391. (out of defiance and indignation).

392. (to prevent them from delivering their message in full) في is also used in the sense of الى as in this place. (LL)

393. (according to your pretension).

394. i. e., your doctrines of monotheism, apostleship and resurrection.

395. (to the true faith).

396. (of the past). 'of your sins' signifies the sins of the past. (Th.)

397. (with a happy life).

398. (and mortals).

399. (and no gods or demi-gods, so we cannot believe in you).

400. i. e., some miracle unmistakably demonstrating the truth of your claims.

400-A. i. e., like you as created beings and mortals, subject to the laws of life and death.

401. The argument is: surely we are but human beings and mortals like yourselves, but prophethood is not at all incompatible with humanity, as you ignorantly suppose; it is the supreme gift of God conferred on His chosen servants. See P. IX, n. 391.

402. i. e., it is not in our power to give you a miraculous demonstration of our mission. Mark once again that a miracle, in Islam, is an act of God, never an act of prophet, though performed for his sake. See n. 223 above.

403. (as we do, and we are not afraid of your persecution of us).

وَمَا لَنَآ أَلَّا نَتَوَكَّلَ عَلَى ٱللَّهِ وَقَدْ هَدَىٰنَا سُبُلَنَا ۚ وَلَنَصْبِرَنَّ عَلَىٰ مَآ ءَاذَيْتُمُونَا ۚ وَعَلَى ٱللَّهِ فَلْيَتَوَكَّلِ ٱلْمُتَوَكِّلُونَ ﴿١٢﴾

12. (وما . . . المتوكلون) And why should we not rely on Allah when He surely has guided us on our ways. And we shall surely bear with patience that with which you afflict us; and in Allah then let the trustful put their trust.

SECTION 3

13. (وقال . . . الظلمين) And those who disbelieved[404] said to their messengers: we will surely drive you forth from our land, or else you shall have to return to our faith.[405] Then their Lord Revealed to them:[406] We will surely destroy the wrong-doers.[407]

14. (ولنسكنكم . . . وعيد) And We will surely cause you to dwell in the land after them: that[408] is for him who fears standing before Me,[409] and fears My threat.

15. (واستفتحوا . . عنيد) And they besought judgment,[410] and disappointed[411] was every tyrant obstinate.

16. (من . . . صديد) Behind him is Hell, and he shall be made to drink of fetid water;

17. (يتجرعه . . . غليظ) which he gulps,[412] but can scarce swallow.[413] And death comes upon him from every side, and yet he is not dead, and behind him is a torment terrible.[414]

405. See P. IX. n. 3.

406. (in order to strengthen their hearts and to comfort them).

407. i. e., far from their being able to expel you they will themselves be destroyed.

408. (happy promise).

409. Literally, 'My standing.'

410. i. e., challenged a punishment.

411. (in the result of that Divine judgment).

412. (in his extreme thirst).

413. (for its nauseousness).

18. (مثل . . . البعيد) The likeness of those who disbelieve in their Lord is: their works are like ashes upon which the wind blows hard on a stormy day;[415] they shall not be able to get aught[416] of what they have earned. That is a straying far-off.

19. (الم . . . جديد) Dost thou not see[417] that Allah has created the heavens and the earth with a purpose? If He willed He would make you pass away and bring a creation new.[418]

20. (وما . . . بعزيز) And for Allah[419] that is not hard.[420]

21. (وبرزوا . . . محيص) They all shall appear before Allah; then those who were counted weak[421] shall say to those who were stiff-necked: verily we were unto you a following,[422] are you going to avail us at all against the torment of Allah? They[423] will say: had Allah guided us[424] we would have guided you too; it is now equal to us whether we become impatient[425] or bear patiently; for us there is no place of escape.

415. (and completely scatters) يوم عاصف، means يوم عاصف الريح and the phrase في يوم عاصف الريح means: 'In a day violent or vehement in respect of wind.' (LL)

416. (of use and advantage).

417. (O reader!).

418. (to replace you).

419. The original Creator.

420. (in the least) عزيز is not only 'mighty or strong' but also signifies 'severe, or difficult.' (LL)

423. i. e., men of influence, such as princes, priests and leaders.

424. i. e., had we ourselves found our way to the true faith.

425. (at our torments). جزع is the contrary of صبر, and جزع means 'he was, or became, impatient'.

22. (وقال . . . اليم) And Satan will say,[426] after the affair has been decreed:[427] verily Allah promised you a promise of truth,[428] and I also promised you,[429] then I failed you;[430] and I had over you no authority,[431] save that I called you[432] and you responded to me,[433] so do not reproach me[434] but reproach yourself;[435] I am not going to help you nor are you going to help me; surely I deny your having associated me with God before.[436] Verily for the wrong-doers there is a torment afflictive.

23. (وادخل . . سلام) And those who believed and worked righteous works shall be made to enter Gardens with running streams, abiding therein by the command of their Lord, their greeting there will be: peace!

24. (الم . . . السماء) Do you not see[437] how Allah has propounded the similitude of the clean word?[438] It is like a clean tree,[439] its roots firmly fixed,[440] and its branches reaching[441] the heaven;

25. (تؤتى . . . يتذكرون) giving its fruit at every season[442] by the command of its Lord. And Allah propounds similitudes for mankind that haply they may be admonished.[433]

26. (ومثل . . . قرار) And the similitude of a foul word[444] is a foul tree,[445] uprooted from upon the earth, there is for it no stability.

---

426. (to the people of Hell in answer to their bitterest reaproaches and curses to him).

427. (and infidels have been consigned to the Fire).

428. (respecting the resurrection and retribution).

429. (the contrary).

430. (and left you in the lurch).

431. (of compelling you against your will).

432. (and allured you).

433. (of your own accord). The principle involved here is a most important one. In Islam there is no such things as the inheritance of a sinful nature, or a predisposition to the life of sin and disobedience. Sin is only a habit formed because of one's weakness, and no man who is on the alert need ever be overcome by evil or the devil. It is an over-rating of the devil's strength to say that he is, in the main, responsible for anybody's fall, when, as a matter of fact, he has no power at all except of evil suggestion. A man of faith, if he asserts his will, is always sure to come out successful in his struggles against evil. See also P. V. n. 280.

434. (for my seducing you).

435. (for ignoring Divine commands and for finding you here in consequence): i. e., do not lay entire blame on me as an enticer, but primarily and essentially blame your own folly and wickedness in obeying and trusting me, who was well known to you as the tempter.

436. i. e., I now declare myself clear of your having obeyed me in preference to God, and your worshipping me as His co-partner.

437. (O Prophet!).

438. Here 'the clean word' signifies the sacred formula of Islam the confession of God's unity and His prophet's apostleship.

439. i. e., a tree beautiful to look at.

440. (in the earth). So stable it is!

441. So high and wide it is!

442. So abundant in its products!

443. Compare a simile in the OT:—'And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.' (Ps. 1 : 3)

444. i. e., the formula of unfaith and infidelity.

445. i. e., evil in regard to forms, colour, odour etc.

الْآخِرَةِ ۚ وَيُضِلُّ اللَّهُ الظَّالِمِينَ ۚ وَيَفْعَلُ اللَّهُ مَا يَشَاءُ ۞ أَلَمْ تَرَ إِلَى الَّذِينَ بَدَّلُوا نِعْمَتَ اللَّهِ كُفْرًا وَأَحَلُّوا

وَالْقَمَرَ دَائِبَيْنِ ۖ وَسَخَّرَ لَكُمُ

27. (يثبت . . . يشاء) Allah keeps firm those who believe by the firm word[446] in the life of the world and the Hereafter, and Allah sends astray the wrong-doers.[447] Allah does whatever He will.[448]

SECTION 5

28. (الم . . . البوار) Dost thou not see[449] those who returned the favour of Allah with infidelity[450] and caused their people to alight in the dwelling of perdition?

29. (جهنم . . . القرار) Hell, in which they will roast. How ill is the settlement!

30. (وجعلوا . . . النار) They have set up compeers to Allah,[451] that they may lead men astray from His path.[452] Say thou: enjoy,[453] then verily your vending is to the Fire.

31. (قل . . . خلل) Say thou to those of My bondmen who have believed, let them establish prayer and spend[454] privately and publicly[455] of that with which We have provided them before the Day arrives when there will be no bargaining or befriending.

32. (الله . . . الانهر) Allah it[456] is who has created the heavens and the earth, and sent down from the heaven water and has thereby brought forth fruits as a provision for you; and He has subjected the ships[457] for you[458] that they may run in the sea by His command; and He has subjected the rivers[459] for you.[460]

446. (of faith). 'By' signifies 'by virtue of.'

447. (in consequence of the corrupt word to which they obstinately cling).

448. (in accordance with His universal Plan, and without let or hindrance on the part of anyone).

449. (O Prophet!).

450. i. e., those who have requited God's favours with disobedience and ingratitude.

451. Whether as nature-gods or God's 'incarnations.'

452. The lines along which polytheism has developed are many and varied, with the common result that each one of them is a deviation from the path of monotheism.

453. (for a brief, little time the pleasures of this world).

454. (in the cause of religion).

455. (as the occasion may demand).

456. (and not any 'heaven-god', 'earth-god', 'rain-god' etc.).

457. (to His will).

458. i. e. for your benefit.

459. (to His will).

460. i. e., for your benefit.

33. (وسخر . . . والنهار) And He has subjected[461] for you[462] the sun and the moon, both in constant toil;[463] and He has subjected[464] for you[465] the night and the day.[466]

34. (وآتكم . . . كفار) And He has granted to you some of everything you asked Him.[467] And if you count Allah's favours you cannot compute them.[468] Verily man is a great wrong-doer, highly ungrateful [469]

SECTION 6

35. (وإذ قال . . الاصنام) And recall when Ibrāhīm said:[470] Lord! make this city[471] secure,[472] and keep me and my sons away[473] from worshipping the idols [474]

36. (رب . . . رحيم) Lord! they have[475] sent astray many among mankind;[476] whosoever follows me[477] is of me,[478] and whoever disobeys me[479] then verily Thou art Forgiving, Merciful.[480]

37. (ربنا . . . يشكرون) Our Lord! verily I have caused some of my progeny[481] to dwell in a valley[482] where is no sown land[483] by Thy Sacred House,[484] our Lord! in order that they might establish prayer;[485] make Thou therefore the hearts of some of mankind to yearn towards them,[486] and provide them Thou[487] with fruits,[488] haply they may give thanks.[489]

38. (ربنا . . . السماء) Our Lord! verily Thou knowest what We conceal and what we disclose,[490] and naught is concealed from Allah in the earth or the heaven.

461. (to His will).

462. i. e., for your benefit.

463. (holding on their course). The two grand heavenly luminaries are meant to serve man, not be served or adored by him in any way.

464. (to His will).

465. i. e., for your benefit.

466. i. e., for your benefit. Superstitious nations have not scrupled to hold even night and day as deities! 'Light and darkness, day and night . . . . are often personified or worshipped as gods.' (ERE. VIII. p. 49.) See also P. I. n. 94, P. II. n. 111, 113 and P. XIV. n. 142.

467. (and which you were fit to receive).

468. (completely), i. e., no calculus, however gigantic, can sum up the total number of God's illimitable bounties.

469. (who in the face of all these favours of God still clings to His ways of infidelity and unbelief).

470. (after he had made, in obedience to the Divine command, Makka the home of Ismā'il and Hājira).

471. i. e., the city of Makka.

472. i. e., a place of security and non-violence, by ordering its territory, sacred and inviolable. See P. I. nn. 563-566.

473. (as hitherto).

474. The reference here is to the Prophet Abraham's immediate progeny, not to his entire race.

475. i. e., idols and images which are to the idolaters visible representations of God or gods and fraught with Divine glory and majesty.

476. The name of the idolatrous peoples both ancient and modern, is legion; and nations after nations, not all of them of the lowest savagery, are known to have succumbed to the influence of idolatry. 'Its tendency to revive is ethnographically embarrassing .... The modern Brahmans, professed followers of Vedic doctrine, are among the greatest idolaters of the world. Early Christianity by no means abrogated the Jewish law against image-worship, yet image-worship became and still remains widely spread and deeply-rooted in Christendom.' (PC. II. p. 168).

477. (in my detestation of idolatry).

478. (and, according to Thy word, marked for salvation.)

479. (and is still in the land of the living).

480. (so Thou wilt in Thy mercy dispose him to repentance and show him the Way, and thus after his death wilt forgive him).

481. The reference to the Prophet Ismā'il and his decendants is obvious.

482. 'The city lies in a hollow among the hills.' (EBr. XV. p. 150) 'Mecca lies in a valley imprisoned by stony hills, the last word in desolation.' (Lady Cobbold, Pilgrimage to Mecca, p. 139). It would be difficult to meet with a more forbidding site, even amongst the ruined rock-masses of Tihama, the lowest-lying and with desolate part of this stern province of Hejaz .... In the badly-ventilated corridor, scorched all through the endless summer by the pitiless sun of Arabia, without the shelter of a single palm tree, the population in order to slake their thirst were reduced to the uncertain flow of the well of Zamzam.' (Lammens, Islam: Beliefs and Institutions, p. 16).

483. 'The old geographers observe that the whole Haram or sanctuary around the city is almost without cultivation or date-palms.' (EBr. XV. 150). 'For many a mile round Mecca the general features are rugged rocks without a trace of foliage. . . . . Even at the present day . . . . Mecca can hardly boast a garden or cultivated field, and only here and there a tree, (Muir, op. cit., p. 2) The city of Makkah, about forty-eight miles east of the Red Sea, lies in the world's zone of maximum heat and dryness, and the whole tract is rainless experiencing great extremes of heat in summer. 'The thermometer in Makka can register almost unbearable heat.' (Hitti, op. cit., p. 104).

484. i. e., K'aba, held sacred from the remotest antiquity. See P. I. n. 563.

485. Mark that the settling of Abraham's family in the neighbourhood of the Sacred House of God has this 'establishment of prayer' as one of its very primary objects.

486. A great desert market since after the time of Abraham, the sanctuary 'received a new prestige from the victory of Islam'; the Kaba became the holiest site, and the pilgrimage the most sacred ritual observance of Mohammadanism, drawing worshippers from so wide a circle that the confluence of the petty traders of the desert was no longer the main feature of the holy season.' (EBr, XV. p. 151).

487. (of Thy own Providence).

488. The way in which this prayer has been granted is most striking one. The city of Makka, absolutely barren and unproductive, is supplied all through the year with all sorts of fresh fruit; and at the pilgrimage season the abundance of this supply is simply amazing.

489. (in return for these gifts, if for no other reasons).

490. (so these prayers of ours are only an expression of our needs and requirements).

اَنْفُسَهُمْ وَتَبَيَّنَ لَكُمْ كَيْفَ

39. (الحمد . . . الدعا.) All praise be to Allah who has bestowed on me, despite old age, Ismā'īl[491] and Is-ḥāq.[492] Verily my Lord is the Hearer of supplication.

40. (رب . . . دعا.) Lord! make me establisher of prayer and also from my progeny, our Lord! and accept Thou my supplication!

41. (ربنا . . . الحساب) Our Lord! forgive me[493] and my parents and the believers on the Day when will be set up the reckoning.

SECTION 7

42. (ولا . . . الابصار) Do not consider[494] Allah heedless of what the wrong-doers do: He only defers them[495] to a Day when eyes shall remain staring.[496]

43. (مهطعين . . . هواء) They will be hastening forward,[497] their heads upraised, staring but seeing nothing and their hearts vacant.[498]

44. (وانذر . . . زوال) And warn thou[499] mankind of the Day when the torment shall come unto them: then the wrong-doers shall say: our Lord! defer us[500] to a term near at hand;[501] we will answer to Thy call and we will follow the messengers. Were you not wont to swear before that for you there was to be no decline?[502]

491. At the age of 86, according to Ge. 16: 16.

492. At the age of 100, according to Ge. 21: 5.

493. غفر is only 'to cover with Divine grace', and does not necessarily presuppose sinfulness on the part of one who asks for his مغفرة.

494. (O reader!)

495. i. e., their punishment.

496. (in honour).

497. (with their necks outstretched at the voice of the angel calling to judgment).

498. (of all sense through extreme terror). The whole passage is an excellent, graphic picture of horror.

499. (O Prophet!)

500. i. e., our punishment.

501. (and send us again into the world below).

502. The answer they would receive would be to this effect: have you not already enjoyed long life, and was not this very length of days that led you to ignore every warning and to boast that you would always remain in the ascendant?

فَعَلْنَا بِهِمْ وَضَرَبْنَا لَكُمُ الْأَمْثَالَ ۝٤٥ وَقَدْ مَكَرُوا مَكْرَهُمْ وَعِنْدَ اللَّهِ مَكْرُهُمْ وَإِنْ كَانَ مَكْرُهُمْ لِتَزُولَ مِنْهُ

45. (وسكنتم . . . الامثال) You dwell in the dwellings of those who have wronged themselves[503] and it was clear to you how We had dealt with them,[504] and We had propounded for you similitudes.

46 (وقد . . . الجبال) Of a surety they[505] plotted their plot,[506] and with Allah was their plot,[507] though their plot was such as to remove mountains thereby.[508]

47. (فلا . . . انتقام) So imagine not thou[509] that Allah is going to fail his promise[510] to His messengers. Verily Allah is Mighty, Lord of vengeance.[511]

48 (يوم . . . القهار) On the Day when the earth will be changed into another earth,[512] and the heavens also; and all creatures will appear before Allah, the One,[513] the Subduer.[514]

49. (وترى . . . الاصفاد) And thou wilt see the guilty on that Day bound in fetters.

50. (سرابيلهم . . . النار) Their trousers shall be of pitch, and the fire shall cover their faces;

51. (ليجزى . . . الحساب) All this in order that Allah may requite each soul according to what he has earned; verily Allah is Swift in reckoning

52. (هذا . . . الالباب) This is a preaching for the mankind, that they may be warned thereby, and that they may know that there is only one God,[515] and that the men of understanding may be admonished.

503. (before you by similar boasts and denials).

504. (but you refused to profit by their examples).

505. i. e., the ungodly among former generations.

506. (to defeat and frustrate God's purpose).

507. i. e. God knows every little, minute detail of their plots and conspiracies; nothing could remain hidden from Him.

508. (yet all that came to naught and all their designs, mighty as they were, were frustrated).

509. (O reader!).

510. (of His avenging the wrong and rewarding the good on the Last Day).

511. The God of Islam is not an abstraction, an impersonal and inert something. He is a living Personality, Just, Awful, Awarder of punishment to the guilty. See P. III. n. 220.

512. (as it is known to mankind). i. e., when an entirely new and different earth will replace the present, familiar one.

513. This refutes the grossly polytheistic notion of Christianity that not before God, but before 'the Son of man' 'shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another'. (Mt. 25 : 32).

PART XIV

2. (ربما . . مسلمين) Often[1] would those who disbelieved desire[2] that they had been Muslims.[3]

3. (ذرهم . . يعلمون) Leave them thou[4] to eat and enjoy,[5] and let vain hopes divert them;[6] presently[7] they will come to know.[8]

4. (وما . . . معلوم) Not a town We have destroyed but there was for it a decree known.[9]

5. (ما . . . يستاخرون) No community can precede its term[10] nor can it fall behind.

6. (وقالوا . . . لمجنون) And they[11] say: O thou to whom the Admonition has been sent down![12] verily thou art possessed;[13]

7. (لوما . . . الصدقين) why dost thou not bring angels[14] to us if thou art of the truth-tellers?

8. (ما . . . منظرين) We send not down the angels save with judgement;[15] and then[16] they[16-A] would not be respited.

9. (انا . . . لحفظون) Verily We! it is We who have revealed the Admonition,[17] and We are its Guardians.[18]

1. (in the Hereafter) i. e., every time when confronted with a fresh torment.

2. (in their great anguish).

3. (and bowed to the will of God). In a minor degree one finds a similar feeling experienced in this very world. 'Renan said that he never entered a mosque without a lively emotion, or even without a certain regret at not being a Muslim'. (Arnold, Islamic Faith, p. 29).

4. (O Prophet! without grieving overmuch over their fate).

5. (themselves in this world).

6. (to the utter neglect of the Hereafter). امل is a hope that is only distant or remote.

7. i. e., on the approach of their death.

8. (and be disillusioned).

9. (and determined beforehand; so there is nothing unusual in the respite these infidels are having).

10. i. e., the term of its extinction.

11. i. e., the Makkan pagans.

12. (as thou presumest).

13. (by a jinn, i. e., thou art mad).

14. (to attest to thy prophethood).

15. i. e., to destroy the ungodly. حق also signifies, 'a thing or an event that is decreed or destined'. So the phrase may also mean: 'We send not down the angels save unto that which is decreed or destined.' (LL)

16. i. e., in that case; in the event of the visit of the angels.

16-A. i. e., the culprits.

17. (verbally and literally, with no human element therein whatsoever, the Prophet being merely the unerring mouthpiece of God). Not only is the meaning of the Holy Book therefore inspired but every word, every letter—— dictated through the angel Gabriel to the holy Prophet from an Archetype preserved in the heaven. That is the distinctive claim of the Holy Qur'ān shared by no other 'revealed Books' in the world. 'The Bible, in particular, 'makes no such claims . . . . The Bible is the work of a large number of poets, prophets, statesmen, and lawgivers, extending over a vast period of time, and incorporates with itself other and earlier, and often conflicting documents.' (Bosworth Smith, op. cit., p. 19).

18. i. e., of its absolute purity, against all corruptions, accertions and mutilations. Islam knows no such thing as 'redactions' of its Holy Text. Even those who have most stoutly denied its being the Word of God are unanimous in testifying to its being exactly the same 'work of Muhammed' as it was thirteen centuries ago. Let us have the testimony of a few such unwilling witnesses:—

(i) 'This text of the Quran is the purest of all the works of a like antiquity.' (Wherry, Commentary on the Quran, I p. 349).

(ii) 'Othman's recension has remained the authorised text . . . . from the time it was made until the present day.' (Palmer, 'The Quran!', Intro. p. LIX).

(iii) 'The text of this recension substantially corresponds to the actual utterances of Muhammed himself.' (Arnold, Islamic Faith, p. 9).

(iv) 'All sects and parties have the same text of the Quran.' (Hurgronje, Mohammedanism, p. 18).

(v) 'It is an immense merit in the Kuran that there is no doubt as to its genuineness . . . . That very word we can now read with full confidence that it has remained unchanged through nearly thirteen hundred years'. (Lane-Poole, LSK., Intro. p. C.).

(vi) 'The recension of 'Othman has been handed down to us unaltered. . . . There is probably in the world no other work which has remained twelve centuries with so pure a text.' (Muir, op. cit., Intro. pp. XXII-XXIII).

(vii) 'In the Koran we have, beyond all reasonable doubt, the exact words of Mohammad without substraction and without addition.' (Bosworth Smith, op. cit., p. 22).

(viii) 'The Koran was his own creation; and it lies before us practically unchanged from the form which he himself gave it.' (Torrey, Jewish Foundation of Islam, p. 2).

(ix) 'Modern critics agree that the copies current today are almost exact replicas of the original mother-text as compiled by Zayd, and that, on the whole, the text of the Koran today is as Muhammed produced it. As some Semitic scholar has remarked, there are probably more variations in the reading of one chapter of Genesis in Hebrew than there are in the entire Koran'. (Hitti, op. cit., p. 123).

10. (ولقد . . . الاولين) And assuredly We have sent messengers before thee[19] among the sects of the ancients.

11. (وما . . . يستهزءون) And not a messenger came to them but at him they were wont to mock.

12. (كذلك . . . المجرمين) Even so We make a way for it[20] in the hearts of the culprits.[21]

13. (لا يؤمنون . . . الاولين) They do not believe in it,[22] and already the example of the ancients has gone forth.

14. (ولو . . . يعرجون) And if We opened upon them a door of the heaven,[23] and they passed the day mounting thereto,[24]

15 (لقالوا . . مسحورون) they would surely say: our eyes have been dazzled;[25] aye! we must have been enchanted.[26]

SECTION 2

16. (ولقد . . . للنظرين) And assuredly We have set constellations[27] in the heaven and made it[28] fairseeming to the onlookers.[28-A]

17. (وحفظنها . . . رجيم) And We have guarded it[29] from every Satan damned;[30]

18. (الا . . . مبين) save him who steals the hearing,[31] and him pursues a flame gleaming.[32]

19. (والارض . . . موزون) And the earth! We have stretched it out and have cast on it firm mountains,[33] and We have caused to spring up on it everything weighable.[34]

20. (وجعلنا . . . برزقين) And We have appointed on it your means of living and also for those of whom you are not the providers.[35]

---

19. (O Prophet!).
20. i. e., ridicule and mockery.
21. (and they will surely ridicule thee, O Prophet!).

22. i. e., in the Holy Qur'ān.

23. (and provided to them a sign so manifest).

24. (in open, broad daylight without any suspicion of error or delusion).

25. So stubborn are they in their opposition to Islam! سكرت signifies 'deluded'.

26. (altogether, so that we would not believe after a still greater miracle).

27. i. e., stars of the first magnitude.

28. i. e., the heaven.

28-A. (by means of these stars).

29. (by means of shooting stars).

30. Or 'stoned.'

31. The devils constantly endeavour to ascend to the confines of the lowest heaven, and there overhearing the conversation of the angels respecting things decreed by God, obtain knowledge of the future, which they sometimes impart to men who by means of talisman or certain invocations make them to serve the purposes of magical performances.

32. Shooting stars are sometimes hurled at the devils when they endeavour stealthily to listen to the heavenly secrets.

33. (so that it may not shake and unsteadily move).

34. (in the balance of the Divine wisdom) i. e. in a balanced manner.

35. For instance, the beasts of the forest for whose provision man takes no care.

22. (وارسلنا . . . بخزنين) And We send the winds fertilizing,[38] then We send down water from the heaven, and We give it to you to drink, and of it you could not be the treasurers.[39]

23. (وانا . . . الوارثون) And verily We! We it is Who give life and death, and We shall be the survivors.[40]

24. (ولقد . . . المستاخرين) And assuredly We know those of you who have gone before and those who will come hereafter.

25. (وان . . . عليم) And verily thy Lord! He will gather them[41] and verily He is the Wise,[42] the Knowing.[43]

SECTION 3

26. (ولقد . . . مسنون) And assuredly We have created human being[44] from ringing clay of loam moulded.

27. (والجان . . السموم) And the jinn, We had created them afore of the fire of the scorching wind.[45]

28. (واذ قال . . مسنون) And recall when thy Lord said to the angels: I am about to create a man from ringing clay of loam moulded.

29. (فاذا . . . سجدين) then when I have formed him[46] and breathed into him of My spirit,[47] fall down unto him prostrate.[48]

30. (فسجد . . . اجمعون) So the angels prostrated themselves, all of them together.

36. (unexhausted and inexhaustible).

37. i. e., decreed and determined by Divine wisdom.

38. i. e., filling the clouds with water, and fecundating the earth.

39. i. e., you could not store them in a quantity that would make you independent of fresh rains.

40. (when all the creation shall be dead and annihilated).

41. i.e., on the Day of Judgment and will requite all.

42. i.e., dealing with everyone in accordance with His universal plan.

43. i.e., well aware of the deeds of everyone.

44. i. e., the first man who was no more than a mere human being. The 'first Ancestor' of mankind has been held to be of Divine nature, and even worshipped by the man's-worshippers. (PC. II. p. 311).

45. The genii are therefore neither gods nor demi-gods, but ordinary created beings, and mortal like men, only made of a different substance. The Bible while narrating this period of world's history speaks of the "Sons of God" and "giants" inhabiting the earth. (Ge. 6 : 2, 4).

46. (and fashioned him in due proportion).

47. (and this spirit, let it be noted, was at no time withdrawn). This strikes at the root of the Pauline Christianity which proceeds on the assumption that in consequence of the fall of Adam and Eve, the spirit which God breathed into the nostrils of Adam was withdrawn.

48. (making obeisance to him as God's vicegerent on the earth).

32. (قال . . . الساجدين) Allah said: O Iblis! how is it that thou art not with the prostrate?

33. (قال . . . مسنون) He said: it was not for me that I should prostrate myself before a human being whom Thou hast created from ringing clay of loam moulded.

34. (قال . . . رجيم) Allah said: then get thee forth herefrom, verily thou art one damned.

35. (و ان . . . يوم الدين) And on thee shall be the curse of all on the Day of Judgment.

36. (قال . . . يبعثون) He said: Lord! respite me then till the Day on which people will be raised up.

43. (و ان . . . اجمعين) And verily Hell is the place promised to them all.

54. (who conceive Me as neither remote nor otiose but as Present and Active).

55. Thus Satan is in no sense a deity or sub-deity, nor is he 'the lord of the material world' as held by several peoples. The real source of evil lies, not in any outside agency, but in the voluntary action of man himself—in the apostasy of human will and intelligence from God.

56. i. e., those who choose to follow thy suggestions of their own accord, out of their weakness.

45. (ان . . . عيون) The God-fearing shall be amidst Gardens and springs.

46. (ادخلو . . . امنين) Enter there in peace, secure.[57]

47. (و نزعنا . . متقبلين) And We will remove whatsoever of rancour may be in their hearts;[58] breathren they,[59] sitting upon couches facing each other.

48. (لا . . . بمخرجين) There shall touch them no toil there, nor shall they be ever driven forth from there.[60]

49. (نبي . . . الرحيم) Declare thou[61] to Me bondmen: verily I ! I am the Forgiving, the Merciful.

50. (و ان . . . الاليم) And verily My torment! that is the torment afflictive!

51. (و نبهم . . ابراهيم) And tell thou them of Ibrāhīm's guest.[62]

52. (اذ . . . وجلون) When they entered unto him, and said: peace! He said:[63] we are afraid of you.

53. (قالوا . . . عليم) They said: do not be afraid; we bear thee the glad tidings of a boy knowing.[64]

54. (قال . . . تبشرون) He said:[65] do you bear me the glad tidings when old age has touched me? Of what then you give me the glad tidings?

55. (قالوا . . . القنطين) They said: we bear thee the glad tidings of a truth;[66] do not be thou of the desponding.[67]

56. (قال . . . الضالون) He said: and who desponds of the mercy of his Lord except the astray?[68]

57. (قال . . . المرسلون) He said: what is your errand, O sent ones?

---

57. Thus they will be greeted by the angels.
58. i. e., all past sense of injury shall be obliterated from their hearts.

60. (الا . . . الغبرين) but not his wife; we[69] have decreed that she will be of them who tarry.[70]

SECTION 5

61. (فلما . . . المرسلون) Then when the sent ones entered into the household of Lūṭ;

62. (قال . . . منكرون) he said: verily you are a people stranger.[71]

63. (قالوا . . . يمترون) They said: nay! we have come to thee with that of which they have been doubting;[72]

65. (فاسر . . . تومرون) So set forth thou with thy household in a portion of the night, and follow thou their back, and let not one of you look back, and pass wither you are commanded.[74]

76. (at the news of the arrival of young and handsome strangers).

77. (and so entitled to respect and protection according to all laws of hospitality). 'While under the roof of his host, the guest was in security; hence the earnest appeal of Lot to the men of Sodom——death, or something as bad he could suffer, rather than that his guests should be exposed to gross ill-treatment' (EBi. c. 2128).

78. (by insulting them).

79. (in respect of your beastly habits and inclinations).

80. (in the eyes of my guests).

88. (recalling to mind awful punishment for the evil-doers).

89. i. e., those ruins; a dismal desolate tract of land.

90. i. e., on the permanent pathway between Arabia and Syria.

91. (near Madyan) ايكة signifies the thicket or collection of tangled trees. Noeldeke identifies this people with the Midianites: according to our commentators, the two tribes, though closely allied, were distinct.

92. (destroying them for their persistent disobedience).

93. i. e., the ruins of the cities of the Plain and of the Wood.

94. i. e. plain to see.

95. Mt. Hijr stands about 150 miles on the rocky tract of land known by this name in the north of Arabia on the highway to Syria. It was inhabited by the tribe of Thamud, 'Hijra, in Ptolemy and Pliny, is an oasis staple town of the gold and frankincense caravan road from Arabia the Happy.' (Doughty, Travel in Arabia Deserta, I. p. 135) See also P. VIII. n. 542. "In ancient times here lived a godless and arrogant cave-dwelling people, the Thamūd, of which it is related in the Kur'ān that they hewed their houses out of rock . . . . 100. i. e., of the oft-repeated verses: Surat ul Fātiha, or the first chapter of the Qur'ān, which consists of seven verses and has to be repeated in every prayer. 'The simple and meaningful fatihah, often likened to the Lord's Prayer, is reiterated by the faithful Moslem about twenty times a day. This makes it one of the most often repeated formulas ever devised.' (Hitti. op. cit., p. 131).

101. (itself; so look at these incomparable and invaluable gifts, and overlook the ridicule and persecution of the infidels.) That the Qur'ān is one of the mightiest works in existence is acknowledged even by the unfriendly Christians. 106. (punishment).

107. i. e., those who have made division of their Scripture into arbitrary parts, accepting some and rejecting others.

108. The word قرآن is here to be taken in its literal, not technical, sense. (Zm.)

The Bee. XVI

(Makkan, 16 Sections and 128 Verses.

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

SECTION 1

1. (اتی . . . يشركون) The affair of Allah[117] comes,[118] so do not seek to hasten it.[119] Hallowed be He and Exalted above what they associate.[120]

2. (ينزل . . . فاتقون) He sends down the angels with the spirit[121] by His command upon whosoever of His bondmen He wills:[122] warn[123] that there is no god but I, so fear Me.

3. (خلق . . . يشركون) He[123-A] has created[123-B] the heavens and the earth[123-C] with a purpose.[123-D] Exalted is He above what they associate.

4. (خلق . . . مبين) He has created man from a drop, and lo! he[124] is a disputant open.

5. (و الانعام . . . تاكلون) And the cattle! He has created them. For you in them there is warmth[125] and other profits[125-A] and of them you eat.[126]

---

117. i. e., His inevitable decree ; or, His threatened punishment.

118. (to pass, surely and soon enough). The phrase may also mean : 'The threatened punishment ordained of God hath, as it were, come : so near is it, that it is as though it had already come ; therefore desire ye not to hasten it'. (LL).

119. (in your foolishness, O Makkan pagans !).

120. (with Him).

121. i. e., the Revelation.

122. (with this message——).

123. (mankind).

123-A. (and not anyone else).

123-B. (out of nothing).

123-C. (Both of which are mere created objects, not divinities).

123-D. (not for nothing).

124. ——the ungrateful creature!——

125. Or 'warm clothing'. دِفْء is both 'warmth or heat,' and 'a thing or garment or covering that renders one warm, or hot, of wool, or the like, or of camel's fur.' (LL). Here the word means the skins of animals and their wool and hair, all used for human clothing. The material, of which the Bedouin clothes are made is mainly wool, obtained from this domestic animal. With the exception of the shirt and handkerchief; the mantle, the skull cap, the 'iqal and sometimes even the belt, are all made of camel's hair or sheeps wool'. (Inayatullah, op. cit., p. 118),

125-A. Domestic animals are the very stock-in-trade of the nomad Arabs, 'the source of their daily diet (milk) and of their woollen clothing, and their only means of transport across the vast sandy deserts' (Inayatullah, op. cit., p. 93). See also n. 280 below.

126. This reminds once more that the cattle are meant for human use, not for veneration and worship, as practised by various polytheistic peoples in India, Egypt and Babylonia. The early Semites too 'like other pastoral peoples paid great reverence to cattle, their kinship with whom they had long continued to recognise.' (EBi c. 715).

وَحِينَ تَسْرَحُونَ ﴿٦﴾ وَتَحْمِلُ أَثْقَالَكُمْ إِلَىٰ بَلَدٍ لَّمْ تَكُونُوا بَالِغِيهِ إِلَّا بِشِقِّ الْأَنفُسِ ۚ إِنَّ رَبَّكُمْ لَرَءُوفٌ رَّحِيمٌ ﴿٧﴾
وَالْخَيْلَ وَالْبِغَالَ وَالْحَمِيرَ لِتَرْكَبُوهَا وَزِينَةً ۚ وَيَخْلُقُ مَا لَا تَعْلَمُونَ ﴿٨﴾ وَعَلَى اللَّهِ قَصْدُ السَّبِيلِ وَمِنْهَا جَائِرٌ ۚ
وَلَوْ شَاءَ لَهَدَاكُمْ أَجْمَعِينَ ﴿٩﴾ هُوَ الَّذِي أَنزَلَ مِنَ السَّمَاءِ مَاءً ۖ لَّكُم مِّنْهُ شَرَابٌ وَمِنْهُ شَجَرٌ فِيهِ تُسِيمُونَ ﴿١٠﴾ ع
يُنبِتُ لَكُم بِهِ الزَّرْعَ وَالزَّيْتُونَ وَالنَّخِيلَ وَالْأَعْنَابَ وَمِن كُلِّ الثَّمَرَاتِ ۗ إِنَّ فِي ذَٰلِكَ لَآيَةً لِّقَوْمٍ يَتَفَكَّرُونَ ﴿١١﴾
وَسَخَّرَ لَكُمُ اللَّيْلَ وَالنَّهَارَ وَالشَّمْسَ وَالْقَمَرَ ۖ وَالنُّجُومُ مُسَخَّرَاتٌ بِأَمْرِهِ ۗ إِنَّ فِي ذَٰلِكَ لَآيَاتٍ لِّقَوْمٍ يَعْقِلُونَ ﴿١٢﴾

وَمَا ذَرَأَ لَكُمْ

6. (و لكم . . . تسرحون) And for you there is a beauty in them as you drive them at the eventide and as you drive them out to pasture.

7. (وتحمل . . . رحيم) And they bear your loads to a city which you could not reach except with travail of souls;[127] verily your Lord is Kind, Merciful.

8. (والخيل . . . تعلمون) And He has created horses and mules and asses that you may ride them,[128] and as an adornment;[129] and He creates what you do not know.[130]

9. (و على . . . اجمعين) And upon Allah is the direction of the way,[131] and of that is some crooked,[132] and had He willed,[133] He would have guided you all.[134]

SECTION 2

10. (هوالذى . . تسيمون) He it is who sends down from the heaven water for you, from which is drinking and from which are trees[135] from which you pasture your herds.

11. (ينبت . . . يتفكرون) He grows thereby the corn and olive[136] and date-palms[137] and grapes[138] and all manner of fruit. Verily in that is a sign[139] for a people who ponder.[140]

12. (وسخر . . يعقلون) And He has subjected[141] to you the night and the day and the sun and the moon,[142] and the stars[143] are subjected by His command. Verily in that are signs for a people who understand.

127. i. e., with difficulty and distress.

128. 'The horses of Najd, the donkeys of Al-Hasa and the dromedaries of 'Umān are world famous.' (Hitti, op. cit., p. 22). 'By virtue of its hardness and power of endurance, the ass is hardly less suitable for Arabia than the camel; while for transport purposes, it is decidedly more important than the horse, because it is patient of thirst and need only be watered every second day . . . . Donkeys are numerous in villages and towns, where they are used not only for riding but also for raising water from irrigation wells'. (Inayatullah, op. cit., p. 70) The gusto and pride, with which the Arab warrior-poet describes the fine points of his valued mare and the martial exploits performed on its back, are well known to all readers of Arabic poetry. (ib. p. 68).

129. The proper relation of man with all these creatures is not of adoring them but of understanding and using them. They are neither the incarnation of a deity, nor the receptacle of any indwelling divine soul; they are merely a means of transport and a source of power and wealth to man. The phenomena of zoolatry have been assigned three distinct motives by the anthropologists. (PC. II. p. 237 ff):—

(a) direct worship of the animal for itself.

(b) indirect worship of it as a fetish acted through by a deity, and

(c) veneration for it as a totem or representative of a tribe-ancestor. Clearly all these notions are false and fanciful and an insult to human intelligence. Horse has been a specially holy animal (ERE. I. p. 519), while an ass cult too has not been unknown (ERE I. pp. 501-502).

130. This may allude to the future modes of transport., unknown and unthinkable at the time of the revelation of the Holy Qur'ān.

131. (to those who seek it).

132. i. e., there are other ways that do not lead to Him

135. Or 'shrubs' or 'bushes'.

136. See P. VIII. n. 148; P. XVIII. n. 26.

137. Dates are a staple article of food among the shrubs, and are noted for their high nutritious value, only a handful of them sufficing an Arab for days. Palm is 'an evergreen tree growing in tropical climates in a dry atmosphere . . . . The tree was plentiful in Palestine in ancient times . . . . The date-palm was put to many uses. The fruit was used for food, and from it a drink was distilled,' (JE. IX. p. 505). 'The tree' ranges from the Canary Islands through Northern Africa and the southeast of Asia to India. It has been cultivated and much prized throughout most of these regions from the remotest antiquity. In Arabia it is the chief source of national wealth, and its fruit forms the staple article of food in the country . . . . All parts of the date-palm yield valuable economic products. Its trunk furnishes timber for house-building and furniture; the leaves supply thatch; their footstalks are used in fuel, and also yield a fibre for cordage'. (EBr. VII. pp. 68-69). 'Those who, like most Europeans at home, only know the date from the dried specimens of that fruit shown beneath a label in shop-windows, can hardly imagin how delicious it is when eaten fresh and in Central Arabia' (W. G. Palgrave quoted in EBr. VII, p. 68). Among the Arabian flora the date-palm tree is queen. It bears the most common and esteemed fruit: the fruit تمر (tamr) par excellence. Together with milk it provides the chief item on the menu of the Bedouin, and, except for camel flesh, is his only solid food'. (Hitti, op. cit., p. 19).

138. 'The grape is of the most nourishing and wholesome of fruits. In illness it is cooling and refreshing. The content of nourishing sugar is very high in ripe grapes, ... The grape cure is a long established method of treating corpulence, bronchial catarrh, obstinate constipation and catarrh of the intestine (Riddle, Family Encyclopedia of Medicine, II, p. 1042). 'Few fruits', says another modern medical authority, 'have such excellent food value as grapes. Their juice has been termed "vegetable milk" due to its close approach in constituency to that of human milk. From earliest times grape and grape juice have been synonymous with herb and medicine ... In general, it may be said that there are few cases in which grapes do not assist in the more healthful regulation of the system and the overcoming of ill-health'.

139. (of His beneficence and providence).

140. This strikes at the root of Nature-worship and the cult of Nature-gods. There are no such curiosities in Nature as a 'God of Agriculture', a 'Patron of husbandry', etc. In civilized Greece annual festivals, known as Adonia, were held in honour of Adonis, the 'Vegetation Spirit'. The cults of Apollo, as the protector of the fruits of the earth and the lower animals, of Aphrodite, as the bestower of all animal and vegetable fruitfulness, and of Attis, as the god of vegetation, are also well known to the students of Greek and Roman history.

144. (to His service). There have been peoples worshipping both rivers and seas. 'Rivers are often worshipped . . . . as divine or as fertile mothers, while in Egypt the Nile was worshipped as a man. More usually, however, the cult developed into one paid to gods or spirits of rivers.' (ERE. IX. p. 204) 'Like the earth, the sea has a double aspect. There are sea-gods, but the sea itself is a great being, feared by men yet also beneficent and worshipped, while even the personified sea-god is sometimes spoken of as the sea itself . . . . ' (ib.)

144-A. i. e., fish. That fish is a source of fresh food for man goes without saying. But that it is also a staple diet, both in its fresh and dried forms of a large number of Arabs in perhaps not so well-known. 'The people of coastal districts, who combine fishing with other occupations, consume much fish. It is not only eaten fresh, but considerable quantities of it, including such varieties as sardines, mackerel, rock-fish and cod are caught, dried and salted at certain inhabited points on the coast and sent into the interior as merchandise.' (Inayatullah, Geographical Factors in Arabian Life and History, p. 95). Arabian fisheries 'are carried on along the whole extent of the coast-line, i. e., on the 'Oman coast, at Bahrain, in Hadramaut, in the Aden district and on the shores of Red Rea. Large quantities of fish are consumed locally as well as dried to be sent to the interior. The seer-fish also yields lamp-oil (ib. p. 95 f. n.).

'The monotheistic idea,' says Palmer, 'was not new to the Arabs but it was distasteful, and particularly so to the Qurais, whose supermacy over the other tribes, and whose worldly prosperity arose from the fact that they were the hereditary guardians of the national collection of idols kept in the sanctuary at Mecca.' And the cry of Islam therefore naturally 'sounded like a revolutionary watch-word, a radical-party cry, which the conservative Meccans could not afford to despise and which they combated very energetically.' Because He in His grand, universal Plan, has created venomous reptiles it does not follow that He approves of men being bitten by the snakes.
